The CONTENTS.

BOOK XVII.

Of the Exercise of DISCIPLINE upon the CLERGY in the Ancient CHURCH.

CHAP. I.

Of the Difference of Ecclesiastical Censures inflicted on Clergymen and Laymen. Pag. 175.

Sect. 1. THE peculiar Notion of Communion Ecclesiastical, and Excommunication Ecclesiastical, as applied to the Clergy. Sect. 2. The Clergy usually punished by a Removal from their Office, but not always subjected to publick Penance, as Men wholly cast out of the Communion of the Church. Sect. 3. Yet in some special Cases both Penalties inflicted. Sect. 4. Of Suspension from their Revenues. Sect. 5. Of Suspension from their Office. Sect. 6. Of Deposition or Degradation.

CHAP. II.

Of Reducing the Clergy to the State and Communion of Laymen, as a Punishment for great Offences. Pag. 178.

Sect. 1. Lay-Communion not the same as Communion in one Kind only. Sect. 2. Neither does it signify barely communicating among Laymen without the Rails of the Chancel. Sect. 3. But a Total Degradation, or Deprivation of Orders, and Reduction to the State and Condition of Laymen. Sect. 4. Clergymen thus reduced, seldom allowed to recover their ancient Station. Sect. 5. Notwithstanding the indelible Character of Ordination. Sect. 6. But sometimes excommunicated as well as deposed, and denied the Communion of Laymen. Sect. 7. Sometimes removed and corrected by the Assistance and Authority of the secular Power. Sect. 8. What meant by the Punishment called Curiæ tradi, or delivering up to the secular Court.

CHAP. III.

Of the Punishment, called, Peregrina Communio, or reducing Clergymen to the Communion of Strangers. Pag. 182.

Sect. 1. The several Canons wherein this Punishment is mentioned. Sect. 2. The Communion of Strangers not the same as Lay-Communion. Sect. 3. Nor Communion in one Kind. Sect. 4. Nor Communion at the Hour of Death. Sect. 5. Nor the Communion of such as were injoined to go on Pilgrimage on Earth, which was a Piece of Discipline unknown to the Ancients. Sect. 6. Nor any private and peculiar Oblation for Strangers. Sect. 7. But communicating only as Strangers travelling without commendatory Letters, who might partake of the Church's Charity, but not of the Communion of the Altar. Sect. 8. This Notion confirmed from several Parts of ancient History. Sect. 9. What Sort of Penance was necessary to restore such Delinquent Clergymen to their Office and Station again.

CHAP. IV.

Of some other special and peculiar Ways of inflicting Punishment on the Clergy. Pag. 186.

Sect. 1. Sometimes the Clergy perpetually suspended from their Office, yet allowed to retain their Title and Dignity. Sect. 2. Sometimes degraded not totally, but partially from one Order to another. Sect. 3. Sometimes deprived of a Part of their Office, but allowed to exercise the rest. Sect. 4. Sometimes deprived of their Power over a Part of their Flock, but allowed it over the rest. Sect. 5. Bishops in Africk punished by depriving them of their Seniority, and Right of succeeding to the Primacy or Metropolitical Power. Sect. 6. Also by confining them to the Communion of their own Church. Sect. 7. Or by removing them from a greater Diocese to a lesser. Sect. 8. The Clergy in general punished by a Loss of their Seniority among those of their own Order. Sect. 9. The inferior Clergy punished by rendring them incapable of being promoted to any higher Order. Sect. 10. The Clergy sometimes punished by denying them the publick Exercise of their Office, whilst they were allowed to officiate in private. Sect. 11. Of Intrusion of Offenders into a Monastery to do Penance in private. Sect. 12. Of corporal Punishment. How far used as a Piece of Discipline upon the inferior Clergy.

CHAP. V.

A particular Account of the Crimes for which Clergymen were liable to be punished with any of the forementioned Kinds of Censure. Pag. 191.

Sect. 1. All Crimes that were punished with Excommunication communication in a Layman, punished with Suspension or Deprivation in the Clergy. Sect. 2. Some Crimes rendred an Ordination originally void: And for such Crimes the Clergy were immediately liable to be degraded from the very Moment of their Ordination. As 1lt, For Ignorance or Heterodoxy in Religion. Sect. 3. 2dly, For great Immorality before their Ordination: And for being ordained against any of the known Rules of Ordination. As if he were a Digamist, or married to a Widow, or to one that had been divorced from another Man. If he were ordained ἀπολελυμένως, without being fixed to some particular Diocese. If he were ordained without Letters dimissory against the Consent of his own Bishop; or without the Consent of any of the Parties that had a Right to vote in his Election. If any Bishop was ordained, who had before been degraded from his Orders. Or if he was ordained into a full See, where another was regularly ordained before him. If any was an Energumen, or under the Agitation of an evil Spirit, when he was ordained, who had never been baptized, or not baptized in due Form, or was baptized by Hereticks, or rebaptized by them; If any made use of the secular Powers to gain a Promotion in the Church; If a Bishop ordained any of his own unworthy Kindred; If a Bishop clandestinely ordained his own Successor without the Consent of the Metropolitan or a Provincial Council; Or if two Bishops clandestinely ordained a Bishop without the Consent of their Fellow Bishops and the Metropolitan; In all these Cases the Clergy so ordained were liable to be deposed for transgressing the Rules of Ordination. Sect. 4. No Remedy allowed in this Case by doing Publick Penance for Offences. For all Publick Penitents were for ever incapable of Ordination. And if any such were ordained, they were immediately liable to be deposed and degraded. Sect. 5. Some Impediments of Ordination arising from Mens outward State and Condition in the World, were sometimes Occasions of Deprivation. As if any Soldier was ordained, or any Slave or Vassal without the Consent of his Master; or any Member of a Civil Corporation, or any of the Curiales in the Roman Government. Sect. 6. What Crimes might occasion the Deprivation of the Clergy, or other Censures to befall them, in the Performance of their Office, or rather Non-performance of it after Ordination. Clergymen to be censured for Contempt of the Canons in general. Sect. 7. More particularly for Negligence in their Duty. Sect. 8. For neglecting to use the Publick Liturgy, Lord's-Prayer, Hymns, &c. Sect. 9. For making any Alteration in the Form of Baptism. Sect. 10. For not frequenting Divine Service daily. Sect. 11. For meddling with secular Offices. Sect. 12. For deserting their own Church without Licence, to go to another. Sect. 13. For officiating after the Condemnation of a Synod. Sect. 14. For Appealing from the Censure of a Provincial Synod to any foreign Churches. Sect. 15. For refusing to end Controversies before Bishops, and flying to a secular Tribunal. Sect. 16. For suffering themselves to be rebaptized or reordained. Sect. 17. For denying themselves to be Clergymen. Sect. 18. For publishing Apocryphal Books. Sect. 19. For superstitious Abstinence from Flesh, Wine, &c. Sect. 20. For eating of Blood. Sect. 21. For contemning the Fasts or Festivals of the Church. Sect. 22. For not observing the Rule about Easter. Of the Ceremonies used in admitting Penitents to do Publick Penance, and the Manner of performing Publick Penance in the Church. Pag. 210.

Sect. 1. Penitents first admitted to Penance by Imposition of Hands. Sect. 2. At which Time they were obliged to appear before the Bishop with Sackcloth and Ashes upon their Head. This Ceremony anciently not confined to Ash-wednesday, or the Beginning of Lent, but Persons were admitted to Penance at any Time, as the Bishop judged most proper in his own Discretion. Sect. 3. Penitents obliged to cut off their Hair, or go veiled, as another Token of Sorrow and Mourning. Sect. 4. Penitents to abstain from Bathing and Feasting, and other innocent Diversions of Life. Sect. 5. Penitents to observe all the Publick Fasts of the Church. Sect. 6. Penitents to restrain themselves in the Use of the Conjugal State. Sect. 7. For which Reason no married Persons were admitted to do Penance, but by Consent of both Parties. Sect. 8. Penitents not allowed to marry in the Time of their Penance. Sect. 9. Penitents obliged to pray Kneeling, whilst others prayed Standing, on all Festivals and Days of Relaxation. Sect. 10. Penitents obliged to shew great Liberality to the Poor. Sect. 11. And to minister and serve the Church in burying the Dead.

CHAP. III.

A particular Account of the Exomologesis, or penitential Confession of the Ancient Church; shewing it to be a different Thing from the private or auricular Confession introduced by the Church of Rome. Pag. 215.

Sect. 1. The gross Mistake of those, who make the Exomologesis of the ancient Church to signify Auricular Confession. Sect. 2. No Necessity of Auricular Confession ever urged by the Ancient Church. Sect. 3. This proved farther from the Practice of the Ancients in denying all manner of Absolution to some relapsing Sinners, without excluding them from the Mercy and Pardon of GOD, upon Confession to him alone. Sect. 4. And from above twenty Considerations of the like Nature. Sect. 5. Yet private Confession allowed and encouraged in some Cases. As 1st, For lesser Sins, Men were advised mutually to confess to one another, to have each others Prayers and Assistance. Sect. 6. 2dly, In Case of Injuries done to private Persons, Men were obliged to confess, and ask Pardon of the injured Party. Sect. 7. 3dly, When they were under any Troubles of Conscience, they were advised to make private Confession to a Minister, to have his Counsel and Direction. Sect. 8. 4thly, To take his Advice also, whether it was proper to do Publick Penance for Private Offences. Sect. 9. 5thly, When there was any Danger of Death arising from the Laws of the State against certain Offences. Sect. 10. 6thly, Private Confession was also required in Case of Private Admonition for Offences. Sect. 11. The Office of the Penitentiary Priest set up in many Churches to receive and regulate such Private Confessions. Sect. 12. This Office was afterwards abrogated in the East by Nectarius, and Men were left to their Liberty as to what concerned Private Confession.

CHAP. IV.

Of the great Rigour, Strictness, and Severity of the Discipline and Penance of the Ancient Church. Pag. 224.

Sect. 1. Publick Penance ordinarily allowed but once to any Sort of Sinners. Sect. 2. Some Sinners held under a strict Penance all their Lives to the very Hour of Death. Sect. 3. Such as were absolved upon a Death-bed, were obliged to perform their ordinary Penance, if they recovered. Sect. 4. Some Sinners were denied Communion at their last Hour. Sect. 5. How this may be vindicated and cleared from the Charge of Novatianism. Sect. 6. This Rigour abated in After Ages, without any Reflection on the preceding Practice. Sect. 7. What Liberty was allowed to Bishops in imposing of Penance, and exacting proper Satisfaction of Sinners. Some Sinners allowed to do Penance twice. Sect. 8. Bishops had also Power to moderate the Term of Penance upon just Occasion. Sect. 9. And this was the true ancient Notion of an Indulgence. Sect. 10. Which was sometimes granted at the Intercession of the Martyrs, or the Instance of the Civil Magistrate. Sect. 11. Bishops had also a Power to alter the Nature of the Penalty in some Measure, as well as the Term of it. Sect. 12. What the Ancients mean by the Term, Legitima Pœnitentia. Sect. 13. What meant by the Phrase, Inter Hyemantes orare.

BOOK XVI.

Of the UNITY and DISCIPLINE of the Ancient CHURCH.

CHAP. I.

Of the Union and Communion observed in the Ancient Church.

SECT. 1. Of the fundamental Unity of Faith and Obedience to the Laws of Christ.

THE Design of Eccleſiaſtical Diſcipline being chiefly to preſerve the Unity of the Church in all neceſſary Things, and keep it in Purity, and free from Corruption, by turning out unworthy Members from her Society and Communion, and denying them all the Privileges that belong to it; nothing will be more proper to uſher in a Diſcourſe concerning the Diſcipline of the ancient Church, than firſt to give a preliminary Account of that Union and Communion, which ſhe laboured to preſerve in all her Members united in one myſtical Body under CHRIST her univerſal Head. And here firſt of all, the Unity of Faith was principally inſiſted on, as the Foundation on which all other Sorts of Chriſtian Unity were built: And next to this, they required the Unity of Holineſs or Obedience, that the Church might be One in obſerving all the Laws and Inſtitutions of CHRIST. Some reckon the firſt Sort of Unity fundamental and eſſential [a] to the very Being of the Church, and all others only neceſſary to the Well-being of it. But I conceive the Ancients [b] accounted both the Unity of Faith and Obedience neceſſary as Fundamentals to the very Being of the Church, being both joyned together by our Saviour, as the Rock on which his Church ſhould be built. For, as he ſays of Faith, Upon this Rock will I build my Church, and the Gates of Hell ſhall not prevail againſt it, Matth. xvi. 18. ſo he ſays of Obedience to his Laws, Whoſoever heareth theſe Sayings of mine, and doth them, I will liken him to a wiſe Man, which built his Houſe upon a Rock: and the Rain deſcended, and the Floods came, and the Winds blew, and beat upon that Houſe: and it fell not, for it was founded upon a Rock. But every one that heareth theſe Sayings of mine, and doth them not, ſhall be likened unto a fooliſh Man, which built his Houſe upon the Sand: and the Rain deſcended, and the Floods came, and the Winds blew, and beat upon that Houſe, and it fell, and great was the Fall of it, Matth. vii. 24.

[a] Claget. of Church Unity, p. 196.

[b] Vide Aug. de Unit. Eccleſ. cap. 21.

St. Luke in relating the ſame Paſſage, words it thus: He that heareth, and doth not, is like a Man that without a Foundation built an Houſe upon the Earth, againſt which the Stream did beat vehemently, and immediately it fell, and the Ruin of that Houſe was great, Luke vi. 49. So that Obedience, as well as Faith, is Part of that Foundation upon which the Church of CHRIST is built; And he that retains not the Unity of Obedience, wants an eſſential Part of its Foundation, and is not a real, living Member of CHRIST's Myſtical Body; but only a broken, or withered Branch of it. In regard to which, our Saviour ſays in another Place, Whoſoever ſhall break one of theſe leaſt Commandments, and ſhall teach Men ſo; he ſhall be called leaſt in the Kingdom of Heaven, Matth. v. 19.

UPON this Account, when he ſent his Apoſtles to teach all Nations, he enjoyned them two Things, Firſt, To baptize them in the Name, or Faith, of the Father, and of the Son, and of the Holy Ghoſt: And Secondly, To teach them to obſerve all Things whatſoever he had commanded them, Matth. xxviii. 20. And for the ſame Reaſon the ancient Church never admitted any Perſons to Baptiſm (which was the ordinary Door of admitting Proſelytes, and uniting them as Members to the Body of the Church) without firſt obliging them to do theſe two Things: 1*ſt*, To make Profeſſion of the primary Articles of the Chriſtian Faith: And 2*dly*, To promiſe, or bind themſelves by a ſtrict Engagement and Vow, to live in holy Obedience to the Laws and Inſtitutions of CHRIST. As I have fully ſhewed in a former Book [*], treating of the neceſſary Conditions required of Men before their Baptiſm. Where I have particularly remarked out of St. Auſtin, that he wrote that excellent Book, De Fide & Operibus, to ſhew the Neceſſity of Obedience and Good-works, as well as Faith, to the Being of a Chriſtian; againſt ſome who pretended, That the Profeſſion of Faith in CHRIST, and not the Profeſſion of Obedience to his Laws, was neceſſarily to be required of Men, in order to unite them as Chriſtians to the Body of the Church by Baptiſm. They ſaid, Men were to be baptized, and united to the Church, ſo long as they kept the Foundation of Faith entire, whatever wicked Works they built thereupon: For theſe would be purged away by certain Puniſhments of Fire, and they would obtain Salvation at the laſt by Virtue of the Foundation, which they retained. To which St. Auſtin replies, That this was a falſe Interpretation of the Apoſtle's Meaning; and that however theſe Men were ſo impudent, as to charge the Church's Practice with Novelty; yet it was always a firm Cuſtom obtaining in the Church, to reject profeſſed Workers of Iniquity from Baptiſm, and conſtantly refuſe them the Communion of the Church: And this was grounded upon the Rules of ancient Truth, which manifeſtly declared, That they which do ſuch Things, ſhall not inherit the Kingdom of GOD. Since therefore both Faith and Obedience were reckoned eſſentially neceſſary to Baptiſm, they muſt be concluded equally neceſſary to preſerve Men in the real and perfect Unity of the Church; unleſs we could ſuppoſe, that any thing was neceſſary to make a Man a Chriſtian, that was not neceſſary to make or keep him a Member of the Church.

IF it be now enquired, What Articles of Faith, and what Points of Practice were reckoned thus fundamental, or eſſential to the very Being of a Chriſtian, and the Union of many Chriſtians into one Body or Church: The Ancients are very plain in reſolving this. For as to Fundamental Articles of Faith, the Church had them always collected or ſummed up out of Scripture in her Creeds, the Profeſſion of which were ever eſteemed both neceſſary on the one hand, and ſufficient on the other, in order to the Admiſſion of Members into the Church by Baptiſm; and conſequently both neceſſary and ſufficient to keep Men in the Unity of the Church, ſo far as concerns the Unity of Faith generally required of all Chriſtians, to make them one Body and one Church of Believers. Upon this Account, as I have had Occaſion to ſhew in a former [†] Book, the Creed was commonly called by the Ancients the Κανὼν and Regula Fidei, becauſe it was the known Standard or Rule of Faith, by which Orthodoxy and Hereſy were judged and examined. If a Man adhered to this Rule, he was deemed an Orthodox Chriſtian, and in the Union of the Catholick Faith: But if he deviated from it in any Point, he was eſteemed as one that cut himſelf off, and ſeparated from the Communion of the Church, by entertaining heretical Opinions, and deſerting the Common Faith. Thus the Fathers in the Council of Antioch [b], charge Paulus Samoſatenſis with departing from the Rule of Canon, meaning the Creed, the Rule of Faith, becauſe he denied the Divinity of CHRIST. Irenæus [c] calls it the unalterable Canon or Rule of Faith. And ſays [d], This Faith was the ſame in all the World; Men profeſſed it with one Heart and one Soul: For though there were different Dialects in the World, yet the Power of Faith was one and the ſame. The Churches in Germany had no other Faith or Tradition, than thoſe in Spain, or in France, or in the Eaſt, or Egypt, or Libya. Nor did the moſt Eloquent Ruler of the Church, ſay any more than this: For no one was above his Maſter: Nor the weakeſt diminiſh any Thing of this Tradition. For the Faith being one and the ſame, ſame, he that ſaid moſt of it, could not inlarge it; nor he that ſaid leaſt, take any thing from it. So Tertullian [e] ſays, There is one Rule of Faith only, which admits of no Change or Alteration, That which teaches us to believe in One God Almighty, the Maker of the World, and in Jeſus Chriſt his Son, &c. This Rule, he ſays [f], was inſtituted by CHRIST himſelf, and there were no Diſputes in the Church about it, but ſuch as Hereticks brought in, or ſuch as made Hereticks. To know nothing beyond this, was to know all Things. This Faith [g] was the Rule of Believing from the Beginning of the Goſpel, and the Antiquity of it was ſufficiently demonſtrated by the Novelty of Hereſies, which were but of Yeſterday's ſtanding in compariſon of it. Cyprian ſays [h], It was the Law which the whole Catholick Church held, and that the Novatians themſelves baptized into the ſame Creed, though they differed about the Senſe of the Article relating to the Church. Therefore Novatian in his Book of the TRINITY [i] makes no Scruple to give the Creed the ſame Name, Regula Veritatis, the Rule of Truth. And St. Jerom [k] after the ſame manner, diſputing againſt the Errors of the Montaniſts, ſays, The firſt Thing they differed about, was the Rule of Faith. For the Church believed the FATHER, SON and HOLY GHOST, to be each diſtinct in his own Perſon, though united in Subſtance: But the Montaniſts following the Doctrine of Sabellius, contracted the TRINITY into One Perſon. From all which it is evident, That the Fundamental Articles of Faith were thoſe which the Primitive Church ſummed up in her Creeds, in the Profeſſion of which ſhe admitted Men as Members into the Unity of her Body by Baptiſm; and if any deſerted or corrupted this Faith, they were no longer reputed Chriſtians, but Hereticks, who brake the Unity of the Church by breaking the Unity of the Faith, though they had otherwiſe made no farther Separation from her Communion. For as Clemens Alexandrinus [l] ſays out of Hermes Paſtor, Faith is the Vertue that binds and unites the Church together. Whence Hegeſippus the ancient Hiſtorian, giving an Account of the old Hereticks, ſays [m], They divided the Unity of the Church by pernicious Speeches againſt GOD and his CHRIST: That is, By denying ſome of the Prime, Fundamental Articles of Faith. He that makes a Breach upon any one of theſe, cannot maintain the Unity of the Church, nor his own Character as a Chriſtian. We ought therefore, ſays Cyprian [n], in all Things to hold the Unity of the Catholick Church, and not to yield in any Thing to the Enemies of Faith and Truth. For he cannot [o] be thought a Chriſtian, who continues not in the Truth of CHRIST's Goſpel and Faith. If Men be Hereticks, ſays Tertullian [p], they cannot be Chriſtians. The like is ſaid by Lactantius, and Jerom, and Athanaſius, and Hilary, and many others of the Ancients, whoſe Senſe upon this Matter I have fully repreſented [*] in another Place. As therefore there was an Unity of Faith neceſſary to be maintained in certain Fundamental Articles in order to make a Man a Chriſtian: So theſe Articles were always to be found in the Church's Creeds; the Profeſſion of which was eſteemed keeping the Unity of the Faith; and deviating in any Point from them, was eſteemed a Breach of that One Faith, and a virtual departing from the Unity of the Church.

As to the other Points of Obedience to the Laws and Inſtitutions of CHRIST, which were reckoned Fundamental and Eſſential to the Being of a Chriſtian and the Unity of the Church, they were generally ſummed up in theſe ſhort Forms of Renouncing the Devil and his Service, and his Works, and Covenanting with Chriſt to live by the Rules of his Goſpel. By which they underſtood the renouncing all groſs Sins, ſuch as Idolatry, Witchcraft, Murder, Injuſtice, Intemperance, Uncleanneſs, and whatever might be called worldly and fleſhly Luſts, contrary to the general Tenour of the Goſpel, and the Grace of GOD which had appeared unto all Men, teaching us, That denying Ungodlineſs and wordly Luſts, we ſhould live ſoberly, righteouſly, and godly in this preſent World. They that walked after this Rule, and ſquared their Lives by theſe general Meaſures and Lines of Duty; adding to their Faith Vertue, and to Vertue Knowledge, and to Knowledge Temperance, and to Temperance Patience, and to Patience Godlineſs, and to Godlineſs Brotherly-kindneſs, and to Brotherly-kindneſs Charity; theſe were the true Iſrael of GOD, and in the perfect Unity of his Church: As long as they did theſe Things, they could never fall: Nothing could ſeparate them from His Church, or from the Love of GOD in CHRIST JESUS: For ſo an Entrance was miniſtred to them abundantly into the everlaſting Kingdom of our Lord and Saviour Jeſus Chriſt. But if Men went contrary to this Rule, Walking in the Works of the Fleſh, and not of the Spirit, profeſſing to know God, but in Works denying him; though they might be corporeally and externally united to the Viſible Body of the Church, yet internally ternally and ſpiritually they were divided from it. St. Auſtin [q] ſays expreſsly, That though Men were regenerated by Baptiſm, yet none but the Good were ſpiritually built up into the Body and Members of CHRIST: The Good only compoſe that Church, of which it is ſaid, As the Lily among Thorns, ſo is my Love among the Daughters, Cant. ii. 2. That Church conſiſts only of thoſe who build upon the Rock, that is, who hear the Words of CHRIST, and do them. They therefore are not of that Church, who build upon the Sand, that is, who hear the Words of CHRIST, and do them not. And as they, who by the Ligaments of Charity are incorporated into the Building that is founded upon the Rock, and into the Lily that ſhines among Thorns, ſhall inherit the Kingdom of God: So they who build upon the Sand, and are numbred among the Thorns, ſhall as certainly not inherit the Kingdom of God. A little after [r] reciting thoſe Words of the Apoſtle, Gal. v. The Works of the Fleſh are manifeſt, which are theſe, Adultery, Fornication, Uncleanneſs, Laſciviouſneſs, Idolatry, Witchcraft, Hatred, Variance, Emulations, Wrath, Strife, Seditions, Hereſies, Envyings, Murders, Drunkenneſs, Revellings, and ſuch like; of the which I tell you before, as I have alſo told you in Time paſt, that they which do ſuch Things, ſhall not inherit the Kingdom of God: He adds, All thoſe are not in the Lily, nor upon the Rock, and Hereticks are in that Number. Again, ſpeaking of the Grace of the Spirit, which ſanctifies good Men, he ſays, This is wanting in all the Wicked, and Sons of Hell, although they be baptized [s] with the Baptiſm of CHRIST, as Simon Magus was baptized. There are many ſuch [t] who communicate in the Sacraments with the Church, and yet they are not now in the Church. Such are cut off, before they be viſibly Excommunicated: And if they be viſibly Excommunicated, and viſibly reſtored to Communion; if they come with a feigned Mind, and an Heart oppoſing the Truth and the Church, they are not reconciled, they are not inſerted into the Church, although the Solemnity of Reconciliation be performed upon them. In another Place he ſays [u], The wicked Multitude of the Church are not reckoned to be in the Church, ſave only ſo far as they have the ſame Sacraments in common with the Saints, becauſe they have only a Form of Godlineſs, but deny the Power of it. He repeats the ſame frequently in his Books againſt Creſconius [x] and other Places, which it is needleſs here to repeat at Length. I only obſerve, That as Charity was reckoned one Eſſential Part of a Chriſtian's Vertue: (Our Saviour having made it the Characteriſtick Note of his Diſciples: By this ſhall all Men know that ye are my Diſciples, if ye have Love one for another:) So the Ancients laid a great Streſs upon this one Vertue, without which they never reputed any Man to be truly in the Unity of the Church, whatever Claim he could otherwiſe lay to the Communion of it.

SECT 2. Of the Unity of Love and Charity, as an eſſential Part of Chriſtian Obedience.

I DO not think any Man, ſays St. Auſtin [y], ſo vain and fooliſh, as to believe ſuch an one to appertain to the Unity of the Church, who has not Charity. For St. James ſpeaking againſt thoſe, who thought it ſufficient to believe, but would not do Good Works, ſays, Thou believeſt that there is One God; thou doſt well: The Devils alſo believe and tremble. Certainly the Devils are not in the Unity of the Church; and yet we cannot ſay, they believe otherwiſe of CHRIST than the Church believes, ſeeing they ſaid to the Lord JESUS CHRIST himſelf, What have we to do with Thee, thou Son of God? And St. Paul ſays, Though I have all Faith, ſo that I could remove Mountains, and have no Charity, I am nothing. They that are Enemies to this Brotherly Charity, ſays St. Auſtin again [z], whether they are openly out of the Church, or ſeem to be within, they are falſe Chriſtians, and Antichriſts. When they ſeem to be within, they are ſeparated from that inviſible Union or Bond of Charity. Whence St. John ſays of them, They went out from us; but they were not of us. He does not ſay, they were made Aliens by going out, but becauſe they were Aliens before, he declares, that therefore they went out. This Charity was neceſſary to incorporate Men into that Building [a], which was founded upon the Rock of Obedience, without which it could not ſtand: To uphold the Structure, Charity was required as a principal Part of the Foundation, whereupon the whole Building reſted, being fitly framed together, and united by Charity into One, as Members of the Myſtical Body of CHRIST.

SECT. 3. Other Sorts of Unity, neceſſary to the Well-being of the Church.

AFTER this Manner the Ancients commonly diſcourſed of theſe Sorts of Unity, which I call Fundamental to the very Being of a Church; being ſo abſolutely neceſſary and eſſential, as that the Church could not conſiſt without them. They were neceſſary to every Individual, and neceſſary in all Caſes and Circumſtances whatſoever: There being no Caſe, in which it was lawful to deny the Faith; nor any Caſe that could diſpenſe with a Man's Obligations to Sobriety, Godlineſs, Righteouſneſs and Charity. There were other Sorts of Unity, neceſſary indeed to the Well-being of the Church, but yet not ſo abſolutely eſſential, but that a Man in ſome extraordinary Caſes and Circumſtances might be incapacitated or hindred in the actual Performance of them, without incurring the Cenſure of breaking the Unity of the Church, or being wholly excluded out of her Communion. It is every Chriſtian's Duty to unite himſelf to the Church by Baptiſm, and to receive it from the Hands of a regular Miniſtry; It is his Duty to joyn in Communion with the Church where he lives, and aſſemble with them for Worſhip and Prayers, and Adminiſtration of the Word and Sacraments, and all other holy Offices; It is his Duty to live under the Government of a Regular and Lawful Miniſtry, and ſubmit himſelf to all the Rules of the Church in Worſhip and Diſcipline, that are not contrary or repugnant to the Word of GOD: But then it may happen, that a Man cannot have Baptiſm, though he be never ſo deſirous of it; ſudden Death may prevent him, whilſt he is ſeriouſly preparing for it. In this Caſe, the Church did not deny him her Communion, though he was never formally entred into it, but accepted the Will for the Deed, and treated him after Death as one of her Sons dying in her Boſom and Communion. Which was the Caſe of many Martyrs, and others dying without Baptiſm, not out of Contempt, but by the Exigence of ſome unforeſeen Accident preventing them. So again, It might happen, that a Man in Extremity, when he was deſirous of Baptiſm, could not have it but from the Hands of an Heretick, or a Layman. In this Caſe, the Church was equally favourable to the Party ſo baptized, becauſe he was united in Heart and Will to the Church, and it was not Contempt of her Miniſtry, but Neceſſity that drove him to receive Baptiſm from an Heretick or a Layman, rather than die without it. In like Manner, a Man that was very deſirous to joyn with the Church in her publick Aſſemblies, might notwithſtanding by ſome great Exigence be debarred from this Privilege, as by Sickneſs, or Impriſonment, or Baniſhment: In which Caſe he was not divided from the Communion of the Church in Worſhip or Prayers; but his Spirit was ſtill preſent in her religious Aſſemblies, though Neceſſity obliged him in Body to be abſent from them. Or if it were but the Care of the Indigent, that required his Help, and kept him away from the ſolemn Meeting in GOD's Houſe, his Reaſon was good, and ſuch an Act was no Breach of Chriſtian Unity, becauſe GOD himſelf allows it; nay, requires it by his own Rule, I will have Mercy, and not Sacrifice: Which in ſuch Caſes, where Men act ſincerely, and trifle not with GOD, is always their Juſtification both before GOD and his Church. It was farther required, That Men ſhould comply with all the innocent Cuſtoms, and lawful Orders of the Church; and eſpecially ſubmit to her Diſcipline in Caſe of any ſcandalous Tranſgreſſion or Immorality: But if Men by reaſon of Sickneſs, or Infirmity, or Old-Age, could not obſerve her Rules about Faſting; or by reaſon of their Poverty could not abſtain from their ordinary Labour to attend her Feſtivals; theſe were not reckoned Tranſgreſſions of her Rules, or good Order, becauſe they naturally admitted of ſuch Limitations and Exceptions: And no Man was accuſed as a Divider of the Church's Unity for going againſt her Cuſtoms in ſuch Caſes. So though it was required, that Penitents under Diſcipline ſhould be reconciled to the Church by Impoſition of Hands and Abſolution; yet if any real Penitent, who was deſirous of Abſolution, happened to be ſtruck dumb, or die before he could receive it; this was reckoned no Prejudice to his Condition: In this Caſe, his Good-will, and Deſire, and Intention of being reconciled, was reputed ſufficient to reſtore him to the Peace and Unity of the Church, though he wanted the Formality of an external Abſolution.

THIS was the great Difference between thoſe Sorts of Unity, which were reckoned fundamental, and eſſential to the very Being of a Church, and thoſe which were required as neceſſary to the Well-being of it: The former admitted of no Diſpenſation; but the latter did in theſe and the like Caſes. No Caſe could diſpenſe with a Man's putting away a good Conſcience, or making Shipwreck of Faith: No Neceſſity could be ſo great as to juſtify a Man in denying an eſſential or fundamental Truth, or in living in open and profeſſed Violation of thoſe neceſſary Rules and great Lines of Duty, which require the Practice of univerſal Holineſs in a godly, righteous, ſober Life, as the indiſpenſable Condition of Salvation: But ſeveral Neceſſities might diſpenſe with Men in the Non-obſervance of the Things of the latter Kind; and therefore it is of great Uſe carefully to diſtinguiſh theſe Things in ſpeaking of the Unity of the Church. As therefore I have ſpoken particularly of the Former, ſo I will now ſpeak a little more Diſtinctly of theſe later, and ſhew how far the Ancients urged the Neceſſity of them.

AND

SECT. 4. Among these they reckoned. 1st, The Necessary Use of One Baptism, Ordinarily to be administred by the Hands of a Regular Ministry.

AND here first of all they required, That Men should unite themselves to the Church by Baptism; and that administred but Once; and this also to be administred ordinarily by the Hands of a Regular Ministry, except some urgent Necessity obliged them to do otherwise. The Necessity of Baptism they urged from the Tenor of the Commission given to the Apostles, Go, baptize all Nations: And from those Words of our Saviour, John iii. 5. Except a Man be born of Water, and the Spirit, he cannot enter into the Kingdom of God. There were many Hereticks, who contemned the Use of Water-Baptism, as a Carnal Ordinance, and wholly denied the Necessity of it to Salvation in any Case whatsoever, of whom I have given a particular Account [*] in a former Book. Against these they urged the Necessity of Baptism in all Ordinary Cases, to make Men Members of the Church; and strenuously maintained, that Men who wilfully neglected or despised Baptism, could not by any other Means be united to the Church of CHRIST, or have any Grounds for Hope of Eternal Life; because they despised that Ordinance of CHRIST, which he had made the Regular and Ordinary Way of admitting Members into his Church, and refused to enter by that Door, which he had appointed to be the general Entrance to Eternal Life. This Opinion of the Ancients concerning the Necessity of Baptism in all Ordinary Cases, maintained against those several Heresies, the Reader may find fully discoursed in a foregoing Part of this Work [†]; where I observed, That though they strictly urged the Necessity of Baptism in order to make Men Members of the Church, and Sons of GOD; expressing themselves severely against all that either carelessly neglected it, or prophanely despised it; yet they did not believe it to be so simply and absolutely necessary as the Unity of Faith and Repentance: Because they always maintained, that the bare Want of Baptism, where there was no Contempt, might be supplied by Martyrdom; where the exhibiting of Faith, and the greatest Testimony of Obedience that could be given, was sufficient to unite them to CHRIST and His Church in that Case, and grant them all the Privileges of Christian Communion. And the like was determined concerning the Faith and Repentance of such Catechumens, as were piously preparing for Baptism, but were snatched away by sudden Death before they had any Opportunity to receive it. Which shews, that they put a manifest Difference between the Unity of Faith and Obedience, as Fundamental and Essential to the very Being of a Church, the Want of which nothing could supply; and the Unity of Baptism, which though Ordinarily necessary to the Well-being of the Church, yet was not absolutely necessary and essential, but that the want of it may be supplied in some Cases by Faith and Obedience; and by these a Martyr or a pious Catechumen might be presumed to die in the Unity of the Church without Baptism, when they had no Opportunity to receive it.

THE Form of Baptism itself indeed, whenever it was administred, was a little more necessary, because that implied a Profession of Faith in the Holy TRINITY, and universal Obedience to the Laws of CHRIST; and therefore Baptism administred in any other Form was reputed Null and Void even in the Church itself, and was of Necessity to be repeated: But then this Necessity did not arise from the bare Necessity of Baptism (which might, as we have heard, be dispensed with in some Cases) but from the Necessity of Faith and Obedience, presupposed as antecedent Qualifications, essential to the very Being of a Church and the Character of a Christian in the largest Denomination. So that what made this so absolutely necessary, was not the absolute Necessity of Baptism it self, which might be dispensed with in some Extraordinary Cases, where those Qualifications were really in the Hearts of Men before Baptism: But it was the Want of those Qualifications, or at least the Want of professing them in due Form, that made the Baptism void; because there was a strong Presumption, that they had not those Qualifications that were essential to the very Being of a Christian, since no Profession of them was made in their Baptism. For which Reason, whether it was given in the Church, or out of the Church, it was always to be repeated, as a Thing Null and Void, for Want of those Qualifications of Faith and Obedience, which were so indispensably required to make a Man a Christian.

IT was necessary also to the Unity of the Church in its Well-being, that Baptism should ordinarily be administred only by the Hands of a Regular Ministry: And therefore for either Laymen without a Commission in the Church to usurp this Authority, or for Hereticks and Schismaticks without the Church to assume this Power, was always esteemed a great Breach of the Church's Unity. And though the Church did not always annul such Baptism, if given in due Form of Words; yet she always condemned the Thing as an Usurpation, and an Act of Criminal Schism, and manifest Prevarication both in the Giver and voluntary Receiver. Insomuch, that one of the Ancient Councils [b] orders, That if any Catholick offered his Children to be baptized by Hereticks, his his Oblation ſhould not be received in the Church. This was in Effect to puniſh him with Excommunication, as an Encourager of Hereticks, and a Divider of the Unity of the Church. And St. Jerom ſays [c], to the ſame Purpoſe, If a Man who is Orthodox in his own Faith, is wittingly and willingly baptized by Hereticks, he deſerves no Pardon for his Crime. But then it might happen, that a Man in Extremity might be ſo diſtreſſed as to have none but an Heretick to baptize him; in which Caſe to receive Baptiſm from the Hands of an Heretick or Schiſmatick, was reckoned no Breach of Catholick Unity, becauſe the Man in Heart and Mind was ſtill united to the Catholick Church. This is St. Auſtin's [d] Reſolution of the Caſe. If a Man, ſays he, is compelled by extream Neceſſity, where he cannot have a Catholick to give him Baptiſm, to take it at the Hands of One who is not in Catholick Unity; in that Caſe we reckon him no other than a Catholick ſtill, though he died immediately, becauſe he was in Heart and Mind a Catholick, and would have been baptized in Catholick Unity, if there had been any Opportunity to have done it. If ſuch an one ſurvives, and corporally joyns himſelf to the Catholick Congregation, from which in Heart he never departed, we not only not diſallow what he has done, but ſecurely and truly commend him for it: Becauſe he believed GOD to be preſent in his Heart, where he preſerved Unity, and would not depart out of this Life without the Sacrament of Baptiſm, which he knew to be GOD's, and not Mens, whereſoever he found it. But if any one when he might receive it in the Catholick Church, by ſome Perverſeneſs of Mind, chuſes rather to be baptized in Schiſm, though he afterward deſign to return to the Church, becauſe he is certain the Sacrament will profit him in the Church, but not elſewhere, though he may receive it elſewhere: This is a perverſe and wicked Man, and ſo much the more pernicious ſuch, by how much the more knowing he is. In another Place he propoſes the ſame Queſtion, Whether a Catholick without a Breach of Unity might receive Baptiſm from a Schiſmatick? And he anſwers [e] it after the ſame manner. That he may ſafely receive it of a Separatiſt, if he himſelf be no Separatiſt when he receives it: For ſo it often happens to Men, who have a Catholick Mind, and an Heart no ways alienated from the Unity of Peace, that in extreme Neceſſity and imminent Danger of Death they light upon ſome Heretick, and receive the Baptiſm of CHRIST at his Hands; but not with the Perverſeneſs, or heretical Pravity of the Adminiſtrator. For whether they die or live, they do not remain among Hereticks, to whom in Heart they never went over. So again, diſtinguiſhing baptized Perſons into three Sorts; Firſt, Such as are baptized in the Houſe of GOD, and are truly and ſpiritually of the Houſe of GOD; Secondly, Such as are baptized in the Houſe of GOD, but are ſpiritually by wicked Works ſeparated from it; Thirdly, Such as are baptized in Hereſy or Schiſm, who are corporally ſeparated from the Houſe of GOD, and worſe than thoſe who live carnally within it, and are only ſpiritually divided from it: He adds [f] concerning this laſt Sort (who are rather to be ſaid to be of the Houſe of GOD, than in it, being farther ſeparated by corporal Diviſion, than thoſe who are only ſpiritually divided from it) that they neither have Baptiſm to any Profit themſelves, neither is it received with any Profit from them, except where the Neceſſity of Receiving it, forces a Man to receive it from them, and the Mind of the Receiver does no ways recede from the Bond of Unity. By which is intimated, That to receive Baptiſm in Caſe of Neceſſity from the Hands of an Heretick or Schiſmatick, does not involve a Man in the Guilt of Schiſm, ſo long as it is a Caſe of extreme Neceſſity, and the Man in Heart and Mind is all the Time in the Unity of the Catholick Church.

THE Caſe was the ſame with thoſe that were baptized by Laymen. The Rules of the Church required, That none ſhould baptize in ordinary Caſes, but the Regular and Lawful Miniſters of the Church; and to do otherwiſe, was always a Note of criminal Schiſm: But in Caſe of Extremity, ſhe granted a general Commiſſion even to Laymen to baptize, rather than any Perſon in ſuch an Exigence ſhould die without Baptiſm; and in ſuch a Caſe, to receive Baptiſm from a Layman, was neither Uſurpation nor Schiſm in the Giver or Receiver, becauſe they had the Church's Authority for the Action. I produce no Proofs or Evidence for this here, becauſe I have done it fully in a ſeparate Diſcourſe before, treating Hiſtorically of the Practice of the Church in reference to her Allowance of Baptiſm adminiſtred by Laymen, in Caſes extraordinary, when Men were in apparent Danger of Death, and could not have a Miniſter to baptize them.

IN all theſe Caſes, we ſee, nothing but extreme Neceſſity could excuſe Men from criminal nal Schism, in dividing themselves from the Church, either by the Neglect of Baptism, or seeking to Hereticks or Schismaticks, or Laymen for the Administration of it. And the like is to be said of any Man's suffering himself to be re-baptized, after he had once received a true Baptism, whether in the Church or out of it. For the Unity of Baptism was such, that it was never to be repeated. The greatest Apostates were never re-baptized by the Catholick Church upon their Admission again, but taken in by Imposition of Hands and Absolution upon their Repentance. Neither did the Church ever re-baptize those that were baptized in Heresy or Schism, except when some Doubt was made, whether the Baptism was defective in some essential Part of it. And therefore, because many Hereticks were inclined to re-baptize the Catholicks, very severe Laws were made both in Church and State, to repress this Insolence: Of which I have given a particular Account in handling the Subject [*] of Baptism heretofore, and need only now observe, That this Practice of Re-baptizing was always esteemed a schismatical Act, and a notorious Breach of Catholick Unity, which never allowed of more than one Baptism, according to that Rule of the Apostle, One Lord, One Faith, One Baptism, in the Church, as many of the Ancients expound it; or at least, because by the Divine Will it was so appointed.

SECT. 5. 2dly, The Unity of Worship, in joyning with the Church in Prayers, and Administration of the Word and Sacraments.

2. ANOTHER Sort of Unity, requisite to the Well-being of the Church, was the Unity of Worship, whereby all Christians were obliged to joyn with their respective Churches in the Performance of all holy Offices in Publick; such as Common-Prayer, and the Administration of the Word and Sacraments. Which did not require, that all Churches should exactly agree in the same Form of Words, which were not essential to these Things: (For, as we shall presently see, every Church was at Liberty to make Choice for herself in what Method and Form of Words she would perform these Things: And it was no Breach of Unity for different Churches to have different Modes, and Circumstances, and Ceremonies, in performing the same holy Offices, so long as they kept to the Substance of the Institution:) But that which was required to keep the Unity of the Church in these Matters, was, That every particular Member of any Church, should comply with the particular Customs and Usages of his own Church (nothing being inserted into her Offices that was unlawful) and meet for religious Worship, and hold constant Communion with her in the Performance of all Divine Service. And to do otherwise, either by neglecting wholly the Service of Religious Assemblies, or setting up opposite Communions, or raising unnecessary Disputes about the lawful Usages and innocent Practices of the Church whereof a Man was a Member, was always esteemed an Act of criminal Schism, as giving Scandal and Offence to the Church and his Brethren. There are several Canons in the Council of Gangra, made against the Separatists called Eustathians, directly to this Purpose. The fourth Canon runs thus: "If any one separate from a married Presby-"ter, upon Pretence that it is unlawful to "partake of the Oblation when he performs "the Liturgy, or celebrates the Office of Com-"munion, let him be Anathema, that is, de-"clared excommunicate, or cut off from the "Church." The fifth Canon is to the same Effect: "If any one teach, That the House "of GOD, and the Assemblies held therein, "are to be despised, let him be Anathema." The sixth forbids all private and irregular Assemblies: "If any hold other Assemblies pri-"vately out of the Church, and contemning "the Church will have Ecclesiastical Offices "performed without a Presbyter licensed by "the Bishop, let him be Anathema." The eleventh censures those in like manner, who despised the Feasts of Charity, made in Honour of the LORD, refusing to partake of them. The eighteenth censures such as fasted on the Lord's-Day, under Pretence of leading an Ascetick Life; this being a Thing contrary to the general Rule and Custom of the Church. The nineteenth, on the other hand, censures such Asceticks, as without the Excuse of bodily Infirmity, out of mere Pride contemptuously broke the Assemblies that were wont to be held in the Churches of the Martyrs, and the Service performed there, and the Commemorations of them. Among the Apostolical Canons there is one to the same Purpose, which orders [g], "That if any Presbyter, despising his Bi-"shop, gather a separate Congregation, "and erect another Altar, having nothing to "object against his Bishop in Point of God-"liness or Righteousness, he should be de-"posed, as a Lover of Pre-eminence, and "Arbitrary Power or Tyranny in the "Church." And if any of the Clergy conspired with him, they were likewise to be deposed, and Laymen to be suspended from the Communion, after a third Admonition given them from the Bishop. These were some of the ancient Rules relating to Separatists dividing wholly from the Church, and refusing contemptuously to communicate with her in Divine-Service. And for such as frequented some Part of the Service, but fell off from the rest, she set an equal Mark of Reproach upon them, as disobedient Children also. One of the Apostolical Canons [h] orders all Communicants, who came to Church to hear the Scriptures read, but did not stay to joyn in Prayers and receiving the Eucharist, to be suspended pended, as Authors of Confuſion and Diſorder in the Church. And the Council of Antioch [i] repeats, and reinforces this Canon. The Council of Eliberis [k] forbids the Biſhop to receive the Oblations of ſuch as did not communicate: Which was in Effect to cut them off from Communion with the Church, for the Neglect of that principal Part of Divine Service. The ſame Council in another Canon [†] orders, "That if any one, being at home in his own "City, did for three Lord's-Days together ab- "ſent himſelf from Church, he ſhould be ſuſ- "pended from the Communion for an equal "Term, that he might be made ſenſible of "his Crime by the Church's Cenſure.". The Council of Sardica, not long after, made a Decree to the ſame Purpoſe, referring to ſome former Canon that had been made upon this Matter, which tho' ſome Learned Men are at a Loſs to know what Canon it was, ſeems plainly to be this Canon of the Council of Eliberis. For Hoſius Biſhop of Corduba was preſent at both theſe Councils, and preſided in that of Sardica, which makes it probable, that he referred to the Canon of Eliberis, when he propoſed it to the Fathers at Sardica for their Conſent and Approbation. For the Council of Sardica [l] repeats a Canon made in ſome former Council, importing, That a Layman abſenting from Church for three Lord's-Days together, without juſt Cauſe or Impediment, was to be excommunicated for his Tranſgreſſion. And the ſame is repeated [m] in the Council of Trullo. So careful was the Church to preſerve her Members in the Unity of Divine Worſhip, and diſcountenance all Separatiſts whether Partial or Total, that an Occaſional Communicant was liable to Cenſure as well as any other.

BUT then there were ſome neceſſary Reaſons, that might juſtly excuſe a Man from this Duty of conſtant Communion with his own Church. As if a Man was in a Journey, the very Nature of the Thing was his Excuſe: For he could not communicate with his own Church in ſuch a Neceſſity, and therefore the Council of Trullo delivers the Rule with that Limitation. If a Man was ſick and infirm, his Infirmity was ſuch an Impediment, as all Laws both Human and Divine would allow of as a reaſonable Cauſe of abſenting. And the ſame Reaſon would excuſe his Non-obſervance of the ſevere Faſts of the Church, which were impoſed upon none but thoſe that were able to bear them, as appears from the forecited Canon [n] of the Council of Gangra. The Stationary Days of Faſting and Prayer were chiefly deſigned for the Exerciſe of Religious Aſceticks, thoſe who had both Strength and Leiſure to attend them: And therefore an infirm Man, or a poor Man, who was to live by his bodily Labour, was under no Obligation to ſpend ſo much Time in thoſe ordinary Returns of Faſting and Prayer. If he communicated with the Church religiouſly on the Lord's-Days, his Omiſſions of the Reſt were not imputed to him as breaking Communion with the Church. If Men were in Priſon or in Baniſhment, the Neceſſity of their Confinement was their natural Excuſe. For how ſhould they join bodily in Communion with the Church, who had not the Liberty of their own Bodies, whilſt they were entirely at the Mercy and Diſpoſal of Others? It was ſufficient for them in ſuch a Caſe to join in Spirit, when they could not in bodily Preſence; and to ſay with David, As the Hart panteth after the Water-brooks, ſo panteth my Soul after Thee, O God. My Soul thirſteth for God, for the Living God: When ſhall I come and appear before God? Pſal. xlii. 1. And wo is me, that I am conſtrained to dwell with Meſeck, and to have my Habitation among the Tents of Kedar, Pſal. cxx. 5. O God, my Soul thirſteth for Thee, my Fleſh longeth after Thee, in a dry and thirſty Land, where no Water is; to ſee Thy Power and Glory, ſo as I have ſeen Thee in the Sanctuary, Pſal. lxiii. 1. It was their Misfortune, and not their Crime, in that Caſe, to be abſent from the Houſe of GOD: Mean while the whole World was to them the Temple of GOD: For the Earth is the Lord's and the Fulneſs thereof: Their Priſon was their Oratory, and the Wilderneſs a Sanctuary; their own Hearts a Sacrifice, and their own Bodies an Altar. When Lucian the Martyr made Uſe of his own Breaſt in Chains inſtead of a Communion-Table to offer the Euchariſt on, his Sacrifice was as acceptable to GOD, as if it had been in the midſt of the Church upon an Altar. For as St. Baſil words it [o], in ſuch a Caſe it is not the Place, but the Mind and Affection of the Supplicant, that GOD regards. Moſes was heard in the Bottom of the Sea, Job upon a Dunghill, Ezekias in his Bed, Jeremy in the Dungeon, Jonas in the Whales-Belly, Daniel in the Lion's Den, the Three Children in the burning fiery Furnace, the Penitent Thief upon the Croſs, and Peter and Paul in Priſon. Every Place, ſays Dionyſius [p] of Alexandria, is inſtead of a Temple in Time of Perſecution, whether it be a Field, or a Wilderneſs, or a Ship, or an Inn, or a Priſon. There is a great Difference to be made between Neceſſity and Contempt. If a Man voluntarily abſents himſelf from the Aſſemblies of the Church, when he may enjoy them, he is a Divider of her Unity, by contemning her Service: But if Neceſſity obliges him to be Abſent, when he is deſirous to be Preſent, he is ſpiritually Preſent with her even whilſt he is Abſent in Body: Which is as much preſerving her Unity, as his Caſe will allow, or the Church can require: Seeing this Sort of Unity is not ſimply Eſſential to the Being of a Church in all States, but only neceſſary to her Well-being in Peaceable Times and Ordinary Caſes. And happy would it be for the Church, if Men would never deny themſelves the Benefit of her Communion in Religious Aſſemblies, but upon ſuch Reaſons of Neceſſity, which carry their own Apology at firſt Sight in their very Nature: If they were merely paſſive, and not active, in their Separation, ſuch a Separation would involve them in the Guilt of Schiſm, being ſo rationally to be accounted for both before GOD and His Church. The Primitive Church was exceeding happy in theſe Two Things (which relate to this Sort of Unity in Communion, the want of which is ſo much to be lamented both in its Caſes and Effects in this unhappy divided State of the Church in later Ages;) 1*ſt*, That no Church then ever aſſumed to herſelf an Authority of impoſing upon her Members any Things Unlawful, or contrary to the Word of GOD, either in Faith or Practice, as neceſſary Terms of Communion. They required no Belief of any Articles of Faith, as neceſſary to Salvation, but ſuch as were contained in their Common-Creeds, and founded upon the infallible Authority of Scripture. They inſerted nothing into their Publick Forms of Worſhip, repugnant to the Word of GOD, or intrenching upon any Divine Rule given in Scripture about the Object or Matter or Manner of Adoration, as any one may perceive, by conſidering the Account that has been given of their Publick Worſhip and Liturgy in the Three laſt Books, where we examined every particular Office of it. Things being thus ſecured for the Subſtance of their Worſhip, all Chriſtian People in the next Place thought it their Duty to ſubmit to the Wiſdom and Prudence of their Governors in eſtabliſhing Things external and circumſtantial, relating to Expedience, Edification and good Order. And this was the Second Thing to be admired in the OEconomy of the Ancient Church, That the People never had any Diſpute with their Superiors about Matters of this Kind, but left all Indifferent Things, and Things of Expediency, Decency, Circumſtance and Form, to the Judgment and Choice of their Governours, or Perſons inveſted with Authority to determine ſuch Matters; readily complying with the innocent Cuſtoms of the Church, and all the Rules of Publick Order, and never dividing into Sects and Parties upon the Account of Rites and Ceremonies, though differently practiſed in different Churches. This was according to the wiſe and peaceable Rule laid down by St. Auſtin in his Advice to Caſulanus: In thoſe Things [q], ſays he, concerning which the Holy Scripture has given no poſitive Direction, the Cuſtom of the People of GOD, or the Rules of our Anceſtors or Superiors are to be taken for a Law. He inſtances in the Cuſtom of the Church, never to faſt on the Lord's-Day, which was become ſo much a Rule, that whoever ſhould pretend to introduce the contrary Cuſtom, to make it a Faſt, ſhould be thought to give great Scandal to the Church, and that not without good Reaſon. Nay he ſays, it would be to offend GOD, ſo to ſcandalize the Univerſal Church by holding a Faſt on the Lord's-Day; eſpecially ſince it was become the Practice of the impious Manichees ſo to faſt in Oppoſition to the Church. The Saturday-Faſt was not a Cuſtom of ſo general Obſervation: For ſome Churches kept it a Faſt, and ſome a Feſtival: But his Advice as to this is much of the ſame Nature, That a Man ſhould obſerve [r] the Cuſtom of every Church, where he happened to be, if he was minded neither to give Offence to them, nor take Offence from them. And this Advice, he ſays, he had in his younger Days from the Mouth of St. Ambroſe. But becauſe in ſuch a Matter as this is, it might happen, that not only different Churches might practiſe differently, but alſo the Members of the ſame Church might differ in their Practice one from another without Breach of Communion, as it was in ſome of the African Churches, where in one and the ſame Church ſome choſe to faſt, others to dine upon the Sabbath, his Advice to Caſulanus as a Presbyter [s] was, To follow the Cuſtom of thoſe who had the Care and Government of the Churches committed to them: Reſiſt not your Biſhop in ſuch a Matter as this, but follow what he does without any Scruple or Diſputation.

SECT. 6. 3dly, The Unity of Subjection of Preſbyters and People to their Biſhop, and Obedience to all publick Orders of the Church in Matters of an indifferent Nature.

3. AND this leads us to conſider another Sort of Unity, very neceſſary for the Well-being of the Church: Which was, That the Clergy and People ſhould be united under one ſingle Biſhop in every Church, paying a due Reſpect to his Authority, and not dividing from him, either by ſetting up Anti-Biſhops againſt him, or withdrawing from his Communion or Government, or deſpiſing the publick Orders of his Church, which were made for for Expedience and Edification in Matters of an indifferent Nature. Cyprian has Abundance relating to this Sort of Unity, considering both the State of his own and other Churches. The Church, he says, is a People united [t] to their Bishop, and a Flock adhering to their Pastor. Whence he infers, That the Bishop is in the Church, and the Church in the Bishop; and that whoever are not with the Bishop, are not in the Church: that is, None who voluntarily withdraw from his Communion, and set up others in Opposition to it. To the same Purpose he says again [u], That the Ordination of Bishops, and the Constitution of the Church came down by Succession from the Apostles, so as that the Church stood upon its Bishops, and every Act of every Church was regulated by their Direction, as the chief Governors of it. And therefore when some Lapsers wrote to him, giving themselves the Name of the Church, he gave them a very sharp Answer, telling them, He could not but wonder at their Temerity and Boldness, that they should style themselves the Church, when it was so plain by the Divine Law, that a Church consisted of a Bishop and Clergy together with a People standing firm without lapsing in time of Persecution; whereas no Number of Lapsers could be called a Church, since GOD was not the God of the Dead, but of the Living. In another Place he severely rebukes the Presumption of those Presbyters, who took upon them by their own Authority to reconcile Lapsers without consulting him, who was the chief Manager and Director of the Discipline of the Church. This, he tells them, was to forget both the Rules [x] of the Gospel, and their own Station; neither thinking of the future Judgment of the LORD, nor the Bishop that was now set over them; but assuming to themselves the whole Power of Discipline, both to the Dishonour and Contempt of their Bishop, and to the Detriment of their Brethrens Salvation. It was an ancient Rule in the Church, That Presbyters should do no Ministerial Act but by the Authority of their Bishop, and in Dependance upon and Subordination to him. This I have had Occasion to shew at large in a former Book out of Ignatius, Cyprian, and the ancient Councils [*], which need not here be repeated. Therefore it was always reputed a Tendency toward Schism, for Presbyters to do any such Act in Contempt of their Bishop, though they made no formal Separation from him. But the most flagrant Act of Schism was, when in despite of his Authority, their factious Humour and Pride pushed them on to divide from his Communion, and set up separate Assemblies in Opposition to him. This, says St. Cyprian, is the first Beginning of Hereticks, the first Rise and Attempt of Schismaticks, Men of evil Dispositions to please themselves, and with a swelling Pride contemn the Bishop that is set over them. The Effect of which is presently to forsake the Church, and set up another profane Altar without, and to rebel against the Peace of CHRIST, and the Ordination and Unity of GOD [y]. Most Heresies and Schisms take their Birth (says he again) from this Original [z], That Men refuse to submit to the Bishop appointed by GOD, and consider not that there ought to be but one Bishop at once in a Church, and but one Judge in the Room of CHRIST. This he speaks particularly against those, who thought to justify their Schism by setting up an Antibishop in Opposition to the true one: Which did not diminish the Schism, but heighten and augment it, and commonly render it more inveterate and lasting. As it was in the Case of the Meletians in Egypt, and the Donatists in Africa, and the Novatians at Rome, who all carried on their Schisms more powerfully by the Help of Antibishops to strengthen their Party, and uphold their Faction. But this was no just Pretence for Schism; but a manifest Violation of the standing Rule of the Catholick Church, which was, To have but one Bishop in a Church, as the Centre of Unity: And to set up another in Opposition to him, was not to make another true Bishop or Pastor of the Flock, to whom the People were obliged to joyn themselves as the Minister of GOD; but to introduce a Wolf, an Adulterer, a sacrilegious Usurper, a Stranger, and an Alien, from whom they were obliged to fly, as from one who had no Title to their Obedience by any Divine Appointment or allowed Rule of Ordination. I have more than once fully demonstrated this [†] out of the Writings of Cyprian, and others of the Ancients, to which it is here sufficient to refer the Reader.

der. I only note one Thing out of Cyprian, which he applies particularly to the Case of the Novatian Schism, That to set up such an Antibishop to Head a Faction [a] was to act against the Settlemennt of the Church, the Laws of the Gospel, and the Unity of the Catholick Institution: It was to make another Church, to tear the Members of CHRIST, and disjoynt that One Body and Soul of the LORD's Flock by a dividing Emulation. And therefore he tells Maximus, and Nicostratus, and other Confessors, who were concerned in upholding and abetting the Novatian Schism, They were not asserting the Gospel of CHRIST, whilst they divided themselves from the Flock of CHRIST, and were not in Peace and Concord with his Church. It was usual with him upon this Account to say, He has not GOD for his Father, who has not the Church [b] for his Mother. Whoever is separated from the Church, to be joyned to an Adultereſs, is separated from the Promises of the Church: He cannot come to the Rewards of CHRIST, who leaves the Church of CHRIST: He is an Alien, he is profane, he is an Enemy: And that Martyrdom itself, which was accounted in many Cases equivalent to Baptism, would not expiate this Crime, unless the offending Party returned to the Unity of the Church. For what Peace, says he [c], can they promise themselves, who die in Enmity with their Brethren? What Sort of Sacrifices do they think they offer, who rival the Priests with Emulation? Do they imagine CHRIST is with them, when they are assembled, who assemble out of the Church of CHRIST? Such Men though they be slain for the Confession of his Name, do not wash away the Stain with their Blood. The inexpiable and grievous Crime of Dissension is not purged away by their Passion: He cannot be a Martyr, that is not in the Church: He cannot attain to the Kingdom, who deserts the Church which is to have the Kingdom. CHRIST commended Peace to us: He commanded us to be unanimous and united together in Concord; He enjoyned us to keep the Bonds of Love and Charity firm and inviolable. He cannot make himself a Martyr, that retains not Brotherly Charity. St. Paul teaches us this, and testifies, saying, Though I have all Faith, so that I could remove Mountains, and have not Charity, I am nothing. And though I bestow all my Goods to feed the Poor, and though I give my Body to be burnt, and have not Charity, it profiteth me nothing. Charity suffereth long, and is kind; Charity envieth not; doth not behave itself unseemly, is not puffed up, is not easily provoked, thinketh no Evil, loveth all Things, believeth all Things, hopeth all Things, endureth all Things. Charity never faileth: It will always be in Possession of the Kingdom; it will endure for ever in the Unity of that Fraternity which adheres together. But Discord cannot attain to the Kingdom of Heaven, nor come to the Reward of CHRIST, who said, This is my Commandment, that ye love one another, as I have loved you? He cannot appertain to CHRIST, who violates the Love of CHRIST by perfidious Dissension. He that hath not Love, hath not GOD. It is the Voice of the blessed Apostle St. John: GOD, says he, is Love, and he that dwelleth in Love, dwelleth in God, and God in him. They cannot dwell with GOD, who would not abide unanimously in the Church of GOD: Though they burn in the Flames, though they be cast into the Fire, or thrown to Wild Beasts, and so lay down their Lives; that will not be the Crown of their Faith, but the Punishment of their Perfidiousness; not the glorious Exit of a religious Vertue, but a Death of Desperation. Such an one may be slain, but he cannot be crowned: Occidi talis potest, coronari non potest. Cyprian often repeats this Assertion in other Places of his Writings (which for Brevity's sake I omit) and particularly applies it to the Schism of the Novatians, who brake the Unity of the Church by setting up Novatian their Leader, as Antibishop against Cornelius the lawful Bishop of Rome; who being once regularly chosen and invested in his Office, no other could intrude himself into the same Place without dividing the Unity of the Church. Which was not the singular Opinion of St. Cyprian, but the Voice of the whole Catholick Church, as I have had Occasion to demonstrate more fully [*] in another Discourse, to which I refer the Reader for greater Satisfaction. Neither was it any private Opinion of Cyprian, That a Schismatick, continuing a Schismatick without Repentance, could not be a Martyr; but herein he is followed by the greatest Lights of the Church, St. Chrysostom [d], St. Austin [e], Fulgentius [f] and others, who cite this Saying of his with Approbation. Which shews what Weight they laid upon this Sort of Unity of Submission and Obedience to every lawful Bishop in the regular Management of the Affairs of his own Church.

BUT we must note, That this Obedience was only due to Bishops, when they could make out a just Title to it by the standing Rules of the Catholick Church. For first, If any Man came into his Office by a Simoniacal Ordination, Ordination, his Ordination by the Canons was declared Null and Void [g]: And then no Obedience was due to him, nor any Communion to be held with him as a Bishop of the Church. 2. If a Man intruded himself into a full See, where another Bishop was regularly ordained before him; it was so far from being a Duty to pay Obedience to him, that it was the very Crime of Schism, we have now been speaking of in the Novatians of old, to separate from the true Bishop by joyning with an Invader set up against him. 3. If a Bishop fell into manifest Heresy or Idolatry, the People were not only at Liberty, but obliged in Point of Duty, to separate from his Communion as an intolerable Prevaricator and Transgressor. Thus Cyprian [h] tells the People of Leon and Astorga in Spain, with relation to Martialis and Basilides, two Bishops that fell into Idolatry, That it was their Duty in Obedience to the Divine Commands, to separate themselves from such apostatizing Bishops, and not joyn in their sacrilegious Sacrifices; for as much as it was chiefly in their Power either to chuse worthy Bishops, or refuse the unworthy. And the same Obligation lay upon them to separate from the Communion of an heretical Bishop, as is evident from the whole Practice of the Church. 4. If any Bishops were legally deposed for any other Misdemeanors, it was equally the Peoples Duty to give Vigor and Effect to the Censures of the Church by deserting their Communion, and adhering to such as were by just Authority substituted in their Room. 5. It sometimes happened that the Dispute of Right between two contending Bishops was so nice, and doubtful, and hard to be determined, that good and wise Men might joyn with either, till the Matter of Dispute was fully ended by a competent Authority, from which there lay no farther Appeal. This was like the Case of a Lite pendente, where each Party might be presumed to have a Right, till the Cause was fully heard and adjusted: And in such a Case it would be hard to condemn innocent Men who joyned with either Side, till some better Light and Direction could be afforded them, which might give a final Determination of the Question in Debate, and settle more perfectly the Rule of Communion. This was the Case between Flavian and Evagrius Bishops of Antioch: Flavian was generally received in the Eastern Churches, but Evagrius had the Countenance of the Bishops of Rome, and the Western Churches; and during this Contention, it was no great Crime in Men of honest Minds to joyn with either Party, since the Matter was so hard to be determined by the greatest Authority in the Church. 6. Sometimes a Bishop, who might be presumed to have a Right in a Church, was willing to resign to his Opposite, to prevent a Schism, and preserve the Peace of the Church: And in that Case there could be no Harm in submitting to the Opposite, because it was done by Consent and Cession of the true Bishop, and was confirmed by the Approbation of the Church. 7. Sometimes a Bishop was willing to resign for the Sake of Peace, but a superior Power would not permit him so to do: Thus Flavian in the forementioned Dispute with Evagrius, being summoned by the Emperor Theodosius to have his Cause heard and decided at Rome, generously told the Emperor, That if his Faith was accused as erroneous, or his Life as immoral and unqualifying him for a Bishoprick, he would freely let his Accusers be his Judges, and stand to their Determination, whatever it were: But if the Dispute be only about the Throne and Government of the Church, said he, I shall not stay for Judgment, nor contend with any that has a Mind to That, but freely recede, and abdicate the Throne of my own Accord: And You, Great Sir, may commit the See of Antioch to whom you please. The Historian [i] says, The Emperor was so much affected with this generous Answer, that instead of sending him to Rome for Judgment, he sent him back to take Care of his Church, and would never after hearken to any Sollicitations that were made to expell him. Now in this Case it were unreasonable to think, that the People which followed Flavian, among whom was St. Chrysostom, were in any Fault, though the Judgment of the Western Bishops was against him. 8. Lastly, Sometimes two Bishops were allowed to sit joyntly in the same See, as some suppose Peter and Paul to have been at Rome, the one the Bishop of the Jews, and the other of the Gentiles; or when one was to be a Co-adjutor to the other; or when it was to cure an inveterate Schism, as it was in the Proposal made by the Catholick Bishops to the Donatists in the Collation of Carthage; of all which Cases the Reader may find an exact Account given [*] in a former Part of this Work. Now in such Cases Obedience might be paid to either Bishop without Schism, because there was no Opposition between them: And though it was not according to the common Rule of the Church, to have two Bishops ordinarily sitting together in one See at the same Time, yet for extraordinary Reasons this was sometimes allowed in special Cases; and then there was no Schism or other Evil in it, no Breach of Unity or Incroachment upon any Man's Right, because it was done for Expedience and Benefit of the Community, by common Consent of all Parties, and the general Approbation of the Church. I have interposed these Cautions, that it might be more particularly understood, wherein the due due Submiſſion to every Biſhop in his own Church conſiſted, and under what Limitations Obedience was required to a ſingle Biſhop, regularly appointed, to preſerve the Unity of the Church.

SECT. 7. 4thly, The Unity of Submiſſion to the Diſcipline of the Church.

4. TO preſerve the Unity of the Church in its Well-being, it was required, That every Member of a Church ſhould ſubmit to the ordinary Rules of Diſcipline appointed for the Puniſhment of Delinquents; and neither deſpiſe the lawful Cenſures of his own Church; nor ſeek clandeſtinely to be reſtored to Communion in any other Church, without giving Satisfaction to his own Church, whereof he was a Member; nor betaking himſelf to the Conventicles of Hereticks or Schiſmaticks, to be received by them as a Communicant, when he was caſt out of his own Church as a Criminal. For all theſe were direct Violations of the Unity of Diſcipline, which ought to be preſerved entire in every Church. The Effect of a Legal Excommunication and the Power of the Keys was always reputed ſuch, as that if a Man was juſtly caſt out of the Communion of his own Church for his Offences, he was ſuppoſed to be excluded from all Title to the Kingdom of Heaven, during his continuance in that State, by Virtue of our Saviour's Authority delegated to the Church, in thoſe Words, Whoſe ſoever Sins ye retain, they are retained: And, Whatſoever ye ſhall bind on Earth, ſhall be bound in Heaven. And therefore unleſs Men ſubmitted to the ordinary Way of reſtoring Offenders, and ſought to be reconciled to the Peace of the Church by the proper Methods of publick Confeſſion and Repentance, and Interceſſion for Pardon and Abſolution, they were treated as Deſpiſers of the Church's Diſcipline; and if they died in that State, without being firſt reconciled, and received into Communion again, they were looked upon as Perſons in a deplorable Condition, as dying in a State of Sin and Rebellion againſt GOD, and out of the Unity of the Church. For which Reaſon no Solemnity was ever uſed at their Funeral, as was uſual for thoſe who died in the Peace of the Church; nor were their Oblations received, or any Offerings or Commemorations made for them, as for others, in the uſual Service of the Church. Only in one Caſe a little Favour was ſhewed to ſuch as died in the Bonds of Excommunication unrelaxed by any former Abſolution; which was, When ſuch Penitents as obediently ſubmitted to the Church's Diſcipline, and gave evident Tokens of their ſincere Repentance, happened to die ſuddenly, when they were deſirous of Reconciliation and Abſolution, but by unavoidable Neceſſity could not have it. In this Caſe the Canons ordered, That their Oblations ſhould be received, as a Teſtimony of their Submiſſion, and being united in Heart and Mind to the Church, though they could not have the Formality of an external Abſolution. In the Fourth Council of Carthage there is a Canon to this Purpoſe: Such Penitents as are intent and diligent in obſerving the Rules of Penance [k], if they chance to die in a Journey, or at Sea, where they can have no Help or Remedy, ſhall notwithſtanding have their Memory commended both in the Prayers and Oblations of the Church. The Second Council of Vaiſon [l] is a little more particular in declaring how ſuch Penitents ſhall be admitted to all the Privileges of Church Communion after Death: If any of thoſe who are under Penance, and live in the Courſe of a good Life with ſatisfactory Compunction, happen to die ſuddenly and unexpectedly either in the Country or in a Journey, their Oblation ſhall be received, and their Funeral Obſequies and Memorials ſhall be celebrated in the uſual Manner and Affection of the Church: Becauſe it were unjuſt, that their Commemorations ſhould be excluded from Salutary Myſteries, who whilſt they were labouring earneſtly with a faithful Affection after thoſe holy Myſteries, were intercepted by ſudden Death from the Viaticum of the Sacraments, to whom the Prieſt perhaps would have thought fit to have granted the moſt abſolute Reconciliation. There are a great many Canons [m] in the Second Council of Arles, and the Second of Orleance, and the Second of Toledo, and the Council of Epone to the ſame Purpoſe. By all which we may judge, That though the Church was ſevere againſt impenitent Apoſtates, and Contemners of her Diſcipline, yet ſhe ſhewed great Favour and Tenderneſs toward ſuch as really honoured her Diſcipline, and gave evident Tokens of Repentance: Such Men were not deemed to depart out of the Unity and Communion of the Church, though they happened to die without the Formality of an external Abſolution; being internally reconciled both to GOD and the Church by the Teſtimonies of Repentance, in ſuch Caſes of Extremity, where not their own Will, but the Neceſſity of their Circumſtances precluded them from a more formal Reconciliation.

SECT. 8. How different Churches maintained Communion with one another. Firſt, in Faith.

AND thus far we have conſidered the Unity of every Church with Relation to its own Members: We are next to examine, What Communion different Churches held with one another, that we may diſcover the harmonious Unity of the Catholick Church. And here firſt of all we are to obſerve, That as there was one common Faith, conſiſting of certain Fundamental Articles, eſſential to

to the very Being of a Particular Church and its Unity, and the Being of a Chriſtian; ſo this ſame Faith was Neceſſary to unite the different Parts of the Catholick Church, and make them one Body of Chriſtians. So that if any Church deſerted or deſtroyed this Faith in Whole or in Part, they were looked upon as Rebels and Traytors againſt CHRIST, and Enemies to the Common Faith, and treated as a Conventicle of Hereticks, and not of Chriſtians. Upon this Account every Biſhop not only made a Declaration of his Faith at his Ordination, before the Provincial Synod that ordained him, but alſo ſent his Circular or Encyclical Letters, as they were called, to foreign Churches, to ſignify that he was in Communion with them. And this was ſo neceſſary a Thing in a Biſhop newly ordained, that Liberatus [n] tells us, The Omiſſion of it was interpreted a Sort of Refuſal to hold Communion with the Reſt of the World, and a virtual Charge of Hereſy upon himſelf or them.

SECT. 9. 2dly, In mutual Aſſiſtance of each other for Defence of the common Faith.

2. TO maintain this Unity of Faith entire, every Church was ready to give each other their mutual Aſſiſtance, to oppoſe all fundamental Errors, and beat down Hereſy at its firſt Appearance among them. The whole World in this Reſpect was but one common Dioceſe, the Epiſcopate was an univerſal Thing, and every Biſhop had his Share in it in ſuch a Manner, as to have an equal Concern in the Whole; as I have more fully ſhewed in another Place [*], where I obſerved, That in Things not appertaining to the Faith, Biſhops were not to meddle with other Mens Dioceſes, but only to mind the Buſineſs of their own: But when the Faith or Welfare of the Church lay at Stake, and Religion was manifeſtly invaded; then, by this Rule of there being but one Epiſcopacy, every other Biſhoprick was as much their Dioceſe as their own; and no human Laws or Canons could tie up their Hands from performing ſuch Acts of the Epiſcopal Office in any Part of the World, as they thought neceſſary for the Preſervation of Faith and Religion. This was the Ground of their meeting in Synods, Provincial, National, and ſending their joint Opinions and Advice from one Church to another. The greateſt Part of Church Hiſtory is made up of ſuch Acts as theſe, ſo that it were next too impertinent to refer to any Particulars. I only obſerve one Thing farther upon this Head, That the intermeddling with other Men's Concerns, which would have been accounted a real Breach of Unity in many other Caſes, was in this Caſe thought ſo neceſſary, that there was no certain way to preſerve the Unity of the Catholick Church and Faith without it. And as an Inſtance of this, I have noted in the fore-cited Book, That though it was againſt the ordinary Rule of the Church for any Biſhop to ordain in another Man's Dioceſe; yet in Caſe a Biſhop turned Heretick, and perſecuted the Orthodox, and would ordain none but heretical Men to eſtabliſh Hereſy in his Dioceſe; in that Caſe any Orthodox Biſhop was not only authorized, but obliged, as Opportunity ſerved, and the Needs of the Church required, to ordain Catholick Teachers in ſuch a Dioceſe, to oppoſe the malignant Deſigns of the Enemy, and ſtop the Growth of Hereſy, which might otherwiſe take deep Root, and ſpread and over-run the Church. Thus Athanaſius and the Famous Euſebius of Samoſata went about the World in the Prevalency of the Arian Hereſy, ordaining in every Church where they came, ſuch Clergy as were neceſſary to ſupport the Orthodox Cauſe in ſuch a Time of Diſtreſs and Deſolation: And this was ſo far from being reckoned a Breach of the Church's Unity, though againſt the Letter of a Canon in ordinary Caſes, that it was neceſſary to be done, in ſuch a State of Affairs, to maintain the Unity of the Catholick Faith, which every Biſhop was obliged to defend, not only in his own Dioceſe, but in all Parts of the World, by Virtue of that Rule which obliges Biſhops in weighty Affairs to take Care of the Catholick Church, and requires all Churches in Time of Danger to give mutual Aid and Aſſiſtance to one another.

SECT. 10. 3dly, In joyning in Communion with each other in all holy Offices, as Occaſion required.

3. THIS Unity of the Catholick Church was farther maintained by the Readineſs of each Church, and every Member of it, to joyn in Communion with all other Churches in the Performance of Divine Worſhip, and all Holy Offices, as their Occaſions required. To this Purpoſe Two Things were neceſſary. 1*ſt*, That every Church ſhould keep her Liturgy free from all ſuperſtitious and idolatrous Worſhip and not render her Aſſemblies for Holy Duties inacceſſible by intrenching upon any Divine Rule, or making any unlawful Conditions of Communion. And how careful the ancient Church was in this Point, may be ſeen by any one that will peruſe the Account I have lately given of the Liturgy of the ancient Churches in all the ſeveral Parts of it; where none of thoſe ſuperſtitious and idolatrous Practices appear, that have ſo much divided the Church in later Ages, ſince the exorbitant Power of the Romiſh Church impoſed ſo much upon the Credulity of Men in Points of Faith, and loaded their Conſciences ſo heavily in Matters of unwarrantable Practice. 2. It was neceſſary that every [n] Liberat. Breviar. cap. 17.

[*] Book II. Chap. v. n. 2.

every Christian, when he came to a foreign Church, should readily comply with the innocent Usages and Customs of that Church where he happened to be, though they might chance in some Circumstances to differ from his own. This was a necessary Rule of Peace, to preserve the Unity of Communion and Worship throughout the whole Catholick Church. For it was impossible that every Church should have the same Rites and Ceremonies, the same Customs and Usages in all Respects, or even the same Method and Manner of Worship exactly agreeing in all Punctilio's with one another, unless there had been a general Liturgy for the whole Church expressly enjoyned by Divine Appointment. The Unity of the Catholick Church did not require this (as we shall see more plainly by and by) and therefore no one ever insisted upon this as any necessary Part of its Unity: It was enough that all Churches agreed in the Substance of Divine Worship; and for Circumstantials, such as Rites and Ceremonies, Method and Order, and the like, every Church had Liberty to judge and chuse for herself by the Rules of Expediency and Convenience: And then, as it was the Duty of every Member of any particular Church to comply with the innocent Customs of his own Church, in order to hold free Communion with her; so it was the Duty of every Christian to comply with the different Customs of all other Churches, wherever he happened to travel, in order to hold Communion with the Catholick Church in all Places without Exception. This Rule is often inculcated by St. Austin, as the great Rule of Peace and Unity with regard to all Churches: And he tells us, He received it as an Oracle from the wise and moderate Discourses of St. Ambrose, whom he consulted upon the Occasion of a Scruple, which had possessed the Heart of his Mother Monicha, and for some Time greatly perplexed her. She having lived a long Time at Rome, was used to fast on Saturday, or the Sabbath, according to the Custom of the Church of Rome: But when she came to Milan, she found the contrary Custom prevailing, which was to keep Saturday a Festival: And being much disturbed about this, her Son, though he had not much Concern about such Matters at that Time, for her Ease and Satisfaction, consulted St. Ambrose upon the Point, to take his Advice and Direction how to govern herself in this Case, so as to be inoffensive in her Practice. To whom St. Ambrose answered, That he could give no better Advice in the Case, than to do as he himself was wont to do: For, said he, when I am here [o], I do not fast on the Sabbath; when I am at Rome, I fast on the Sabbath: And so you, whatever Church you come to, observe the Custom of that Church, if you would neither take Offence at them, nor give Offence to them. St. Austin [p] says, This Answer satisfied his Mother, and he always looked upon it as an Oracle sent from Heaven. He adds moreover, That he had often experienced with Grief and Sorrow the Disturbance of weak Minds, occasioned either by the contentious Obstinacy of certain Brethren, or by their own superstitious Fears, who in Matters of this Nature, which can neither be certainly determined by the Authority of Holy Scripture, nor by the Tradition of the Universal Church, nor by any Advantage in the Correction of Life, raise such litigious Questions, as to think nothing right but what themselves do; only because they were used to do so in their own Country, or because a little shallow Reason tells them it ought to be so, or because they have perhaps seen some such Thing in their Travels, which they reckon the more learned, the more remote it is from their own Country. Thus he handsomely and elegantly reflects upon the superstitious Folly, and contentious Obstinacy of such as disturbed the Church's Peace for such Things as every Church had Liberty to use, and every good Christian was obliged to comply with. For, as he says, in the same Place, all such Customs as varied in the Practice of different Churches, as, That some fasted on the Saturday, and others did not; Some received the Eucharist every Day, others on the Sabbath and Lord's-Day, and others on the Lord's-Day only; and whatever else there was of this Kind, they were all Things of free Observation [q]: And in such Things there could be no better Rule for a grave and prudent Christian to walk by, than to do as the Church did, wherever he happened to come. For whatever was enjoined, that was neither against Faith nor Good Manners, was to be held indifferent, and to be observed according to the Custom, and for the Convenience of the Society among whom we live. This he repeats over and over over again [r], as the moſt ſafe Rule of Practice in all ſuch Things, wherein the Cuſtoms of Churches varied, That wherever we ſee any Things appointed, or know them to be appointed, that are neither againſt Faith nor Good-manners, and have any Tendency to Edification, and to ſtir Men up to a good Life, we ſhould not only abſtain from finding Fault with them, but follow them both by our Commendation and Imitation. By this Rule all wiſe and peaceable Men always governed their Practice in holding Communion with other Churches: Though they did not altogether like their Cuſtoms, they did not break Communion with them upon that Account. Thus Irenæus [s] obſerves to Pope Victor, when he was raſhly going to excommunicate the Aſiatick Churches for their different Way of obſerving Eaſter, That his Predeceſſor Anicetus, was far from this uncharitable Temper. For when Polycarp came to Rome, though they could not come to a perfect Agreement in this Point, to have all the Churches obſerve Eaſter on the ſame Day; yet this Difference made no Contention between them. For they gave each other the Kiſs of Peace, and communicated together; Anicetus paying Polycarp the cuſtomary Civility and Reſpect, to let him conſecrate the Euchariſt in his Church. Irenæus obſerves farther, That though there were many Diſputes then on Foot concerning the Time, and Length, and Manner of obſerving the Ante-paſchal, or Lent-Faſt; yet all Churches agreed to live in Peace and Union with one another: And the Difference of their Faſts ſerved only to commend the Unity of their Faith. And becauſe it was then a cuſtomary Thing for Churches of different Countries to ſend the Euchariſt mutually to each other, to teſtify that they were in Communion with one another; he notes it likewiſe as a peculiar Inſtance of the Catholick Tempers of the Biſhops of Rome, Anicetus, Pius, Hyginus, Teleſphorus, Xyſtus and Soter, who were Victor's Predeceſſors in that Church, That though they differed from the Aſiatick Churches about Eaſter, yet they lived in Peace with them; not only receiving the Members of thoſe Churches into Communion, when they came to Rome, but alſo ſending the Euchariſt from Rome to thoſe Churches. Which being ſo common a Way of teſtifying their Communion with diſtant Churches in thoſe Days, it was a very juſt Complaint which Chryſoſtom made againſt Theophilus, Biſhop of Alexandria, and his Accomplices, That when they came to Conſtantinople, they came not to Church, according to Cuſtom and ancient Law; they joyned not themſelves to him, nor communicated with him [t] in the Word or Prayer, or the Communion of the Euchariſt; but as ſoon as they landed, paſſing by the Church, they took their Lodging in an Inn, when the Biſhop's Houſe was ready prepared to entertain them. This he complains of as a ſingular Inſtance of their Enmity, Faction, and uncharitable Spirit, in refuſing to communicate with him, before any formal Accuſation had been brought againſt him, much leſs any legal Sentence of Condemnation pronounced upon him. By this Account of Things it is eaſy to judge, what Streſs the Ancients laid upon the Laws of Communion, obliging every Church to communicate with her Siſter Churches over all the World in all holy Offices, in order to preſerve the Communion of Worſhip one entire Thing throughout the whole Catholick Church, without any notorious Diviſion or Diſtraction.

SECT. 11. 4thly, In mutual Conſent to ratifie all legal Acts of Diſcipline, regularly exerciſed in any Church whatſoever.

4. THE Communion of the whole Catholick Church was farther declared by the Obligation of ſuch Laws, as laid a neceſſary Injunction upon all Churches to ratify all ſuch legal Acts of Diſcipline, as were regularly exerciſed in any Church whatſoever. Thus if any Perſon was duly baptized, and thereby admitted to be a Member of any particular Church, that Qualification gave him a Right to communicate in any Part of the Catholick Church, travelling with Commendatory Letters from the Biſhop of his own Church, to ſignify that he was in perfect and full Communion with her, and not caſt out for any Offence againſt the Rules of her Communion. This is what Optatus means, when he ſays [u], That the whole World was united together in one common Society, or Society of Communion, by the mutual Commerce of thoſe Canonical or Communicatory Letters, which they called Formatæ: Becauſe theſe teſtifying that he was in the Communion of his own Church, by the known Laws and Rules of Diſcipline, gave him a Title to communicate in any other Church whatſoever, only obſerving the Rites and Cuſtoms of that Church whither his Occaſions happened to call him. So again, If a Man was legally excommunicated for his Crimes by his own Church, no Church would receive him to Communion, till he had given proper Satisfaction to his own Church, which had bound him by her Cenſures. Such a perfect good Underſtanding and Harmony was there then among all the Parts of the whole Catholick Church, in confirming each others Diſcipline, and mutually ſtrengthning their Authority againſt all Enemies of Faith and Vertue, whether they were ſuch as tried by open Violence and Terror, or by ſecret Arts and clandeſtine Practices to get Admiſſion, in Oppoſition to the Church whoſe Cenſures they lay under. No Church would admit mit them without Communicatory Letters: If they were Rebels to their own Church, they were accounted Rebels to the Whole. Thus Epiphanius [x] tells us, when Marcion the Heretick was excommunicated by his own Father, and desired to be received into Communion at Rome, they answered him, That they could not do it, without the Permission of his Father. For there was but one Faith, and one Rule of Concord; and they could not do any thing in Opposition to their good Fellow-servant, and his Father. This Repulse was highly resented by Marcion, and it put him upon those wicked Designs of inventing a new Heresy to disturb the Church: For he told them directly in Revenge, That he would divide their Church, and bring in an eternal Schism into it. Which, as Epiphanius rightly observes, was not so much to divide the Church, as to divide himself from it. There are a great many other Instances of the Church's Steddiness and Resolution in thus proceeding against Delinquents, to maintain the Unity of Discipline entire in all Parts of the Ecclesiastical Body, and Abundance of Canons to this Purpose; which, because I shall have Occasion to speak more of hereafter [*], I willingly omit them in this Place, and go on to observe another Instance of the Church's Unity in Point of Practice: Which was,

SECT. 12. In receiving unanimously the Customs of the Universal Church, and submitting to the Decrees of General Councils.

5. THAT all Churches generally agreed in receiving such Customs as were handed down by general Consent from Apostolical Tradition, or otherwise settled and determined by the Decrees of General Councils. For these two Ways many Customs became in a manner Universal, and almost of necessary Observance in the Church over all the World: And then for any private Man or Church to dispute against them, was to give Scandal to the Rest of the World, and bring Disturbance into the Church by an unnecessary and unreasonable Opposition to Things innocent in themselves, and settled by general Consent and Approbation. St. Austin takes Notice of this double Source and Original of general Customs in the Church, for which though there be no express Command in Scripture, yet a great Deference ought to be paid to the general Sentiments and Authority, and Practice and Observation of the whole Church. Those Things, says he, which we keep [y], not from Scripture, but from Tradition, and which are observed over all the World, are reasonably supposed to have come down to us recommended and appointed either by the Apostles themselves, or by some Plenary Councils, whose Authority is of great Use in the Church; such as the celebrating the Anniversary Memorial of our Saviour's Passion, and Resurrection, and Ascension, and the Descent of the Holy Ghost from Heaven, and whatever else of the like Nature is observed in the Universal Church in all Parts, wherever it spreads itself all the World over. Concerning which sort of Things, he concludes, That [z] for any Man to dispute against them, was most insolent Madness, seeing they were authorized by the Practice of the Universal Church. He particularly applies this Rule to the Case of observing the Lord's-Day [a] not as a Fast, but as a Festival: For since the whole Church observed it as a Festival, no one could turn that Day into a Fast, without offending GOD, by giving Scandal to the Church Universal: There being both general Custom and Canon [b] against it. For the same Reason it was esteemed a Crime to pray Kneeling on that Day, because the Practice of the Universal Church was to pray Standing [c] in Memory of our Saviour's Resurrection; and the Council of Nice thought it a Thing worthy of a Decree to bring all Men to an Uniformity in that Practice. As she did also in the Matter of observing the Easter Festival, making a Rule that all Churches should celebrate it on one and the same Day, because it was unlawful in a Business of so great Moment, and the religious Observation of such a Festival, there should be any Dissension, as Constantine expresses it in his Epistle [d] which he sent to all the Churches in the World upon this Occasion. So that though several Churches had kept this Festival on different Days before this Decree was made, yet when it was once passed, there was no more Liberty for Dissension.

SECT. 13. 6thly, In submitting to the Decrees of National Councils.

6. THE like may be observed of the Decrees of National Councils, when once the Roman Empire was divided into several Kingdoms. A great many Things were at first allowed to every Bishop in the Management of his own Diocese, which were afterwards restrained by the Decrees of National Councils. As to instance only in one Particular: Every Bishop anciently had liberty to frame his own Liturgy for the Use of his own Church: But in process of Time, when the World was divided into several Kingdoms, Rules were made that all the Churches of such or such a Kingdom should have one and

and the ſame Liturgy. Thus when Spain and Gallia Narbonenſis became one diſtinct Kingdom, a Decree was made, That as there was but one Faith, ſo there ſhould be but one Liturgy or Order of Divine-Service throughout the whole Kingdom. The Fourth Council of Toledo under the Reign of King Siſenandus made an expreſs Canon [e] to this Purpoſe: After the Confeſſion of the true Faith, which is preached in the holy Church of GOD, it ſeemeth good, that all we Biſhops, who are joyned together in the Unity of the Catholick Faith, ſhould henceforth uſe no Diverſity or Diſagreement in the Adminiſtration of the Eccleſiaſtical Myſteries; leſt every ſuch Diverſity be interpreted a Schiſm among us by carnal Men, and ſuch as are unknown to us, and the variety of Cuſtoms in our Churches become a Scandal to many. Let one Order therefore of Prayers and Pſalmody be obſerved by us throughout all Spain and Gaule; one Manner of celebrating Maſs, or the Communion-Service; and one Manner of performing Veſpers, or Evening-Service: And let there henceforth be no Diverſity in our Eccleſiaſtical Cuſtoms, ſeeing we all live in one Faith, and in one Kingdom. That Canon alſo refers to more ancient Canons, requiring Uniformity in Divine Worſhip throughout Provincial Churches. And it is moſt certain, that about this Time, that is, in the Sixth and Seventh Centuries, and before, Decrees were made in ſeveral Councils, requiring the Churches of each reſpective Province to conform their Uſages to the Rites and Forms of the Metropolitical or Principal Church among them. As may be ſeen in the Canons of the Council of Agde, An. 506. [f] and Epone and Girone, An. 517 [g], and the Council of Vannes [h], and the firſt of Braga [i], An. 465 and 563. For though by the moſt ancient Rules every Biſhop had Liberty to preſcribe what he thought proper for his own Church, and no Church pretended to dictate magiſterially in ſuch Things to any other; yet when Churches became ſubject to one Political Head, and National Churches aroſe from that Diſtinction; then it was thought convenient by all the Biſhops of ſuch a Nation to unite more cloſely in Rituals and Circumſtantials of Divine Worſhip, as well as Faith and Subſtantials: And from that Time this alſo became a neceſſary Part of the Union of National Churches; in which all the Biſhops voluntarily combining, no one could depart from that Unity, without incurring the Guilt of an unneceſſary Breach of that Union, which was ſo convenient for cementing the ſeveral Members of a National Church into one Communion.

SECT. 14. No Neceſſity of a Viſible Head to unite all the Parts of the Catholick Church into one Communion.

THUS we have ſeen, wherein the Unity of the Catholick Church, conſidered in its utmoſt Latitude, conſiſted. And hence one might ſafely infer theſe two Things Negatively without any farther Evidence: 1*ſt*, That there was no Neceſſity of a Viſible Head, as now is pretended in the Church of Rome, to unite all the Parts of the Catholick Church into one Communion. Nor 2*dly*, Any Neceſſity that the whole Catholick Church ſhould agree in all Rites and Ceremonies and Cuſtoms in indifferent Things, which might be various in different Churches without any Breach of Catholick Communion. The former of theſe was ſufficiently provided for by the Agreement of all Churches in the ſame Faith, and the Obligation that lay upon the whole College of Biſhops, as equal Sharers in one Epiſcopacy, to give mutual Aſſiſtance to each other in all Things that was neceſſary to defend the Faith, or preſerve the Unity of the Church entire in all Reſpects, when any Aſſault was made upon it. It was by this Means, and not by any Recourſe to any ſingle, viſible, ſtanding Head, that anciently the Unity of the Church was preſerved. Recourſe was ſometimes had to the Biſhop of Rome, as an eminent Biſhop, who made a conſiderable Figure in the great Body of Biſhops, and one who by his Station in the Imperial City might be able to ſuccour thoſe that were oppreſſed in Times of great Difficulty and Diſtreſs: But his Judgment or Opinion was deemed no infallible Rule, nor his Deciſion ſuch as was to conclude the Reſt of the World, ſo as to tie them down, in no Caſe without the Charge of Schiſm to vary from him. For ſometimes the Biſhop of Rome fell into manifeſt Hereſy, as when Liberius ſubſcribed the Arian Blaſphemy: In which Caſe any other Biſhop was not only at Liberty to diſſent from him, but was obliged by Virtue of his Share in the common Epiſcopacy of the Church, to oppoſe him, and if Occaſion required, to pronounce Anathema againſt him; as St. Hilary did againſt Liberius [k] when he ſubſcribed to the Condemnation of Athanaſius, and the Arian-Creed made at Sirmium. Sometimes again the Biſhops of Rome took upon them to exerciſe a Juriſdiction over other Churches, in whoſe Affairs by Right of Canon they had no Power: As when Pope Victor ſet himſelf to excommunicate the Aſiatick Churches for their different Way of obſerving Eaſter, he was oppoſed not only by the Aſiatick Biſhops, but by by Irenæus and the Reſt of the World, as going beyond his Bounds, and ingaging himſelf in a raſh and ſchiſmatical Undertaking. For he, who by an undue Stretch of Power not belonging to him, divides others from his Communion, is properly the Schiſmatick, by making an unneceſſary Diviſion in the Church, and not they who by Neceſſity are forced to divide from him. So again when Pope Zozimus and Celeſtine took upon them to receive Appellants from the African Churches, and abſolve thoſe whom they had condemned; St. Auſtin and all the African Churches ſharply remonſtrated againſt this as an irregular Practice, violating the Laws of Unity, and the ſettled Rules of Eccleſiaſtical Commerce, which required, That no Delinquent excommunicated in one Church ſhould be abſolved in another, without giving Satisfaction to his own Church that cenſured him: And therefore to put a ſtop to this Practice, and check the exorbitant Power which the Roman Biſhops aſſumed to themſelves, they firſt made a Law in the Council of Milevis [l], That no African Clerk ſhould appeal to any Church beyond-Sea, under Pain of being excluded from Communion in all the African Churches: And then afterward meeting in a general Synod [m] they diſpatched Letters to the Biſhop of Rome, to remind him how contrary this Practice was to the Canons of Nice, which ordered, That all Controverſies ſhould be ended in the Places where they aroſe, before a Council and the Metropolitan. And they withal tell him, It was unreaſonable to think, that GOD ſhould enable a ſingle Perſon to examine the Juſtice of a Cauſe, and deny his Grace to a Multitude of Men aſſembled in Council. This evidently ſhews, That they did not imagine any ſingle Perſon to be the Centre of Unity to the whole Church; or that all Churches were obliged to be in Communion with the Biſhop of Rome, whether he were Catholick or Heretick; or that any Church, without the Limits of his Metropolitical Power, was bound in any Reſpect to ſubmit to his Juriſdiction: But it manifeſtly proves on the contrary, That there was no Neceſſity of a Viſible Head, as is now pretended in the Church of Rome, to unite all the Parts of the Catholick Church into one Communion; but that in Matters of Faith, every Biſhop was as much a Guardian of the whole Church as the Biſhop of Rome; and in Matters of Diſcipline, all Churches were at Liberty to hear and determine their own Cauſes in a Synod of Biſhops, without having Recourſe to any foreign Juriſdiction, as has been more fully demonſtrated in other Parts of this Work [*], to which I refer the Reader for greater Satisfaction.

SECT. 15. Nor any Neceſſity that the whole Church ſhould agree in the ſame Rites and Ceremonies, which were Things of an indifferent Nature.

2*dly*, IT is equally clear, That there was no Neceſſity, in order to maintain the Unity of the Catholick Church, that all Churches ſhould agree in all the ſame Rites and Ceremonies; but every Church, might enjoy her own Uſages and Cuſtoms, having Liberty to preſcribe for herſelf in all Things of an indifferent Nature, except where either an univerſal Tradition, or the Decree of ſome General or National Council (as has been noted before) intervened to make it otherwiſe. To this Purpoſe is that famous Saying of Irenæus [n] upon Occaſion of the different Cuſtoms of ſeveral Churches in obſerving the Lent-Faſt: We ſtill retain Peace one with another; and the different Ways of keeping the Faſt, only the more commends our Agreement in the Faith. St. Jerom likewiſe ſpeaking of the different Cuſtoms of Churches in Relation to the Saturday-Faſt, and the Reception of the Euchariſt every Day, lays down [o] this general Rule, That all Eccleſiaſtical Traditions that did no ways prejudice the Faith, were to be obſerved in ſuch manner as we had received them from our Forefathers: And the Cuſtom of one Church was not to be ſubverted by the contrary Cuſtom of another; but every Province might abound in their own Senſe, and eſteem the Rules of their Anceſtors as Laws of the Apoſtles. After the ſame Manner St. Auſtin [p] ſays, That in all ſuch Things, whereabout the Holy Scripture has given no poſitive Determination, the Cuſtom of the People of GOD, or the Rules of our Forefathers, are to be taken for Laws. For if we diſpute about ſuch Matters, and condemn the Cuſtoms of one Church, by the Cuſtom of another, that will be an eternal Occaſion of Strife and Contention; which will always be diligent enough to find out plauſible Reaſonings, when there are no certain Arguments to ſhew the Truth. Therefore great Caution ought to be uſed, that we draw not a Cloud over Charity, and eclipſe its Brightneſs in the Tempeſt of Contention. He adds, a little after: Such Contentions is commonly endleſs, engendring Strifes, and terminating no Diſputes. Let us therefore maintain one Faith [q] throughout

[q] throughout the whole Church, where-ever it is ſpread, as intrinſical to the Members of the Body, although the Unity of Faith be kept with ſome different Obſervations, which in no ways hinder or impair the Truth of it. For all the Beauty of the King's Daughter is within, and thoſe Obſervations which are differently celebrated, are underſtood only to be in her outward Clothing. Whence ſhe is ſaid to be clothed in golden Fringes wrought about with divers Colours. But let that Clothing be ſo diſtinguiſhed by different Obſervations, as that ſhe herſelf may not be deſtroyed by Oppoſitions and Contentions about them. This was the ancient Way of preſerving Peace in the Catholick Church. To let different Churches, which had no Dependance in Externals upon one another, enjoy their own Liberty to follow their own Cuſtoms without Contradiction. For as Gregory [r] the Great ſaid to Leander a Spaniſh Biſhop, There is no Harm done to the Church Catholick by different Cuſtoms, ſo long as the Unity of the Faith is preſerved. And therefore tho' the Spaniſh Churches differed in ſome Cuſtoms from the Roman Church, yet he did not pretend to oblige them to leave their own Cuſtoms and Uſages, to follow the Roman. He gave a like Anſwer to Auſtin the Monk, Archbiſhop of Canterbury, when he asked him, What Form of Divine Service he ſhould ſettle in Britain, the old Gallican, or the Roman? And how it came to paſs, that when there was but one Faith, there were different Cuſtoms in different Churches; the Roman Church having one Form of Service, and the Gallican Churches another? To this he replied [s], Whatever you find either in the Roman or Gallican, or any other Church, which may be the more pleaſing to Almighty GOD, I think it beſt that you ſhould carefully ſelect it, and ſettle it in the Uſe of the Engliſh Church, newly converted to the Faith. For we are not to love Things for the Sake of the Place, but Places for the Sake of the good Things we find in them. Therefore you may collect out of every Church whatever Things are pious, religious and right; and putting them together, inſtill them into the Minds of the Engliſh, and accuſtom them to the Obſervation of them. And there is no queſtion but that Auſtin followed this Direction in his new Plantation of the Engliſh Church.

NEITHER was this Liberty granted to different Churches in bare Rituals, and Things of an indifferent Nature, but ſometimes in more weighty Points, ſuch as the receiving, or not receiving thoſe that were baptized by Hereticks and Schiſmaticks without another Baptiſm. This was a Queſtion long debated between the African, and Roman, and other Churches; yet without Breach of Communion, eſpecially on their Part who followed the moderate Councils of Cyprian, who ſtill pleaded for the Liberty and Independency of different Churches in this Matter, leaving all Churches to act according to their own Judgment, and keeping Peace and Unity with thoſe that differed from him, as has been more fully ſhewed in a former Book [*], where we diſcourſe of the Independency of Biſhops, eſpecially in the African Churches.

THE Reader may find an Account of ſome other Queſtions in the ſame Place, as candidly and moderately debated among them, as the Queſtion about Clinick Baptiſm, and the Caſe of admitting Adulterers to Communion again, in which the Practice of the African Biſhops was often different from one another; but they neither cenſured each others Practice, nor brake Communion upon it. And ſometimes the ſame Moderation was obſerved in doctrinal Points of leſſer Moment. For as our Learned and Judicious Writers [t] have obſerved out of St. Auſtin [u], Beſides the neceſſary Articles of Faith, there are other Things about which the moſt Learned and exact Defenders of the Catholick Rule do not agree, without diſſolving the Bond of Faith. There are ſome Queſtions in which [x] without any Detriment to the Faith that makes us Chriſtians, we may ſafely be ignorant of the Truth, or ſuſpend our Opinion, or conjecture what is falſe by human Suſpicion and Infirmity. As in the Queſtion about Paradiſe, What Sort of Place it is, and where it was that GOD placed the firſt Man when he had formed him? Where now Enoch and Elias are, in Paradiſe, or ſome other Place? How many Heavens there are, into the third of which St. Paul ſays he was taken? With innumerable Queſtions of the like Nature, pertaining either to the ſecret Work of GOD, or the hidden Parts of Scripture, concerning which he concludes, that a Man may be ignorant of them without any any Prejudice to the Chriſtian Faith, or err about them without any Imputation of Hereſy. This Conſideration made St. Auſtin profeſs in his Modeſty, That there were more Things in Scripture [y] which he knew not, than what he did know. And if Men ſhould fiercely diſpute about ſuch Things, and condemn one another for their Ignorance or Error concerning them, there would be no End of Schiſms and Diviſions in the Church. Therefore in ſuch Queſtions every Man was at Liberty to abound in his own Senſe, only obſerving this Rule of Peace, Not to impoſe his own Opinions magiſterially upon others, nor urge his own Sentiments as neceſſary Doctrines or Articles of Faith in ſuch Points, where either the Scripture was ſilent, or left every Man the Liberty of Opining.

SECT. 16. What Allowance was made for Men who out of ſimple Ignorance brake Communion with one another.

NAY, in ſome Caſes a little Allowance was made for Men of honeſt Minds, who brake Communion one with another. For ſometimes it happened, that good Catholicks were divided among themſelves out of Ignorance, and brake Communion with one another for mere Words, not underſtanding each others Sentiments. In which Caſe all wiſe and moderate Men had a juſt Compaſſion for each Party, and laboured to compoſe and unite them, without ſeverely condemning either. Nazianzen [z] tells us, There was a Time when the Ends of the Earth were well nigh divided by a few Syllables. It was in a Controverſy about the Uſe of the Words τεία πρόσωπα, and τρεῖς ὑποστάσεις, in the Doctrine of the TRINITY. Each Party was Orthodox, and meant the ſame Thing under different Words, but not underſtanding one another's Senſe, they mutually charged each other with Hereſy. They who were for calling the Three Divine Perſons Three Hypoſtaſes, charged their Adverſaries as Sabellians; and they on the contrary returned the Charge of Arianiſm upon them, as thinking they had taken Three Hypoſtaſes in the Arian Senſe for Three Eſſences or Subſtances of a different Nature. But the great and good Athanaſius, in his admirable Prudence and Candor, ſeeing into the falſe Foundation of theſe Diſputes, quickly put an End to them, by bringing them to a right underſtanding of each other's Senſe, and allowing them to uſe their own Terms without any Difference in Opinion. And this, ſays our Author, was a more beneficial Act of Charity to the Church, than all his other daily Labours and Diſcourſes: It was more honourable than all his Watchings and Humicubations, and not inferior to his Flights and Exiles. And therefore he tells his Readers, in uſhering in the Diſcourſe, That he could not omit the Relation without injuring them, eſpecially in a Time when Contentions and Diviſions were in the Church; for this Action of his would be an Inſtruction to them that were then alive, and of great Advantage, if they would propound it to their own Imitation; ſince Men were prone to divide not only from the Impious, but from the Orthodox and Pious, and that not only about little and contemptible Opinions, (which ought to make no Difference) but even about Words that tended to the ſame Senſe, as was evident in the Caſe before them. Such was the Candor and Prudence of wiſe and good Men in labouring to compoſe the unneceſſary and verbal Diſputes of the Orthodox, when they unfortunately happened to claſh and quarrel without Grounds one with another.

AND they had ſome Regard likewiſe to Men of honeſt Minds, who through mere Ignorance or Infirmity were engaged in greater Errors. For they made a great Diſtinction between Hereſiarchs and their Followers; between the Guides and the People; and between ſuch as were born and bred in the Church, and afterward apoſtatized into Hereſy, and thoſe that received their Errors from the Tradition and Seduction of their Parents. St. Auſtin [a] ſpeaking of this latter Sort, ſays, That they who defend not a falſe and perverſe Opinion with any pertinacious Animoſity, eſpecially if they did not by any audacious Preſumption of their own firſt invent it, but received it from the Seduction of their erring Parents, and were careful in their Enquiries after Truth, being ready to embrace it when they found it; that they were by no means to be reckoned among Hereticks. That is, they had not the Formality of Hereſy, which is Pride and Obſtinacy in Error; and therefore a more favourable Opinion might be conceived of them above others, who firſt founded Hereſies, or embraced them afterwards out of ſome vicious Corruption of Mind, having a greater Regard to their own Luſts, and Pleaſures of Unrighteouſneſs, than any ſincere Love for Truth. Though ſuch weak and injudicious Perſons could not be wholly excuſed from Error, or Schiſm, or Sin, yet in Compariſon of others their Caſe was thought capable of ſome Allowances: And therefore they were neither ſo ſeverely puniſhed in the Church here, nor reputed ſo great Objects of GOD's Diſpleaſure hereafter. For as Salvian [b] words it, in the Caſe of ſome who embraced the Arian Hereſy, They erred indeed, but but they erred with a good Mind; not out of any Hatred to GOD, but with Affection to him, thinking thereby to honour and love the LORD. Although they had not the true Faith, yet they imagined this their Opinion to be perfect Charity towards GOD. And how they ſhall be puniſhed for this Error of their falſe Opinion in the Day of Judgment, no one knows but the Judge alone.

SECT. 17. Of different Degrees of Unity, and that no one was eſteemed to be in the perfect Unity of the Church, who was not in full Communion with her.

THIS occaſioned a little Diſtinction ſometimes to be made between Hereſiarchs, or the firſt Authors of Hereſy, and thoſe that were ignorantly drawn into Error by their Seducement and Deluſions, as we ſhall ſee more in ſpeaking of the Diſcipline and Cenſures of the Church. In the mean time, I obſerve, That becauſe the Church could not ordinarily judge Mens Hearts, nor always know the Means and Motives that engaged them in Error or Schiſm, ſhe was forced to proceed commonly by another Rule, and judge of their Unity with her by their external Communion and Profeſſions. And becauſe there were ſeveral Sorts and Degrees of Unity, as we have ſeen before, ſo that a Man might be in the Communion of the Church in one Reſpect, and out of it in another; therefore the Church went by this Rule, to judge none to be in her perfect Unity, but ſuch as were in full Communion with her. Upon which Account, though Hereticks and Schiſmaticks, and Excommunicate Perſons and prophane Men were in ſome Senſe of the Church, as having received Baptiſm, which they always retained, and as making Profeſſion of ſome Part of the Chriſtian Faith; yet becauſe in other Reſpects they were broken off from her, they were not eſteemed ſound and perfect Members of the Body, but looked upon as withered and decayed Branches, for Want of ſuch Unity in other Reſpects, as is neceſſarily required to denominate a Man a real and compleat Chriſtian, which is a Title allowed to none but ſuch as are in full Communion with the Church of CHRIST. This Diſtinction between Total and Partial Unity, and Total and Partial Schiſm, and Separation, is of great Uſe to make a Man underſtand all thoſe Sayings of the Ancients, which ſpeak of Hereticks and Schiſmaticks, and excommunicate Perſons and profligate Sinners, as being in ſome meaſure in and of the Church, at the ſame Time that they were reputed really and truly ſeparated from her. Thus Optatus tells the Donatiſts [c], That they were divided from the Church in Part, not in every Reſpect: For that was the Nature of a Schiſm, to be divided in Part, not Totally cut aſunder. And that for very good Reaſon, becauſe both we and you have the ſame Eccleſiaſtical Converſation; though the Minds of Men be at Variance, the Sacraments do not vary. We have all the ſame Faith, we are all ſigned with the ſame Seal: We are no otherwiſe baptized than you are, nor otherwiſe ordained than you are. We all read the ſame Divine Teſtament, we all pray to the ſame GOD. The Lord's-Prayer is the ſame with us, as it is with you: But there being a Rent made (as was ſaid before) by the Parts hanging this way and that way, an Union was neceſſary to reſtore the whole to its Integrity. He repeats this again in other [d] Places: Both you and we have the ſame Eccleſiaſtical Converſation, the ſame common Leſſons, the ſame Faith, the ſame Sacraments of Faith, the ſame Myſteries. And upon this Score he frequently tells them, they were their Brethren ſtill, whether they would or not. Though the Donatiſts hate us, ſays he [e], and abhor us, and will not be called our Brethren, yet we cannot depart from the Fear of GOD: They are without doubt our Brethren, though they are not good Brethren. Therefore let no one wonder, that I call them Brethren, who cannot be otherwiſe than our Brethren, ſeeing both they and we have one and the ſame ſpiritual Nativity, though our Actions are different from one another. Ye cannot but be our Brethren, ſays he again [f] to them, whom one Mother the Church hath born in the ſame Bowels of her Sacraments: whom one GOD, as a Father, hath received after one and the ſame manner, as adopted Children, we all pray, Our Father which art in Heaven: Whence you may perceive, That Vides, frater Parmeniane, ſancta germanitatis vincula inter nos & vos in totum rumpi non poſſe.

That we are not totally ſeparated from one another, whilſt we pray for you willingly, and you pray for us, though againſt your Will. You may hence ſee, Brother Parmenian, that the ſacred Bands of Brotherhood between us and you, cannot be totally broken aſunder. St. Auſtin always diſcourſes after the ſame manner concerning this Union in Part: In many Things ye are one [g] with us, in Baptiſm, in the Creed, and the reſt of GOD's Sacraments. And hence [h] he alſo concludes, That whether they would or no, they were their Brethren, and could not to ceaſe to be ſo, ſo long as they continued to ſay, Our Father, and did not renounce their Creed and Baptiſm. For there was no Medium between Chriſtians and Pagans. If they retained Faith, and Baptiſm, and the common Prayer of the LORD, which teaches all Men to ſtyle GOD their Father; ſo far they were Chriſtians: And as far as they were Chriſtians, ſo far they were Brethren, though turbulent and contentious, who would neither keep the Unity of the Spirit in the Bond of Peace, nor continue to be united in the Catholick Church with the Reſt of their Brethren.

BY all this it is evident, 1. That there were different Degrees of Unity and Schiſm, according to the Proportion of which, a Man was ſaid to be more or leſs united to the Church, or divided from it. 2. That they who retained Faith, and Baptiſm, and the common Form of Chriſtian Worſhip, were in thoſe Reſpects one with the Church; though in other Reſpects, wherein their Schiſm conſiſted, they were divided from her. So they might be ſaid to be Brethren, and not Brethren; Sons of GOD, and not Sons of GOD; of the Houſe of GOD, and not of the Houſe of GOD; according to the different Acceptation of thoſe Terms, and the different Proportion and Degrees of that Unity or Schiſm, whereby they were united to the Church, or ſeparated from her. 3. That to give a Man the Denomination of a true Catholick Chriſtian, abſolutely ſpeaking, it was neceſſary that he ſhould in all Reſpects, and in every Kind of Unity, be in perfect and full Communion with the Church; that is, in Faith, in Baptiſm, in Holineſs of Life, in Charity, in Worſhip and all holy Offices, and in all the neceſſary Parts of Government and Diſcipline: But to denominate a Man a Schiſmatick, it was ſufficient to break the Unity of the Church in any one Reſpect; though the Malignity of his Schiſm was to be interpreted more or leſs, according to the Degrees of the Separation that he made from her. And by theſe Rules it is eaſy for any one to underſtand, what the Ancients meant by Unity and Schiſm, and how the Diſcipline of the Church was exerciſed and maintained by obliging Men to live in perfect and full Communion with her, which I come now more particularly to explain and conſider.

CHAP. II.

Of the Diſcipline of the Church, and the various Kinds of it, together with the various Methods obſerved in the Adminiſtration of it.

SECT. 1. That the Diſcipline of the Church did not conſiſt in cancelling or diſannulling any Man's Baptiſm.

THE Diſcipline of the Church being intended, as was obſerved before, only to preſerve the Unity and Purity of her own Members in one Communion, we are not to look for the Exerciſe of it upon any but ſuch as in ſome Meaſure made Profeſſion of being joyned in Society with her; which were either baptized Perſons, or at leaſt Candidates of Baptiſm: For ſhe pretended not to exerciſe Diſcipline upon any other which were without, but ſuch only as were within the Pale in the largeſt Senſe, by ſome Act of their own Profeſſion. And even upon theſe ſhe never pretended to exerciſe her Diſcipline ſo far, as to cancel or diſannul their Baptiſm, ſo as to oblige them to take a ſecond Baptiſm, if their firſt was good, in order to be admitted into the Church again, when for any Crime they were caſt out of it. For even Hereticks and Apoſtates, who made the greateſt Breach of Chriſtian Unity, were never ſo far divided from the Church, but that ſtill they retained ſome diſtant Relation to her by Baptiſm, whoſe Character was indelible, even in the greateſt Apoſtacy that can be imagined, even in the total Abjuration of the Chriſtian Faith: The Obligation of their Baptiſm ſtill lay upon them, and with what Severity ſoever they were treated in their Repentance, if ever they returned to the Church again, there is no Inſtance of receiving them by a ſecond Baptiſm, which, if once lawfully given, was for ever after forbidden to be repeated upon any Account whatſoever. I will not ſtand to prove this here, here, becauſe I have had Occaſion once or twice [*] before to ſpeak largely upon it; but only obſerve, That it was no Part of the Diſcipline of the Church to deny Men the Original Right they had in Baptiſm; and conſequently that the moſt formal Caſting them out of Communion was never intended to ſignify, that they were mere Heathens and Pagans, and that they could not be admitted again into the Church without a Repetition of their Baptiſm.

SECT. 2. But in excluding Men from the common Benefits and Privileges conſequent to Baptiſm.

BUT the Diſcipline of the Church conſiſted in a Power to deprive Men of all the Benefits and Privileges of Baptiſm, by turning them out of the Society and Communion of the Church, in which theſe Privileges were only to be enjoyed; ſuch as joyning in Publick Prayer, and receiving the Euchariſt, and other Acts of Divine Worſhip: And ſometimes they were wholly forbidden to enter the Church, ſo much as to hear the Scriptures read, or hear a Sermon preached, till they ſhewed ſome Signs of relenting; and every one ſhunned and avoided them in common Converſation, partly to eſtabliſh the Church's Cenſures and Proceedings againſt them, and partly to make them aſhamed, and partly to ſecure themſelves from the Danger of Contagion and Infection.

SECT. 3. This Power Originally a mere ſpiritual Power, tho' in ſome Caſes the ſecular Arm was called in to give its Aſſiſtance.

THUS far the Church went in her Cenſures by her own natural Right and Power, but no farther: For her Power Originally was a mere ſpiritual Power; her Sword only a ſpiritual Sword, as Cyprian [a] terms it, to affect the Soul, and not the Body. Over the Bodies of Men ſhe pretended no Power; no nor yet over their Eſtates, except ſuch as were purely Eccleſiaſtical, and of her own Donation, to reſume what was her own Property and Gift from ſuch as were contumacious and rebellious againſt her Cenſures. In which Caſe ſhe ſometimes craved Aſſiſtance from the ſecular Power, even whilſt it was Heathen, and more frequently when it was become Chriſtian. Thus when the Council of Antioch had depoſed Paulus Samoſatenſis, and ſubſtituted Domnus in his Room, but could not remove him by any Power of their own from the Houſe belonging to the Church, which he ſtill kept Poſſeſſion of, they had Recourſe to Aurelian the Heathen Emperor, who did them Juſtice upon Appeal, ordering the Houſe to be delivered to thoſe, to whom the Biſhops of Italy and Rome ſhould write with Approbation. And ſo, ſays Euſebius [b] Paul was caſt out of the Church with the higheſt Diſgrace by the Help of the ſecular Power. This was more common after the Emperors were become Chriſtians: For then they could with greater Liberty and Confidence appeal to them, and beg their Aſſiſtance upon ſuch Occaſions. And then Canons were made to authorize ſuch Addreſſes, that the Cenſures of the Church might have their Effect and Force upon contumacious and obſtinate Offenders. Such an Order was made in the Council of Antioch, An. 341, in the Reign of Conſtantius. That if a Presbyter, who ſet up a ſeparate Meeting againſt his Biſhop, and was after Admonition depoſed for his Crime, ſtill continued obſtinately [c] to diſturb and ſubvert the Church, he ſhould be corrected by the external Power, that is, the Civil Magiſtrate, as a ſeditious Perſon. Such another Canon was made in the third Council of Carthage [d], in the Caſe of one Creſconius, an African Biſhop, who having left his own Biſhoprick, and intruded himſelf into another, where he ſtayed in ſpite of all Eccleſiaſtical Cenſures, Orders were given to petition the ſecular Magiſtrate by his Authority to remove him. And this Canon was inſerted as a general and ſtanding Rule into the African [e] Code. Where we have alſo a like Conſtitution [f] againſt ſuch Presbyters as ſet up new Biſhopricks in the Dioceſe of their own Biſhop without his Conſent: They were to be deprived and removed out of ſuch Places, as Rebels, ἀρχοντικῇ δυνάμει, by the governing Power of the ſecular Magiſtrate. And in another Canon [g] mention is made of Letters to be ſent from the Synod to the Magiſtrates of Africk, to petition them to yield their Aſſiſtance to their common Mother, the Catholick Church, againſt the Donatiſts, for as much as the Authority of Biſhops was contemned in every City. This Petition is more particularly explained in another Canon [h], which grants a Commiſſion to certain Biſhops to go as Legates in the Name of the Church, to the Emperors Arcadius and Honorius, and complain of the Violences offered by the Donatiſts, who had invaded many of their Churches, and kept them by Force; againſt which they deſired the Emperors to grant them a ſuitable Help by a Military Guard; it being no unuſual Thing, nor againſt the Scripture, to be protected, as St. Paul was, by a Band of Soldiers againſt the Conſpiracy of inſolent and factious Men. They requeſted requeſted alſo, That the Emperors would put in Execution the Law, which Theodoſius their Father, of Pious Memory, had enacted againſt Hereticks, whereby every one that ordained, or was ordained by them, was amerced in the Sum of Ten Pounds of Gold. The Law they refer to, is ſtill extant in the Theodoſian Code, running in theſe Terms [i], "If Proof "is made againſt any who are engaged in "heretical Errors, that they either have or- "dained Clerks, or received the Office of a "Clerk, a Mulct of Ten Pounds in Gold, is "by our Order to be impoſed upon them: "And the Place, in which any of theſe un- "lawful Things were attempted, if done by "the Connivance of the Owner, ſhall be con- "fiſcated. But if the Poſſeſſor was ignorant of "the Matter, then he that rented the Farm, "if he be a Freeman, ſhall forfeit Ten Pounds "of Gold to the Exchequer; or if he be de- "ſcended of a ſervile Condition, and cannot "bear the Penalty, then he ſhall be beaten "with Rods, and ſent into Baniſhment." This was that famous Penal Law of Theodoſius againſt all Hereticks in general, ſo often mentioned by St. Auſtin, and which he with the reſt of the African Fathers deſired Honorius to confirm, ſo as it might ſpecify and affect the Donatiſts, more particularly ſuch of them, as by open or ſecret Violence made Aſſaults upon the Catholick Church. They did not deſire that this Penalty ſhould be inflicted indifferently upon all the Donatiſts, but only ſuch as the Circumcellions and others, who in their mad Zeal and Fury committed violent Outrages againſt the Catholicks: But Honorius extended the Penalty to them all, and enforced the old Law of Theodoſius his Father by a new Law of his own, wherein the Donatiſts were particularly [k] named as Hereticks, who upon Conviction or Confeſſion, were to be fined in the Sum of Ten Pounds of Gold, according to the Tenor of the former Law. No one better underſtood either the Reaſons or the Effects of this Law than St. Auſtin, and therefore it cannot be better explained than as Gothofred does it, in his Words. Now he writing to Count Boniface, an African Magiſtrate, gives this Account of it: Before thoſe Laws, ſays he [l], were ſent into Africk, which compel Hereticks to come in to the Church, ſome of our Brethren, among whom I was one, were of Opinion, That although the Madneſs of the Donatiſts raged every-where, yet we ſhould not petition the Emperors to forbid any one ſimply to be of that Hereſy, by inflicting Puniſhment on all that embraced it; but only deſire them to make a Law to reſtrain them from offering Violence to any that either preached or held the Catholick Faith. Which we thought might in ſome Meaſure be done after this Manner: If the Law of Theodoſius of Pious Memory, which he had promulged againſt all Hereticks in general, That whoever was found to be a Biſhop or Clerk, any where among them, ſhould forfeit Ten Pounds in Gold, were more expreſsly confirmed againſt the Donatiſts (who denied themſelves to be Hereticks) in ſuch a Manner, as that the Penalty ſhould not be inflicted upon them all, but only upon ſuch in whoſe Regions the Catholick Church ſuffered Violence from their Clergy, or the Circumcellions, or their People, ſo as after the Proteſtation of the Catholicks, who ſuffered from them, the Magiſtrates ſhould compel their Biſhops or Miniſters to pay the Fine. For ſo we thought that by this Means they might be terrified from daring any ſuch Attempts, and the Catholick Truth might be taught and held freely, ſo as no one ſhould be compelled to it, but every one that would, might embrace it without Fear, and we ſhould have no falſe or counterfeit Catholicks. And though others of our Brethren were of a different Opinion (who by their Age had greater Experience, and could plead the Example of many Cities and Places where we ſaw the Catholick Church firmly and truly ſettled, which yet was there ſettled by ſuch kind Methods of Divine Providence, whilſt Men were compelled by the Laws of former Emperors to come in to the Catholick Communion) yet notwithſtanding this we prevailed, that our Petition ſhould be preſented to the Emperors in the foreſaid Form. And thereupon a Decree was drawn up in Council, and our Legates was diſpatched to Court. But the greater Mercy of GOD, (who better knew how neceſſary the Terror of ſuch Laws, and a little medicinal Trouble is, for the wicked or cold Hearts of many Men, and for that Hardneſs of Mind which cannot be corrected by Words, but may by a little Severity of Diſcipline) ſo ordered the Matter, that our Legates could not obtain the Thing they had undertaken. For before they could get to Court to preſent our Petition, ſeveral grievous Complaints had been made by the Biſhops of other Places who had ſuffered extremely from the Donatiſts, and were driven from their Sees by them: Eſpecially the horrible and incredible Murder of Maximian, the Catholick Biſhop of Vaga, made it impoſſible for our Embaſſy to ſucceed. For now a Law was already promulged againſt the barbarous Donatiſt-Hereſy, the very ſparing which which ſeemed more cruel than the Cruelty which themſelves exerciſed, that not only its Violence, but its very Being ſhould not be tolerated or ſuffered to go unpuniſhed. Yet to obſerve Chriſtian Meekneſs, even toward the Unworthy, the Penalty propoſed was not Death, but only a Pecuniary Mulct, and Baniſhment for the Biſhops and Miniſters. Then relating particularly the barbarous Uſage of Maximian, and their unparalleled Cruelty towards him, he adds, That the Emperor being well apprized of theſe Facts, in his great Piety and Concern for Religion, choſe rather univerſally to correct that impious Error by wholeſome Laws, and reduce thoſe, who carried the Badge of CHRIST againſt CHRIST, to Catholick Unity by Terror and Puniſhment, than barely to take from them the Liberty of exerciſing their Cruelty, and leave them at Liberty to err and periſh. He obſerves farther, That as ſoon as ever theſe Laws appeared in Africk, they wrought wonderful Effects upon the Minds of Men: For immediately all ſuch as waited only for a proper Occaſion, or were kept back merely by the Dread of the Cruelty of thoſe Frantick Men, or were afraid to offend their Relations, came over at once to the Catholick Church. Many alſo who were detained in Schiſm merely by the Cuſtom they had been trained up to by their Parents, but had never ſpent a Thought about the Grounds and Reaſons of their Error, nor would conſider nor make any Enquiry into the Merits of the Cauſe; when once they began to conſider it, and found nothing in it worth ſuffering ſo great a Loſs, they without any Difficulty became Catholick Chriſtians. For a Concern for their own Safety brought them to Underſtanding, who before was grown negligent by Security. Many alſo, who were leſs capable of Underſtanding and Judging by themſelves, what was the Difference between the Error of the Donatiſts and the Catholick Truth, were induced to follow the Authority and Perſuaſion of ſo many Examples going before them. So the true Mother received Multitudes of People into her Boſom again rejoycing, and only an hardened Company remained obſtinate by their unhappy Animoſity in that pernicious Way. And many of theſe alſo communicated with the Church by a ſort of Diſſimulation: But they who at firſt diſſembled, afterwards by Degrees accuſtoming themſelves to the Way of the Church, and hearing the Preaching of Truth, eſpecially after the Conference and Diſputation which was held between their Biſhops and us at Carthage, did at laſt for the moſt Part correct their Errors alſo.

THIS is the Account which St. Auſtin gives both of the Reaſons and Effects of this Penal Law, which he frequently [m] mentions in other Places, carefully collected by Gothofred, but needleſs here to be recited. I only obſerve theſe few Things upon the whole Matter. 1. That though it was no Part of the Church's Diſcipline to uſe any manner of Force to give Effect to her Cenſures; yet in Caſe of obſtinate Oppoſition and Contempt, ſhe did not think it lawful to take the Aſſiſtance of the Secular Power. 2. That in Caſe of Violence offered to the Church or any of her Miniſters or her Members, there was ſtill more Reaſon to petition for Defence againſt them. 3. That it was generally thought uſeful to inflict ſome moderate temporal Puniſhments upon obſtinate Hereticks and Schiſmaticks, and other Offenders (with a Liberty of indulging, and remitting the Penalty, as Prudence directed) in order to bring them to conſider and examine the Grounds of Truth and Error, and humble them by Repentance, and reſtore them to the Communion of the Church from whence they were fallen.

SECT. 4. This Aſſiſtance never required to proceed ſo far, as, for mere Error, to take away Life, or ſhed Blood.

BUT then it is alſo to be conſidered, that the Church never encouraged any Magiſtrate to proceed farther in her Behalf againſt any one for any mere Error, or Eccleſiaſtical Miſdemeanor, than to puniſh the Delinquent with a Pecuniary Mulct, or bodily Puniſhment ſhort of Death, ſuch as Confiſcation or Baniſhment, unleſs it were in Caſe of Capital Crimes, and of a Civil Nature, which fell directly under the Cognizance of the Civil Magiſtrate, as Treaſon or Rebellion, which the Imperial Laws puniſhed with Death. There are indeed ſome Laws in the Theodoſian Code, which orders Hereticks to be proſecuted with Capital Puniſhments. Theodoſius [n] made a Decree againſt ſome of the Manichees, which went by the Name of Eucratites, Saccophori, and Hydroparaſtatæ, That they ſhould be puniſhed with Death, at the ſame time that the Solitarii, another Sect among them, ſhould only ſuffer Confiſcation. And Honorius renewed the ſame Law [o] againſt them. And in two other Laws, he ordered the Donatiſts [p] in Africk to be put to Death, if they held any publick Conventicles to the Prejudice of the Catholick Faith, revoking all Tolerations that had been granted them before. But as theſe Laws were very rare, ſo they may be ſuppoſed to be made upon ſome particular Provocation of their Enormities, ſuch as the Manichees were guilty of;

or their barbarous Outrages committed againſt the Catholicks, ſuch as the Circumcillions among the Donatiſts every where ſtand charged with. Then again, it was rare to find theſe Laws at any time put in Execution againſt them. For we ſcarce find an Inſtance before Priſcillian of any Heretick ſuffering Death barely for his Opinion. Sozomen, ſpeaking of this Law of Theodoſius, ſays, It was made more for Terror [q] than Execution. And Chryſoſtom at the ſame time delivered his Opinion freely, That the Tares were not thus to be rooted out: For if Hereticks [r] were to be put to Death, there would be nothing but eternal War in the World. CHRIST does not prohibit us to reſtrain Hereticks, to ſtop their Mouths, to cut off their Liberty, and their Meetings, and their Conſpiracies, but only to kill and ſlay them. St. Auſtin ſeems not to have known any thing of this Law of Theodoſius; and for thoſe of Honorius, they were not yet enacted againſt the Donatiſts, when he wrote againſt them. Therefore writing frequently to the African Magiſtrates, he tells them, The Law gave them no Power to put any Donatiſt to Death. Thus in his Letter [s] to Dulcitius the Tribune, You, ſays he, have not received the Power of the Sword againſt them by any Laws, neither by any Imperial Injunctions, which you are obliged to execute, are you commanded to put them to Death. So he tells Petillian the Donatiſts Biſhop, That GOD had ſo ordered the Matter in his Providence, having the Hearts of Kings in his Hand, that tho' the Emperor had made many Laws to admoniſh and correct [t] them, yet there was no Imperial Law which commanded them to be put Death. The Judges indeed had Power to puniſh Malefactors with Death, as Murderers, and the like; and ſo perhaps ſome of the Donatiſts might ſuffer; but that was not for their Opinion barely. And even in that Caſe, when it was the Cauſe of the Church, the Catholick Biſhops commonly interceded for them, That the Death of their Martyrs might not be revenged with Blood. For no good Men in the Catholick Church, ſays St. Auſtin [u], are pleaſed to have any one, although he be an Heretick, proſecuted unto Death. Therefore writing to one Donatus, a Proconſul in Africk, he tells him, They deſired [x] that the Terror of Judges and Laws might correct them, ſo as to preſerve them from the Puniſhment of eternal Judgment, but not kill them; that Diſcipline might not be neglected toward them, and yet that they might not undergo the Puniſhment which they really deſerved. Therefore puniſh their Crimes in ſuch Manner, as that the Authors may continue in Being, to repent of them. We beſeech you, when any Cauſe of the Church comes before you, although you know the Church to be aſſaulted and afflicted by their injurious Villanies, yet then forget that you have the Power of Killing, and do not forget our Petition. Let it not ſeem vile and contemptible in your Eyes, that we who pray to GOD to correct them, intercede with you not to kill them. Let your Prudence alſo conſider this, That no one beſides Eccleſiaſticks is concerned to bring Eccleſiaſtical Cauſes before you: So that if you ſhould reſolve to put ſuch Criminals to Death, who are accuſed of acting wickedly againſt the Church, you will deter us from bringing any more ſuch Actions before your Tribunal: And that will make them more licentious, and daringly bold to aſſault us, and work our Ruin, when they know we are under ſuch a Neceſſity, to chuſe rather to be ſlain by them, than bring them to be ſlain before your Tribunals. He pleads after the ſame Manner in another Letter [y] to Marcellinus the Tribune, in Behalf of ſome Donatiſts, who confeſſed themſelves guilty of murdering ſome of the Catholick Clergy. I beſeech you, ſays he, let their Puniſhment be ſhort of Death, though their Crimes be ſo great, both for our Conſcience ſake, and to commend the Lenity and Meekneſs of the Catholick Church. A little after he entreats him to intrecede in his Name to the Proconſul for them. I hear it is in the Power of the Judge to mollify the Rigor of the Law in giving Sentence, and to uſe greater Mildneſs in Puniſhing than the Laws commands. But if he will not at my Requeſt conſent to this, let him however grant me this Favour, to keep them in Priſon till I can ſend to the Emperor, and obtain of his Clemency [a], That the Paſſions or Marytrdoms of the Servants of GOD, which ought to be glorious in the Church, be not ſtained and defiled with the Blood of their Enemies. He urges the ſame Argument in his next Letter to this Marcellinus with greater Earneſtneſs, conjuring him by all that is ſacred, not to proceed to the utmoſt Extremity againſt ſome Circumcellions and Donatiſt Clergy, who were convicted of murdering dering two of his Presbyters belonging to the Church of Hippo, after having first barbarously struck out an Eye, and cut off the Finger of one of them. I am under the greatest Concern imaginable, says he, lest your Highness should decree their Punishment by the utmost Severity of the Law, to make them suffer the same [b] Things that they have done. Therefore I beseech you in these Letters by the Faith which you have in CHRIST, by the Mercy of the Lord JESUS, that you neither do this, nor suffer it to be done. For though we might excuse ourselves from their Death, for as much as it was not by any Accusation of ours, but by the Information of those who have the Care of preserving the Publick Peace, that they were brought in Question; yet we would not have the Passions of the Servants of GOD be revenged with the like Punishments, as it were by Way of Retaliation. Not that we are against depriving wicked Men of the Liberty of committing such villainous Actions, but because we rather think it sufficient, without either killing them, or maiming them in any Part of their Body, to bring them by Coercion of the Laws from these mad and turbulent Practises, to live peaceably and soberly, or at least instead of these wicked Works, to engage them in some useful Employment. He yet again more pathetically urges the same Matter to one Apringius another African Judge [c] in these very affectionate and moving Terms, pleading for Mercy toward the same Circumcellions. I am afraid lest they who have committed this Murder, should be sentenced to Death by your Power. That this may not be done, I that am a Christian beseech you the Judge, I that am a Bishop exhort you that are a Christian. I know the Apostle says, Ye bear not the Sword in vain, but are Ministers of God to execute Wrath upon them that do Evil. But the Cause of the State is one Thing, and the Cause of the Church another. The Administration of that (the State) is to be carried on by Terror, but the Meekness of the Church is to be commended by her Clemency. Then using several Arguments, he adds a little after, if nothing short of Death could be imposed upon them, for our Part we had rather they should be set at Liberty, than that the Passions of our Brethren should be revenged by shedding the Blood of their Enemies. But now since there is Room both to shew the Gentleness of the Church, and also to restrain the Audaciousness of the Cruel, why should you not incline to the more provident Side and milder Sentence, which Judges have Liberty to do even in Causes where the Church is not concerned: Therefore stand in Awe with us of the Judgment of GOD the Father, and demonstrate the Clemency of the Church your Mother. For what you do, the Church does, for whose Sake you do it, and whose you are that do it. Therefore contend and vie Goodness with the Evil. They by monstrous Inhumanity and Wickedness tear off the Members from the living Body: Do you in Mercy cause their Members, which were exercised in such barbarous Works, to remain whole and untouched in them, that they may henceforth serve to work at some useful Labour. They spared not the Servants of GOD preaching Reformation to them, but do you spare them that have been apprehended in their Crimes, spare them that have been presented to your Examination, spare them that have been convicted before you. They with the Sword of Unrighteousness shed Christian Blood: Do you with-hold even the lawful Sword of Judgment from being imbrued in their Blood. They slew the Minister of the Church, and thereby deprived him of the Time of Living: Do you let the Enemies of the Church live, and thereby grant them a Time of repenting. Thus it becomes a Christian Judge to act in the Cause of the Church, at our Request, at our Admonition, at our Intercession. Other Men are wont to appeal from the Mildness of the Sentence, when their Enemies are too favourably dealt with upon Conviction: But so we love our Enemies, that if we did not presume upon your Christian Obedience, we should appeal from the Severity of your Sentence.

AFTER this manner St. Austin always pleads for Favour to be shewed to the Donatists, that they should not be prosecuted unto Blood, in the Cause of the Church, though it were for a Capital Crime, which in a Civil Case would infallibly have been punished with Death without Redemption. And certainly they, who were so tender of their Enemies Lives, when they were guilty of such flagrant Crimes of violent Outrages against the Church, could never think it lawful to sentence them to Death for mere Error in Opinion. And therefore tho' Honorius made some such Laws after St. Austin had written all this; yet we never find the Church approved them, or desired they should be put in Execution: But on the contrary always stood firm to her own Character, which we have heard before in the Words of St. Austin: That is, That no good Man in the Catholick Church were pleased with having Hereticks prosecuted unto Death. Lesser Punishments, they thought, might have their Use, as Means sometimes to bring them to Consideration and Repentance: But to take away their Lives was to deprive them at once of all Means and Opportunity of repenting. Besides that it was invidious to the Church, and rather a Confirmation to Heresy: For such as were slain, were always reckoned Martyrs by their Party. Thus the Donatists honoured their Circumcellions, which which were ſlain in the Encounter with Macarius, whom the Emperor Conſtans ſent into Africk in a peaceable manner, to ſcatter his Gifts among them, and try to reduce them to Unity by his Kindneſs: They were the Aggreſſors, and forced him to require Aid of the Governors to defend himſelf againſt their Aſſaults, and yet thoſe that were ſlain in ſo neceſſary a Defence, were by them reputed Martrys, and Catholicks were nick-named Macarians, and theſe called the Macarian-Days, that is, in their Language, Days of Perſecution. And in Anſwer to this, Optatus was forced to tell them, 1ſt, That the Fact was falſe: No Violence was uſed toward them; there was no Terror in the firſt Deſign; they neither felt Rod, nor Impriſonment; but only Exhortations [d] to Peace. And, 2dly, if any Violence was offered to them, they called it upon themſelves by their own Inſolency, obliging the Emperor's Officer or Almoner to defend himſelf againſt the rude Inſults of the Circumcellions. Mean while whatever happened, was neither done by the Deſire, nor the Council, nor the Knowledge, nor the Concurrence of the Church. A like Inſtance happened in the Caſe of the Priſcilianiſts, Priſcillian and ſome of his Accomplices, were by Maximus the Emperor, at the Inſtigation of Ithacius, a fierce and ſanguinary Biſhop, ſentenced unto Death. This gave Occaſion to the Followers of Priſcillian to triumph in the Sufferings of their Leader. For, as Sulpicius Severus [e] obſerves, his Death was ſo far from ſuppreſſing the Hereſy, that it gave Confirmation to it, and made it ſpread farther than otherwiſe it would have done. For his Followers, who before honoured him as a Saint, afterwards began to reverence him as a Martyr. The Thing was utterly diſpleaſing to all good Men, who were intereſted and attached to the Ithacian Party. St. Martin Biſhop of Tours, not only rebuked Ithacius for his over zealous Proſecution [f], but interceded with Maximus the Emperor to abſtain from ſhedding their Blood, telling him, It was enough to expel Hereticks from their Churches, after they were once condemned by the Epiſcopal Judgment: And he obtained a Promiſe of Maximus, not to Decree any Thing againſt their Lives. From which when he departed by the Perſuaſion of others, and condemned them to Death, St. Martin would never after be induced to communicate with thoſe ſanguinary Men, ſave once in a ſmall Matter, of which he alſo repented, and continued his Averſion to them all his Days, as the ſame Hiſtorian informs us [g]. Now from all this it is plain, That whatever Favour or Aſſiſtance the ancient Church required of the Civil Magiſtrates, to back her Diſcipline with againſt Hereticks or other Delinquents, ſhe never deſired them to unſheath the Sword in her Cauſe, or puniſh them with Death; but always interpoſed in their Behalf, that they might have the favour to live and repent, if ever any ſanguinary Laws (which were very rare, and no ways encouraged or approved by the Church) were made againſt them. The Diſcipline of Fire and Faggot, and Inquiſitions, and a Thouſand other Tortures, which under Pretence of Mercy has ſpilt ſo much Chriſtian Blood, are Inventions of later Ages, and more corrupt and degenerate Times, when Men had forgot the Spirit of Chriſtianity, and the Character of our Bleſſed LORD, who came not to deſtroy Mens Lives, but to ſave them.

SECT. 5. The Diſcipline of the Church deprived no Man of his Natural or Civil Rights; much leſs the Magiſtrate of his Power, or Allegiance due to him.

IT was no Part of the ancient Diſcipline to deprive Men of their Natural or Civil Rights. A Maſter did not loſe his natural Authority over his Family, nor a Parent over his Children, by loſing the Privileges of Chriſtian Communion. A Judge did not loſe his Office or Charge in the State, by being caſt out of the Church. For many ſuch enjoyed their Power and Juriſdiction under Conſtantius and other heretical Princes, notwithſtanding the Church's Cenſure. Though now it is the common Doctrine of the Romiſh Church, as Cardinal Tolet [h] delivers it for the Inſtruction of Prieſts, That an excommunicated Perſon cannot exerciſe any Act of Juriſdiction without Sin; nay, and if his Excommunication be made publick, all his Sentences are Null and of no Effect. This Rule is deſigned againſt Sovereign Powers, to weaken the Hands of Princes by diſplacing their Officers, under Pretence of Excommunication. But the Church of Rome goes farther, and puts it in the Power of the Pope to lay Princes under the higheſt Excommunication or Anathema, and then by Virtue of that to depoſe them from their Thrones, and abſolve Subjects from their Allegiance, and diſpoſe of their Kingdoms to whom they think fit. Of which Practice there is not the leaſt Footſtep in all the Diſcipline of the Primitive Church for many Ages, nor ſcarce any unqueſtionable Inſtance of ſuch an Attempt before the Time of Pope Hildebrand, or Gregory VII, (from whom this this Doctrine is called the Hildebrandin Doctrine) as ſome of their own Hiſtorians ingenuouſly confeſs. I have read over and over again, ſays Otho Friſingenſis [i], a noble German Biſhop, the Records of the Roman Kings and Emperors, and I no where find that any of them before this was excommunicated, or deprived of his Kingdom by the Biſhop of Rome; unleſs any one think fit to call that Anathematizing, when Philip the Emperor was placed among the Penitents for a little Time by the Roman Biſhop; or when Theodoſius for his cruel Slaughter of the Theſſalonians, was debarred from entring the Church by St. Ambroſe. There is no queſtion but that Princes anciently were ſometimes denied the Communion, as St. Ambroſe denied Theodoſius: But as that was not properly putting them under the great Excommunication, or Anathema, ſo much leſs was it depriving them of their Legal Power and Dominion. Conſtantius was an Heretick, and Julian an Apoſtate; Valens and Valentinian the younger were profeſs'd Arians; Anaſtaſius and many others, Abettors and Propugners of ſeveral Hereſies; yet the Church never pretended to withdraw her Allegiance from them, or depoſe them: Neither was this for Want of Power, as Bellarmine and others commonly pretend, but for Want of juſt Authority and Right: For the Church in thoſe Days knew nothing either of a direct or indirect Power, that the Pope or any other Biſhop had over the Temporal Rights of Princes; but profeſſed Obedience to them, whether they were Heathens, or Hereticks; in the Church, or out of the Church; Perſecutors, or Friends: As the Reader, that pleaſes, may ſee more fully demonſtrated in the Elaborate Work of our Learned Biſhop Buckridge, in Defence of Barclay againſt Bellarmin [k], concerning the pretended Power of the Pope in Temporals, and his Uſurpation of a Right to dethrone Princes. Where among many other unanſwerable Arguments, he confirms the forementioned Obſervation of Otho Friſingenſis, That Hildebrand was the firſt that put this wicked Doctrine in Practice againſt the Emperor Henry IV, from the concurrent Teſtimony of almoſt Twenty Writers of the Roman Communion. I ſhall purſue this Matter no farther here, having ſaid what is ſufficient to confirm this Remark about the Diſcipline of the Church, That it deprived no Man of his Natural or Civil Rights, much leſs gave any one Authority to dethrone Princes, or abſolve Subjects from their Allegiance, or diſpoſe of their Kingdoms under Pretence of ſetting up the Spiritual Sword above the Temporal.

SECT. 6. But conſiſted 1ſt, in Admonition of the Offender.

BUT the Diſcipline of the Church, being a mere ſpiritual Power, was confined to theſe following Acts. Firſt, The Admonition of the Offender: Which was ſolemnly repeated once or twice commonly, before they proceeded to greater Severities, according to that of the Apoſtle: A Man that is an Heretick, after the firſt and ſecond Admonition reject. After this manner St. Ambroſe [l] repreſents their Proceedings: A putrified Member of the Body is never cut off but with Grief: We try a long time, whether it cannot be healed with Medicines; if not, then a good Phyſician cuts it off. Such is the Affection of a good Biſhop; he is very deſirous firſt to heal the Infirm, to put a ſtop to growing Ulcers, to burn and ſear a little, and not cut off: At laſt he cuts off with Grief what cannot be healed. So Proſper [m] ſays, They that being long endured, and often kindly admoniſhed, will not be corrected, are cut off as putrified Members with the Sword of Excommunication.

AND thus Syneſius repreſents his own Proceedings againſt Andronicus the tyrannical Governor of Ptolemais who made uſe of his Power only to oppreſs and vex the People. He firſt tried whether Admonitions and Remonſtrances againſt his Cruelty [n] would work upon him: But when they proved ineffectual, and the Man grew more outragious and incorrigible, breaking out into that blaſphemous Expreſſion, That in vain did any Man hope for Succour from the Church, and that no Man ſhould eſcape his Hands, although he laid hold of the Foot of CHRIST himſelf: After this, ſays Syneſius [o], he was no longer to be admoniſhed, but cut off as an incurable Member, for fear the ſound Parts ſhould be corrupted by his Society and Contagion. And ſo he proceeded to pronounce that formal Excommunication againſt him, which we ſhall hear more of by and by.

SOME call this the προθεσμία, the Warning, or Time [p] given them to repent, which was limited ſometimes to the Space of Ten Days [q]: After which if they continued obſtinate and refractory, refractory, the Church proceeded to greater Severities, to deny them Communion by the leſſer or greater Excommunication. The leſſer Excommunication was commonly called, Ἀφορισμὸς, Separation or Suſpenſion: And it conſiſted in excluding Men from the Participation of the Euchariſt, and Prayers of the Faithful; but did not expel them the Church: For ſtill they might ſtay to hear the Pſalmody, and Reading of the Scriptures, and the Sermons, and the Prayers of the Catechumens and the Penitents, and then depart with them, when that firſt Service, called, The Service of the Catechumens, was ended. Theodoret expreſsly diſtinguiſhes this leſſer Excommunication from the greater, when ſpeaking of ſome who had lapſed into Sin rather by Infirmity, than Maliciouſneſs, he ſays, They ſhould be [r] debarred from partaking of the Holy Myſteries, but not debarred from the Prayers or Service of the Catechumens. And thus we are to underſtand that Canon of Gregory Thaumaturgus [s], which orders ſuch to be excommunicated from Prayers, as detained the Goods of their Brethren (which they had loſt in the Invaſion of the Barbarians) under Pretence of having found them. Prayers there, means the Prayers of the Faithful at the Altar, or the Communion-Service, from which they were ſuſpended, and not the Prayers of the Catechumens, at which they might be preſent notwithſtanding their Suſpenſion from the other. So that this was a lower Degree of Puniſhment, excluding them in Part only from the Society of the Faithful, that is, from the common Prayers and the Euchariſt, but not totally expelling them the Church. And it was commonly inflicted for leſſer Crimes; or if for greater, upon ſuch Sinners only as ſhewed immediately a ready Diſpoſition to ſubmit to the Laws of Repentance: There being ſomething in their Forwardneſs to entitle them to a more favourable Sentence. The Council of Eliberis [t] orders this Sort of Abſtention from the Euchariſt for three Weeks to be inflicted on thoſe, who without any neceſſary Avocation, neglected to come to Church for Three Lord's-Days together. And in another Canon [u] ſuſpends ſuch Virgins for a Year, as were guilty of Ante-nuptial Fornication; ordering them to be received again without publick Penance, provided they were married to the Perſons by whom they were defiled, living chaſtely with them for the future. Albaſpiny here rightly obſerved, That this was only depriving them of the Euchariſt, for they were neither expelled the Church, nor obliged to go through any of the Stages of publick Penance, but might pray with the Catechumens, and with the Faithful alſo; only they were not allowed to participate of the Holy Myſteries till their Term was expired, and therein their Puniſhment conſiſted. St. Baſil's Canons [x] ſpeak of the ſame Puniſhment for Trigamiſts, or Perſons that were married a third time. They were to be under Penance for Five Years; Half the Time to be Hearers only, and half the Time Co-ſtanders; that is, they might ſtay to hear the Prayers of the Faithful, but not partake of the Communion with them. So that here were two Degrees of this leſſer Excommunication; the one excluding them only from the Euchariſt, but allowing them to pray with the Faithful; and the other excluding them from the Prayers of the Faithful, and only allowing them to pray with the Catechumens; but neither of them expelling ſuch Delinquents totally from the Communion of the Church.

SECT. 8. 3dly, In Expulſion from the Church, called the greater Excommunication, total Separation, Anathema, and the like.

THE greater Excommunication was, when Men were totally expelled the Church, and ſeparated from all Communion in Holy Offices with her. Whence in the ancient Canons it is diſtinguiſhed by the Names of παντελὴς ἀφορισμὸς, the total Separation, and Anathema, the Curſe: It being the greateſt Curſe that could be laid upon Man. It is frequently alſo ſignified by the ſeveral Terms and Phraſes of, ἀπείργειν τῆς ἐκκλησίας, ἀποκλείειν & ῥίπτειν τῆς ἐκκλησίας, ἐκτὸς εἶναι, ἐκκηρύττειν τῆς συνόδου, ἀπεῖξαι τῆς ἀκροάσεως, &c. All which denote Mens being wholly caſt out of the Church, by the moſt formal Excommunication, and debarred not only from the Euchariſt, but from the Prayers, and hearing the Scriptures in any Aſſembly of the Church. This Form is elegantly expreſſed by Syneſius with all the Appendages and Conſequences of it, in his Excommunication of Andronicus, mentioned before, in theſe Words: "Now that the Man is no longer to be admoniſhed, but cut off as an incurable Member, the Church of Ptolemais makes this Declaration [y] or Injunction to all his Siſter Churches throughout the World: Let no Church of GOD be open to Andronicus and his Accomplices; but let every ſacred Temple and Sanctuary be ſhut againſt them. The Devil had no Part in Paradiſe; though he privily creep in, he is driven out again. I therefore admoniſh both private Men and Magiſtrates, neither to receive them under their Roof, nor to their Table; and Prieſts more eſpecially, that they neither converſe with them living, nor attend their Funerals when

" when dead. And if any one deſpiſe this " Church, as being only a ſmall City, and " receive thoſe that are excommunicated by " her, as if there was no Neceſſity of obſerving " the Rules of a poor Church; let them know, " that they divide the Church by Schiſm, " which CHRIST would have to be One. " And whoever does ſo, whether he be Levite, " Presbyter, or Biſhop, ſhall be ranked in the " ſame Claſs with Andronicus: We will neither " give them the Right Hand of Fellowſhip, " nor eat at the ſame Table with them; and " much leſs will we communicate in the Sa- " cred Myſteries with them, who chuſe to " have Part with Andronicus and Thoas." I have recited this whole Form, not only becauſe it is curiouſly drawn up by an excellent Pen, but alſo becauſe it opens the Way into the farther Knowledge of the Diſcipline of the Church. For here we may obſerve Four Things, as Concomitants, or immediate Conſequents of this greater Excommunication. 1. That caſting out of the Church, is repreſented under the Image of caſting out of Paradiſe, and paralleled with it, in the Form of Excommunication. 2. That as ſoon as one was ſtruck out of the Liſt of his own Church, Notice was given thereof to the Neighbouring Churches, and ſometimes to the Churches over all the World, that all the Churches might confirm and ratify this Act of Diſcipline, by refuſing to admit ſuch an one to their Communion. Foraſmuch as that 3. He that was legally excommunicated in one Church, was by the Laws of Catholick Unity, and Rules of right Diſcipline, to be held excommunicate in all Churches, till he had given juſt and reaſonable Satisfaction: And for any Church to receive ſuch an one into her Communion, was ſo great an Offence, as to be thought to deſerve the ſame Puniſhment with the offending Criminal. 4. That when Men were thus excommunicated, they were not only excluded from Communion in Sacred Things, but ſhunned and avoided in Civil Converſation as dangerous and infected Perſons. All theſe Things are evident from this ſingle Paſſage of Syneſius; but becauſe the Knowledge of the Manner of exerciſing Eccleſiaſtical Diſcipline, depends upon the Truth of them, it will not be amiſs a little more diſtinctly to explain and confirm them. Firſt then, I obſerve, That caſting out of the Church, is here repreſented under the Image of Paradiſe, and paralleled with it in the Form of Excommunication. And ſo it is ſaid by St. Jerom [z], That Sinners tranſgreſs the Covenant of GOD in the Church, as Adam did in Paradiſe: And ſhew themſelves Followers of their firſt Father, that they may be caſt out of the Church as he was out of Paradiſe. In like manner St. Auſtin, ſpeaking of Adam's Expulſion out of Paradiſe [a], ſays, It was a ſort of Excommunication: As now in our Paradiſe, that is, the Church, Men by Eccleſiaſtical Diſcipline are removed from the viſible Sacraments of the Altar. And Epiphanius [b] notes the ſame Cuſtom, as more nicely obſerved by the Sect of the Adamians: For if any one was taken in a Crime, they would not ſuffer him to come into their Aſſembly, but called him Adam, the Eater of the forbidden Fruit, and adjudged him to be expelled, as out of Paradiſe, that is, their Church. So that this was a common Form or Phraſe both in the Diſcipline of Hereticks and the Church.

SECT. 9. This Sort of Excommunication was commonly notified to all other Churches.

SECONDLY, I obſerve, that as ſoon as any one was in this manner excommunicated by any Church, Notice thereof was commonly given to other Churches, and ſometimes by Circular Letters to all eminent Churches over all the World, that all Churches might confirm and ratify this Act of Diſcipline, by refuſing to admit ſuch an one to their Communion. To this Purpoſe we find a Canon in the firſt Council of Toledo [c], That if any powerful Man oppreſs and ſpoil a Clerk, or a poor Man, or one of a religious Life, and a Biſhop ſummon him before him, to have a Tryal, and he refuſe to obey the Summons; in that Caſe he ſhall give Notice by Letter to all the Biſhops of the Province, and to as many as poſſibly he can, that ſuch an one be held excommunicate, till he obediently ſubmits, and makes Reſtitution. This was uſually moſt punctually obſerved in the Caſe of Hereticks and their Condemnation. For ſo the Hiſtorians [d] tell us, when Alexander Biſhop of Alexandria had depoſed and anathematized Arius, he ſent his Circular Letters to all Churches, giving an account of his Proceedings againſt him. And this was the conſtant Practice in all Councils, to ſend about their Synodical Letters, to ſignify what Hereticks they condemned, that all Churches might be apprized of their Errors, and refuſe their Communion to the Authors of them. And thus every Biſhop was careful to inform his Brethren and neighbouring Churches, whenever he had Occaſion to uſe this ſevere Puniſhment againſt any Offender. Thus St. Auſtin having depoſed Victorinus an aged Subdeacon, and expelled him the Church, becauſe he

he was found hypocritically in private to have propagated the abominable Hereſy of the Manichees, writes to Deuterius one of his Fellow-Biſhops, and tells him, He did not think it ſufficient [e] to have uſed this congruous Eccleſiaſtical Severity againſt him, unleſs he alſo gave Intimation of what he had done againſt him, that every one being well apprized, might know how to be aware of him.

SECT. 10. After which he that was excommunicated in one Church, was held excommunicate in all Churches.

THEN Thirdly, Whoever, was thus excommunicated in one Church, was held excommunicate in all Churches. For ſuch was the perfect Harmony and Agreement of the Catholick Church, that every Church was ready to ratify and confirm all Acts of Diſcipline exerciſed upon Delinquents in any other Church: So that he who was legally excommunicated in one Church, was by the Laws of Catholick Unity and Rules of right Diſcipline held excommunicate in all Churches; and no Church could or would receive him into Communion, before he had given Satisfaction to the Church whereof he was a Member: And to do otherwiſe, was to incurr the ſame Penalty that was inflicted upon the offending Party. I have given ſome Evidence of this before [*], in ſpeaking of the Unity of the Church: And here I ſhall a little farther confirm it, to ſhew the Exactneſs of the Ancient Church in the Adminiſtration of Diſcipline, both from her Laws and Practice. Her Laws are altogether uniform upon this Point, and run univerſally in this Tenour, That no Perſon excommunicated in one Church, ſhould be received in another, except it were by the Authority of a legal Synod, to which there lay a juſt Appeal, and which was allowed to judge in the Caſe. There are two Canons among thoſe called Apoſtolical to this Purpoſe. If any Presbyter or Deacon is ſuſpended from Communion by his Biſhop [f], he ſhall not be received by any other but the Biſhop that ſuſpended him, except in Caſe the Biſhop chance to die that ſuſpended him. And again [g], If any Clergyman or Layman, who is caſt out of the Church, be received in another City without Commendatory Letters, both he that received him, and he that is ſo received, ſhall be caſt out of Communion. The Council of Nice is ſuppoſed to refer to theſe ancient Canons, when it ſays [h], The Rule ſhall ſtand good according to the Canon, which ſays, "He "that is caſt out by one Biſhop, ſhall not be "received by another: But Synods ſhall be "held twice a Year to examine, Whether any "one Perſon was excommunicated unjuſtly by "the haſty Paſſion, or Contention, or any "ſuch irregular Commotion of his Biſhop; "and if it appear that he was excommuni-"cated with Reaſon, he ſhall be held excom-"municate by all other Biſhops, till the Sy-"nod think fit to ſhew him Favour." The Council of Antioch [i] not long after renewed this Canon, "If any one is excommunicated "by his own Biſhop, he ſhall not be received "by any other but the Biſhop that excommu-"nicated him, unleſs upon Appeal to the Sy-"nod he give Satisfaction, and receive another "Sentence from the Synod." The Learned Reader may find many other Canons to the ſame Purpoſe in the Councils of Eliberis [k], and Sardica [l], and Milevis [m], and the firſt of Arles [n], and Turin [o], and Saragoſa [p], which all run in the ſame Tenour, and need not here be repeated. It was by this Rule and Principle that Cornelius refuſed to admit Feliciſſimus to Communion at Rome [q], becauſe he had been excommunicated by Cyprian at Carthage. And for the ſame Reaſon Marcion, as has been noted before, could find no Reception among the Roman-Clergy, becauſe he was excommunicated by his own Father, and had given no Satisfaction to him, as Epiphanius [r] relates the Story. St. Auſtin likewiſe writing to one Quintian [s], who lay under the Cenſure of his Biſhop, tells him, That if he came to him, not communicating with his own Biſhop, he could not be received to Communion with him. Nay, he had ſuch a Regard for this Rule of Diſcipline, that if a Donatiſt, that was under Cenſure among his own Biſhops, pretended to come over to the Catholick Church [t], he would not receive him without firſt obliging him to do the ſame Penance that he ſhould have done, had he ſtayed among them. And he greatly complains of the Donatiſt Biſhops, as diſſolving all the Bonds of Diſcipline, whilſt they encouraged the greateſt Criminals, who were under Diſcipline for their ill Lives in the Church, to come over to them, where they might eſcape doing Penance, under Pretence of receiving a new Baptiſm: And then, as if they were renewed and ſanctified (though

Ab eis vero conſidera, quæſo te, quam execrabiliter fiat, ut quos male viventes Eccleſiaſtica Diſciplina corripimus, perſuadeatur eis ut ad alteram Lavacrum veniant—deinde quaſi renovati & quaſi ſanctificati, Diſciplinæ, quam ferre non potuerunt, deteriores facti ſub ſpecie novæ gratiæ, ſacrilegio novi furoris inſultent.

(though they were really made worſe under Pretence of new Grace) they could inſult the Diſcipline of the Church, from which they fled, to the higheſt Degree of ſacrilegious Madneſs. He gives an Inſtance in one, who being uſed to beat his Mother, and threatning to kill her, was in Danger of falling under the Diſcipline of the Church for theſe his inſolent and unnatural Cruelties; to avoid this he goes over to the Donatiſts, who without any more ado [u] rebaptize him in his Madneſs, and put him on the White Garment or Albe of Baptiſm, whilſt he was fuming and thirſting after his Mother's Blood. So this Man, who was meditating Murder againſt his own Mother, was by this Means advanced to an eminent and conſpicuous Place within the Chancel, and ſet as a ſanctified Creature before the Eyes of all, who could not look upon him but with Sighing and Mourning. The Truth is, this was a very ſcandalous Practice in the Donatiſts, done purely to ſtrengthen their Party: And nothing has done more Miſchief to the Church, or more enervated the Power of the Eccleſiaſtical Diſcipline, than the receiving of ſcandalous Sinners, who fly from Juſtice and the Cenſures of the Church, into other Communions, and their protecting and even careſſing them as Saints, who ought to have been puniſhed as the greateſt Criminals. Upon this Account the Church went as far as poſſibly ſhe could, in making ſevere Laws, to diſcourage this Practice; inflicting the ſame Penalty upon any one that received an excommunicate Perſon into publick or private Communion, as the excommunicated Perſon himſelf was liable to. Thus in the Council of Antioch [x] one Canon ſays, "If any Biſhop, Presbyter "or Deacon communicate with an excommu- "nicated Perſon, he himſelf ſhall be excom- "municated, as one that confounds the Or- "der of the Church." Another [y], "If any "Biſhop receives a Presbyter or Deacon, de- "poſed for Contumacy by his own Biſhop, "he ſhall be cenſured by a Synod, as one "that diſſolves the Laws of the Church." And a third Canon ſays [z], "If any Biſhop "depoſed by a Synod, or Presbyter or Dea- "con depoſed by their own Biſhop, preſume "to officiate in any Part of Divine-Service; "they ſhall not only be uncapable of being "reſtored, but all that communicate with "them ſhall be caſt out of the Church; eſpe- "cially if they do ſo, after they know that "Sentence was pronounced againſt them." In like manner the firſt Council of Orange, if any Biſhop preſume to communicate [a] with one that is excommunicate, knowing him to be ſo, without his being reconciled to the Biſhop by whom he was excommunicated, he ſhall be treated as a guilty Perſon. The Second Council of Carthage [b] ſays more expreſsly, That a Biſhop, Presbyter or Deacon, who receives thoſe into Communion, who were deſervedly caſt out of the Church for their Crimes, ſhall be held guilty of the ſame Crimes with them. The Fourth Council of Carthage [c] declares univerſally, Whoever he be, Clergyman or Layman, that communicates with an excommunicate Perſon, ſhall himſelf be excommunicated. St. Baſil's Words are very remarkable [d] to an Offender whom he threatned to excommunicate, Thou ſhalt be Anathema to all the People, and whoever receives thee, ſhall be excommunicate in all Churches. The like may be read in the Apoſtolical Canons [e], to which the ancient Councils ſo often refer as the ſtanding Rules of Diſcipline, "If any Clergyman or Layman, "who is caſt out of the Church, be received "in another City without Commendatory Let- "ters, both he that receives him, and he that "is ſo received, ſhall be caſt out of Commu- "nion." Which anſwers an Objection that might be raiſed in the Caſe, viz. What if a Biſhop knew not by any formal Intimation that ſuch or ſuch a Perſon was excommunicate, and ſo through Ignorance received him? To this it is here anſwered, That this did not excuſe him, becauſe he ought by the Rule of Catholick Commerce to receive no Stranger to Communion, that did not bring Commendatory Letters, or Teſtimonials, from his own Biſhop, that he was in the Communion of the Church. If any Travelled without theſe, he was to be ſuſpected as an excommunicated Perſon, and accordingly treated as one under Cenſure. But what if a Perſon was unjuſtly excommunicated by his own Biſhop? Might not another Biſhop do him Juſtice, by relaxing his unlawful Bonds, and admit him to Communion? I anſwer, No: For in this Caſe the Church provided another more proper Remedy, That every Man ſhould have the Liberty to appeal from the Sentence of his own Biſhop to a Provincial Synod, which was by the Canons of Nice [f] and others appointed to be held Twice a Year for this very very Purpoſe, That if any one was aggrieved by the Cenſure of his own Biſhop, he might have his Cauſe heard over again in a Provincial Synod; from which there lay no farther Appeal to any ſingle Biſhop, no not even to the Biſhop of Rome, who moſt pretended to it; but all ſuch Cauſes were to be heard and determined in the Province where they aroſe, to obviate Fraud and ſurreptitious Communion, and put an End to all Strife and Contention, as has been ſhewed more fully in the foregoing Chapter, n. 14. out of the Debate between the Biſhops of Rome and the African Churches. Theſe were the Rules then generally obſerved throughout the whole Catholick Church, with Reſpect to the Rejection of excommunicate Perſons from the Communion of all Churches. And by theſe Rules the Unity of the Catholick Church was duly maintained, and Diſcipline for the moſt Part kept up in its true Vigour and Glory.

SECT. 11. And avoided alſo in Civil Commerce and outward Converſation: And allowed no Memorial after Death.

BUT Fourthly, Syneſius in the forementioned Form of Excommunication, not only ſpeaks of denying Men Communion in ſacred Things, but alſo in Civil Commerce and external Converſation: No one was to receive excommunicated Perſons into their Houſes, nor eat at the ſame Table with them; they were not to converſe with them familiarly, whilſt Living; nor perform the Funeral Obſequies for them, when Dead, after the ſolemn Rites and Manners that were uſed toward other Chriſtians. Theſe Directions were drawn up upon the Model of thoſe Rules of the Apoſtles, which forbad Chriſtians to give any Countenance to notorious Offenders, continuing impenitent, even in Ordinary Converſation. As that of St. Paul, 1 Cor. v. 11. I have written unto you not to keep Company, if any Man that is called a Brother, be a Fornicator, or Covetous, or an Idolater, or a Railer, or a Drunkard, or an Extortioner, with ſuch an one no not to eat. And again, Rom. xvi. 17. Mark them which cauſe Diviſions and Offences, contrary to the Doctrine which ye have learned, and avoid them. And 2 Theſſ. iii. 14. If any Man obey not our word by this Epiſtle, note that Man, and have no Company with him, that he may be aſhamed. And that of St. John, If there come any unto you, and bring not this Doctrine, receive him not into your Houſe, neither bid him, God ſpeed. For he that biddeth him God ſpeed, is Partaker of his evil Deeds, 2 John 10, 11. In Conformity to theſe Rules, and the Reaſons here aſſigned for the Obſervation of them, the Ancients made ſtrict Laws to forbid all familiar Intercourſe with excommunicated Perſons in Ordinary Converſation, unleſs ſome abſolute Neceſſity, or ſome greater and more obliging moral Conſideration required them to do otherwiſe. The firſt Council of Toledo has four or five Canons to this Purpoſe [g]. It will be ſufficient to recite the firſt of them, which is in theſe Words: "If "any Layman is excommunicated, let no "Clerk or religious Perſon come near him "or his Houſe. In like manner if a Clergy-"man is excommunicated, let the Clergy a-"void him. And if any is found to converſe "or eat with him, let him alſo be excom-"municated". The ſecond Council of Arles [h] orders a ſuſpended Biſhop to be excluded not only from the Converſation and Table of the Clergy, but of all the People likewiſe. And many other ſuch Canons occur in the Councils of Vannes [i] and the firſt of Tours [k] and the firſt of Orleance [l], excluding excommunicate Perſons from all Entertainments of the Faithfull. The Apoſtolical Canons [m] forbid any one to communicate in Prayer ſo much as in a Private Houſe with excommunicate Perſons, under the ſame Penalty of Excommunication. And if they happened to die in profeſſed Rebellion and Contempt of Penance, then they were treated as all other Contemners and Deſpiſers of holy Ordinances were, by being denied the Honour and Benefit of Chriſtian Burial. No Solemnity of Pſalmody or Prayers was uſed at their Funeral; nor were they ever to be mentioned among the Faithfull out of the Diptychs, or holy Books of the Church, according to Cuſtom in the Prayers at the Altar. This is evident, not only from what is ſaid by Syneſius, but from the whole Tenour of Eccleſiaſtical Diſcipline; which excludes all that die in profeſſed Rebellion and Contempt, from the Privilege of Chriſtian Burial, ſuch as Catechumens dying in wilful Neglect of Baptiſm, and thoſe that laid violent Hands upon themſelves, and ſuch like, as all dying in Impenitency and a deſperate Condition [n]. And it is farther evident from that very Exception, which we have obſerved before [*] to be made in Favour of ſuch humble Penitents, as modeſtly ſubmitted to the Diſcipline of the Church, and were labouring earneſtly to obtain a Re-admiſſion, but were ſnatched away by ſudden Death, before they could obtain the Formality of an Abſolution: In this Caſe, as I ſhewed, the Canons [o] allowed their Oblations to be received, and their Funeral neral Obſequies to be celebrated after the uſual Solemnity and Manner of the Church: Which Exception ſuppoſes, that all the reſt, who died Refractory and Impenitent, were wholly denied theſe Privileges, as a juſt Conſequence of their Cenſures. Not to mention now the Cuſtom of eraſing the Names of excommunicate Perſons out of the Diptychs, or ſacred Regiſters of the Church, which was the immediate Effect of Excommunication, and excluded them from all the Privileges of any future Memorial [p] or Commemoration, till they were reſtored again. I will not ſtand now to diſpute, whether this Cuſtom took its Original from the Practice of the Jewiſh Synagogue; or whether our Saviour alluded to that Practice, as ſome Learned Men [q] think, when he ſaid to his Diſciples, Luke vi. 22. Bleſſed are ye, when they ſhall ſeparate, or excommunicate, you out of the Synagogue, and caſt out, or expunge, your Names out of the Holy Books: Certain it is, that as this eraſing or expunging the Names of excommunicate Perſons out of the Diptychs was uſed in the Chriſtian Church, it always implied the Denial of Communion to them even after Death: They could neither have a Chriſtian Burial, nor a Chriſtian Commemoration, among thoſe that were departed in the true Faith and Unity of the Church; but were excluded, both Living and Dying, from all Society both Sacred and Civil, as the immediate Effect and Conſequence either of a voluntary and choſen, or a judicial and penal Excommunication.

FOR to ſhew that theſe were not mere empty and ineffective Laws, we may often obſerve them in a remarkable Manner put in Practice. Irenæus [r] tells us from thoſe who had it from the Mouth of Polycarp, that when he once occaſionally accompanied St. John into a Bath at Epheſus, and they there found Cerinthus the Heretick, St. John immediately cried out to Polycarp, Let us fly hence, leſt the Bath ſhould fall, in which Cerinthus the Enemy of Truth is. Euſebius and Theodoret [s] both mention the ſame Story out of Irenæus; and Epiphanius alſo [t] relates it at large, only with this Difference, that it was Ebion the Heretick, to whom by the Guidance of the Spirit he ſhewed this Averſion, for a Memorial and Example to future Ages. Whence Baronius conjectures [u], both thoſe Hereticks might be preſent, and that the Saying had equal Relation to them both. Irenæus in the ſame Place adds this farther concerning Polycarp, that happening once to meet Marcion the Heretick, and Marcion asking him whether he did not know him, he replied, Yes, I know thee to be the Firſt-born of Satan. So cautious, ſays Irenæus, were the Apoſtles and their Diſciples, not to communicate ſo much as in word, μὴ μεχρὶ λόγου κοινωνεῖν, with the Perverters of Truth, according to that of St. Paul, A Man that is an Heretick after the firſt and ſecond Admonition reject, knowing that ſuch an one is ſubverted, and ſinneth, being condemned of himſelf. In like mannner St. Ambroſe obſerves of a certain Chriſtian Judge, in the Time of Julian, that having condemned one of his Brethren for demoliſhing an Altar, no one would vouchſafe [x] to aſſociate with him, no one would ſpeak to him or ſalute him. And St. Baſil writing to Athanaſius concerning a certain Governour of Libya (whom Athanaſius had excommunicated for his Immoralities, and according to Cuſtom had given Notice of it to Baſil) tells him, they would all avoid him, and have no Communion with him in Fire, or Water, or Houſe, that is, in the common ways of Ordinary Converſation. A great many other Inſtances of the like Kind might be given, but I ſhall only add that of Monicha St. Auſtin's Mother toward her Son, whilſt he continued a Manichee. St. Auſtin himſelf tells us [z], That ſhe ſo deteſted the Blaſphemies of his Error, and had ſuch an Averſion to him upon the Account of them, that ſhe would not admit him to eat with her at the ſame Table in her own Houſe. This was according to the Diſcipline then practiſed in the Church, to deny Sinners not only Communion in ſacred Things, but alſo in the Civil Commerce of Ordinary Converſation.

SECT. 12. The Grounds and Reaſons of this Practice.

NOW all this was done for very wiſe Ends and Reaſons of Chriſtian Prudence and Charity. 1. To make Sinners aſhamed, and by that ſhame to bring them to Repentance. This is the Reaſon given by the Apoſtle, Note that Man, and have no Company with him, that he may be aſhamed. 2. To terrify others by their Example. Both theſe Reaſons are aſſigned by the Canon of the Council of Tours, which orders relapſing Sinners to be excluded both from the Communion of the Church [a] and the Entertainments of the Faithful, that the Shame and Confuſion ariſing from ſuch Treatment might bring them to Compunction, and terrify others by their Example. 3. A Third Reaſon was the Fear of partaking in other Mens Sins; if by their Society they ſeemed to ſhew any Countenance to them, it would be a hardning them them in their Iniquity, and involve ſuch as contributed thereto, in the ſame Guilt with the Criminals themſelves. Therefore, ſays St. Cyprian [b], we ought to withdraw from Sinners, and even fly from them, leſt if a Man join himſelf to thoſe that walk diſorderly, and go in the Paths of Error and Wickedneſs, he himſelf alſo be held in the Guilt of the ſame Crimes. For this Reaſon, writing to the People of Leon and Aſtorga in Spain, (where two Biſhops, Baſilides and Martial, had been depoſed for lapſing into Idolatry, who afterwards made an Atempt to draw in the People to accept them again for their Biſhops, after others had regularly by the Diſcipline of the Church been ordained in their Room) he tells them, they ſhould not flatter themſelves, as if they were free [c] from partaking in Sin, if they communicated with a ſinful Biſhop, and gave their Conſent to the unlawful and unjuſt Eſtabliſhment of him in his Biſhoprick, ſince the Divine Judgment had threatned and ſaid by the Prophet Hoſea, Their Sacrifices ſhall be unto them as the Bread of Mourners: All that eat thereof, ſhall be polluted: Teaching and ſhewing us, that all Men are bound over unto Sin, who are defiled with the Sacrifice of a prophane and unjuſt Prieſt. Which we find alſo to be declared in the Book of Numbers, when Korah, Dathan and Abiram aſſumed to themſelves the Power of offering Sacrifice in Oppoſition to Aaron the Prieſt. There the LORD commanded the People by Moſes to ſeparate themſelves from them, leſt if they were joined with thoſe wicked Men, they ſhould be ſmitten in their Wickedneſs. Depart, ſays he, from the Tents of theſe hardned Men, and touch nothing of theirs, leſt ye be conſumed in all their Sins. 4. A Fourth Reaſon was, to avoid Contagion and Infection. For converſing with prophane Men is endangering a Man's own Vertue. Evil Communications corrupt good Manners. An infected Member often deſtroys the whole Body. Therefore as vile and notorious Sinners were for this Reaſon cut off from the Body of the Church: So for the ſame Reaſon all Men were afterwards to avoid their Society, for fear the Poiſon of their infamous Converſation ſhould infect their Morals, and diffuſe itſelf into their Minds by any artful Conveyance of cunning Craftineſs, or the natural Influence of bad Example. For wicked Men ſpeak with their Feet, and teach with their Fingers, as the Wiſe Man elegantly words it: Their Actions, as well as their Diſcourſes, are of a malignant Influence, and are apt to leave ill Tinctures and Impreſſions upon the Minds of others, ſo that a Man cannot ordinarily converſe with them without Danger of Infection. Therefore, ſays Cyprian, avoid ſuch Men, and drive [d] away their pernicious Communications both from your Converſation and your Ears, as the Contagion of Death. For thus it is written, Hedge about thy Ears with Thorns, and hearken not to an evil Tongue. And again, Evil Communications corrupt good Manners. Our LORD teaches and admoniſhes us to withdraw from ſuch, ſaying, They are blind Leaders of the Blind: And if the Blind, lead the Blind, they ſhall both fall into the Ditch. But fifthly, admitting ſome could converſe with ſuch without Danger to themſelves, they could not without manifeſt Danger to others, who are weak and apt to be emboldned to follow the Example of the ſtrong to their apparent Ruin and Deſtruction. For theſe and the like Reaſons, whenever the Church caſt any notorious Offenders wholly out of her Communion, ſhe prohibited all others from converſing with them, both in Kindneſs to the Sinners and to the Righteous, leſt the one ſhould be hardened in their Impenitency, and the other corrupted by the ſpreading Contagion and Infection.

SECT. 13. No Donations or Oblations allowed to be received from excommunicate Perſons.

IT is farther obſervable, That as an Indication of the Church's Abhorrence of excommunicate Perſons, ſhe allowed no Gifts or Oblations to be received from them; becauſe that might have been interpreted retaining them ſtill in ſome meaſure in her Communion, and involving herſelf in the Guilt of filthy Lucre. Thefore ſhe never admitted any one to make Oblations but ſuch as were in full Communion with her, and might lawfully partake of the Sacrifice of the Altar, as I have had Occaſion to ſhew more fully [*] in another Place. Here I only note it again as a Thing moſt remarkable, That ſhe had ſuch an Averſion to any Thing that appertained to them, that ſhe would not ſo much as retain thoſe Gifts, which any ſuch Perſons had freely offered, whilſt they were in Communion with her. This we learn from Tertullian, who ſpeaking of the Expulſion of Valentinus and Marcion for their Hereſies at Rome, ſays, They were caſt out once and again [e], and particularly Marcion with his two hundred Seſtertia, which he had brought into the Church.

SECT. 14. No one to marry with excommunicate Hereticks, or receive their Eulogiæ, or read their Books; but burn them.

THERE are ſeveral other Inſtances of their Averſion to Hereticks in particular, when once the Cenſures of the Church were paſſed upon them. The Council of Laodicea not only forbids all Men to frequent their Cemeteries and [f] Meetings held at the Monuments of their pretended Martyrs, or any where to pray with them; but alſo to receive any Preſents under the Name of Eulogiæ from them [g]; becauſe this was in ſome ſort to communicate with them; theſe Eulogiæ, or ſanctified Loaves, being one Way of teſtifying Mens Communion one with another. The ſame Council alſo forbids all Members of the Church to enter into Communion with Hereticks [h] by giving their Sons or Daughters in Marriage to them; neither are they allowed to take the Sons or Daughters of Hereticks in Marriage to themſelves, unleſs they promiſe to become [i] Chriſtians. Where we may obſerve alſo, That they did not allow Hereticks, after they had broken the Faith and Communion of the Church, abſolutely ſpeaking, ſo much as the Name of Chriſtians. Other Laws ſtrictly prohibit Men to read the Books of Hereticks, as imagining that the Poyſon of their Errors was in a great Meaſure diſperſed and conveyed by them. Socrates [k] has recorded a Letter of Conſtantine the Great, wherein he orders the Arians to be branded and ſtigmatized with the Name of Porphyrians, and their Books to be burnt, and makes it Death for any one to conceal them and ſave them from the Flames. And there are Two Laws now extant in the Theodoſian Code, wherein the very ſame Things are enjoyned under very ſevere Penalties. The firſt is a Law made by Arcadius and Honorius againſt the Eunomians, a noted Branch of the Arian Hereſy, wherein their Books [l] are ordered to be ſought after with a very diligent Search, and to be burnt in the Sight of the Judges. And if any one was convicted of fraudulent hiding, and not diſcovering them, he ſhould be puniſhed with Death, as a Retainer and Concealer of pernicious and magical Books, containing the Inſtitutions of all manner of Wickedneſs. The other Law was made by Theodoſius Junior againſt the Neſtorians, where he refers to the former Law of Conſtantine, and orders the Followers of Neſtorius to be called Simonians, for their imitating the portentous Superſtitions of Simon Magus, as Conſtantine had appointed the Arians to be called Porphyrians, from Porphyry the Heathen. Then he orders their Books, written againſt the Catholick Faith and the Council of Epheſus, to be publickly burnt [m], forbidding any one to have, read, or tranſcribe them, under Pain of Confiſcation. This Cuſtom of burning heretical Books, is confirmed by many other Laws, of which more hereafter, when we come to ſpeak of the Puniſhment of Hereticks in particular. Here I obſerve, That the Prohibition of Reading or Retaining them was ſo limitted by the Church, as to allow Biſhops to read them, when Time and Neceſſity [n] ſo required, in order to confute them. For the Fourth Council of Carthage, which forbids them univerſally the Reading of Heathen Authors, allows the Reading of heretical Books, with this Limitation and Reſtriction. And therefore the retaining them in this Caſe, was not to be interpreted that fraudulent Retaining and Concealment, which the Imperial Laws condemned under the Penalties of Confiſcation and Death. Gothofred obſerves one Thing farther upon the Uſefulneſs and Effect of theſe Laws, which is fit to be remarked [o], That the Terror of them made Hereticks very cautious how they diſperſed their Books, and others as cautious how they retained or concealed them: Inſomuch, that when St. Baſil was about to confute the firſt Book of Eunomius, he had an hard Matter to compaſs it, as Photius [p] reports, the Eunomians were ſo induſtrious in Concealing it. And when Eunomius had written his latter Books in Anſwer to Baſil, he durſt not publiſh them, but only among his Confederates, in St. Baſil's Life-time, for Fear of Baſil; and after his Death [q], durſt only truſt them in the Hands of his Friends, for Fear of the Penalties which the Laws had laid upon them, though Philoſtorgius [r], the Arian Hiſtorian makes bold, after his manner, to give a different Relation of it.

SECT. 15. What meant by Delivering unto Satan.

THERE are two or three Things more relating to the Manner, and Form, and Effects of Excommunication, which have ſomething of Difficulty in them, and therefore it will be proper to give them a little Explication here. The firſt Difficulty ariſes from the Apoſtle's Order given to the Corinthians, how to proceed againſt the Inceſtuous

Inceſtuous Perſon, who had married his Father's Wife, 1 Cor. v. 5. where he enjoyns them in the Name, and with the Power of the Lord JESUS CHRIST, to deliver ſuch an one unto Satan, for the Deſtruction of the Fleſh, that the Spirit may be ſaved in the Day of the Lord Jeſus. So again, 1 Tim. i. 20. ſpeaking of Hymenæus and Philetus, he ſays, Whom I have delivered unto Satan, that they may learn not to blaſpheme. There are two famous Expoſitions of theſe Paſſages, Biſhop Beveridge [s] and Eſtius [t], after Balſaman and Zonoras [u], with many other modern Interpreters, whom Eſtius mentions, think that Delivering unto Satan, is but another Expreſſion for Excommunication, and the ſpiritual Effects conſequent to it, that is, the Puniſhment of the Soul, and not of the Body. For when Men are caſt out of the Society of the Faithful, which is the Church of CHRIST, they are thereby deprived of all the Benefits that are proper and peculiar to that Society; as the Common Prayers of the Church, the publick Uſe of the Word or Doctrine, the Participation of the Sacrament, the Paſtoral Care of thoſe that preſide over them, and the ſpecial Grace of Divine Protection; and ſo remain expoſed to the Tyranny and Incurſions of Satan, whoſe Kingdom is without the Church. And thus far they allow, that every excommunicated Perſon was delivered unto Satan, but not for any corporal Vexation or Puniſhment to be inflicted on him. Others are of Opinion, That beſides this ſpiritual Puniſhment naturally conſequent to Excommunication, there was in the Apoſtles Days another Conſequent of it, which was corporal Power and Poſſeſſion, or the Infliction of bodily Vexations and Torments by the Miniſtry of Satan on thoſe who were delivered unto him. Dr. Hammond, and Grotius, and Lightfoot, are the great Supporters of this Opinion among the Moderns, and they have almoſt the general Concurrence of the ancient Interpreters on their Side; which Eſtius does not much deny, though he choſe to follow Peter Lombard and Aquinas, and the ordinary Gloſs againſt them. He owns St. Chryſoſtom and the Greeks were wholly of this Opinion; and among the Latins, St. Ambroſe and Pacian; and St. Auſtin alſo, though not very poſitive, he thinks, in his Aſſertion. But he is miſtaken; for St. Auſtin was clearly of this Opinion. He does not ſay, indeed, it was Death, which the Apoſtle inflicted upon the Corinthian, as St. Peter did upon Ananias and Sapphira; but he ſays expreſsly, it was ſome Puniſhment [x] inflicted on him by the Miniſtry of Satan. Which he diſtinguiſhes from a common Excommunication, by the Name of Flagellum Domini, the Scourge of the LORD; which, he ſays, the Apoſtle uſed upon ſome ſpecial Occaſions, when there was no Way to cure an epidemical Diſeaſe, or correct a ſingle Sinner, buoyed up and favoured by the Multitude [y], but only by interceding with GOD to take the Matter into his own Hand, and uſe the ſevere Mercy of his own Divine Diſcipline upon them, when the Contagion of Sin had invaded a Multitude; in which Caſe, it were not only in vain to adviſe Men to ſeparate from Sinners, but pernicious and ſacrilegious; becauſe ſuch Counſels in ſuch a State of Affairs would be thought impious and proud, and more tend to diſturb good Men that were weak, than correct the Stubborneſs and Animoſity of the Evil. In this Senſe he there alſo in like manner interprets two other Paſſages of the Apoſtle, 2 Cor. xii. 21. Leſt when I come again, my God will humble me among you, and I ſhall bewail many that have ſinned already, and have not repented of the Uncleanneſs and Laciviouſneſs, and Fornication which they have committed. And 2 Cor. xiii. 1, 2. This is the third time I am coming to you: In the Mouth of Two or Three Witneſſes ſhall every Word be eſtabliſhed. I foretold you before, and foretell you as if I were preſent the ſecond time, and being abſent, I now write to them which heretofore have ſinned, and to all other, that if I come again, I will not ſpare; ſince ye ſeek a Proof of Chriſt ſpeaking in me. Here, he ſays, the Apoſtle does not threaten them with that Puniſhment, which ſhould make others abſtain from their Society, but by his Prayers and Tears to turn them over [z] to the Divine Scourge to correct them; and that this was the Power of CHRIST ſpeaking in him. Where nothing can be plainer, than that St. Auſtin diſtinguiſhes this as an Extraordinary Power from the Ordinary Power of Excommunication, which the Apoſtle had in Reſerve for ſuch difficult Caſes, where the Ordinary Power of Excommunication, by reaſon of the Multitude or Confederacy of Sinners, would not by its own bare Virtue prove effectual. So that, according to him, this Power of Delivering unto Satan, was ſomething ſuperior to that Ordinary Power of caſting Men out of the Church and the Society of the Faithful. St. Ambroſe was of the ſame Mind with St. Auſtin: For explaining how the inceſtuous Man was puniſhed, he ſays, As the LORD gave the Devil no Power

Power over the Soul of holy Job, but only permitted him to afflict his Body; ſo this Man [a] was delivered to Satan. And St. Jerom ſays [b], The Apoſtle commanded him to be put under Penance for the Deſtruction and Vexation of the Fleſh by Faſting and Sickneſs, that his Spirit might be ſaved. And ſo Pacinus [c] by the Deſtruction of the Fleſh, underſtands Tribulation and Infirmities of the Body. The Author of the Short Notes [d] under the Name of St. Jerom, ſays the ſame. So likewiſe Caſſian [e] to whom Eſtius himſelf adds Primaſius and Haimo. St. Chryſoſtom among the Greeks, gives the ſame Senſe of the Apoſtle's Words. He ſays, The Apoſtle delivered the Corinthian Offender to Satan, as to a Schoolmaſter, for the Deſtruction of the Fleſh. As it happened to holy Job, but not for the ſame Cauſe: For there it was done to make his Crown of Glory more illuſtrious; but here the Man only gains Remiſſion of his Sins: That Satan might torture him with ſome cruel Ulcer, or other Diſeaſe. And he obſerves how the Apoſtle ſays elſewhere, that ſuch Diſeaſes were ſometimes inflicted on Sinners immediately by the Hand of GOD: When we ſuffer ſuch Things, we are judged of the Lord: But here he delivers him to Satan, the more ſenſibly to touch and affect him [f]. He gives the ſame Expoſition of the Apoſtle's Words concerning Hymenæus and Philetus, Whom I have delivered unto Satan, that they may learn not to blaſpheme. As Executioners, ſays he, though they be very wicked themſelves, are made Inſtruments [g] of chaſtizing others: So here it is with the wicked Devils. Job was thus delivered to Satan, not for his Sins, but to obtain the greater Glory. He adds, That GOD often did this immediately by his own Power, without the Intervention of any humane Miniſtry. For many times the Prieſts know not who are Sinners, or who are unworthy Partakers of the holy Myſteries: Therefore GOD takes the Judgment into his own Hands, and delivers them unto Satan. For when Diſeaſes or Misfortune, or Sorrows, or Calamities, or any thing of the like kind befalls Men, it is for this Reaſon, as Paul alſo intimates, ſaying, For this Cauſe many are ſick and weak among you, and many ſleep. Theodoret follows Chryſoſtom in his Expoſition: For ſpeaking of Hymenæus and Alexander, he ſays, The Apoſtle delivered them unto Satan, as to a cruel Executioner [h]; for being ſeparated from the Body of the Church, and left deſtitute of Divine Grace, they were cruelly tormented by the Adverſary, falling into Diſeaſes, and Sufferings, and other Evils and Calamities, which the Devil is wont to inflict upon Men. Now this being the general Senſe of the Ancients, both Greek and Latin, That this was an extraordinary Apoſtolical Power, diſtinct from the ordinary Power of Excommunication; we do not find that they ordinarily made uſe of this Phraſe, Delivering unto Satan, in any of the Forms of Excommunication; as being ſenſible, that the Church, after the Power of Miracles were ceaſed, had no Pretence to the Power of inflicting bodily Diſeaſes, as the Apoſtles had, upon excommunicate Perſons by the Miniſtry of Satan. Caſſian [i] indeed tells us, That he knew ſeveral holy Men, that were corporally delivered to Satan, and to great Infirmities for ſmall Offences. But that was by the immediate Hand of GOD, and his Chaſtiſements, and not by the Cenſures of the Church, which did not excommunicate holy Men, nor any others, for ſmall Offences. The Author of the Life of St. Ambroſe [k] ſays alſo, That he having to deal with a very flagitious Sinner, ſaid, He ought to be delivered to Satan for the Deſtruction of the Fleſh, that no one may dare to commit ſuch Things for the future. And he had no ſooner ſpoken the Word, but immediately, the very ſame Moment, an unclean Spirit ſeized the Man, and began to tear him. But this, if true, was a ſingular Inſtance of Apoſtolical and Miraculous Power yet remaining in St. Ambroſe, and there is ſcarce a parrellel Inſtance to be met with in all the Hiſtory of the Church. The Canons of old very rarely uſed this Phraſe. St. Baſil mentions it [l] once, and Gratian cites an Epiſtle of Pope Pelagius [m], where it is ſaid, By the Example of Apoſtolical Authority, we have learned to deliver unto Satan erring Spirits, which draw others into Error, that they may learn not to blaſpheme. But in theſe Places it ſeems to mean no more than Excommunication or Expulſion out of the Church, which is the ſpiritual delivering up to Satan, without any Regard to bodily Torture. For all Men are ſenſible, that ſince the Apoſtles Days there was no ſuch Power generally granted to the Miniſters of the Church. And for this Reaſon, Peter du Moulin [n] tells us, the Reformed Church of France. in their National Synod of Alez, at which he himſelf aſſiſted as Moderator, An. 1620, made an Order, That in Excommunication, no one ſhould uſe the Form of Delivering unto Satan. Neither ſhould the Cenſure of Anathema Maranatha be pronounced againſt any Man; foraſmuch as no one ought to uſe that Form, but he that knows the Secrets of Reprobation, and can tell by the Revelation of GOD's Spirit, whether the Perſon excommunicated has ſinned againſt the HOLY GHOST, or the Sin unto Death, that is, with ſuch Impenitency as will be final, and continue unto Death; for which, St. John ſays, no one ought to pray. The Prohibition here of the Uſe of the Form Anathema Maranatha, leads us to another Enquiry, What the Ancients underſtood by it; and whether they uſed it at any Time as a Form of Excommunication?

SECT. 16. What by Anathema Maranatha, And whether any ſuch Forms of Excommunication were in Uſe in the ancient Church.

ANATHEMA, is a Word that occurs frequently in the ancient Canons, and the Condemnation of all Hereticks. The Council of Gangra cloſes every one of its Canons with the Words, Ἀνάθεμα ἔστω, Let him be Anathema, or accurſed, that is, ſeparated from the Communion of the Church, and its Privileges, and from the Favour of GOD, without Repentance, that goes againſt the Tenour of the Thing there decreed. And this is the Stile of moſt other Councils, grounded upon that Form of St. Paul, If we, or an Angel from Heaven, preach any other Goſpel unto you, than that which we have preached unto you, let him be Anathema, or accurſed. But the adding of Maranatha to Anathema, is not ſo common. There is little ſaid of the Word itſelf among the Ancients, and [o] leſs of its Uſe in any Form of Excommunication. St. Chryſoſtom [p] ſays, it is an Hebrew Word, ſignifying, The Lord is come: And he particularly applies it to the Confuſion of thoſe who ſtill abuſed the Privileges of the Goſpel, notwithſtanding that the LORD was come among them. This Word, ſays he, ſpeaks Terrors to thoſe, who make their Members the Members of an Harlot, who offend their Brethren by eating Things offered to Idols, who name themſelves by the Name of Men, who deny the Reſurrection. The LORD of All is come down among us; and yet ye continue the ſame Men ye were before, and perſevere in your Sins. St. Jerom ſays [q], it was more a Syriack, than an Hebrew Word, though it had ſomething in it of both Languages, ſignifying, Our Lord is come. But he applies it againſt the Perverſeneſs of the Jews, and others who denied the Coming of CHRIST: Making this the Senſe of the Apoſtle, If any Man love not the Lord JESUS CHRIST, let him be Anathema: The Lord is come; wherefore it is ſuperfluous for any to contend with pertinacious Hatred againſt him, of the Truth of whoſe Coming there is ſuch apparent Demonſtration. The ſame Senſe is given by Hilary the Deacon, and Pelagius who wrote under the Names of St. Ambroſe [r] and St. Jerom [s]. And it is received by Eſtius and Dr. Lightfoot as the trueſt Interpretation. So that according to this Senſe, Maranatha could not be any Part of the Form of Excommunication, but only a Reaſon for pronouncing Anathema againſt thoſe who expreſſed their Hatred againſt CHRIST, by denying his Coming; either in Words, as the Jews did, who blaſphemed CHRIST, and called JESUS Anathema or accurſed; or elſe by wicked Works, as thoſe who lived prophanely under the Name of Chriſtian.

YET others of the Ancients interpret it of the Future Coming of CHRIST. As St. Auſtin who ſays Maranatha is a Syriack word, ſignifying, The Lord will [t] come. And he particularly applies it againſt the Arians, who could not be ſaid to love the LORD, becauſe they denied his Divine Nature. Dr. Hammond and many other Modern Interpreters [u] take Maranatha in this Senſe, The Lord will come to Judgment, as St. Jude ſays, The Lord cometh with Ten Thouſands of his Saints, to execute Judgment upon all the Ungodly. And they ſuppoſe this anſwered to the third and higheſt Degree of Excommunication among the Jews, called Shammatha. For they ſay, the Jews had theſe three Degrees of Excommunication, Niddui, Cherem and Shammatha. Niddui was the loweſt Degree of Excommunication, being only a Suſpenſion of the Sinner from the Synagogue and Society of his Brethren for Thirty Days, if he repented: If not, the Time was doubled to Sixty Days, and if he ſtill continued obſtinate, it was prolonged to Ninety Days. Then if he perſiſted impenitent ſtill, he was puniſhed with a more ſolemn Excommunication, called, Cherem, which anſwers to Anathema or Curſing, becauſe the Sinner was caſt out with ſolemn Execrations out of the Law of Moſes. The third Species, called Shammatha, was the moſt ſevere, when a Sinner, after all human Means had in vain been tried upon him, was conſigned ſigned over totally and finally to the Divine Judgment, as a deſperate and irrecoverable Sinner. The word Shammatha is upon this Account ſaid to ſignify either, There is Death: Or, There ſhall be Deſolation: Or, The Lord cometh. Which laſt Origination of the Word anſwers to Maranatha. Now from this Analogy and Similitude of the Name, theſe Learned Men ſuppoſe this Form of Excommunication was taken into the Chriſtian Church under the Name of Maranatha. But there is this grand Objection againſt the Thing, That Chryſoſtom and St. Jerom, and the reſt that have been mentioned, did not ſo underſtand it. Beſides, that there is no ſuch Word as Maranatha ever occurrs in any ancient Form of Excommunication. But ſtill the Queſtion may be put farther, Whether they had any ſuch Excommunication (be the Name or Form what it would) as was total, final and irrevocable; ſo as utterly to exclude Sinners from the Communion of the Church without hopes of Recovery; and ſo as to make the Church wholly ceaſe to pray for them, or rather pray that GOD would take them out of the World, and thereby deliver his Church from the Malice of their Attempts, and Power of their Seduction? This Queſtion conſiſts of ſeveral Parts, and therefore as it is propoſed, ſo it muſt be anſwered with ſome Diſtinction. For firſt, There is nothing more certain, than that the Church did ſometimes pronounce a Total, final and irreverſible Sentence of Excommunication againſt ſome more heinous Criminals, keeping them under Penance all their Lives, and denying them her external Peace and Communion at the Hour of Death for Example and Terror; yet not precluding them the Mercy of GOD, nor denying them the Benefit of her Prayers, but encouraging them to hope for Favour upon their true Repentance at GOD's final and unerring Judgment. In this Senſe, I ſay, it is moſt certain the Church did many times make her Sentence of Excommunication irreverſible, as will be ſhewed [*] more fully hereafter.

SECT. 17. Whether Excommunication was ever pronounced with Execration or devoting the Sinner to Temporal Deſtruction.

BUT ſecondly it is not ſo apparent, that the Church was uſed to join Execration to her Cenſures, and devote Men to Temporal Deſtruction, by utterly refuſing to pray for them, or rather praying againſt them, that GOD would take them out of the World, and deliver his Church by that Means from their malicious Power, and Machinations of Seducement. Grotius [x] thinks this was very rarely done, but yet there are ſome Examples of it. For when Julian added to his Apoſtacy deviliſh Deſigns of rooting out the Chriſtian Religion, the Church uſed this Weapon of extreme Neceſſity, and GOD heard her Prayers. He reckons this was done in Imitation of the Jewiſh Shammatha. For among the Jews, he ſays a little before, if any fell into enormous Crimes, and drew many after them, they did not uſe the common Anathema againſt them, but that more dreadfull and tremendous one, which they called Shammatha, and the Apoſtle after them, in the ſame Senſe, Maranatha. For Maranatha ſignifies, The Lord cometh. And by that Word [y] Prayer is made unto GOD, that he would ſpeedily take away the Malefactor and Seducer out of the World. An Example of which Sort of Anathema, he thinks, is given by the Apoſtle, Gal. v. 12. when he ſays, I would that they were even cut off that trouble you. The Learned Dr. Hicks in this Matter joins entirely with Grotius, ſeeing no other way to account for the many Prayers made by the ancient Chriſtians for Julian's Deſtruction. Some indeed faſted and prayed for his Repentance and Converſion, as ſuppoſing he might be recovered from his Error. Thus he tells us [z] out of Sozomen, how Didymus of Alexandria prayed for him. But others abſolutely prayed for his Deſtruction, as thinking him utterly uncapable of Repentance, and that he had ſinned the Sin unto Death, for which it was in vain to pray. Then he goes on to ſhew the Nature of his Apoſtacy, his Devotedneſs to the Devil, and his Spite to CHRIST and the Chriſtians: From whence he concludes [a] it was reaſonable for the Chriſtians to look upon him as irrecoverable out of the Snare of the Devil, and upon that Suppoſition to pray for his Deſtruction. He adds ſeveral other Arguments to ſhew the Reaſonableneſs of their Preſumption, that Julian had a diabolical Malice [b] againſt CHRIST, and that he was one of thoſe irrecoverable Apoſtates, who had trodden under Foot the Son of GOD, and counted the Blood of the Covenant, wherewith he was ſanctified, an unholy Thing, and who had done Deſpite to the Spirit of Grace. He had hardned his Heart againſt Divine Miracles, like Pharaoh, and therefore it is no wonder, if ſome of them [c] called for the Plagues of Egypt upon him. He reproached the Living GOD, like Senacherib, and that made ſome of them, like Hezekiah to beſeech GOD [d] to bow down his Ear and hear; and to open his Eyes, and ſee, how Julian reproached the Son of GOD; and thereupon to ſay, "O Lord our GOD, we be- "ſeech Thee to ſave us out of his Hand, "that

" that all the Kingdoms of the Earth may " know, that Thou art the Lord GOD, and " that JESUS, whom Julian doth ſo reproach, " is thy Son and CHRIST ". Gregory [e] ſays, he deſigned worſe Things againſt the Chriſtians, than Diocletian, Maximinian, or Maximinus ever did; that he was Jeroboam, Pharaoh, Ahab, and Nebuchadnezzar all in one; Jeroboam in Apoſtacy, Pharaoh in Hardneſs of Heart, Ahab in Cruelty, and Nebuchadnezzar in Sacrilege; and therefore it is not to be wondred, that the Chriſtians, who had ſo good Reaſon to deſpair of the Converſion of ſuch a complicate Tyrant, prayed for his Deſtruction, becauſe there was no other apparent way of delivering the Church. And if it ſhould pleaſe GOD for our Sins to plague the Church with ſuch a ſpiteful Enemy of CHRIST, and ſuffer a Popiſh Julian indeed to reign over us: I here declare, ſays he, That I ſhould believe him uncapable of Repentance, and upon that Suppoſition ſhould be tempted to pray for his Deſtruction as the only Means of delivering the Church. Thus far that Learned Man in his Account of the Practice of the Primitive Chriſtians, and their Reaſons, in Praying for the Deſtruction of Julian the Apoſtate.

TO this may be added, what St. Jerom ſays [f] upon the Death of Julian, That the Church of CHRIST with Exultation ſung her Thanks to GOD in the Words of the Prophet, according to the Septuagint, Thou haſt even to our Aſtoniſhment divided the Heads of the Powerful. Which is alſo noted by Theodoret, who ſays, the People of Antioch as ſoon as they heard of Julian's Death, kept Publick Feaſts and Holidays for Joy, and not only in their Church, but in their Theatres proclaimed the Victory of the Croſs, expoſing the Heathen Prophecies to ridicule [g], particularly thoſe of one Maximus a Magician whom he had conſulted: O fooliſh Maximus, where are now thy Prophecies? GOD and his CHRIST have overcome. So again he tells us [i] of one Julianus Saba, who had it revealed to him in his Prayers, that Julian was ſlain: Upon which he immediately changed his Tears into Joy, and put on a chearful Countenance, expreſſing the inward Satisfaction of his Mind. Which the By-ſtanders obſerving, deſired to know the Reaſon of his ſudden Change, and he told them, That the Wild Boar, who laid waſte the Vineyard of the LORD, had now ſuffered Puniſhment for all the Injuries he had done againſt the LORD; that he now lay dead, and they needed no longer to be afraid of his Deſigns againſt them. Upon which they all leaped for Joy, and ſung Praiſes to GOD for the Victory. Now 'tis probable, that they who thought it their Duty thus to give GOD Thanks for his Fall, were no leſs ſollicitous beforehand to pray for his Deſtruction. Their Thankſgivings were a Declaration what Sort of Prayers they had made, and they could not but rejoice when they were heard and anſwered. It is ſome Confirmation of all this, that Socrates ſays, they were uſed ſometimes to caſt Men out of the Church with Execration, as he notes of one Hermogenes a Novatian Biſhop [k] who for ſome blaſphemous Books, which he had written, was ſolemnly excommunicated, μετὰ κατάρας, with Curſing, which in all Probability denoted ſomething more than the common Anathema that accompanied every Excommunication.

IT is alſo noted by Socrates, Lib. 1. cap. 37. that Alexander Biſhop of Conſtantinople prayed thus againſt Arius: " If the Doctrine of Arius " be true, let me die before the Day appoint- " ed for our Diſputation: But if the Faith " which I hold be true, and the Doctrine of " Arius falſe, let Arius by the Time determined " ſuffer the Puniſhment which his Impiety de- " ſerves ". Which was accordingly fulfilled: For Arius the next Day voided his Entrails with his Excrements, and ſo periſhed by a moſt ignominious Death. The ſame is related by Athanaſius in his Epiſtle to Serapion, Tom. 1. p. 671. who ſays he prayed to GOD in theſe Words, Ἆρον Ἄρειον, Take Arius out of the World. All which ſhews, that in ſome ſpecial Caſes they made no Scruple to devote very malicious and incorrigible Apoſtates to Extermination and Deſtruction.

YET on the other Hand St. Chryſoſtom was utterly againſt this Practice. For he has a whole Homily upon this Point, That Men ought not to anathematize either the Living or the Dead; they may anathematize their Opinions or Actions, but not their Perſons. Where, as Grotius [l] rightly obſerves, He takes Anathema in the ſtricteſt Senſe, for praying to GOD for the Deſtruction of the Sinner. Againſt this he argues from theſe ſeveral Topicks. 1. Becauſe CHRIST died for all Men, for his Enemies, for Tyrants, for Magicians, for thoſe that hated and crucified him [m]. 2. Becauſe the Church in Imitation of CHRIST daily prays for all Men. 3. Becauſe the Chriſtian Religion rather obliges us to lay down our own Lives for our Neighbours, than take away theirs. 4. It is uſurping upon the Prerogative of CHRIST. For what is ſuch an Anathema, but ſaying, let him be given to the Devil, let him have no Place of Salvation, let him be ſeparated from CHRIST? Who gave thee this Authority and Power? Why doſt thou aſſume the Dignity of the Son of GOD, who ſhall ſit in Judgment, and ſet the Sheep on his Right-hand, and the Goats on his Left? 5. The Apoſtles had no ſuch Practice in Excommunication. They caſt Hereticks out of the the Church in such a Manner, as one would pluck out a right Eye, or cut off a Limb, with Indications of Compassion and Sorrow. They carefully rebuked and expelled their Heresies, but did not thus anathematize their Persons. 6. It is an absurd Practice, whether it be used toward the Living, or the Dead. If toward the Living, thou art cruel in so cutting off one, who is still in a Capacity of turning and changing his Life from evil to good: If toward the Dead, thou art more cruel; because now to his own Master he stands or falls, and is not under any human Power. From all this he concludes, That we ought only to anathematize the impious and heretical Opinions of Men, but to spare their Persons, and pray for their Salvation. There are some who make a Question, Whether this be one of St. Chrysostom's Genuine Discourses; but without any good Reason; because the Matter and Stile, as Du Pin observes, argue it to be his, and there are other Arguments to prove it Genuine. Sixtus Senensis [n] and Habertus [o] think, he speaks only against private Mens using the Anathema against Hereticks: But it is plain, he argues against the Publick as well as Private Use of it, in the Sense wherein he takes it, That Doctrines, and not Men, are to be anathematized: We are to pray for the Persons of Hereticks, when we condemn their Opinions; and desire their Conversion and Salvation, not their Destruction. The only Thing that can truly be inferred from hence is, that St. Chrysostom had different Sentiments about this Matter from some others. They thought there were some Cases, in which it was lawful to pray for the Destruction of very malicious and incorrigible Sinners, such as Julian, when they were past all Hopes, and there was no other visible Way to save the Church from their hellish Designs, but by their Destruction: He thought there was no such Case; but that every Man was capable of Pardon so long as he lived in this World, even though he had committed what others called the unpardonable Sin against the HOLY GHOST, and the Sin unto Death, of which he had a different Notion from what some others had; and therefore that we were to pray for every Man's Conversion, and not his Destruction. This, as far as I can judge, was the different Sense which the Ancients had upon this most difficult Matter: And if they varied upon the Point in so nice a Case, it is not much to be wondred at, since the Moderns are not agreed upon it, but some Churches, as I shewed before out of Du Moulin, forbid all such Sort of Excommunications, as unfit to be used without a particular Revelation. I have stated the Matter fairly on both Sides, and leave the Determination to the Liberty and Discretion of every Judicious Reader.

CHAP. III.

Of the Objects of Ecclesiastical Censures, or the Persons on whom they might be inflicted: With a General Account of the Crimes for which they were inflicted.

SECT. 1. All Members of the Church, falling into great and scandalous Crimes, made liable to Ecclesiastical Censures without Exception.

HAVING thus far explained the Nature of Ecclesiastical Censures, and the several Kinds of them, we are next to consider the Objects or Persons on whom they might be inflicted, and the Crimes for which they were inflicted on them. As to the Persons or Objects of Ecclesiastical Censure, they were all such Delinquents, as fell into great and scandalous Crimes after Baptism, whether Men or Women, Priests or People, Rich or Poor, Princes or Subjects: For the Ecclesiastical Discipline made no Distinction, save when the Multitude of Sinners combining together, made it impossible to put Church Censures in Execution, or made it hazardous, for fear of doing more harm than good by the strict Execution of them. Infidels and Unbelievers were not considered in this Matter, as being no Members of the Church: According to that Rule of the Apostle, 1 Cor. v. 12. What have I to do to judge them also that are without? Do not ye judge them that are within? But them that are without, God judgeth. Therefore put away from among yourselves that wicked Person. Catechumens were in a middle State between Heathens and Christians, only Candidates of Baptism, and not yet admitted to full Communion by the Laver of Regeneration and Adoption of Children: And therefore neither were they the proper Objects of Church-Discipline, save only as they were capable of being thrust down into a Lower Class of their own Order, if they committed any Crime deserving such a Degradation, of which I have given some Account already [*] in speaking of the Institution of the Catechumens. Here we take Discipline, as respecting only those that were called the Τέλειοι, Perfect Communicants, or Persons in full Communion with the Church.

SECT. 2. Women as well as Men.

IN cenſuring theſe the Church made no Diſtinction of Sex or Quality. For Women were ſubjected to Diſcipline, as well as Men. Valeſius [a] ſays they were very rarely put to do Publick Penance; and Bona [b] ſays, Never at all for the Three firſt Ages, but they wept and faſted and did other Works of Repentance in private. And ſome take that Canon [c] of St. Baſil in this Senſe, where he ſays, if a Woman was convicted of Adultery, or confeſſed it herſelf, by the ancient Rules ſhe was not to be made a Publick Example, δημοσιεύειν οὐκ ἐκέλευσαν οἱ πάλαι, But Cyprian and Tertullian and the ancient Canons make no ſuch Diſtinction: Neither is it probable, That when Multitudes both of Men and Women fell openly into Idolatry in Times of Perſecution, that the one did publick and the other private Penance only. For Cyprian never ſpeaks of any but the Publick Exomologeſis or Confeſſion, and Publick Impoſition of Hands [d] to reconcile Penitents again after lapſing: And yet there it had been proper to have made the Diſtinction between Men and Women, if he had known of any ſuch Diſtinction in the Practice of the Church. But whether their Penance was Publick or Private, the Caſe is ſtill the ſame as to the Exerciſe of Diſcipline upon them. For they were certainly excluded from Communion, and that ſometimes for many Years, and in ſome Caſes even to the Hour of Death, as appears from many Canons of the Council [e] of Eliberis, Ancyra [f] and others. And this is a ſufficient Indication of their being liable to Eccleſiaſtical Cenſure, as well as Men. Nay there are ſome undeniable Inſtances of Women doing Publick Penance, as Bona owns, in the Time of St. Jerom: For he ſpeaking of Fabiola, a rich Roman Lady, who had divorced herſelf from firſt Husband for Adultery, and married a Second, ſays, That after the Death of the Second Husband, when ſhe came to conſider the Unlawfulneſs of the Fact, ſhe put on Sackcloth, and made Confeſſion [g] of her Error in the Lateran Church, in the Sight of all the People of Rome; ſtanding in the Order of Penitents in Lent, and in a penitent Garb, with her Hair diſſolved, her Cheeks wan with Tears, ſubmitting her Neck to Impoſition of Hands; the Biſhop and Presbyters and all the People weeping with her. This ſeems to have been a Voluntary Act of Penance (as there were many ſuch in thoſe Days, when Men choſe to expiate even private Crimes by publick Penance) but if it had not been Cuſtomary at all for Women to do Publick Penance. St. Jerom would have noted the Singularity of it in that Reſpect, rather than any other. But he ſeems to place the Singularity of it in this, That ſhe condeſcended of her own accord to do Publick Penance in a Caſe, where no Laws of the Church could have obliged her to it. For whilſt her Husband lived, no Conſtraint could be laid upon her: It being a Rule, not to admit married Perſons [h] to publick Penance without Conſent of both Parties: And when her Husband was dead, her Crime perhaps was one of that Nature which did not directly bring her under the Power of Eccleſiaſtical Cenſure, but by her own Conſent. For, as we ſhall ſee more by and by, there were many Crimes of that Nature, which though allowed to be Sins of no mean Size, yet could not bring Men againſt their Wills to a Courſe of Publick Penance by any Laws of the Church.

SECT. 3. The Rich as well as the Poor. No Commutation of Penance allowed, nor Friendſhip nor Favour.

BUT where the Crimes were flagrant, and ſuch as the Church could take Cognizance of, there ſhe uſually proceeded without Reſpect of Perſons. No Regard was had to the Rich more than the Poor, but all Criminals were conſidered alike, in the Buſineſs of Repentance, as equally obliged to comply with the ſtated Rules of Diſcipline, in order to gain Admiſſion into the Church after an Expulſion. There was but one Door of Re-entry, which is ſo often called Juſta and Legitima Pœnitentia, the juſt and legal Penance, by Cyprian [i] and other Writers: And no Commutation was thought an Equivalent, where this was wanting. Which is evident from this, That they would not accept any Gifts or Oblations from excommunicate Perſons, or Hereticks, or Schiſmaticks, or any that were not in full Communion with the Church [*], leſt this ſhould look communicating with them before their Time, and receiving their Money in lieu of Repentance. Cyprian indeed once intimates, that there were ſome [k] who for filthy Lucre, were inclined to accept Perſons; and who, to make a Market of unlawful Gain, would gratify the Rich and thoſe who could give large Gifts, to get them an eaſier Way of Admittance than by the ſevere and tedious Way of a juſt and full Penance: But he very very ſharply inveighs againſt theſe, and all their ſiniſter Arts of diſſolving Diſcipline, and ruining Mens Souls, under Pretence of granting them a fallacious and deceitful Peace, which was their real Deſtruction.

SECT. 4. What Privilege ſome claimed upon the Interceſſion of the Martyrs in Priſon for them. And how this was anſwered by Cyprian.

ONE of theſe inſidious Arts, which they managed with ſome Colour of Dexterity, was to get the Martyrs and Confeſſors in Priſon to intercede with Biſhops for ſuch, and write Letters in their Favour. For we muſt know, that anciently the Martyrs were allowed this Privilege, When any Penitent had well nigh performed his legal Penance, and was near upon being received again, to write Letters to the Biſhop, That ſuch an one might be admitted to Communion, though his full Term of Penance was not quite expired. And ſo far their Petition was commonly accepted. But theſe crafty Men, for a little under-hand Gain, had got a Trick to deſire the Martyrs to intercede for ſuch as had done little or no Penance: Nay, they abuſed their Privilege ſo far, as peremptorily to require the Admiſſion of ſuch, without any previous Examination of their Merits: And ſometimes they required the Biſhop, not only to admit ſuch a Penitent, but all that belonged to him; which was a very uncertain and blind ſort of Petition, and created great Envy to the Biſhop, when perhaps Twenty [l], or Thirty, or a greater Number of Nameleſs Perſons were included in one Libel, and the Biſhop was forced to do a very ungrateful Office, and deny them all together. Cyprian complains much of theſe Abuſes both in his Letter to the Martyrs, and in others written upon the ſame Subject to his Clergy [m] and People. But chiefly he complains of thoſe Libels, which were ſent him by Lucian the Martyr, one of which runs in this [n] Form: "All the Confeſſors to Cyprian the Biſhop, Greeting: "Know that we have granted Peace to all "thoſe, of whom you have had an Account "how they have behaved themſelves ſince "the Commiſſion of their Crimes: And we "would that theſe Preſents ſhould be notified by you to the reſt of the Biſhops. We "wiſh you to maintain Peace with the holy "Martyrs." This Lucian had written many ſuch Letters before in the Name of Paulus the Confeſſor, whilſt he was in Priſon, and others after his Death, ſaying, He had his Command ſo to do. All which Cyprian complains of in a Letter to the Clergy of Rome [o] as a Thing diſſolving all the Bands of Faith, and the Fear of GOD, and the Commandments of the LORD, and the Holineſs and Vigor of the Goſpel; and as creating great Envy to the Biſhops, whilſt they were forced to deny to Lapſers, what they boaſted to have obtained of the Martyrs and Confeſſors. This occaſioned, he ſays, great Seditions and Tumults: For in many Cities throughout the Province of Carthage the People roſe up in Multitudes againſt their Biſhops, and by their Clamours compelled them to grant them inſtantly that Peace, which, they all ſaid, the Martyrs and Confeſſors had given them: They who had not Courage enough and Strength of Faith to reſiſt them, were by this Means terrified and ſubdued into a Compliance with them. And he had much ado himſelf to withſtand them at Carthage: For ſome turbulent Men, who were hardly governable before, and thought it much to be kept back from Communion till he returned out of Exile, when they had gotten thoſe Letters of the Martyrs, were all in a Flame upon the Strength of them, and began to rage immoderately, and in an extorting manner demand the Peace, which they ſaid the Martyrs had granted them.

BY this Repreſentation of Cyprian, and his Remonſtrance upon it, it is eaſy to diſcern what Miſchief the abuſing this Privilege of the Martyrs did to the true Exerciſe of Diſcipline; whilſt ſome out of Lucre, others out of Terror, complied with the Lapſers unreaſonable Demands, and let the Rich and the Great eſcape Puniſhment, and intrude themſelves into the Communion of the Church again without any ſufficient Evidences of Repentance: But they, who like Cyprian, had Integrity and Firmneſs enough to oppoſe theſe impious Practices, kept up the Diſcipline of the Church in its true Vigor, and would hearken to no Pretences or Conditions of this Kind, which only tended to impoſe upon them with falſe Shews of a deceitful Peace, and profane the Myſtery of the Holy Sacrament, by giving it to the Impenitent and the Ungodly.

SECT. 5. Magiſtrates and Princes ſubject to Eccleſiaſtical Cenſures, as well as any others.

NEITHER was it only Men in a private Condition they thus treated, but alſo thoſe of the higheſt Rank and Dignity. For the Civil Magiſtrates and Princes were ſubject to Eccleſiaſtical Cenſures, as well as any others. In the Times of Perſecution, the very taking ſome Civil Civil Offices made Chriſtians liable to Excommunication. Particularly if they took upon them the Office of the Duumviri, or the Provincial Office of the Flamines, or Sacerdotes Provinciarum: Becauſe, as Gothofred [p] ſhews out of many Laws of the Theodoſian Code, theſe Offices obliged them to exhibit the uſual Games, or Shews to the People: Which in Time of Heatheniſm could not be done without involving them in ſome Meaſure in the Guilt of Idolatry, to which thoſe Games were conſecrated. For which Reaſon any Chriſtian undertaking ſuch an Office, was reputed an Encourager and Partaker of Idolatry, though he did not actually ſacrifice to Idols in his Office. Upon which account the Council of Eliberis [q], which was held in Time of Perſecution, An. 305, or thereabouts, orders, That if any Chriſtian took upon him the Office of a Flamen, though he did not ſacrifice, but only exhibit the idolatrous Shews to the People, he ſhould be kept under ſtrict Penance all his Life, and only be admitted to Communion at his Death; and that in Conſideration that he had abſtained from offering the abominable Sacrifices: For if he had offered Sacrifice, then by the preceding [r] Canon he was denied Communion to the very laſt. Nay, though they had neither ſacrificed, nor exhibited the Shews out of their Expence to the People, but only worn the Crown in their Office, by two other Canons [s] of the ſame Council, they were to be denied the Communion for a Year or two. So that the being in a publick Office, was ſo far from exempting a Magiſtrate from the Cenſures of the Church, that in many Caſes it was the very Reaſon why they were executed with greater Severity upon him, whilſt no Man could go through ſuch an Office without the Guilt and Stain of Idolatry in ſome Meaſure ſticking to him. And when theſe Offices were freed from Idolatry; yet if a Magiſtrate ſtill committed other Crimes worthy of Eccleſiaſtical Puniſhment, the Cenſures of the Church, notwithſtanding his Office, would lay hold of him, and the Name or Character of a Magiſtrate would give him no Protection. This appears plainly from the Proceedings of Syneſius [t] againſt Andronicus the governing Magiſtrate of Ptolemais, whom he formerly excommunicated with all his Accomplices: And from what has been obſerved [*] before, of the Judge that was ſentenced in the Time of Julian, mentioned by St. Ambroſe [u]; and Athanaſius excommunicated the Governor of Libya for his Immoralities, mentioned by St. Baſil [x], which need not here be repeated. To theſe I add that general Rule of the firſt Council of Arles, made with Relation to all Governors of Provinces, That when they went to the Government of any Province [y], they ſhould take Communicatory Letters from their own Biſhop along with them, and be ſubject to the Care of the Biſhop of the Places where-ever they went; ſo as if they committed any Thing contrary to the publick Diſcipline, they were to be excluded from the Communion of the Church. This was no Rule to deprive Magiſtrates of their Office, though they were Hereticks or Schiſmaticks, as Baronius [z] would have it underſtood: For as Albaſpiny in his Notes upon the Place more truly obſerves againſt him, There is not a Word about this in the Canon: Neither is it likely that a Provincial Council ſhould make a Decree about that which is no way in their Power, but in the Power of the Prince only. They might order, and that with good Reaſon, he ſays, That no Heretick or Schiſmatick, although he was the Governor [a] of a Province, ſhould be admitted to communicate with the Church: But that therefore he ſhould be removed from his Government becauſe he was an Heretick, was at the Will and Diſcretion of the Prince, and not of the Church: It belongs to the Prince, and not the Church, to take away the Power of Subordinate Magiſtrates from them. The plain Drift therefore of this Canon is not to deprive Inferior Magiſtrates of any Civil Power or Juriſdiction, which the Supreme Magiſtrate committed to them; which the Church had no Authority to do: But only to deny them her own Communion, if unworthy of it; which was a Thing then unconteſted, and indiſputably within the Limits of her Power.

NEITHER need we wonder at this, ſince the Church laid Claim to an higher Power, even of excluding Princes, or the Supreme Magiſtrates, from her Communion, when guilty of notorious Violations of the Laws of Chriſtian Society; of which there are certain Evidences both in the Doctrine and Practice of the ancient Biſhops of the Church. The Story which is related by Euſebius concerning the Emperor Philip, though diſputed by many as to the Truth of the Fact, yet is a ſufficient a ſufficient Evidence of the Opinion of Euſebius who relates it. Now he tells us [b], There was a Tradition that he was a Chriſtian, and that on the Vigil of the Paſſover he deſired to communicate in Prayers with the reſt of the People: But that the Biſhop, who then preſided, would not ſuffer him to enter, before he had confeſſed his Crimes, and joyned himſelf to thoſe who had ſinned, and ſtood in the Place or Order of the Penitents. For otherwiſe he could not be received by him, for the many Crimes which he had committed. Upon which the Emperor willingly obeyed, demonſtrated his ſincere and religious Diſpoſition towards the Fear of GOD by the Tenour of his Actions. Some queſtion the Truth of the Story [c], and think that it is a Miſtake of Philip the Emperor, for one Philip the Præfectus Auguſtalis of Egypt, who was a Chriſtian: Others defend it as a true Relation [d], only they think it was a Tranſaction in private, which is the Reaſon we have no Account of it in Heathen Story. But whether the Fact was true or falſe, the Reflection made upon it by Euſebius is of great Moment in the preſent Queſtion. For he ſuppoſing him to have been a Chriſtian, Without ſuch a Compliance the Biſhop would never have admitted him. Which Remark is ſufficient to ſhew the Nature of the Church's Diſcipline in general, whatever becomes of the Truth of this particular Story.

Fileſacus [e] and Valeſius [f] confound this Story with the Relation which St. Chryſoſtom gives of Babylas, denying Entrance into the Church to one of the Roman Emperors, upon the Account of a barbarous Murder committed by him upon a Son of ſome Confederate Prince, who was entruſted as an Hoſtage with him. Chryſoſtom names neither the Emperor, nor the Confederate Prince, and the Stories differ in the whole Relation, but eſpecially in this material Circumſtance. That Philip is ſaid to comply with the Biſhop's Admonition, and ſtand in the Order of Penitents; but he whom Chryſoſtom ſpeaks of, was ſo far from ſubmitting to the Admonition of Babylas, that he remained incorrigible, and grew inraged, and caſt him into Priſon, and loaded him with Chains, which the Martyr ordered to be buried with him, when the Tyrant put him to Death. So that this could not be Philip, but Decius, the perſecuting Heathen, under whom Babylas ſuffered. However Chryſoſtom makes ſome curious Remarks upon the Behaviour of Babylas, both in Reference to his Courage and Prudence, which abundantly ſhews the Spirit of Diſcipline then prevailing in the Church. For firſt he remarks that Bayblas acted with the Freedom and Boldneſs of Elias and St. John Baptiſt [g], driving out of the Church, not a Tetrarch of a few Cities, nor a King of one Nation; but him who governed the greateſt Part of the World; a Murderer, who had many Nations, many Cities, and a prodigious Army at his Command; one that was in all Reſpects terrible, as well upon the Account of his immenſe Dominions, as the Fierceneſs and Cruelty of his Temper: Him he expelled as a vile and worthleſs Slave, with as much Intrepidity, Conſtancy, and Bravery of Mind, as a Shepherd would drive away from his Flock a ſcabbed and infected Sheep, to prevent the Contagion of the Diſtemper from ſpreading to the reſt of the Flock. Here he breaks out into a Rapture, admiring his undaunted Mind, his lofty Soul, his heavenly Terror of Spirit, and Angelical Conſtancy, ſuperior to all this viſible World, and only fixed upon GOD the Supreme King; acting as if he ſtood before the Great Judge and heard him ſay, Caſt out the wicked and infected Sheep from the holy Flock. 2. Hence he obſerves, how fearleſs and undaunted Babylas muſt be with Reſpect to other Men, who gave ſuch a Specimen of his Power over the Emperor. He could never act or ſpeak out of Favour or Hatred, but with a Mind equally fortified againſt Fear and Flattery, and all other Things of the like Nature, which are apt to beſet Men, he ſtood firm, and did not in the leaſt corrupt right Judgment. 3. He remarks farther, how he tempered his Courage with Chriſtian Prudence, obſerving a decent Mien in his Behaviour. A Man of his undaunted Spirit might have gone much farther. He might have railed at the Emperor, and reviled him; he might have pulled the Crown from his Head, and have beaten him on the Face: But his Soul was ſeaſoned with ſpiritual Salt, which taught him to obſerve a Decorum in all his Management, and do nothing raſhly or fooliſhly, but by the Rules of right Reaſon, which was a Thing the Philoſophers in their Reproof of Kings ſeldom obſerved. Hence he remarks 4thly, Of how great Advantage this Example was to all Men, both Believers and Unbelievers. The Unbelievers were aſtoniſhed at the Action, and admired it: For they ſeeing the Intrepidity of the Servants of CHRIST, could not but deride the abject Servility of thoſe who ruled in the Heathen Temples, when they obſerved them always more diſpoſed to worſhip their Kings, than their Gods or Idols. Whereas Babylas puniſhed the injurious King, as far as it was lawful for a Prieſt [†] to do; he pulled down the high Spirit of the Prince; he vindicated the Divine Laws, when they were violated; he puniſhed the King for his Murder with a Puniſhment, that to all Men of a ſound Mind is the moſt terrible of any other. He did not, like Diogenes, bid him ſtand out of his Sun-ſhine; but when he thruſt himſelf impudently within the ſacred Boundaries of the Church, and confounded all good Order, he drove him from his Master's House, as he would have done a Dog, or an offending Slave. And so the holy Man took down the Confidence of Unbelievers, who were then the greatest Part of the Roman Empire. And for those who had already embraced the Faith of CHRIST, he by this Act made them more circumspect and religious; not only private Men, but Soldiers, Captains and Generals; shewing them, that among Christians the Prince and Chief of all, are but Names, and that he that wears the Crown, when he is to be punished and rebuked, is no more considered than one of the lowest Order [b]. Hence he concludes, lastly, That this rare Example of Vertue, was Matter of Instruction both to Priests and Princes, to teach Princes to submit to the Rules of Discipline, and Priests to take Courage in the Exercise of it: Forasmuch as that the Care of the World, and what is done in it, is as properly committed to them, as to him that wears the Purple; and that they ought rather to part with their Lives, than part with or diminish that Power and Authority, which GOD from Above has committed to them. Any one may perceive by this Discourse of St. Chrysostom, what Opinion he had of the Power and Extent of Ecclesiastical Discipline, even over Sovereign Princes: Not to pull off their Crowns, and dethrone them; not to ravish away their Temporal Power, under the Pretence of the Spiritual Power being superior; nor yet to speak evil of Dignities, or treat them unmannerly, and revile them; but only to debar them from the Communion of the Church, when by notorious Wickedness they rendered themselves altogether unworthy, and really uncapable of it. Which is agreeable to that general Direction he gives in another Place to the Clergy. Not to admit any one of notorious Improbity, Cruelty, or Impurity to the LORD's-Table: Although he be a Commander, says he [i], or a Governor, or even he that wears the Diadem, that comes unworthily, prohibit him: Thou hast greater Power than he. He adds a little after, If thou art afraid to do this, bring him unto me. I will not suffer any such Thing to be done: I will sooner give my own Life, than the Body of the LORD unworthily: I will shed my own Blood, before I will give that most Holy Blood to an unworthy Man.

BUT there is none more famous than St. Ambrose for his remarkable Freedom in this Matter with the greatest of Princes, whether in admonishing them, or denying them the Communion upon the Commission of some great Offences. Paulinus, the Writer of his Life says, he separated Maximus from the Communion [k], admonishing him to repent for shedding the Blood of Gratian his Lord, if ever he hoped to find Mercy at the Hands of GOD. So when Valentinian was sollicited by Symmachus, the Heathen Governor of Rome, to restore the Gentile Rites, and suffer the Altar of Victory to be repaired in the Capitol; St. Ambrose wrote to him, and told him, among many other Arguments, That if he thus gratified the Heathen in restoring Idolatry, the Bishops [l] could not bear or dissemble it with a patient Mind. He might if he pleased, come to Church, but he would either find no Priest there, or else only one to resist him, and deny him Communion. And what will you answer, says he, to the Priest, when he tells you, The Church desires not your Oblations, or Gifts, because you have adorned the Temples of the Gentiles with your Gifts? The Altar of CHRIST refuses your Gifts, because you have erected an Altar to the Idol Gods.

BUT the most remarkable Instance of his Freedom was shewed in his Treatment of Theodosius the Great, after he had inhumanely put to Death Seven thousand Men at Thessalonica, without distinguishing the Innocent from the Guilty. When he had committed this Fact, not being very sensible of his Crime, he came to Milan, and according to Custom was going to Church; but St. Ambrose met him at the Gate, and accosted him after this Manner, as Theodoret [m] relates the Story, You seem not to understand, Sir, the Greatness of the Murder you have committed. Your Anger not being yet allayed, hinders your Reason from considering what you have done. And perhaps the Greatness of your Empire will not suffer you to acknowledge your Offence, and Power opposes it self to Reason. But you must know, that our Nature is mortal and frail: Our Original is Dust, whence we were taken, and into which we must return again. It is not fit you should deceive yourself with the Splendor of you Purple, and forget the Weakness of the Body that is covered with it. Your Subjects, Sir, are of the same Nature with yourself, and you are a Servant as well as they: For we have one common LORD and KING, the Maker of this Universe. Therefore with what Eyes will you look upon the House of our common LORD? With what Feet will you tread his holy Pavement? Will you stretch forth those Hands still dropping with the Blood of that unjust Murder, and therewith take the Holy Body of the LORD?

LORD? And then put the Cup of that precious Blood to your Mouth, who have ſhed ſo much Blood by the haſty Decree of any angry Mind? Depart, I beſeech you, and do not aggravate and augment your former Iniquity by the Addition of a new Crime. Refuſe not thoſe Bonds which the LORD of All confirms from Heaven above. It is but a ſmall Thing that is laid upon you, but it will recover you to perfect Health and Salvation. The Emperor, who had been educated in the Holy Doctrine, and knew what were the different Offices of Prieſts and Kings, was ſo moved with theſe Words, that he returned to his Palace with Groans and Tears. Eight Months paſſed between this and the Feſtival of our SAVIOUR's Nativity, and all that Time the Emperor ſate lamenting in his own Palace, and ſhedding Rivers of Tears. Which Ruffin, the Maſter of the Palace, who for his Familiarity with the Emperor, could take a great Freedom with him, obſerving, he came to him, and deſired to know the Reaſon of his Tears. To whom the Emperor replied, You make a Jeſt of the Thing, Ruffin: For you are not touched with the Senſe of my Misfortunes: But I mourn and lament in Conſideration of my Calamity, that whilſt the Temple of GOD is open to the very Slaves and Beggars, and they can go in freely, and ſupplicate their LORD, it is inacceſſible to me; and beſides all this, Heaven is ſhut againſt me: For I remember the Words of our LORD, which plainly ſay, Whomſoever ye ſhall bind on Earth, he ſhall be bound in Heaven. Then Ruffin ſaid, I will go therefore to the Biſhop, if you pleaſe, and intreat him to looſe your Bonds. The Emperor replied, He will not be perſuaded. For I know the Juſtice of the Sentence which St. Ambroſe has given, and he will not out of any Reverence to the Imperial Power, tranſgreſs the Divine Law. But Ruffin inſiſted, and with many Words promiſing to appeaſe Ambroſe towards him; He bid him go quickly, and he himſelf followed a little after, relying upon the Promiſes of Ruffin. But St. Ambroſe no ſooner ſaw Ruffin, but he ſaid to him, Ruffin, Thou art a very ſhameleſs Man. For thou waſt the evil Counſellor of ſo great a Slaughter, and now thou hardeneſt thy Forehead, and haſt caſt away Shame, neither Bluſhing nor Trembling for ſo great a Ravagement made of the Image of GOD. Ruffin ſtill went on with his Supplication, and told him the Emperor himſelf was a coming. At which Ambroſe kindled with a divine Fervour, ſaid, I tell thee before-hand, Ruffin, I will not admit him within the Divine Gates: But and if he will turn his Empire into Tyranny, and ſlay me alſo, I ſhall with great Pleaſure take my Death. Ruffin hearing this, ſent one immediately to the Emperor, to certify him of the Biſhop's Reſolution, and to deſire him to ſtay in the Palace: But the Emperor being on his Way in the Middle of the Forum, when he received the Meſſage, ſaid, I will go and bear his juſt Reproofs. When he came to the holy Boundaries, he would not enter into the Church, but going to the Biſhop, as he ſate in the Saluting-Houſe, he begged of him to abſolve him from his Bonds. But Ambroſe told him, This his Coming was Tyrannical; and that he now began to rage againſt GOD, and trample upon the Divine Laws. The Emperor ſaid, By no Means: I do not offer myſelf againſt the Preſcript of the Laws, I do not deſire to enter the Church in an unlawful manner; but I entreat you to abſolve me from my Bonds, and to remember the Clemency of our Common LORD, and not ſhut the Gate againſt me, which the LORD hath opened to all thoſe who turn to him with Repentance. What Repentance, then ſaid the Biſhop, have you ſhewed ſince the Commiſſion of ſo great a Wickedneſs? With what Medicine have you cured your grievous Wounds? The Emperor replied, It belongs to your Office to prepare the Medicine, and cure thoſe Wounds, and my Part is to uſe what you preſcribe. Then ſaid Ambroſe, Foraſmuch as you have ſuffered Anger and Fury, and not Reaſon, to ſit in Judgment and give Sentence in Matters before: Now make a Law, which may render all Judgment given in Anger, Null and Void: When any Sentence of Death or Confiſcation is pronounced, let there be Thirty Days Time between that and the Execution, to wait for the Judgment of Reaſon. When this Term is expired, let the Scribes again preſent the Sentence you have given, before you, and then Reaſon without Anger will be able to examine the Sentence by her own Judgment, and diſcern whether it be juſt or unjuſt. If it be unjuſt, cancel and reverſe it: If juſt, corroborate and confirm it; and this Number of Days will be no Prejudice to any righteous Sentence. The Emperor approved of the Propoſal, and immediately ordered ſuch a Law to be written, and confirmed it with his own Hand. Then St. Ambroſe abſolved him from his Bonds, and the Emperor took Courage to enter into the Church: But he would neither ſtand nor kneel, while he made Supplication to the LORD, but fell upon his Face to the Earth, uſing thoſe Words of David, My Soul cleaveth to the Ground, quicken Thou me according to Thy Word; and tearing his Hair, and beating his Forehead, and watering the Pavement with Drops of Tears, with theſe Indications of Sorrow he prayed for Pardon. And ſo when the Time of the Oblation came, he was admitted again to make his Offering at the Holy Table.

I HAVE related this Matter at full Length in Theodoret's Words, becauſe, as he there obſerves, it is ſuch an illuſtrious Inſtance of the Vertue both of the Biſhop and the Emperor, ſhewing the Freedom and flaming Fervour of the one, and a great Condeſcenſion, Obedience, and Purity of Faith in the other. Theodoret adds, That when the Emperor was returned to Conſtantinople, he was pleaſed to ſay,

He had now learned the Difference between an Emperor and a Biſhop; he had now at laſt found a Guide to ſhew him what was Truth: For Ambroſe alone was worthy the Name of a Biſhop. So uſeful an Impreſſion, ſays our Author, does a Reproof or Admonition make, when given by a Man of ſhining Vertue.

AFTER this it is needleſs to relate any later Inſtances of this Kind of Diſcipline exerciſed upon Princes: But it may be proper to remind the Reader here again of that neceſſary Diſtinction between the greater and leſſer Excommunication, the former of which ſeparates a Criminal from all manner of Society with the Faithful, the other only from Communion and Society in holy Things in the Church; and to obſerve with many Learned Men, That theſe Excommunications of Princes now mentioned, never went farther than to a prudent Admonition, and Suſpenſion of them from the Sacrament and the holy Offices of the Church. St. Ambroſe, ſays Biſhop Buckridge [n], in anſwer to Bellarmin, did plainly prohibit Theodoſius from entring the Church, and Partaking of the Sacraments; but he neither delivered him to Satan, nor reduced him into the Number of Publicans or Pagans, nor ſeparated him from all Society and Communion with the Faithfull. If Bellarmin ſpake properly of the greater Excommunication, the Proof of a doubtful Matter lies upon him; if only of the leſſer Excommunication, or Suſpenſion, which forbids Men Entrance into the Church, and Communion in the Sacraments, we do not deny but that Theodoſius was ſo excommunicated by St. Ambroſe. For St. Ambroſe [o] told him, He durſt not offer the Sacrifice, if he was preſent. He thought he ſaw him in a Viſion come to the Church, and then he durſt not celebrate becauſe of his Preſence. He could not accept his Oblation, till he had Power to offer, and till his Offering would be acceptable to GOD. He ſuſpended him therefore from the Sacrament, but did not lay upon him the Anathema, or greater Excommunication. Biſhop Taylor [p] takes Excommunication in this Senſe, when he ſays, "If "we conſult the Doctrine and Practices of "the Fathers in the Primitive and Ancient "Churches, we ſhall find that they never durſt "think of excommunicating Kings. The firſt "Supreme Prince that ever was excommunicated by a Biſhop, was Henry the Emperor "by Pope Hildebrand. He adds, That there "is one Portion of Excommunication, which "is a denying to adminiſter the holy Communion to Princes of a ſcandalous and evil "Life; and concerning this there is no Queſtion but the Biſhop not only may, but in "ſome Caſes muſt do it. CHRIST ſays, "Give not that which is Holy unto Dogs, and caſt "not Pearls before Swine. Whatſoever is in the "Eccleſiaſtical Hand by Divine Right, is as "applicable to him that ſits upon the Throne, "as to him that ſits upon the Dunghil". But then he ſays one Thing, which, as I conceive, contradicts this: viz. "That this re"fuſing muſt be only by Admonition and "Caution, by Fears and Denunciations Evan"gelical, by telling him his Unfitneſs to com"municate, and his Danger if he do: But if "after this Separation by [q] Way of Sen"tence and proper Miniſtry, the Prince will "be communicated, the Biſhop has nothing "elſe to do, but to pray and weep and will"lingly to miniſter". This not only contradicts what he juſt ſays before, That a Biſhop is obliged in Duty to deny to adminiſter the Communion to Princes of a ſcandalous and evil Life, but is directly contrary to the Doctrine and Practice of St. Chryſoſtom and St. Ambroſe, who profeſs they would rather die than give the Communion to a Prince that was utterly uncapable and unworthy of it.

SECT. 6. In what Caſes the greater Excommunication was forborn for the Good of the Church.

YET as to what concerns the greater Excommunication, it is certain that in ſome Caſes it was forborn, not only with Relation to Princes, but the People alſo. For Prudence directed them to do every Thing for the Good of the Church, and to uſe this ſevere Weapon only to Edification, and not to Deſtruction. And therefore when it was apparent, or but highly probable, that the intemperate and indiſcreet Uſe of it might do more Harm than Good to the Church, there both Reaſon and Charity directed them to wave the Uſe of it, for fear of rooting up the Wheat with the Tares before the proper Time of Judgment. As to Princes, Dr. Barrow in a few Words, which contains a great deal of ancient Hiſtory, has farther obſerved [r], "That though there were many Sovereign "Princes in the Primitive Church, who were "Hereticks and Enemies to true Religion, "yet no ancient Pope ſeems to have been of "Opinion that they ought to excommunicate "them. For if they might, why did not Pope "Julius or Pope Liberius excommunicate Con"ſtantine the great Favourer of the Arians? "How did Julian himſelf eſcape the Cenſure "of Liberius? Why did not Damaſus thunder "againſt

" againſt Valens, that fierce Perſecutor of the " Catholicks? Why did not Damaſus cenſure " the Empreſs Juſtina the Patroneſs of Arianiſm? " Why did not Siricius cenſure Theodoſius for that " bloody Fact, for which St. Ambroſe denied " him the Communion? How was it that Pope " Leo (that ſtout and high Pope) had not the " Heart to correct Theodoſius Junior in his Way, " who was the Supporter of his Adverſary " Dioſcorus, and the obſtinate Protector of the " ſecond Epheſine Council, which that Pope ſo " much deteſted? Why did not that Pope ra- " ther compel that Emperor by Cenſures, than " ſupplicate him by Tears? How did ſo many " Popes connive at Theodorick and other Princes " profeſſing Arianiſm at their Door? Why did " not Simplicius or Felix thus puniſh the Em- " peror Zeno, the Supplanter of the Council " of Chalcedon, for which they had ſo much " Zeal? Why did neither Felix, nor Gelaſius, " nor Symmachus, nor Hormiſdas excommunicate " the Emperor Anaſtaſius (yea, did not ſo " much, Pope Gelaſius ſays, as touch his Name,) " for countenancing the Oriental Biſhops in " their Schiſm and refractory Non-compliance " with the Papal Authority? Thoſe Popes did " indeed claſh with their Emperor, but they " expreſsly deny, that they did condemn him " with others whom he did favour. We, ſays " Pope Symmachus, did not excommunicate " you, O Emperor [s], but Acacius. If you " mingle yourſelf, you are not excomunica- " ted by us, but by yourſelf. And, ſays Ge- " laſius [t], If the Emperor is pleaſed to joyn " himſelf with thoſe that are condemned, " that cannot be imputed to us. Wherefore " Baronius doth ill [u] in affirming, Pope Sym- " machus to have anathematized Anaſtaſius; " whereas that Pope plainly denied it even in " thoſe Words which are cited to prove it, " being rightly read: For they are corruptly " [x] written in Baronius and Binius; Ego " (which hath no Senſe, or one contradicto- " ry to his former Aſſertion) being put for " Nego, which is good Senſe, and agreeable " to what he and the other Popes do af- " firm in relation to that Matter," That they did not pretend to anathematize the Emperor with other Hereticks whom they ſo condemned.

INDEED there were Three Reaſons why the Ancients forbore to anathematize their Sovereign Princes. One was that which has juſt now been mentioned, Becauſe they thought they had no Power to excommunicate them in ſuch Manner, but only to deny them the Participation of the Euchariſt. Another Reaſon was, That heretical Princes did in Effect excommunicate themſelves by deſerting the Church, and joyning with Hereticks, and therefore the Church had no Reaſon to pronounce Anathema againſt them. A third Reaſon was, That the doing ſo might have done more Harm than Good to the Church, by irritating and exaſperating the Minds of heretical Princes to perſecute the Church with greater Malice, and thereby many weak Members of the Church might have been ſcandalized and offended. Therefore Biſhop Buckeridge [y] ſays, in ſuch Caſes, where Princes are fierce and cruel, and impatient of Reproof and Indignity, it were perhaps better to abſtain from the Severity of the leſſer Excommunication as well as the greater, rather than for a Biſhop to provoke an armed Fury to turn itſelf both upon him and the Church: It were better to keep the Sword in the Sheath, than to unſheath it to the Detriment and Deſtruction of the Church and Religion. Therefore admitting that of Right Kings and Emperors might be excommunicated, yet the Expediency of the Thing is a very different Queſtion, and remains yet not perfectly reſolved, whether it be for the Advantage of the Church to uſe ſuch Severity againſt her Patrons, her Defenders, and her Advocates, that is, Emperors and Kings.

AND this Conſideration of Expediency made St. Auſtin and others determine, not only in the Caſe of Kings, but the People alſo, That when the whole Multitude were involved in the ſame Crime, either by actual Commiſſion, or abetting, or applauding the Practice of it, that then the Severity of Excommunication, eſpecially in the higheſt Degree, ſhould not be uſed toward them with any ſort of Prudence, for fear it ſhould have either no Effect, or a very bad one. When a ſingle Criminal is ſeparated by Diſcipline from the Society of the Church, the being avoided by the Reſt is a proper Way to bring him to Shame: But when the whole Society, or a conſiderable Part of it is involved in a common Crime, there is no Poſſibility of putting ſuch a Multitude of Criminals out of Countenance, becauſe they will encourage and bear up one another: And therefore in that Caſe to exerciſe Severity of Diſcipline upon them, is only to make it deſpiſed by them, and to throw the Church into Schiſms and Convulſions, by the Oppoſition of the Turbulent and Factious, and to ſcandalize the Weak and Injudicious, who will be led away by the powerful Side, and periſh by rooting out the Tares before the Time. St. Auſtin argues this Matter frequently with the Donatiſts, who were for having a Church without Spot and Wrinkle upon Earth, and for rooting out the

the Tares wherever they found them, whatever Conſequences might attend it. Though he obſerves they did not keep to their own Rule: For they tolerated one Optatus Gildonianus, a moſt infamous Man, noted for his Villanies over all Africk, and did not excommunicate him, for Fear he ſhould have carried off a Multitude with him, and have broken their Communion by new Schiſms and Subdiviſions among themſelves. St. Auſtin [z] does not blame them for this, but only objects it to them as an Argument ad hominem, to ſhew them, that they ought not to blame the Church for doing that in Neceſſity, which they themſelves were forced to do upon the like Occaſion. As to the Practice of the Church, he freely owns, She was forced many times to tolerate the Tares among the Wheat, when they were grown numerous, and it was dangerous to eradicate them by the rough Mean, of ſevere Diſcipline, for Fear of overturning the Church, and deſtroying its Unity and Peace by dangerous Schiſms, and ſcandalizing more weak Souls that Way, than they could hope to gain by the other. It was ſo in Cyprian's Time, he ſays, and it was ſo in his own. He often repeats and urges upon this Occaſion that famous Paſſage of Cyprian in his Book De Lapſis, where ſpeaking of the Reaſons of GOD's viſiting the Church with that terrible Perſecution, he plainly intimates, that ſuch Numbers both of the Clergy and Laity had corrupted their Morals, that good Men could do nothing but mourn, and keep themſelves as well as they could from partaking in their Sins: But that could not then be done by the Exerciſe of Diſcipline, by reaſon of the Numbers of all Orders that were to be Subjects of it; many of thoſe who were to exerciſe it, being themſelves the moſt obnoxious; and it was not to be expected, that they ſhould be very forward to put it in Execution. So that the Diſeaſe being grown too obſtinate and ſtrong to be cured this Way, there remained no other Remedy but the Severity of a divine Judgment, to rectify by an extraordinary Scourge, what human Power could not do in the ordinary Way at ſuch a Juncture. The LORD, ſays Cyprian [a], was therefore minded himſelf to prove his Family, and becauſe a long Peace had corrupted the Diſcipline that was given us from Heaven, the divine Judgment ſtepped in to raiſe up that Faith which was fallen and almoſt laid aſleep. All Mens Minds were ſet upon augmenting their Eſtates; and forgetting what the firſt Chriſtians did in the Times of the Apoſtles, and what they ought always to do, they by an inſatiable Ardor of Covetouſneſs only ſtudied to increaſe their Fortunes. There was no true Religion or Devotion in the Prieſts, no ſincere Faith in the Miniſters, no Mercy in their Works, no Diſcipline in their Morals. Effeminacy and Fraud were reigning Vices both in Men and Women. They made no Scruple to marry with Infidels, and proſtitute the Members of CHRIST to the Heathen. They were equally given both to profane Swearing and Perjury, to contemn their Governors with ſwelling Pride, to curſe themſelves with venemous Tongues, and with inveterate Hatred and Animoſities to quarrel with one another. Many Biſhops, who ought to have been both Monitors and Examples to the reſt, forſook their divine Calling, to take upon them the Management of ſecular Affairs; and leaving their Sees, and deſerting their People, they rambled about other Provinces, ſeeking for ſuch Buſineſs as would bring them in Gain and Advantage. In the mean Time they ſuffered the Poor of the Church to ſtarve, whilſt they themſelves minded nothing but heaping up Riches, and getting of Eſtates by Fraud and Violence, by Uſury and Extortion. What did we not deſerve to ſuffer for ſuch Sins as theſe? Our Crimes required, that for the Correction of our Manners, and the Tryal of our Faith, GOD ſhould bring us to ſeverer Remedies.

CYPRIAN here plainly intimates, that in ſuch a corrupt State of Affairs the Diſcipline of the Church could not be maintained, or be rightly put in Execution. He was forced to endure theſe Collegues of his, who were Covetous, Rapacious, Extortioners, Uſurers, Deſerters, Fraudulent and Cruel. It was impoſſible to exerciſe Church Cenſures with any good Effect, when there were ſuch Multitudes both of Prieſts and People ready to oppoſe them, and diſtract the Church into a Thouſand Schiſms, rather than ſuffer themſelves to be curbed or reformed that Way: And therefore when no other practicable Method was left, the divine Cenſure was neceſſary, as the laſt and only Remedy.

AND this is what St. Auſtin ſo often tells the Donatiſts, that the Church followed the Example of Cyprian in this Matter. When we are not permitted to excommunicate Offenders [b] for the Sake of the Peace and Tranquillity of the Church, we do not therefore neglect neglect the Church, but only tolerate what we would not, to obtain what we would have, using the Caution of our LORD's Command, leſt whilſt we gather out the Tares before the time, we ſhould with them root up the Wheat alſo: Following alſo the Example and Precept of St. Cyprian, who endured with a View and Regard to Peace, many of his Collegues, who were Uſurers, Defrauders, Rapacious, and yet he was not infected with their Contagion. So he ſays again, The Evil are ſometimes to be endured for the Sake of the Good; as the Prophets tolerated thoſe againſt whom they ſpake ſo many hard Things, and did not forſake the Communion of the Sacraments uſed by that People becauſe of them; as our LORD himſelf tolerated wicked Judas to the laſt, and permitted him to partake in the ſame Holy Supper with his innocent Diſciples; as the Apoſtles tolerated thoſe who preached CHRIST out of Envy, which is the Devil's Sin; and as Cyprian tolerated the Covetouſneſs of his Fellow-Biſhops, which he himſelf, according to the Apoſtle, ſtyles Idolatry. St. Auſtin frequently urges this Example of Cyprian [c] in other Places. And he argues farther from the Neceſſity of the Practice from the Reaſon and Nature of the Thing itſelf, and from the Precepts of the Goſpel. In his Book againſt Parmenian he ſhews at large when Excommunication or Anathematizing is to be uſed, and when not. It may be uſed, when there is no Danger of rooting up the Wheat with the Tares [d]: That is, When a Man's Crime is ſo notorious to all, and appears ſo execrable to all, that he has no Defenders, or not ſo many or ſo powerful as to make a Schiſm, then the Severity of Diſcipline ought not to ſleep; for then it will be effectual to correct his Wickedneſs, when all charitably and unanimouſly joyn to confirm the Sentence. And then it is that there is no Danger hereby of prejudicing Peace and Unity, or of doing Harm to the Wheat, when the whole Multitude or Congregation of the Church is free from the Crime that is anathematized. For then they will be ready to aſſiſt the Biſhop in his Correction, and not the Criminal in his Reſiſtance. Then they will abſtain from his Society for his Good, and no one will ſo much as eat with him, not out of Enmity, but for Brotherly Coercion. Then he alſo will be ſmitten with Fear, and cured by Shame, when he ſees himſelf anathematized by the whole Church, and can find no Company to encourage him to rejoyce in his Crime, or help him to inſult the Vertuous, and therefore, he ſays, the Apoſtle requires, That ſuch an one's Puniſhment or Cenſure ſhould be inflicted of many. For a Cenſure is of no Advantage, except when ſuch an one is corrected, as has not a Multitude [e] on his Side to uphold him. But when the ſame Diſeaſe has ſeized a Multitude, good Men in that Caſe can do nothing farther but grieve and mourn. And therefore the ſame Apoſtle, when he found a Multitude among the Corinthians, who were defiled with Uncleanneſs, and Laſciviouſneſs, and Fornication, writing to them in his ſecond Epiſtle, he does not command them, With ſuch not to eat, as he had done before: For they were many, and he could not now ſay, If any Brother be a notorious Fornicator, or an Idolater, or Covetous, or the like, with ſuch an one no not to eat: But he ſays, Leſt when I come again, my God will humble me among you, and I ſhall bewail many who have ſinned, and have not repented of the Uncleanneſs, and Laſciviouſneſs, and Fornication, which they have committed: Threatning them by his Bewailing, that they ſhould be puniſhed by the Divine Scourge, rather than that Puniſhment which conſiſted in Mens withdrawing from their Society. His Mourning would obtain of the LORD a Scourge to correct them, who could not now by reaſon of their Multitude be corrected in ſuch Manner, as that others ſhould abſtain from their Society, and make them aſhamed, as it may be done in the Caſe of a ſingle Brother, who is noted for a Crime, from which all the reſt are free. And indeed when the Contagion of Sin has invaded a whole Multitude, it is then neceſſary for GOD to viſit them out of Mercy with the Severity of his own Divine Cenſure: For in that Caſe Exhortations to avoid the Company of Sinners are not only vain, but pernicious and ſacrilegious, becauſe impious and proud, tending more to diſturb good Men that are Weak, than to correct the Stubbornneſs and Animoſity of the Evil. And therefore he obſerves that St. Paul treated the ſingle inceſtuous Corinthian, and the Multitude that denied the Reſurrection [f] in a different Way: He did not command the Corinthians to make a corporal Separation from them, for they were many, not like that one, who had married his Father's Wife, whom he judged worthy of a freer Cenſure and Excommunication, nication. There was one Way to be taken with a ſingle Perſon, another to cure and heal a Multitude, leſt if the People were divided from one another by Parties, the Wheat alſo ſhould be rooted up by the Miſchief of Schiſm. And therefore the Apoſtle does not injoyn thoſe who believed the Reſurrection, to ſeparate corporally from thoſe who did not believe it in the ſame People, though he never ceaſes to ſeparate them ſpiritually, by frequent Admonitions to beware of joyning in their impious Opinions. He ſays farther, when ſuch evil Men are tolerated in the Church, good Men, who are diſpleaſed with them, and know not how to mend them, neither dare [g] to root out the Tares before the Time of the Harveſt, for Fear they ſhould root up the Wheat alſo, do not communicate with their wicked Deeds, but with the Altar of CHRIST: So that they are not only not polluted by them, but deſerve Divine Praiſe, becauſe rather than the Name of CHRIST ſhould be blaſphemed by horrible Schiſms, they tolerate for the Good of Unity, what they otherwiſe hate for the Love of Equity. This he ſhews to be a Thing Praiſeworthy from various Examples both of the Old and New Teſtament, and the Practice of our Saviour and his Apoſtles, which are too numerous and long to be here inſerted. He ſays more briefly in another Epiſtle [h], That the Wicked do not hurt the Good in the Church, though they be notoriouſly evil, if either there be no Power to caſt them out of Communion, or ſome Conſiderations of preſerving Peace hinder the doing of it. And again [i], Although there be ſome whom we cannot correct, and Neceſſity compels us for the Sake of others to allow them to communicate in the Divine Sacraments, yet we do not communicate with them in their Sins, which is never done but by favouring and conſenting to them. For we only tolerate them in the Church as Tares among the Wheat, and as Chaff mingled with the Corn in the Floor of Unity, and as bad Fiſh among the good incloſed in the Nets of the Word and Sacraments, till the Time of Harveſt or Winnowing or Drawing to Shore comes; leſt with them we ſhould root up the Wheat; or by ſeparating the Corn in the Floor before the Time, rather expoſe it to the Fowls of the Air to devour it, than purge it to be laid up in the Garner; or ſhould break the Nets by Schiſms, and by over-abundant Caution to caſt out the bad Fiſh, ſhould open a Way of pernicious Liberty for the reſt to return into the Sea again. For this Reaſon our LORD made uſe of theſe and the like Parables to confirm the Forbearance of his Servants, leſt if the Good ſhould think themſelves to blame for mingling with Evil, they ſhould either deſtroy the Weak by human and haſty Diſſenſions, or themſelves become weak and periſh. He purſues the ſame Argument at large in his Epiſtle to Macrobius [k], and his Books againſt Gaudentius [l], and many other Places: But what I have already produced, abundantly ſhews his Senſe of this Matter, and not only his Senſe, but the concurrent Opinion and Practice of the whole African Church both in the Time of Cyprian, and the Collation of Carthage, to which he refers. So that upon the whole Matter their Opinions appears plainly to be this, That when a Multitude of Sinners in the Church made it dangerous to exerciſe Diſcipline upon them, it was more expedient to endure the Bad among the Good, rather than by trying to purge them out by the Severity of Cenſures, to endanger breaking of the Nets, and involve the Church in terrible Schiſms, to the Scandal of the Weak, and no Benefit to the Church, whilſt together with the Tares they rooted up the Wheat alſo. And this Practice in difficult Times, is generlly allowed to be expedient by Modern Writers, among whom the Learned Reader may conſult [m] Richerius, Eſtius and Lyra. Grotius [n] and Biſhop Taylor [o], and Dr. Whitby [p], and Rivet [q]: For I know of none but Peter Martyr, who maintains the contrary Opinion [r] againſt St. Auſtin. But I return to the Ancients and their Practice.

of all Sacraments, for the Faults of a ſingle Criminal, was ſo much unknown to the Ancients, that St. Auſtin was amazed, when he heard of a young raſh African Biſhop, who in his warm Zeal, for the ſingle Offence of one Claſſicianus, and that not evidently proved, had anathematized both him and his whole Family together. Complaint of the Thing being made to St. Auſtin, he thus writes to the Biſhop, to expoſtulate with him upon the Fact in theſe Terms: Being in great Concern [s] of Mind, and my Heart fluctuating as in a Tempeſt within me, I could not but write to your Charity, to deſire you to inform me, (if you have any certain Grounds of Reaſon, or Authority of Scripture for your Practice) How a Son can rightly be anathematized for his Father's Sin, or a Wife for her Husband's, or a Servant for his Maſter's; or why a Child, that is yet unborn, if he happens to be born in the Family while it lies under Anathema, may not have the Benefit of the Laver of Regeneration in the Article of Death? For this is not a corporal Puniſhment, with which we read ſome Deſpiſers of GOD were ſlain with their whole Families, though the Families were not Partakers in their Crimes. Then indeed mortal Bodies, which muſt otherwiſe ſhortly have died, were ſlain for to ſtrike a Terror into the Living. But ſpiritual Puniſhment, of which it is ſaid, Whatſoever thou ſhalt bind on Earth, ſhall be bound in Heaven, this alſo binds Souls, of whom it is written, The Soul of the Father is mine, and the Soul of the Son is mine: The Soul that ſinneth, it ſhall die. For my part I can give no juſt Reaſon for ſuch Anathema's, and therefore I have never dared to uſe them, even when I have been moſt highly provoked by the clamorous Crime of ſome, committed inſolently againſt the Church. If GOD has revealed it unto you, I deſpiſe not your Youth, but ſhall be ready to learn, how we can give a juſt Reaſon either to GOD or Man, for inflicting ſpiritual Puniſhments upon innocent Souls for the Sin of another, from whom they derived no Original Sin, as they do from Adam, in whom all have ſinned. But if you can give no good Reaſon for it, why do you that out of an unadviſed and precipitate Commotion of Mind, in Defence of which, if any Man asks you a Reaſon, you have nothing to anſwer? From this decent Reproof given to the head-ſtrong Paſſion of this young Biſhop, and his intemperate Zeal in Anathematizing a whole Family for the Crime of the Maſter only, we may conclude there was no ſuch allowed Practice in the Church in St. Auſtin's Time, as excommunicating the Innocent with the Guilty, though the Innocent might have ſome near Relation to, or unavoidable Dependance on the offending Parties: Much leſs was it Cuſtomary then to lay whole Bodies, Churches or Nations under Interdict, and forbid them the Uſe of the Sacraments, merely to curb or reſtrain the Contumacy of others, of which they were wholly innocent, and no ways Partakers. Which was a monſtrous and novel Abuſe of Diſcipline, peculiar to the tyrannical Times of the Papacy, and utterly unknown to former Ages. [t] Baronius indeed brings a ſingle Inſtance of it out of the Annals of France, where it is ſaid, That Pope Agapetus, An. 535, threatned King Clotarius to put his Kingdom under Interdict, unleſs he made Satisfaction for a barbarous and ſacrilegious Murder committed by him in the Church upon one Gualter de Yvetot, who carried the Popes Letters of Recommendation to him. But as this Story is only told by Modern Writers, ſuch as Du Haillan, whom Baronius quotes, and Gaguinas, Gillius and Tillius, added by Spondanus, and has not the Authority of any ancient Writer; and has ſomething alſo in the Narration itſelf, which deſtroys its Credit with Judicious Men; Spondanus owns [u], there are many Learned Men who reject it as a Fable, prevailing only by the Credulity of the French Nation for many Ages. And therefore it is not worthy to be mentioned as a Piece of ancient Hiſtory in the Caſe before us.

SOME date the Original of Interdicts from the Time of Alexander III. about the Year 1160. And indeed about this Time they began to be very frequent. Habertus [x] ſays, Morinus carries them a little higher to the Time of Pope Hildebrand or Gregory VII, who is moſt likely to be the Father of them [y], for they are ſometimes mentioned in his Epiſtles. Habertus himſelf pretends to make them as ancient as St. Baſil. But the Place [z] out of Baſil's Epiſtles, ſays no more, but that when a whole Church make themſelves Partakers of another Man's Sins, they may be cenſured altogether. Which is very far from the indiſcriminating Cenſure of an Interdict, which condemns a whole Nation, and that commonly for no Crime, but rather their Duty, for adhering conſcientiouſly to their natural Allegiance due to their Lawful Sovereigns, when the Pope is pleaſed to excommunicate and depoſe them under Pretence of the Plenitude of Eccleſiaſtical Power, as any one that would write the Hiſtory of Interdicts, might eaſily demonſtrate. Whatever St. Baſil meant, it is certain he had not this in his Thoughts: Neither was it the uſual Practice of the Church to anathematize whole Bodies of Men, though guilty, unleſs it was for Terror's Sake, as has been ſhewn in in the foregoing Section.

SECT. 8. The Danger of Excommunicating innocent Persons.

AS to innocent Persons, all Care imaginable was taken, that the Censures of the Church should not be abused by any indiscreet Application of them to the Condemnation of the Guiltless. In which Case an unjust Sentence was thought to recoil upon the Head of him that executed it. Thus Firmilian [a] told Pope Stephen, That in cutting off others who did not deserve it, he cut off himself. Be not deceived; for he is the true Schismatick, who makes himself an Apostate from the Communion of the Ecclesiastical Unity. For while you think you can excommunicate all others, you only excommunicate yourself from them. In like Manner Polycrates, Bishop of Ephesus, answered Pope Victor, when he threatned to excommunicate him and all the Asiatick Churches for not observing Easter in the Manner as they did at Rome: He was not afraid of his Menaces, he told him [b], for he had learned of those that were greater than he, to obey GOD rather than Man. And Eusebius adds, That when Victor persisted still in this headstrong Resolution, Irenæus and several other Bishops wrote very sharply to him, πλησιχώτερον, reproving him for his unwarrantable Abuse of the Church Censures. It is a noted Saying in the Index to the Works of Pope Gregory I. [c], upon this account, If any one excommunicate another unjustly, he does not condemn him, but himself. Though the Romanists commonly magnify another Saying of his, transcribed into the Canon-Law [d], That the Sentence of the Shepherd is to be dreaded, whether it be just or unjust. Which can certainly never be true, but in a very doubtful Case. It is much more to the Purpose, what Gratian in the same Question alledges from St. Austin [e], That a Man had need be very careful whom he binds on Earth: For unjust Bonds will be loosed by the Justice of Heaven: And not only so, but turn to the Condemnation of him that imposes them: For though rash Judgment often hurts not him, who is rashly judged [f]; yet the Rashness of him that judges rashly, will turn to his own Disadvantage. In the mean time it is no Detriment [g] to a Man, to have his Name struck out of the Diptychs of the Church by humane Ignorance, if an evil Conscience do not blot him out of the Book of Life. Thus far St. Austin in several Places alledged by Gratian, to which may be added what he cites out of the foresaid Place of Gregory [h], That he deprives himself of the Power of Binding and Loosing, who exercises it according to his arbitrary Will, and not according to the Deserts of those that are under his Government. He means, That an Excommunication unjustly pronounced, is of no Force against one that deserves it not; neither is the Absolution of an impenitent Sinner any better; because they are both done Clave erante, by a Misapplication of the Keys, in which Case, as The Gloss upon the Law [i] words it, The Party so bound is not bound before GOD: For it often happens, that by this Means a Man is excommunicated out of the Church Militant, who notwithstanding is in the Church Triumphant. And such Excommunications, says Cardinal Tolet, bind neither [k] before GOD nor the Church.

SECT. 9. No one to be excommunicated without being first heard, and allow'd to speak for himself.

Now to prevent this Inconvenience, the ancient Church prescribed several useful Rules to be observed in the Matter of Excommunication. For besides that ordinarily no one was to be censured without a previous Admonition, as has been noted [*] before, it was likewise ordered, That no Man should be condemned in his Absence, without being allowed Liberty to answer for himself, unless he contumaciously refused to appear. Let Ecclesiastical Judges beware, says the Council of Carthage [l], that they never pronounce Sentence against any one that is absent when his Cause is under Debate: Otherwise the Sentence shall be void, and they shall give an Account of their Action to the Synod. Upon this Ground St. Austin [m] refutes the Censure which the Donatists pretended to pass upon Cecilian Bishop of Carthage, because he was absent, and never examined by them before they proceeded to condemn him.

SECT. 10.
Nor without legal Conviction, either by his own Confeſſion; or credible Evidence of Witneſſes, againſt whom there was no Exception; or ſuch Notoriety of the Fact as made a Man liable to Excommunication ipſo facto, without any formal Denunciation.

ANOTHER Rule obſerved in this Caſe was, That no one ſhould be excommunicated, unleſs he ſtood legally convicted of his Crime. Which might be three Ways; 1. By his own Confeſſion. 2. By the credible Evidence of ſuch Witneſſes, as could not juſtly be excepted againſt, or ſuſpected of bearing falſe Teſtimony. 3 By ſuch Notoriety of the Fact, as made a Man liable to Excommunication ipſo facto, without any farther Proceſs or formal Denunciation: As in the Caſe of thoſe that fell by Offering Sacrifice in Time of Perſecution: Here was no need in this Caſe either of their own Confeſſion, or Conviction by Witneſſes: For their Crime was notorious to all the World, and it needed no formal Proceſs or Examination of Witneſſes to condemn them: Neither was there any need of a formal Sentence of Excommunication to be pronounced againſt them: For they ſtood excommunicated ipſo facto, as Learned Men [n] ſtile it; the Fact itſelf being evident and notorious to all, was ſufficient to declare them excommunicate, as having forfeited all Right to the Privileges of Chriſtian Communion. In other Caſes, where the Matter was not ſo clear, they required either the Confeſſion of the Party himſelf, or the legal Evidence of unexceptionable Witneſſes. Thus St. Auſtin [o] declares: We cannot exclude any one from Communion, except he either voluntarily confeſs his Crime himſelf, or be noted and convicted in ſome ſecular or Eccleſiaſtical Judgment. For who dare to aſſume both to himſelf, to be both Accuſer and Judge? We are not to exclude any Man, ſays Pope Innocent [p] upon bare Suſpicions. Where the Crime is not evident, ſays Origen [q], we can caſt no Man out of the Church, leſt while we root out the Tares, we root up the Wheat alſo. And the ſame Reaſon is given by St. Auſtin in the Place now cited. Juſtinian [r] confirmed this Rule of the Church by a Civil Sanction, not only forbidding all Biſhops and Presbyters to ſegregate any Man from the Communion before his Crime was evidently proved againſt him, but ordering ſuch an one immediately to be reſtored to Communion, and the Miniſter who ſuſpended him, to be ſuſpended himſelf by his Superior, ut quod injuſte fecit, juſte juſtineat, that he may juſtly ſuffer the ſame Puniſhment which he unjuſtly inflicted on the other. As therefore they were not to excommunicate a whole Multitude, though their Crimes were notorious; ſo neither were they to excommunicate a ſingle Criminal, unleſs his Crime could be made evident to the Multitude, that they might deteſt and abhor it: Then the Severity of Diſcipline was not to ſleep [s], according to St. Auſtin's Rule: [t] If the Criminal was accuſed and alſo convicted by evident Proofs and Teſtimony before the Judge, then the Judge might proceed againſt him lawfully, to puniſh, correct, excommunicate or degrade him. But otherwiſe, without ſuch legal Conviction, no Biſhop could ſuſpend a Clerk from Communion, unleſs he contumaciouſly refuſed to appear to have his Cauſe examined before him. And this, St. Auſtin [u] ſays, was determined in Council for greater Security againſt Arbitrary Proceedings. And it is obſervable in this Caſe, that the Canons never allowed [x] the Teſtimony of one ſingle Witneſs as ſufficient Evidence to convict a Criminal; grounding upon that Rule in the Divine Law, In the Mouth of two or three Witneſſes ſhall every Word be eſtabliſhed. Nay, though it were a Biſhop or Presbyter that accuſed any Man, barely upon his own Knowledge, his Teſtimony was not ſufficient ground to proceed againſt him to Excommunication. For as we have heard St. Auſtin ſay but juſt now, No Man could be both Accuſer and Judge. And therefore it was provided by the Council of Vaiſon [y], That though a Biſhop knew a Man to be a Criminal, yet if he alone was Privy to his Crime, and could make no other Proof of it, he ſhould not ſo much as publiſh it, but deal privately with the Man by Admonition to bring him to Repentance. But if notwithſtanding his Admonition he

he would perſiſt pertinacious, and offer himſelf publickly to communicate, the Biſhop ſhould not have Power to excommunicate or caſt him wholly out of the Church, but only injoin him to recede for a Time out of Reſpect to the Biſhop's Perſon, whilſt he continued in the Communion of all thoſe who knew nothing of his Offences. And even this was a greater Deference paid to the ſingle Teſtimony of a Biſhop, than was allowed to the African Churches. For there, by a Rule of the Seventh Council of Carthage, made in St. Auſtin's Time [z], If a Man confeſſed his Crime to a Biſhop, and afterwards denied it, the Biſhop was not to think he had any Injury done him, if his ſingle Evidence was not taken by his Fellow-Biſhops to the Man's Condemnation: And if in ſuch a Caſe the Biſhop preſumed to excommunicate him, upon a Scruple of Conſcience that he could not communicate with ſuch an one, the Biſhop himſelf was not to communicate with other Biſhops, that he might learn to be more cautious in ſaying that againſt any Man, which he could not prove by any other Evidence but his own Teſtimony. So tender were theſe holy Biſhops of condemning any Man without ſufficient and legal Evidence to convict him. St. Auſtin, who was preſent in this Council, tells a remarkable Story [a] of a Caſe of this Nature, that happened between Boniface, one of his Presbyters, and a Man that was accuſed by him. Having no ſufficient Evidence, but only their ſingle Teſtimony on either Side, he would not determine the Matter between them, but ordered them both to go to the Sepulchre of Felix the Martyr, in Hopes that the Cauſe might be decided by ſome apparent Miracle and Divine Judgment, where humane Judgment could not determine it, as he ſaid he had known it done in a Caſe of Theft at Milan. He adds, That both the Eccleſiaſtical and Civil Law forbad the condemning any Man upon the Evidence of a ſingle Witneſs, as ſufficient to convict him. The Eccleſiaſtical Law we have already heard; and for the Civil Law, it is probable he refers to a Decree of Conſtantine now extant in the Theodoſian Code [b], which preciſely enjoyns all Judges not to determine any Cauſe upon the Evidence of a ſingle Witneſs, though it were even a Senator that was the Deponent. Which Gothofred compares to a noted Saying among the old Romans, related by Plutarch, That it was not right to give Credit to one Witneſs, though it were Cato himſelf that gave Teſtimony. Whence Gothofred alſo with great Reaſon concludes [c], That the Law which goes under the Name of Conſtantine at the End of the Theodoſian Code, allowing the ſingle Teſtimony of a Biſhop to be good Evidence, is a ſpurious Law, (though it be inſerted into the Capitular [d] of Charles the Great, and Gratian's Decree) becauſe it contradicts all other Laws both Eccleſiaſtical and Civil upon this Subject.

IT is worth obſerving farther, That to ſecure the Innocence of Vertuous Men from being unjuſtly traduced and cenſured, there were many Laws forbidding the Teſtimony of Hereticks, or other ſuſpected and infamous Perſons to be accepted in Judgment, of which becauſe I have had Occaſion to diſcourſe [*] elſewhere, I ſay no more in this Place. But from all that has now been ſaid it ſufficiently appears, that though the Ancients were very ſtrict and ſevere in their Diſcipline, yet they were equally cautious, that the Severity of it ſhould not affect the Innocent: And every Man was preſumed to be Innocent, till a juſt and legal Proof could be made againſt him: Nor was this an Harm to the Church, it being better that ſome Vicious Men ſhould eſcape, than that Vertuous Men ſhould be expoſed to the greateſt of Puniſhments upon bare Suſpicion, or the arbitrary Pleaſure of any one Man; for which Reaſon alſo, as I have often noted, the Church ſtill allowed an Appeal from the unjuſt Sentence of any Biſhop to the Re-examination of a Provincial Council.

ANOTHER Sort of Perſons whom the Cenſures of the Church ſeldom or never touched, were Minors, or Children under Age: There being more proper Puniſhments thought fit for them, ſuch as fatherly Rebukes and corporal Correction: And to inflict the higheſt Cenſures upon ſuch, was rather thought a leſſening of Authority, and bringing Contempt upon the Diſcipline of the Church. Therefore Socrates obſerves of Arſenius the Egyptian Abbot, That he was never uſed to excommunicate any Junior Monks, but only thoſe that had made a greater Proficiency: For a young Man [e] when he is excommunicated, only becomes a Deſpiſer. Palladius obſerves the ſame of the Diſcipline of the great Church of Mount Nitria [f], That they had three Whips hanged up in the Church, one for chaſtizing the offending Monks, another for Robbers, and a third for Strangers that came accidentally, and behaved themſelves diſorderly disorderly among them. So in the Rule of Isidore of Sevil one Article [g] is, That they who were in their Minority, should not be punished with Excommunication, but according to the Quality of their Negligence or Offence be corrected with congruous Stripes. The late Author of the Historia Flagellantium [h] cites the Rule of Macarius [i], and that of St. Benedict [k], and Aurelian [l], and Gregory the Great to the same [m] Purpose. And Cyprian in the Life of Cæsarius Arelatensis says, That Bishop observed this Method both with Slaves and Freemen, that when they were to be scourged for their Faults, they would suffer Forty Stripes save one, according as the Law appointed. The Council of Agde [n] orders the same Punishment not only for Junior Monks, but also for the Inferior Clergy. And the Council of Mascon [o] particularly insists upon the Number of Forty Stripes save one. The Council of Vannes [p] repeats the Canon of Agde. And the Council of Epone speaks [q] of Stripes, as the peculiar Punishment of the Minor Clergy, for the same Crimes that were punished with Excommunication for a whole Year in the Superior Clergy. Nor is this to be wondred at in these Councils, since St. Austin [r] assures us, this Kind of Punishment by Stripes was commonly used not only by Schoolmasters and Parents, but by Bishops in their Consistories also. And the plain Reason of all this seems to be, not so much the Distinction of Crimes, as the Distinction of Age and Quality in the Persons.

ANOTHER Enquiry may be made concerning Persons deceased; Whether ever any Excommunication was inflicted on Men after Death, if they died in the Peace and Communion of the Church? It has already been observed [*], That when Men died impenitent under the Bonds of Excommunication unrelaxed, a necessary Consequence of that was the denying them Christian Burial, and all future Memorial in the Prayers and Oblations of the Church, by striking their Names out of the Diptychs or holy Books, which kept the Memorial of such as died in the Peace and Communion of the Church. But the Question here is not about those that died so excommunicate, but those that died in the visible Communion and external Peace of the Church, and under no Ecclesiastical Censure; whether upon any new Discovery of their Errors or Crimes after Death, they were liable to be excommunicated, and after what Manner that Censure was passed upon them? Now the Resolution of this Question in Part, will easily be given from a famous Case in Cyprian concerning one Geminius Victor, who contrary to the Rule of a Council, had made Geminius Faustinus a Guardian or Trustee by his last Will and Testament; for which Transgression, Cyprian, after his Death, wrote to the Church of Furni, where he had lived, to put the Sentence of the Council in Execution against him; telling them, That since Victor [s] had presumed, against the Rule made in Council, to appoint Geminius Faustinus, one of the Presbyters of the Church, his Trustee, for this Offence no Oblation ought to be made for his Death, nor any Prayer to be offered in his Name in the Church, according to the Custom of Praying then for all that were departed in the Faith. This was a plain Excommunication of him after Death, by erasing his Name out of the Diptychs of the Church. Such another Decree we find in the African Code against any Bishop that should make Hereticks or Heathens his Heirs, whether they were of his own Kindred or not: Let such an one [t] be anathematized after Death, and let not his Name be written or recited among the Priests of GOD. With this agrees what St. Austin says more than once concerning Cecilian Bishop of Carthage, That if the Things which the Donatists objected against him were true, and they could evidently prove them, the Catholicks [u] were ready to anathematize him after Death. And there want not in Fact several Instances of this Practice. For thus Origen, as Socrates says [x], was excommunicated Two hundred Years after his Death by Theophilus Bishop of Alexandria. And Theodorus of Mopsuestia was so anathematized by the Fifth General Council [y] as appears from Evagrius, and the Letters of Justinian, and the Acts of the Council.

cil. In like manner the Sixth General Council [z] anathematized Pope Honorius as a Monotholite after Death, together with Cyrus Bishop of Alexandria, and Theodorus Bishop of Pharan, and Sergius, Pyrrhus, Petrus and Paulus, Bishops of Constantinople, all whose Names were erased out of the sacred Diptychs after Death by the Order of that Council. It is a grand Dispute indeed among the Gentlemen of the Church of Rome, Whether the Name of their Pope Honorius ought to stand in that Black List? (Baronius [a] affirming, That the Acts of the Council, where his Name is inserted are corrupted; and Combefis [b] on the other hand, writing a whole Volume against Baronius to prove them genuine:) But however that Matter be, there is no Dispute about all the rest; but that they were certainly anathematized by that Council after Death. Sometimes Men were unjustly excommunicated either living or dead: And then the Way to restore them to the Communion of the Church, was, to insert their Names into the Diptychs, whence they had been expunged before. Thus Theodoret [c] says, Atticus restored the Name of Chrysostom, after it had for many Years been left out. And John Bishop of Constantinople in a Synod, An. 518, restored the Names of Pope Leo, and Euthemius, and Macedonius, and the Council of Chalcedon, which by the Fraud of Anastasius the Emperor, who was an Eutychian Heretick, had all been cast out of the Diptychs of the Church [d]. This was the Method both of Condemning and Restoring Men to the Communion of the Church after Death. To deny them Christian Burial, or not to receive their Oblations, or to erase their Names out of the Diptychs, was the same Thing as to declare them anathematized, and cast out of the Communion of the Faithful, with whom the Church maintained Communion, after Death. And so far we have considered the Persons, that might or might not be the Subjects of Ecclesiastical Censures, whether living or dead.

SECT. 13. The Censures of the Church not to be inflicted for small Offences.

THE next Enquiry is concerning the Crimes for which these Censures might be inflicted. And here the Canons are wont to make a very exact and nice Distinction in general between the greater and lesser Sins, the former only being such as were regarded in the Business of Excommunication. For this being the severest of all Punishments, was not to be inflicted for every Trifle. Therefore Bishops, says the Council of Agde [e], must have a great Regard to Sacerdotal Moderation, and not presume to excommunicate either the Innocent or those that are guilty only of small Offences Otherwise they are liable to be admonished by the neighbouring Bishops of the Province; and if they obey not, the Bishops of the Province are to refuse them their Communion till the next Synod. Some Copies read it, They shall not be denied Communion till the next Synod: And then it refers to the Persons excommunicated, That though they were rashly cast out of the Church for slight Causes by their own Bishops, the rest of the Bishops should not deny them Communion, till their Cause was heard in a Synod. The Fifth Council of Orleance has a like Order, That no Bishop shall [f] suspend any of the Faithful from the Communion for little and slight Causes, but only for those Crimes for which the ancient Fathers command Offenders to be cast out of the Church. And this is repeated in the Council of Arvern or Clermont [g] held about the same Time, An. 549.

SECT. 14. What the Ancients meant by small Offences in this Matter, and how they distinguished them from the greater.

BUT it may be asked, What the ancient Fathers meant by slight Causes and small Offences in this Business of Ecclesiastical Censure? And how they distingnished these from those greater Crimes, which made Men liable to Excommunication, and publick Penance in the Church? The right understanding of these Things will be of great Use, not only to give us a clear View of the Nature of Ecclesiastical Discipline, but also to shew the Vanity of a late Distinction between Mortal and Venial Sin, as used by the Romanists, to bring all Sins that are Mortal under the Necessity of Auricular Confession, and private Absolution. Now it is certain the Ancients did not believe any Sins to be Venial, as that signifies needing no Pardon, but in that Sense all Sins to be Mortal in their own Nature, and such as we have need to ask Pardon for at the Hands of GOD. But because there are some Sins of humane Frailty and Inadvertency in the best of Men, and Sins of daily Incursion, without which no Man lives: These they usually call Venial Sins, as needing no other Repentance, but a general Confession; nor any other Pardon, but what is daily granted by GOD to good Men, upon their daily Prayers and Acknowledgment of their Offences. Besides these, there are other Sins of Willfullness, fullneſs, and of a more malignant Nature, which if continued in, without a particular Repentance and Reformation, will prove Mortal, and exclude Men from the Kingdom of Heaven: And yet many of theſe were ſuch, as did not ordinarily bring Men under the higheſt Cenſures of the Church, but were to be cured only by general Reproofs and Exhortations to Repentance. Theſe alſo in like manner, with reſpect to the Severity of Church Diſcipline, which did not reach them, were ſometimes termed leſſer and Venial Sins, in Oppoſition to thoſe yet more heinous Sins, which brought Men under Excommunication and publick Penance to make Expiation and Atonement for them. Theſe Sins were Mortal in their own Nature, and Fatal in the Effect to the Sinner: But yet the Church for many Reaſons was obliged ſometimes to let them paſs, without any other Cenſures than a Paſtoral Admonition. But there was a third Sort of Sins both of a malignant, and publick, and flagrant Nature, of which Sinners might eaſily be impleaded and convicted: And theſe were thoſe great Sins, (as they are uſually termed in Oppoſition to both the forementioned Kinds) on which the higheſt Severities of Church Diſcipline were exerciſed, unleſs where the Multitude of Sinners, or their Abettors, or the Danger of Schiſm (as has been noted before) made the Thing impracticable and unfeaſible. This threefold Diſtinction of Sins, is accurately noted by St. Auſtin in his Book of Faith and Works: He ſays, There [b] are ſome Sins ſo great, as to deſerve to be puniſhed with Excommunication, according to that of the Apoſtle, To deliver ſuch an one unto Satan for the Deſtruction of the Fleſh, that the Spirit may be ſaved in the Day of the Lord. Again, There are other Sins, which are not to be cured by that Humiliation of Penance, which is impoſed upon thoſe who are properly called Penitents in the Church, but by certain Medicines of Reproof, according to that of our LORD, Tell him of his Fault between him and thee alone; if he hear thee, thou haſt gained thy Brother. Laſtly, there are other Sins, for which He has left us a daily Cure in that Prayer, wherein he hath taught us to ſay, Forgive us our Treſpaſſes, as we forgive them that treſpaſs againſt us. By this it is plain, that all great and deadly Sins did not bring Men under the publick Cenſure of Excommunication, but only thoſe of the firſt Kind, which were of the higheſt Nature. In other Places he diſtinguiſhes Sins only into two Kinds, greater and leſſer; Sins that obliged Men to do publick Penance, and Sins that were pardoned by daily Prayer, Weeping, Faſting, Giving and Forgiving, without any Obligation to do publick Penance for them. The former he calls Mortal Sins, and the other Venial; not becauſe they were not Mortal in their own Nature, but becauſe they were pardoned without the Solemnity of a publick Repentance. So many great Sins, ſuch as Anger, and evil Thoughts, and evil Speaking, and Exceſs in the Uſe of lawful Things, are reckoned by him in the Number of leſſer Sins, in Compariſon of ſuch great and deadly Sins, as Murder, and Theft, and Adultery. He that is free, ſays he [i], from great and Mortal Sins, ſuch as the Crimes of Murder, Theft, and Adultery, yet being liable to many leſſer Sins of the Tongue, and Thoughts, and immoderate Uſe of lawful Things, he thereupon exerciſes himſelf in making true Confeſſion of them, and comes to the Light by performing good Works, becauſe a Multitude of leſſer Sins, if they be neglected, kill the Soul. Many ſmall Drops fill a River: A Grain of Sand is but a ſmall Thing, but many Grains added together, will load and oppreſs us. The Pump of a Ship, if it be neglected, will do the ſame thing as a boiſterous Wave. It enters by little and little at the Pump, but by long entring, and never draining, at laſt it ſinks the Ship. And what is it to drain the Soul, but by good Works, ſuch as Mourning, and Faſting, and Giving and Forgiving, to take Care that ſuch Sins do not overwhelm the Soul? The leſſer Sins, he here ſpeaks of, were not only Sins of Inadvertency and common human Frailty, but Sins of an higher Nature: And yet he calls them little Sins in Compariſon of thoſe great and deadly Sins of Adultery and Murder, for which Men underwent publick Penance, which they did not for theſe other Sins, which yet would prove fatal, unleſs Men took Care by Confeſſion and godly Sorrow and Faſting, and Almſdeeds, and Charity to their Enemies, to clear themſelves of them. In another Place [k] he ſpeaks of two Sorts of Repentance for two Sorts of Sins committed after Baptiſm, which he thus diſtinguiſhes:

[b] Aug. de Fide & Operibus. cap. 26. Niſi eſſent quædam ita gravia, ut etiam Excommunicatione plectenda ſint, non diceret Apoſtolus: Congregatis vobis & meo ſpiritu, tradere ejuſmodi hominem Satanæ, &c. Item niſi eſſent quædam non ea humilitate Pœnitentiæ ſananda, qualis in Eccleſia datur eis qui proprie Pœnitentes vocantur, ſed quibuſdam correptionum medicamentis, non diceret ipſe Dominus, Corripe inter te & ipſum ſolum, &c. Illa vero Pœnitentia luctuoſa eſt, grave vulnus eſt: Adulterium fortè commiſſum eſt, forte Homicidium, forte Sacrilegium. Gravis res, grave vulnus, Lethale, Mortiferum, ſed omnipotens Medicus, &c. Vid. Hom. 50. ibid. cap. 3.

ſtinguiſhes: There is one Sort of Repentance which is to be performed every Day. And whence can we ſhew that? I cannot better ſhew it, than from the daily Prayer, where our LORD hath taught us to pray, and ſhewed us what we are to ſay unto the Father in theſe Words, Forgive us our Treſpaſſes, as we forgive them that treſpaſs againſt us. There is another more weighty and mournful Sort of Repentance, from which Men are properly called Penitents in the Church: By which they are ſequeſtred from partaking of the Sacrament of the Altar, leſt they ſhould eat and drink Damnation to themſelves. This is a grievous Repentance, the Wound is very grievous, perhaps Adultery, or Murder, or Sacrilege has been committed. This is a grievous Thing, a grievous Wound, mortal and deadly, but the Phyſician is Almighty. Here again is a plain Diſtinction between ſuch great Sins as Adultery, Sacrilege, and Murder, for which Men were to do a long and publick Penance in the Church; and ſuch Sins of a lower Rank, as was to be done away by daily Prayer and daily Repentance, which was the Remedy for all Sins, great and ſmall, which were not of the higheſt Nature. Upon this Account he calls publick Penance by the Name of Pœnitentia Major, the great Repentance, for great and deadly Sins, in Oppoſition to the leſſer or daily Repentance for Sins of a lower Nature, which he terms Venial Sins, becauſe they were more eaſily pardoned by that ordinary and daily Repentance. Thus in his Inſtructions to the Catechumens, directing them how to lead their Lives after Baptiſm, he tells them [l], He did not preſcribe them an impoſſible Rule, to live here altogether free from Sin: For there were ſome leſſer or more pardonable Sins, without which this Life is not paſſed by any. Baptiſm was appointed for the Remiſſion of all Sins, of what Kind ſoever: But for leſſer Sins Prayer was appointed. And what ſays the Prayer? Forgive us our Treſpaſſes, as we forgive them that treſpaſs againſt us. We are once waſhed, or cleanſed from Sin by Baptiſm, we are daily cleanſed by Prayer. Only do not commit ſuch Things, for which it will be neceſſary to ſeparate you from the Body of CHRIST, which GOD forbid. For they whom you ſee doing Penance, have committed great Crimes, either Adultery, or ſome ſuch heinous Wickedneſs, upon account of which they are doing Penance. For if they had been light Sins, the daily Prayer would have been ſufficient to blot them out. Therefore there are Three Ways by which Sins are forgiven in the Church, by Baptiſm, by Prayer, and by the Humiliation of the greater Repentance. Where by the greater Repentance, it is evident, he means the publick Penance done in the Church for Crimes only of the higheſt Nature: And therefore the leſſer Repentance, accompanying Mens daily Prayers, was ſufficient to blot out both leſſer Sins of daily Incurſion, and alſo greater Sins, for which no publick Penance was required, but only the ſincere Reformation of the Sinner, producing good Works, and eſpecially Works of Charity and Mercy. Thus in his Enchiridion [m], For daily, ſhort and light Sins, without which no Man lives, the daily Prayer of the Faithful is ſufficient. This Prayer blots out all little and daily Sins. It blots out all thoſe Sins, with which the Life of the Faithful is moſt egregiouſly defiled, provided they change it into better by true Repentance; if they ſay truly, with Actions correſponding to their Words, Forgive us our Treſpaſſes, as we forgive them that treſpaſs againſt us. He often diſtinguiſhes [n] between Peccatum and Crimen, making the firſt to be ſuch Sins as are forgiven by daily Prayer and daily Repentance; and the ſecond ſuch flagrant Crimes as Murder, Adultery, Fornication, Theft, Fraud, Sacrilege, and ſuch-like, for which Men were obliged to undergo publick Penance in the Church. And he underſtands the ſame Things, when he ſo often diſtinguiſhes [o] between greater and leſſer Sins, Mortal Sins and Venial Sins; preſcribing publick Repentance for the one, and private Repentance for the other. By all which it is manifeſt, that neither Sins of human Frailty and daily Incurſion, to which the beſt of Men are liable; nor many Sins of a more malignant Nature, as many evil evil Words, and evil Thoughts, and Exceſſes in the Uſe of lawful Things, and haſty Anger, and frequent going to Law for Trifles, were reckoned into the Number of thoſe flagrant Crimes, for which the Severities of Church Diſcipline were inflicted on Delinquents; but all ſuch Sins, being of an inferior Nature, or not ſo eaſy to be proved upon Men, were only Matters of Reproof, and left to their own Conſciences to cure, either by daily Prayer, or private Repentance and Reformation.

AND that this was ſo from the Beginning, appears from what the Learned Du Pin has diſcourſed upon this Matter [*] againſt Mr. Arnaud and others of his own Communion. He obſerves that all the Ancients made this very Diſtinction between great and little Sins, and reckoned only very Capital and Mortal Crimes in the Number of ſuch Sins as were to be puniſhed with Excommunication. Tertullian, even when he diſputes againſt the Church upon the Point of Abſolution and Re-admiſſion of excommunicated Sinners into the Church again, owns notwithſtanding, that there were many Sins, which did not bring Men under the Cenſure of Excommunication, becauſe they were Sins of daily Incurſion, to which all Men were more or leſs expoſed. Among theſe [p] he reckons Anger, when it is unjuſt either in its Cauſe or Duration, when the Sun goes down upon our Wrath; and alſo Quarrelling and Evil-ſpeaking, a raſh or vain Oath, a Failure in our Promiſe, a Lye extorted by Modeſty or Neceſſity, and many ſuch Temptations which befal Men in their Buſineſs and Offices, in Gain, in Eating, and Seeing, and Hearing. On the contrary, there are ſome more grievous and deadly Sins, which are uncapable of Pardon (according to his rigid Principles of Montaniſm) ſuch as Murder, Idolatry, Fraud, Apoſtacy, Blaſphemy, Adultery, and Fornication, and other ſuch Defilements of the Temple of GOD. In his Book againſt Marcion, he preciſely reckons up Seven Sins, which he diſtinguiſhes by the Names of Capital Crimes [q], Idolatry, Blaſphemy, Murder, Adultery, Fornication, Falſe-Witneſs and Fraud. The Roman Clergy obſerve the ſame Diſtinction between greater and leſſer Sins, when they in their Epiſtle [r] to Cyprian, ſtyle Idolatry the great Sin, and the grand Sin above all others. And Cyprian [s] himſelf calls it ſummum Delictum, the higheſt of all Crimes, the Blaſphemy againſt the HOLY GHOST, which has never Forgiveneſs, but makes a Man guilty of eternal Sin: That is, a Sin that was to be puniſhed in both Worlds, without Repentance. Which is the Notion that moſt of the Ancients had of the Sin againſt the HOLY GHOST, (to note this by the way) not that it was abſolutely unpardonable [†], but that Men were to be puniſhed for it both in this World and the next, unleſs they truly repented of it. Again, Cyprian ſpeaking of Idolatry in thoſe that lapſed in Perſecution, he [t] diſtinguiſhes it by the Title of the moſt heinous and extreme Offence. And ſpeaking alſo of Adultery, Fraud and Murder, he calls them [u] Mortal Sins, by way of Diſtinction from thoſe of a lower Kind. So Origen calls ſome great and mortal Sins, ſuch as Blaſphemy, for which the Church [x] very rarely allowed Men to do Penance above once: But there are other common Sins of daily Incurſion, ſuch as evil Words, and other Corruptions of good Manners, which admit of frequent Repentance, and are redeemed continually without Intermiſſion. Where he plainly ſhews, That the Repentance which the Church allowed but once for great Sins, means publick Penance in the Church: But leſſer and common Offences were atoned for another Way, and as often as they were committed, by a daily Repentance. In another [y] Place, he reckons up leſſer Sins, to which all are more or leſs ſubject, ſuch as Detraction and mutual Defamation of one another, Self-conceit, Banquetting, Lying, idle Words, and ſuch other light Faults, as are frequently found in Men who have made a good Proficiency in the Church. Theſe therefore could not be the Sins which ordinarily ſubjected Men to Excommunication, unleſs we could ſuppoſe all Men liable to ſo ſevere a Cenſure. But there were other Crimes, which he calls great Sins, and Sins unto Death; ſuch as Adultery, Murder, Effeminacy and Defilement with Mankind, which whoever committed, he was to be treated as an Heathen Man or a Publican. St. Ambroſe makes the ſame Diſtinction of Sins: As there is but one Baptiſm, ſo there is but one publick [z] Penance; for we are to do Penance for the Sins we commit every Day: But this laſt Penance is for ſmall Sins; and the former for great ones. And ſo Proſper, or Julianus Pomerius under his Name [a] ſays, There are ſome Sins ſo ſmall, that we cannot perfectly avoid them, and for the Expiation of theſe we cry daily to GOD, and ſay, Forgive us our Treſpaſſes, as we forgive them that treſpaſs againſt us: But there are other Sins which ought more carefully to be avoided, becauſe when Men are publickly convicted of them, they make them liable to be puniſhed by humane Judgment: Meaning, that ſuch Capital Offences were the Crimes which ſubjected Men to Excommunication, and not thoſe leſſer Faults, which were only Matter of daily Repentance. Caſſian obſerves Seven Kinds of human Failings, which he diſtinguiſhes from Mortal Sins: Saying [b], It is one thing to commit Mortal Sin, and another to be overtaken with an evil Thought, or to offend by Ignorance, or Forgetfulneſs, or an idle Word, which eaſily ſlips from us, or by a ſhort Heſitation in ſome Point of Faith, or the ſubtle Ticklings of Vain-glory, or by Neceſſity of Nature to fall ſhort of Perfection. For theſe Seven Ways an holy Man is liable to fall; and yet he does not ceaſe to be righteous: And though they ſeem to be but ſmall Sins, yet they are enough to prove that he cannot be without Sin: For he has upon this Account need of a daily Repentance, and is obliged in Truth without any Diſſimulation to ask Pardon, and pray continually for his Sins, ſaying, Forgive us our Treſpaſſes. Gregory Nyſſen has a Canonical Epiſtle concerning Diſcipline, wherein, as Du Pin obſerves, he makes an exact Enumeration of thoſe Sins which ſubjected Men to publick Penance, which are all enormous Sins and conſiderable Crimes, ſuch as Idolatry, Apoſtacy, Divination, Murder, Adultery, Theft and Sacrilege. From all which it is very evident, That by the ancient Rules no Crimes were to be puniſhed with Excommunication, but thoſe that were of the higheſt Nature, which they called Mortal Sins; nor yet all remote Violations of the Moral Law, but only the more immediate, direct and profeſſed Tranſgreſſions of it. Of the Species and Effects of Anger, as Gregory Nyſſen [†] obſerves, they inflicted Canonical, and publick Penance upon Murder; but not upon all the inferior Degrees of it, ſuch as Stripes, and Evil-ſpeaking, or other Effects of Anger, which are prohibited in Scripture, and bring Men in Danger of eternal Death. So of all the Degrees of Covetouſneſs, which are very many and heinous, they puniſhed none with Excommunication but only notorious Oppreſſion, and Theft, and Robbing of Graves, and Sacrilege, and the like. So that when they ſometimes call Sins of this middle Rank, light and venial Sins, in Contradiſtinction to thoſe they termed mortal, they do not mean what now the Vulgar Caſuiſts of the Romiſh Church mean by Venial Sins, but only that they were not of the Number of thoſe Capital Crimes, for which the Church ſubjected Men to Excommunication, and enjoyned them publick Repentance. Which the Learned Reader may find not only accurately demonſtrated by Mr. Dailleé [c], but ingeniouſly confeſſed by Du Pin [d], and alſo Petavius [e] before him. Dailleé tranſcribes Petavius's Words, and I ſhall here tranſcribe thoſe of Du Pin: "I would not have it thought, "ſays he, that I make theſe Remarks to au- "thorize Licentiouſneſs, or to inſinuate, that "there are ſome Mortal Sins that may paſs "for Venial: GOD forbid, that I ſhould have "ſo deteſtable a Deſign! On the contrary, "my Intention is to create an Horror of all "Sins; Firſt, Of great Crimes: Secondly, Of "Sins which may be Mortal, though they ap- "pear not ſo enormous: And Thirdly, Even "of ſlighter Sins alſo. But I thought myſelf "obliged to obſerve here, for explaining a "Paſſage in St. Ambroſe, That none but the "Sins of the firſt Claſs did ſubject Men to "publick Penance, and that 'tis of theſe on- "ly the Fathers ſpeak, and which they com- "prehend under the Name of enormous Sins; "though there be others which may be alſo "Mortal, and which a Chriſtian ought care- "fully to ſhun; but then they are ſuch "for which he was never ſubjected to the "Humiliation of a publick Penance, but "only to Corrections and Reprimands given "in ſecret, as St. Auſtin informs us." Theſe Obſervations are very juſt; For it is certain, the Fathers ſpeak againſt all Sins, even thoſe of the loweſt Rank, as dangerous and Mortal, if neglected and wilfully indulged, and not carefully oppoſed by ſtriving againſt them, and waſhing away the Guilt by daily Repentance: According to what we have heard St. Auſtin ſay [*] before, That a Multitude of leſſer Sins overwhelm and kill the Soul, if they be neglected; as a ſmall Leak in a Ship, if it be not carefully ſtopped or drained, will ſink it, as well as a bigger Wave: Which Compariſon [f] he uſes in many Places. But to return to the Buſineſs in hand.

As it was a general Rule, not to uſe Excommunication for ſlight Offences, ſo we may obſerve, it was no Rule to uſe this Weapon, as in after-Ages, for mere pecuniary Matters and temporal Cauſes. It has frequently been complained of by Learned Men, both of the Proteſtant and Roman Communion, that this is a great Abuſe [l] of Excommunication, that it is often iſſued forth for the Diſcovery of Theft, or the Manifeſtation of ſecret Actions. Of which there are divers Inſtances in the Decretals; and Approbation is given to them by the Council of Trent [m], only reſerving ſuch Caſes as a ſpecial Privilege to the Biſhop; who is to give a Premonition to he knows not whom, and condemn a pretended Criminal without Hearing, contrary to all the Rules aforeſaid in the Primitive Church, which allowed no Excommunication in a ſlight Cauſe, nor in any Cauſe without ſufficient Evidence, and allowing the Criminal to ſpeak for himſelf. So again, as Du Moulin obſerves [n] out of Cardinal Tolet, in the Romiſh Church they excommunicated Men for future Time, and before any Crime is committed, and that for ſecuring only the Stocks or Trees of the Lord of a Town or Village from Spoil, although no Man had laid Hand upon them. At the Requeſt of a Creditor they excommunicate a Debtor, if he pay not within a certain Term, and his Inſufficiency to pay is the only Remedy in the utmoſt Extremity which the Law of the Decretals [o] allows him from ſo ſevere a Cenſure. But that which is chiefly complained of by their own Learned Gerſon in this Matter, is the Abuſe of Excommunication in the pecuniary Concerns of Eccleſiaſtical Courts themſelves. Biſhop Taylor has alledged [p] him in theſe Words: "Not every "Contumacy againſt the Orders of Courts Eccleſiaſtical is to be puniſhed with this Death. "If it be in Matters of Faith or Manners, "then the Caſe is competent: But when it is "a Queſtion of Money and Fees, beſides that "the Caſe is full of Envy and Reproach, apt "for Scandal, and to bring Contempt upon "the Church, the Church has no direct Power in it; and if it have by the Aid of the "Civil Power, then for that a Civil Coercion "muſt be uſed. It is certainly unlawful to excommunicate any Man for not paying the "Fees of Courts: For a Contumacy there is "an Offence againſt the Civil Power, and he "hath a Sword of his own to avenge that. "But Excommunication is a Sword to avenge "the Contumacy of them who ſtubbornly offend againſt the Diſcipline of the Church, "in that wherein CHRIST hath given her "Authority, and that is in the Matters of Salvation and Damnation immediate, in ſuch "Things where there is no ſecular Intereſt, "where there can be no Diſpute, where the "Offender does not ſin by Conſequence and "Interpretation, but directly and without "Excuſe. But let it be conſidered how great "a Reproach it is to Eccleſiaſtical Diſcipline, "if it be made to miniſter to the Covetouſneſs, or to the Needs of Proctors and Advocates: And if the Church ſhall puniſh "more cruelly than Civil Courts for equal "Offences, and becauſe ſhe hath but one "Thing to ſtrike withal, if ſhe upon all Occaſions ſmites with the Sword, it will either kill too many, or hurt and affright "none at all." Whatever Force there is in theſe Arguments, or however they may affect the Romiſh Church for this apparent Corruption of Diſcipline, they do not in the leaſt affect the Primitive Church, which was conſcious of no ſuch Practice, but forbad all Excommunications for light Offences, among which pecuniary Matters muſt be reckoned. 'Tis true, Biſhops ſometimes ſate Judges in Civil Cauſes, and their Determinations in ſuch Caſes were peremptory and final: But then their Coercive Power in ſuch Judicatures was not Excommunication, but Civil Puniſhments borrowed from the State, and which the State obliged itſelf to ſee duly put in Execution; of which I have given an ample Account [*] heretofore, and ſhewed it to be a very different Thing from Excommunication, or any Kind of Eccleſiaſtical Cenſure.

Sect. 16. No Bishop allowed to use it to avenge any private Injury done to himself.

I OBSERVE farther, as very remarkable in this Matter, That no Bishop was allowed to excommunicate any Man for any private Injury done to himself. For though this might be a great Crime, yet it looked like avenging himself, and therefore it was thought unbecoming his Character to right himself by Excommunication, but either he was to bear the Injury patiently, or commit his Cause to the Judgment of others. Upon this Account Cyprian distinguishes between Injuries done to himself in his personal and private Capacity, and Injuries done to the Detriment of the Brethren or whole Body of the Church. I can bear and pass over [q] any Affront, that is put upon my Episcopal Character, as I have always done, when it only concerned my own Person: But now there is no longer room for Forbearance, when many of our Brethren are deceived by some of you, who whilst they would more plausibly recommend themselves to the Lapsers by an unreasonable and hasty restoring them to the Peace of the Church, do more really prejudice their Salvation. Here he plainly distinguishes between Personal Injuries, which he could bear without any great Resentment or Thoughts of punishing: But those that were of a more publick Nature, and not only Affronts to his Authority, but prejudicial to the People, those he threatens to animadvert upon according to their deserving. We find a like Distinction made by Gregory the Great, who writing to a certain Bishop, who had excommunicated a Man for a private Injury done to himself, he thus reproves him for it: You shew [r] that you think nothing of heavenly Things, whilst you inflict the Curse of Anathema or Excommunication for the avenging a private Injury done to yourself, which the holy Canons forbid. Therefore be circumspect and cautious for the Future, and presume not to do any such Thing to any Man in defence of your own private Injuries. Otherwise you may expect to feel the Censures of the Church for your Presumption. That there were ancient Canons to this Purpose in the Time of Gregory, cannot be doubted from his Testimony, though I know of none at Present that speak directly to this particular Case: Only in general the Council of Sardica [s] forbids Bishops to excommunicate any one in Passion or hasty Anger, and allows the injured Person to appeal to the Provincial Synod, or the neighbouring Bishops for Redress in all such Cases.

Sect. 17. No Man to be excommunicated for Sins only in Design and Intention.

IT is also worth noting, that the Church inflicted the severe Censures of Excommunication upon Men only for Overt-Acts, and not for Sins in bare Design and Intention: Because though these might be great Sins before GOD, as our SAVIOUR says, He that looks on a Woman to lust after her, hath committed Adultery with her already in his Heart; yet the Church was no proper Judge of the Heart, and therefore she did not ordinarily punish such Sins, till they made some visible Appearance in the outward Action. This seems to be the meaning of that Canon of the Council of Neocæsarea [t], which says, "If a Man purpose in his "Heart to commit Fornication with a Wo-"man, but his Lust proceed not into Action, "it is apparent he is delivered by Grace". That is, he sins before GOD for his wicked Design, but the Church inflicts not Excommunication upon him, because his Intention proceeds not to any outward Act of Uncleanness. So Zonaras [u] interprets it among the Ancients, and Osiander among the Modern [x] Interpreters. Though some think that such Intentions, if discovered by any Overt-Acts, might bring a Man under Ecclesiastical Censure.

Sect. 18. Nor for Forced or Involuntary Actions.

THE Case is more clear as to all forced and involuntary Actions, where the Will was no way consenting to them. For as they were free from Sin, so they were from Punishment. There were some indeed, who out of an over-abundant Zeal and ignorant Pretence of Purity, were for excluding Men from Communion for such Things, which were more to be reckoned their Misfortunes than their Crimes: But the Council of Ancyra prudently corrected this erroneous Zeal by a Canon [y] to this Purpose: That Communion should not be denied to those who fled, but were apprehended, or betrayed by their Servants, and suffered Loss of their Estates, or Torture, or Imprisonment, declaring all the while that they were Christians; though they were held, and by Violence the Incense was put into their Hands, and they were forced to receive Meat offered to to Idols into their Mouths, declaring themſelves all the Time to be Chriſtians, and ſhewing by their Behaviour and Habit, and humble Courſe of Life, that they were ſorry for that which happened; theſe being without Sin, are not to be debarred from Communion. Or if by the ſuper-abundant Caution or Ignorance of any, they have been debarred, let them forthwith be received into Communion again. And the like is determined in the Caſe of Women, that ſuffer Raviſhment againſt their Wills, by Gregory Thaumaturgus [z], and St. Baſil [a]. And ſo by Dionyſius of Alexandria [b] and Athanaſius [c] and others, for any involuntary Defilement whatſoever. Theſe were the general Meaſures obſerved by the Ancients, to diſtinguiſh great and ſmall Offences, or Innocence from Sin, in order to ſhew what might or might not bring Men under the Cenſure of Excommunication. But becauſe it will contribute much toward the more exact underſtanding of the ancient Diſcipline, to know more particularly the ſeveral Sorts of thoſe greater Crimes for which Men were ſubjected to the higheſt Cenſures, I will now proceed to make a more diſtinct Enquiry into the Nature, and Kinds, and Degrees of thoſe high Miſdemeanors in the following Chapters.

CHAP. IV.

A Particular Account of thoſe called great Crimes, the Principal of which was Idolatry. Of its ſeveral Species, and Degrees of Puniſhment allotted to them according to the Proportion and Quality of the Offences.

SECT. 1. The Miſtake of ſome about the Number of great Crimes, in confining them to Idolatry, Adultery and Murder.

LEARNED Men are not well agreed about the Number of thoſe which the Ancients called great Crimes, with Reference to the Eccleſiaſtical Puniſhment, nor about the Reaſon and Foundation of that Title. There were ſome in St. Auſtin's Time, who were for confining great Crimes, for which Excommunication was to be inflicted, to three only, Adultery, Idolatry and Murder: Theſe they allowed to be mortal Sins, and made no doubt but that they were to be puniſhed [a] with Excommunication, till they were cured by the Humiliation of publick Penance; but for all others they ſaid Compenſation might eaſily be made by giving of Alms. This St. Auſtin labours to confute, not only in the Place alledged, but in ſeveral others [b], by which it is evident, That theſe were not the only great Crimes, that were puniſhed with Excommunication. And therefore thoſe Modern Authors make a wrong Repreſentation of the ancient Diſcipline, who confine it to thoſe Three great Crimes, or to ſuch as may be reduced to them: Since it is apparent from what is now ſaid, that it extended much farther; and, as I ſhall preſently ſhew, included all the great Crimes againſt the whole Decalogue, or Tranſgreſſions of the Moral Law in every Inſtance.

SECT. 2. The Account given of great Crimes in the Civil Law, extended much farther.

AND it is very obſervable, That even in the Civil Law, the Account that is given of great Crimes, extended much farther. For when the Emperors, according to Cuſtom, at the Eaſter Feſtival, granted a general Releaſe and Indulgence to ſuch as were impriſoned for their Miſdemeanours, they ſtill excepted ſeveral other heinous Crimes, ſpecified in their Laws, ſome Five, ſome Six, ſome Eight, ſome Ten, which cannot be reduced to the Three Crimes of Idolatry, Adultery and Murder. The Laws of Valentinian and Gratian [c] except Seven Capital Crimes from any Benefit of ſuch Indulgence, viz. Sacrilege, Treaſon, Robbing of Graves, Necromancy, Adultery, Raviſhment and Murder. The Laws of Theodoſius the Great except Eight Capital Crimes, Treaſon, Parricide, Murder, Adultery, Raviſhment, Inceſt, Necromancy, and Counterfeiting [d] of the Imperial Coin. And thoſe of Valentinian Junior, except Ten; Sacrilege, Adultery [e], Inceſt, Raviſhment, Robbing of Graves, Charms, Necromancy, Counterfeiting the Coin, Murder and Treaſon. Now when the Civil Law excepted ſo many great Crimes, Crimes, under the Name of Atrocia Delicta, from the Benefit of these Indulgences, it is not probable (were there no other Argument to perſuade it) that the Eccleſiaſtical Law would let any of thoſe heinous Offences go unpuniſhed, or wholly eſcape the Severity of Church Cenſure.

SECT. 3. And in the Eccleſiaſtical Law, the Account of great Crimes extended to the whole Decalogue.

BUT we have clearer and more certain Evidence in the Caſe. For firſt, St. Auſtin ſays, The great Crimes, which were puniſhed with Publick Penance, were ſuch as were againſt the whole Decalogue or Ten Commandments [f], of which the Apoſtle ſays, They which do ſuch Things, ſhall not inherit the Kingdom of God. Only, as Mr. Daille [g] rightly obſerves, we muſt interpret this of Capital Crimes directly and expreſsly forbidden in the Law, not of all remote Branches or lower Degrees of Sin, that may any Way whatſoever be reduced to the principal Crime, or indirectly come under the Prohibition. For otherwiſe it would not be true, That all Sins forbidden in the Decalogue, brought Men under publick Penance, ſince there are ſome Tranſgreſſions only conceived in the Heart, and never compleated in outward Action [h], which though they might be great Breaches of the Law, yet they could not come under publick Cenſure, but were to be cured by private Repentance.

SECT. 4. A particular Enumeration of the great Crimes againſt the 1ſt and 2d Commandments. Of Idolatry, and the ſeveral Species and Branches of it.

SUPPOSING therefore, that there were many great Crimes againſt every Precept of the Moral Law, which might bring Men under Eccleſiaſtical Cenſure, and publick Penance, we will now proceed in the Order of the Decalogue, to conſider the Nature and Kinds, and Puniſhment of them. The great Crimes againſt the firſt and ſecond Commandments (which were commonly joyned together) were comprized under the general Names of Apoſtacy and Irreligion; which comprehended the ſeveral Species of Idolatay; blaſpheming and denying CHRIST in Time of Perſecution; uſing the wicked Arts of Divination, Magick and Inchantments; and diſhonouring GOD by Sacrilege and Simony; by Hereſy and Schiſm; and other ſuch Prophanations and Abuſes, Corruptions and Contempts of his true Religion and Service. All theſe were juſtly reputed great Crimes, and ordinarily puniſhed with the ſevereſt Eccleſiaſtical Cenſures.

SECT. 5. Of the Sacrificati and Thurificati, or ſuch as fell into Idolatry by offering Incenſe to Idols, and partaking of the Sacrifices.

OF Idolaters there were ſeveral Sorts: Some went openly to the Temples, and there offered Incenſe to the Idols, and were Partakers of the Sacrifices. Theſe were diſtinguiſhed by the Names of Sacrificati and Thurificati, as we find them often ſtiled in Cyprian [i], who ſpeaks of them as defiling both their Hands and Mouths by the ſacrilegious Touch: Meaning their Hands by offering Incenſe, and their Mouths by eating of the Sacrifices. And of theſe alſo there were ſeveral Degrees. Some, as ſoon as ever a Perſecution was ſet on Foot, before they were called upon, or had any Violence offered to them, went voluntarily to the Temples, and offered Sacrifice of their own accord; whilſt others held out a long Time againſt Torture, and only ſacrificed when the utmoſt Neceſſity compelled them. Cyprian makes a great Difference [k] between theſe Two Sorts of Lapſers, as he does alſo between thoſe who went not only themſelves, but compelled their Wives and Children, and Servants, and Friends to go and ſacrifice with them; and thoſe who to deliver their Families and Friends from Danger, went and expoſed themſelves alone; by this Means protecting not only their own Familes, but alſo many Chriſtian Brethren and Strangers, that were baniſhed and had fled to take ſhelter in their Houſes, who were as ſo many living Interceſſors to GOD for them. They who did thus, he thinks, were much more excuſable than thoſe who both went voluntarily, and by their Counſel and Authority compelled many others to go along with them. Whoſe Crimes he therefore elegantly deſcribes and agravates after this manner [l] in his Book de Lapſis: They did not ſtay till they were apprehended, to go to the Capitol, but denied the Faith before any Queſtion was asked them about it. They were conquered before the Fight, and fell without any Engagement. They ran to the Forum of their own Accord, and made haſte to give themſelves the mortal Wound, as

as their own voluntary Act, without Compulsion: As if they had desired this long before, and now only embraced the Opportunity that was given them, which they always wished for. How was it, that when they went so readily to the Capitol to do this wicked Act, their Legs did not sink under them, and their Eyes grow dim, and their Bowels tremble, and their Arms fall down, and their Senses become stupid, and their Tongues faulter, or cleave to the Roof of their Mouths, and their Words fail them? Could the Servant of GOD stand there, and speak, and renounce CHRIST, who had before renounced the Devil and the World? Was not that Altar, whither he came to die, more like his Funeral Pile? Ought he not to have abhorred and fled from the Altar of the Devil, as his Coffin or his Grave, when he saw it smoke and fume with a stinking Smell? To what Purpose, thou miserable Wretch, didst thou bring thy Oblation, and put thy Sacrifice upon the Altar? Thou thyself wert the Victim, thou thyself the Sacrifice and Burnt-offering. There thou didst sacrifice thy Salvation, and burn thy Faith and thy Hope in those abominable Fires. But many were not content with their own Destruction; the People provoked one another into Ruin by mutual Calls and Exhortations, and the Cup of Death was handed round by every Man to his Neighbour. And that nothing might be wanting to consummate the Crime, Parents carried their Children in their Arms, or led them after them, that their little Ones might lose what they had gained in their first Birth. Will not they say, when the Day of Judgment comes, We did nothing ourselves; we did not leave the Bread and Cup of the LORD, to run of our own accord to those prophane Contagions: It was the Treachery of others that destroyed us, our Parents were guilty of Parricide toward us. They deprived us of the Privilege of having the Church for our Mother, and GOD for our Father; that whilst we were little, and unable to care for ourselves, and ignorant of so great a Wickedness, we should be taken and betrayed by other Mens Frauds, being by them made Partners in their Offences. Thus far Cyprian, aggravating the Crimes of those who shewed such a Forwardness to commit Idolatry, and apostatize with Greediness and Delight.

NOW as these were some of the highest Degrees of Idolatry, so the Church put a remarkable Difference between them and others in her Punishments, setting a more peculiar Mark or Note of Distinction upon them in her Censures. There are several Canons in the Council of Ancyra, which plainly shew this Distinction. The fourth Canon orders, "That "they who were compelled to go to an Idol-"Temple, if they went with a pleasing Air, "and in a Festival Habit, and took share of "the Feast with Unconcernedness; that they "should do Six Years Penance, one as Hear-"ers only, three as Prostrators, and two as "Costanders to hear the Prayers, before they "were admitted to full Communion again. "But if they went in a mourning Habit to "the Temple, and wept all the Time they eat "of the Sacrifice, then four Years Penance "should be sufficient to restore them to Per-"fection." The Eighth Canon orders, Those "who repeated their Crime by Sacrificing "twice or thrice, to do a longer Penance: "For seven Years is appointed to be their "Term of Discipline. And by the Ninth Ca-"non, If any not only sacrificed themselves, "but also compelled their Brethren, or were "the Occasion of compelling them, then they "were to do Ten Years Penance, as guilty of a "more heinous Wickedness", according as we have heard Cyprian represent it. But if any did neither sacrifice, nor eat Things offered to Idols, but only their own Meat on an Heathen Festival in an Idol-Temple, they were only confined to Two Years Penance by the seventh Canon of the same Council. These Canons chiefly respect such as transgressed after some Violence or Force put upon them, by Torture, or Banishment, or Imprisonment, or Confiscation, or the like Necessity in any other kind of Trial: But if any voluntarily apostatized, and prevaricated without Compulsion, a severer Punishment was laid upon them: For by the Rules of the Council of Nice [m] they were to undergo twelve Years Penance, before they were perfectly restored again to full Communion. And the same Term is appointed by the second Council of Arles [n] which refers to the Nicene Canon. The Council of Valence in France [o] goes a little farther, and obliges them to do Penance all their Lives, and allows them Absolution only at the Hour of Death, which they were to expect more fully from the Hands of GOD only, who had alone the absolute Power of it, and was infinite in Mercy that no one should despair. Agreeable to which is that Rule of Siricius [p], that Apostates should do Penance all their Lives, and be reconciled only at the Hour of Death. The Council of Eliberis goes beyond this, and denies such Apostates Communion at the very last Extremity [q], because this was the great and principal Crime above all others. And sometimes Adultery and Murder were a Sort of Accessories or Concomitants of this Idolatry, as

as many times it was in the heatheniſh Games and Shews, which were made up of Idolatry, Adultery and Murder: Upon which Account this ſame Council has another Canon [r], which orders, "That if any Chriſtian took "upon him the Office of a Flamen or Roman "Prieſt, and therein offered Sacrifice, doub- "ling and trebling his Crime by Murder and "Adultery, he ſhould not be received to "Communion at the Hour of Death." Nor need we wonder at this Severity, ſince Cyprian aſſures us, That before his Time [s] many of his Predeceſſors in the Province of Africk refuſed to grant Communion to Adulterers to the very laſt; and yet they did not divide Communion from their Fellow-Biſhops who practiſed otherwiſe. And he ſays farther, concerning voluntary Deſerters and Apoſtates [t], who continued in Rebellion all their Lives, and only deſired Penance when ſome Infirmity ſeized them, that they were cut off from all Hopes of Communion and Peace; becauſe it was not Repentance for their Fault, but the Fear of approaching Death that made them deſire a Reconciliation; and they were not worthy to receive that Comfort at their Death, who would not conſider all their Lives before that they were liable to die. The firſt Council of Arles made a like Decree [u], That ſuch as voluntarily apoſtatized, and never after ſued to the Church, nor deſired to do Penance all their Lives till ſome Infirmity ſeized them, ſhould not be received to Communion, unleſs they recovered, and brought forth Fruits worthy of Repentance. Theſe were the Rules by which the ancient Diſcipline was regulated and conducted in Reference to ſuch Idolaters and Apoſtates, as actually defiled themſelves by offering Sacrifice to Idols, whether it were by Force or by Choice; whether they lapſed ſingly, or drew others into the ſame Crime with themſelves; and whether they returned immediately and became Penitents, or continued Apoſtates and Rebels: According to the Difference of which Circumſtances, different Degrees of Puniſhment were laid upon them.

ANOTHER Sort of thoſe who lapſed into Idolatry, and were charged with Denying their Religion, were called Libellatici, from certain Libels or Writings, which they either gave to the Heathen Magiſtrates in private, or received from them, to be excuſed doing Sacrifice in publick. Baronius [x] thinks there was but one Sort of theſe Libellatici, and that they all expreſsly denied CHRIST, either by themſelves or others; but being aſhamed to ſacrifice or deny him in publick, they made a private Renunciation, and for a Bribe got a Libel of Security from the Magiſtrate, to indemnify and ſecure them from being ſought after, or called upon to ſacrifice in publick. But other Learned Men [y] obſerve ſome Diſtinction among them: And indeed there ſeem at leaſt to have been Three Sorts of them. Some expreſsly gave it under their Hands to the Magiſtrate, That they were no Chriſtians, denying their Religion in Word or Writing, as others did in Action; profeſſing they were ready to ſacrifice, if the Magiſtrate ſhould call them to it. Cyprian often ſpeaks of theſe, and puts them in the ſame Claſs with thoſe that actually ſacrificed. Let not thoſe flatter themſelves, ſays he [z], as if they were excuſed from doing Penance, who although they did not defile their Hands with the abominable Sacrifices, yet defiled their Conſciences by a Libel. A Chriſtian that profeſſes he denies his Religion, is Witneſs againſt himſelf, that he abjures what he was before; he owns in Words to have done, whatever the other did in real Action. Another Sort did neither abjure, nor ſign any Libel of Abjuration themſelves, but ſent either an Heathen Friend, or a Servant to ſacrifice or abjure in their Names, and thereby procure them a Libel of Security from the Magiſtrate, as if they had done what the others did for them. And indeed the Church ſo interpreted it, and reckoned theſe no leſs Criminals than the former. The Roman Clergy in their Letter to Cyprian, condemn them both alike [a], ſaying, That this latter Sort, though they they were not preſent at the Fact of delivering the Libel to the Magiſtrate, yet they were in Effect preſent by commanding it to be written and preſented. For he that commands a Sin to be done, cannot diſcharge himſelf of the Guilt of it, nor can he be innocent of the Crime, by whoſe Conſent it is publickly read in Court as done, though he was not actually the Doer of it. Seeing the whole Myſtery of Faith is ſummed up in Confeſſing the Name of CHRIST, he that ſeeks by any fallacious Tricks to excuſe himſelf from ſuch Profeſſion, does plainly deny it: And he, that when Edicts and Laws are publiſhed againſt the Goſpel, would be thought to comply with and obſerve them, does in that very Thing obey them, in that he would have the World believe that he does obey them. The Canons of Peter Biſhop of Alexandria alſo take Notice of this Sort of Libellers, and appoint them their Puniſhment, making this Difference between a Maſter who compelled his Slave to go and ſacrifice for him, and the Slave who went at his Command: The Slave was [b] to do one Year's Penance, but the Maſter is enjoyned three Years, becauſe he diſſembled, and becauſe he compelled his Fellow-Servant to ſacrifice: For we are all Servants of the LORD, with whom is no Reſpect of Perſons. Beſides theſe, there was another Sort of Libellers, who finding that the Fury of the Judge was to be taken off by a Bribe, they went to him, and told him plainly, They were Chriſtians, and could not ſacrifice, and therefore deſired him to give them a Libel of Security, for which they would give him a ſuitable Reward. Cyprian ſpeaking of this Sort of Libellers, brings them in thus Apologizing for themſelves: I had before [c] both read and learnt from the Preaching of the Biſhop, that the Servant of GOD ought not to ſacrifice to Idols, nor to worſhip Images; and therefore that I might not do that which is unlawful, (when the Opportunity of getting a Libel offered itſelf, which yet I would not have accepted, had not the Occaſion preſented itſelf) I went to the Magiſtrate, or employed another to go in my Name, and tell him, That I was a Chriſtian, and that it was unlawful for me to ſacrifice, or come near the Altars of the Devils; that therefore I would give him a Reward to excuſe me from doing that which I could not lawfully do. Cyprian does not wholly excuſe theſe, but adds, That tho' their Hands were not polluted with Sacrifice, nor their Mouths with eating Things offered to Idols, yet their Conſcience was defiled: But foraſmuch as they ſeemed rather to ſin out of Ignorance than Maliciouſneſs, he thinks their Caſe a little more favourable than thoſe that ſacrificed; and therefore ſince ſome Difference was made even among thoſe that ſacrificed, he thinks a greater Allowance ſhould be made to theſe, though he does not particularly tell us what Term of Penance was impoſed upon them.

SECT. 7. Of thoſe who feigned themſelves Mad, to avoid Sacrificing.

NOT much unlike this Sort of Libellers, were they who counterfeited Madneſs in Times of Perſecution, to get themſelves excuſed by this Means from being queſtioned, or called upon to offer Sacrifice. Some of them would go to the very Altars, and make as if they intended to ſacrifice, or ſubſcribe the Abjuration, but then they evaded the Thing by pretending to fall into a Sort of Epileptick Fit, which inclined the Magiſtrates to excuſe them, and let them eſcape, as David by ſuch an Artifice eſcaped from Achiſh, when he intended to kill him. Now this was looked upon as mere Diſſimulation and Colluſion, and only a more artful Way of Denying their Religion: And therefore by the Penitential Rules of Peter Biſhop of Alexandria [d], ſuch, though they neither ſacrificed themſelves, nor ſuborned others to ſacrifice for them, were ſubjected to Penance for ſix Months, becauſe they in ſome Meaſure denied their Religion, and made a ſhew of Countenancing Idolatry both by their Cowardiſe and Diſſimulation.

SECT. 8. Of Contributers to Idolatry. Of the Flamines, Munerarii, and Coronati. What they were, and how guilty of Idolatry.

AND indeed it was not only the bare Commiſſion of Idolatry, that ſubjected Men to Eccleſiaſtical Cenſure; but all Promoters, Encouragers, and Compliers with idolatrous Rites were reputed guilty of Idolatry in ſome Degree, and accordingly proceeded againſt as Betrayers of their Religion. Thus in the Council of Eliberis there is a Canon againſt ſuch Chriſtians as took upon them the Office of a Flamen, or Heathen Prieſt; Part of whoſe Office was to exhibit the ordinary Games and Shews to the People: And if they did this, though they abſtained from ſacrificing, they were to do Penance all their Lives, as Encouragers of idolatrous Rites, and only [e] be admitted to Communion at the Hour of Death, after ſufficient Evidences of a true Repentance. Some Learned Perſons miſtake the Senſe of this Canon, underſtanding the Words, Munus dare, as if they meant giving Money to the Judge to excuſe them from ſacrificing; Which would be the ſame Crime as the Libellers were guilty of; whereas this Canon ſpeaks not of ſuch Lapſers, but of thoſe who took upon them the Office of a Flamen, whoſe Buſineſs among other Things was to give or exhibit, at his own, or elſe at a publick Expence, the Munera, that is, the ordinary Games, or Shews and Paſtimes to the People. For theſe were called Munera [f], as appears from the Uſe of the Term in the Civil Law: And they that gave them were thence termed Munerarii, The Maſters of the Games, or the Entertainers, who kept Beaſts and Men to fight in the Amphitheatre for the Entertainment of the People, as may be ſeen in Tertullian [g] and Seneca, and Suetonius [h] and others, who ſpeak according to the Propriety of the Latin Tongue. Now becauſe theſe Games were held chiefly on the Heathen Feſtivals, and in Honour of their Gods, and were full of idolatrous Rites, as well as Cruelty and Impurity, a Chriſtian could not exhibit them to the People, without incurring the Crime of Idolatry, at leaſt indirectly by promoting and encouraging the Practice of it. And for that Reaſon this Canon is ſo ſevere againſt thoſe who furniſhed out theſe Shews at their own Expences. A lower Degree of this Crime was, when ſuch a Flamen or Prieſt neither offered Sacrifices, nor exhibited the Games at his own Expence, but only wore the Crown [i] which was uſual in ſuch Solemnities: Which being a Badge of Idolatry, for that Reaſon by another Canon of that Council two Years Penance, as a moderate Puniſhment in Compariſon of the former, is impoſed upon them that were ſo far concerned in it. But it may be noted that Tertullian's Invective againſt the Solders Crown or Garland, in his Book de Corona Militis, has no Relation to this Matter: For the wearing of ſuch a Crown ſeems to have had no Concern in Religion, but to be a mere Civil Act done in Honour of the Emperors on ſuch Days as they gave their Largeſſes or Donations to the Soldiers. The Laurel was only an Enſign of Victory, and though it was dedicated to Apollo, yet that did not make the Uſe of it unlawful; otherwiſe the Uſe of the four Elements and many other Trees and Plants, and Animals had all been unlawful, becauſe as St. Auſtin [k] ſhews, They were dedicated to the Gods alſo. Therefore Learned Men [l] cenſure Tertullian here, as overſtraining his Argument upon this Point, upon his new Principles of Montaniſm, by which he alſo denied it to be lawful for a Chriſtian to fly in Time of Perſecution, or to bear Arms in Defence of the Empire [m], contrary to his former Judgment in his Apology, where he tells the Emperor that his Army was full of the Diſciples of JESUS, and mentions the famous Undertaking of the thundring Legion with a great Elogium or Commendation. So that this new Severity of his, in condemning the Chriſtian Soldiers for wearing a Laurel-Crown, muſt be reckoned among thoſe Peculiarites which he imbibed after he was fled over from the Church to the School of Montanus; ſince we no where find Soldiers condemned for this in the Catholick Church, much leſs brought under any Diſcipline or Penance for the Uſe of it.

SECT. 9. How the Office of the Duumvirate made Men guilty of Idolatry, and how it was puniſhed.

BUT there is another Canon in the Council of Eliberis, which orders, "That all Chri- "ſtians who took upon them "the City-Magiſtracy or Of- "fice, called the Duumvirate, "ſhould be denied Commu- "nion for the whole Year in which they held "the Office [n] as guilty of ſome Offence a- "gainſt Religion". No Crime is mentioned, but Idolatry is underſtood. For the Grounds and Reaſons of this Canon will be eaſily explained and underſtood from the Account that is given of this Office in the Civil Law. Where we learn, that the Duumviri were the chief City-Magiſtrates, otherwiſe called, Primates Curiæ, choſen every Year (for it was but an annual Office;) and it belonged to them, (as it did to the Flamines, and the Pontifices, or Sacerdotes Provinciarum, and the Prætors, and the Governors of Provinces, or ordinary Judges) to exhibit the Spectacula, or the Games and Shews to the People, as Gothofred [o] ſhews from various Laws of the Theodoſian Code [p]. And Tertullian not only obſerves the ſame, that the City-Magiſtrates were the Editors of theſe Games; but that the Shews themſelves were founded in Idolatry [q] and attended with many idolatrous Ceremonies; which he makes uſe of as one Argument why a Chriſtian ſhould not frequent them. And for this Reaſon the Council of Eliberis orders all Chriſtians, who took upon them the Office of Duumviri, to be kept kept back from Communion during the Year they went through that Office; becauſe they could not exhibit theſe Shews to the People without encouraging and partaking in that Idolatry which was ſo cloſely annexed to them. Ludorum celebrationes Deorum Feſta ſunt. Lactant. Lib. 6. cap. 20.

SECT. 10. How Actors and Stage-players, and Charioteers, and other Gameſters, and Frequenters of the Theatre and Cirque were charged with Idolatry, and puniſhed for it.

AND for the ſame Reaſon all Actors and Stage-Players, and they who drove the Chariots in the publick Games, and Gladiators, and all who had any Concern in the Exerciſe or Management of theſe unlawful Sports, and all Frequenters of them, were obliged either to quit theſe Practices, or be liable to Excommunication ſo long as they continued to follow them; not only becauſe a great deal of Impurity and Cruelty was committed in them, but alſo becauſe they contributed to the Maintenance of Idolatry, which was an Appendage of them. All theſe were comprized in the Pomp and Service of the Devil, which every Chriſtian had renounced at his Baptiſm; and therefore when any one returned to them, he was charged as a Renouncer of his Baptiſmal Covenant, and thereupon diſcarded, as an Apoſtate and Relapſer, from Chriſtian Communion. Thus Cyprian being conſulted by Eucratius [r], Whether a Stage-Player might communicate, who continued to follow that diſhonourable Trade; he anſwers, That it was neither agreeable to the Majeſty of GOD, nor the Diſcipline of the Goſpel, that the Modeſty and Honour of the Church ſhould be defiled with ſo baſe and infamous a Contagion. The Council of Eliberis [s] allows Stage-Players to be baptized only upon Condition that they renounced their Arts, and entirely bid adieu to them: And if after Baptiſm they returned to them again, they were to be caſt out of the Church. The firſt Council of Arles [t] has a like Decree, That all publick Actors belonging to the Theatre, ſhall be denied Communion, ſo long as they continue to act. And the third Council of Carthage [u] ſuppoſes the Sentence of Excommunication to paſs upon all ſuch, when it ſays, That Actors and Stage-Players, and all Apoſtates of that kind, ſhall not be denied Pardon and Reconciliation, if they return unto the LORD. This implies, That they were gone aſtray and caſt out of the Church for their Crimes, ſince they needed Pardon and Reconciliation, to take off their Cenſure and reſtore them. The firſt Council of Arles [x] determines the ſame in the Caſe of thoſe who drove the Chariots in the publick Games, that ſo long as they continued in that Employment, they ſhould be denied Communion. Tertullian [y] and others ſay expreſsly, That theſe Arts were Part of thoſe Pomps and Worſhip of Satan which Men renounced in Baptiſm. And it appears from a Rule in the Conſtitutions [z], That no Charioteer, or Gladiator, or Racer, or Curator of the Publick Games, or Practiſer in the Olympick Games, or Minſtrel, or Harper, or Dancer, was to be admitted to Baptiſm, unleſs they immediately quitted theſe unlawful Callings. And it was no leſs a Crime to frequent the Theatre, and be Spectators of theſe idolatrous Practices, as is noted in the ſame Rule of the Conſtitutions. Therefore as an obſtinate Adherence to theſe Things debarred Catechumens from Baptiſm, ſo it likewiſe excluded baptized Perſons or Believers from the Privilege of Communion.

SECT. 11. Idol Makers their Crime and Puniſhment.

ANOTHER Way of contributing to the Practice of Idolatry, was the Art or Trade of making Idols for the Worſhippers of them. Many Chriſtians, who abhorred the Worſhip of Idols themſelves, made no Scruple to make Idols for others, and live by this Calling; which was reputed a very ſcandalous Profeſſion, tending indirectly and conſequentially to the Upholding and Promoting Idolatry. For which Reaſon, no Man profeſſing this Art, could be admitted to Baptiſm, unleſs he promiſed to renounce it, as we learn from the Author of the Conſtitutions [a]. And what denied a Man one Sacrament, would alſo deny him the other. Tertullian calls ſuch, Proctors and Purveyors [b] for Idolatry; inveighing againſt this and ſome other Trades of the like Nature. When you help, ſays he, to furniſh out the Pomp, the Prieſthood, the Sacrifices of Idols, what can you be called but Procurers for Idols? All heinous Sins, for the Greatneſs of the Danger attending them, ought to make us extremely cautious, to keep at a Diſtance not only from them, but from all Things that miniſter to the Practice of them. For though a Crime be committed by others, it is all one, if I am inſtrumental to the Commiſſion of it. By the ſame Reaſon that I am forbidden to do it, I ought to take Care that it be not done by my Aſſiſtance. I muſt not be a neceſſary Aid to another in doing that, which I may not lawfully do myſelf. Upon theſe Grounds he concludes the Trade of making Idols to be unlawful, as well as the Worſhip of them. And ſo did Clemens Alexandrinus [c], and Juſtin Martyr [d] before him. Tertullian objects it as a great Crime to Hermogenes [e], That he followed the Trade of Painting Images. But that which is moſt material to our Purpoſe here, is his Obſervation which he makes in his Book of Idolatry [f] upon the Puniſhment due to ſuch as made a Livelihood of this unlawful Calling, that any one who followed it, ought not to have Acceſs to the Houſe of GOD. For it was contrary to the Faith which they had profeſſed in Baptiſm. How have [g] we renounced the Devil and his Angels, if we ſtill continue to make them? What Divorce have we made from them, with whom we not only continue to live, but live upon them? What Diſagreement is there between us and them, to whom we are obliged for our Maintenance and Livelihood? Can you deny that with your Tongue, which you confeſs with your Hand? Can you deſtroy that in Words, which you raiſe up in your Actions? Preach one GOD, and make ſo many? Preach the True GOD, and make falſe ones? But (ſay you) I only make them, I do not worſhip them. As if the ſame Reaſon which forbids you to worſhip them, did not alſo forbid you to make them. Yea, you worſhip them, in doing that which cauſes them to be worſhipped. And you worſhip them not with the Spirit of any vile Nidor, or Smell of a Sacrifice, but with your own Spirit: Not with the Life of a Sheep beſtowed on them, but with your own Soul. To them you ſacrifice your own Ingenuity, to them you offer your Labour, to them you burn your Prudence and Underſtanding. You are more than a Prieſt to them, ſince by your Means it is that they have a Prieſt. Your Diligence is their Deity. Do you then deny that you worſhip that, to which you give its very Being and Exiſtence? But they themſelves do not deny it, to whom you offer a fatter, and more coſtly, and greater Sacrifice, even your own Salvation. Thus far Tertullian, who notwithſtanding ſeems to complain, That there was a great Remiſsneſs in the Exerciſe of Diſcipline upon ſuch Offenders. For he immediately adds, One might declaim all the Day long with a Zeal of Faith upon this Point, and bewail ſuch Chriſtians [h] as come ſtraight from their Idols into the Church, from the Shop of the Adverſary into the Houſe of GOD, and there lift up to GOD the Father, thoſe very Hands which are the Mothers or Makers of Idols; adoring GOD in the Church with thoſe Hands, which without Doors are themſelves adored in the Idols which they have made againſt GOD; and taking the Body of the LORD into thoſe Hands, wherewith they have prepared and given Bodies to the Devils. Nor is this all. It were but a ſmall Thing to defile that Body which they receive from the Hands of others, but thoſe very Hands deliver it to others, which have firſt defiled it. For the Makers of Idols are ſometimes choſen into the holy Orders of the Church. O monſtrous Wickedneſs! The Jews once laid Hands upon CHRIST, but theſe every Day treat his Body deſpitefully. O Hands that ought to be cut off! If Tertullian here does not make too ſevere an Invective, and calumniate the Church, it muſt be owned there was ſome Neglect in the Exerciſe of Diſcipline, to ſuffer ſuch Offenders not only to communicate, but take Orders in the Church, who by the Rules of Diſcipline ought not to communicate in the Chriſtian Body in any Quality whatſoever.

SECT. 12. The Idolatry of Building or Adorning Heathen Altars and Temples.

TERTULLIAN in the ſame Book brings the Charge of Idolatry againſt all other Artificers, who contributed toward the Worſhip of Idols, either by erecting of Altars, or building of Temples, or making of Shrines, or beautifying and adorning the Idols, or any thing belonging to them. For it was the ſame thing [i] whether a Man made an Idol, or only adorned it. He that built a Temple, or erected an Altar, to an Idol, or overlaid it with Gold, did rather more toward its Worſhip, than he that made it: For the one only gave it an Effigies, the other gave it Authority; procuring Veneration to be paid to it as a God. Upon this Scorce all who thus contributed toward the Worſhip of Idols, though they did not actually ſacrifice to them, were ranked in the ſame Claſs with Idolaters, and accordingly ſubjected to the Cenſures of the Church. Which appears from that famous Remonſtrance, which St. Ambroſe made to the Emperor [k] Valentinian, when he was ſollicited by Symmachus the Heathen to reſtore the Altar of Victory in the Capitol. He told him plainly, That if he did this, no Biſhop would receive him to Communion, but every one couragiouſly couragiously repel him, and be ready to give him a good Reason for their Opposition: They will tell you, says he, That the Church desires not your Gifts, because you have adorned the Temples of the Heathen with your Gifts: The Altar of CHRIST refuses your Oblations, because you have erected an Altar to the Idol-Gods. The Case of Marcus Arethusius is famous in Story, who chose rather to suffer Death under Julian, than rebuild a Temple, which he had demolished by Law in the Time of Constantius, as is related at large by Gregory Nazianzen [l] and Sozomen. And Theodoret highly commends Audas [m] a Persian Bishop, for that having demolished a Pyræum (a Temple where the Persians worshipped Fire as a God) though he did this without any legal Authority, yet he rather chose to suffer Death than rebuild it; because it was the same thing to build a Temple to the Idol, as to worship it. And St. Chrysostom [n] says, it was a very common thing in the Time of Julian to call upon all those who had been concerned in demolishing Temples in the preceding Reigns of Constantine and Constantius, and prosecute them to Death, because they refused to rebuild them.

SECT. 13. Of Merchants selling Frankincense to the Idol-Temples, and the Buyers and Sellers of the publick Victims.

AMONG other Promoters and Encouragers of Idolatry, they reckoned all Merchants selling Frankincense to the Idol-Temples, and all who made a Trade of Buying and Selling the publick Victims. Tertullian styles all these Procuratores Idololatriæ, Purveyors for Idolatry. And he expressly says of those who bought and sold the publick Victims [o], That no Church would receive them to Baptism, without obliging them to renounce that unlawful Profession, nor suffer them to continue in her Communion, if they were already of the Number of the Faithful. And hence he argues more strongly against the Thurarii, as he terms those who made a Livelihood of selling Frankincense to the Temples, which he reckons the worse of the two. With what Face can the Christian Seller of Frankincense [p], if he chance to go through a Temple, spit at the smoaking Altars, and shew his Detestation of those Idols, for which he himself has been the Purveyor? With what Heart or Courage can he pretend to exorcize those Devils, to whom he has been a Foster-Father, and made his House a Shop to furnish Materials for their Service? Hence upon the whole Matter he concludes, That no Art, Profession, Business or Trade could be wholly free from the Imputation of Idolatry, which was instrumental and subservient either in making of Idols, or furnishing out what was necessary to the Support of their Worship and Service.

SECT. 14. Of eating Things offered to Idols. How and when it stood chargeable with Idolatry.

THE Case of eating Things offered to Idols is resolved by the Apostle. It was never lawful to do it in an Idol-Temple, because that was to partake of the Sacrifice as a Sacrifice, and to communicate with Devils; which was an hardning of the Gentiles, and a Scandal to the Church of GOD. The Nicolaitans are condemned for this in Scripture, and the Practice of the Basilidians and Valentinians [q] by Writers of the following Ages. The Acts of Lucian the Martyr [r] tell us, He chose rather to die with Hunger, than to eat Things offered to Idols, when his Persecutors would allow him no other Sustenance in Prison. And Baronius gives another such Instance [s] in the People of Constantinople, who when Julian had ordered all the Meat in the Shambles to be polluted with idolatrous Lustrations, they freely abstained from it, and used boiled Corn instead of Bread, so defeating the Tyrant's malicious Intention. Not that it had been any Idolatry to have eat such Meats in such a Case: For the Apostle allows it, where it may be done without either communicating with the Idols, or giving Scandal to the Weak: Whatsoever is sold in the Shambles, eat, asking no Questions for Conscience Sake. And upon this Warrant of the Apostle Theodoret [t] justifies the People of Antioch in another such Case. For Julian made use of the same devilish Stratagem to insnare them, polluting all the Fountains of Antioch and Daphne, and all the Meat in the Shambles with his idolatrous Rites, and all the Bread and Fruits of the Earth and Herbs, that the Christians might have nothing to eat, but what was offered in Sacrifice to Idols. Which is also noted by Chrysostom [u] and others, who speak of the diabolical Wiles of Julian. But in this Case the Christians made no Scruple of eating any Thing, notwithstanding the Policy of their Adversary, as knowing that the good Creatures of GOD could not be defiled by any such wicked Contrivances, so long as they did not consent to them, or communicate in them: For the Earth is the LORD's and the Fulness thereof, and what was sanctified to them by the Word of GOD and Prayer, could not be unsanctified or polluted by any prophane Abuses.

SECT. 15. Whether a Chriſtian out of Curioſity might be preſent at an Idol-Sacrifice not joining in the Service.

BUT where there was any real Communication with Idolatry, or any juſt Ground for a Suſpicion of it, it was at no Hand allowable to give the leaſt Countenance to it, or any Umbrage to ſurmiſe an Approbation of it. For this Reaſon the Council of Eliberis forbids any Chriſtian to go to the Capitol [x], or Idol-Temple, ſo much as only out of Curioſity to ſee the Sacrifice offered, under the Penalty of Ten Years Penance impoſed upon them. Albaſpiny [y] rightly obſerves, That though there be a little Obſcurity in the Original wording of the Canon, yet it muſt needs intend to prohibit the going to ſee the Sacrifice: For otherwiſe, if they went to ſacrifice, not only a Ten Years Penance, but a Penance for their whole Lives was impoſed upon them by the two firſt Canons of this Council. So that the plain Senſe of the Canon muſt be, That if, as an Heathen went to ſacrifice, ſo a Chriſtian went only to ſee the Sacrifice, he ſhould be held guilty of the ſame Crime, and do Ten Years Penance for it. Yet this was to be underſtood, if he had no other Call but Curioſity to carry him thither: For if by any neceſſary Office or Duty of his Station he went thither, this was no Crime: As if he was of the Prince's Guard, and only went to attend his Sovereign, he was guiltleſs, becauſe he went not to ſee the Sacrifice, but to do his Duty. Thus Theodoret [z] ſays, Valentinian when he was a Tribune and Captain of the Guard to Julian, attended his Maſter to the Temple of Fortune: But when the Door-keepers according to Cuſtom ſprinkled their Luſtral or Holy Water upon thoſe that went in, and a Drop of it fell upon his Coat, he gave the Man a Blow upon the Face, telling him, he did not think himſelf purified but prophaned. And by this Act, ſays Theodoret, he merited two Kingdoms, both an earthly and an heavenly. For Julian immediately baniſhed him for the Fact, and confined him to a Caſtle in the Deſert: But before a Year and a few Months were paſt, this noble Confeſſor was rewarded with the Imperial Crown and the Dignity of the Roman Empire. By this it appears, They put a great Difference between going to a Temple out of mere Impertinency and Curioſity to ſee the idolatrous Rites and Sacrifices, and going thither only upon the neceſſary Obligations of their Duty and Function. And Tertullian, who is as ſevere as any in this Matter, owns the Reaſonableneſs of this Diſtinction. It were to be wiſhed, ſays he, that we could live [a] without ſeeing thoſe Things which we cannot lawfully Practice: But becauſe Idolatry has ſo filled the World with Evils, a Man may be preſent in ſome Caſes, where Duty binds him to the Man, and not to the Idol. If I am called to a Prieſthood or to a Sacrifice, I will not go: For that is the proper Office or Service of the Idol: Neither will I contribute by my Counſel, or my Expence, or my Labour to any ſuch Thing. If when I am called to a Sacrifice, I go and aſſiſt, I am Partaker of the Idolatry: But if any other Cauſe joins me to the Sacrificer, I am only a Spectator of the Sacrifice. He applies this particularly to Slaves waiting on their Heathen Maſters, and Children or Clients on their Patrons or Parents, and Officers on Governors and Judges. If we are careful to obſerve this Rule, neither by Word nor Deed to give any Aſſiſtance to the idolatrous Service, we may attend on Magiſtrates and Powers, after the Example of the Patriarchs and others of our Anceſtors, who waited on idolatrous Kings, uſque ad finem Idololatriæ, as far as the Confines of Idolatry would permit them. He gives the ſame Reſolution in ſome other private and common Caſes, as a Chriſtian's being obliged to attend the Solemnity of giving a Youth the Toga Virilis, the Habit of a Man, the Solemnity of Eſpouſals, or Nuptials, or the Manumiſſion of a Slave [b] or giving him a new Name. For all theſe Things were innocent in themſelves: And though idolatrous Rites were uſually mixed with them, yet a Man might be preſent without communicating in thoſe Rites, diſtinguiſhing the Cauſes which required his Attendance. They were pure and clean in their own Nature: For neither does the Habit of a Man, nor the Ring of Eſpouſals, nor the joining of a Man and Woman in Marriage, deſcend originally from any Honour of an Idol: For all theſe Things are allowed by GOD; and though Sacrifices were uſed in the Ceremony, yet a Man whoſe Office and Buſineſs was not in the Sacrifice, but required upon ſome other Account, might lawfully attend them without Defilement. This was the Reſolution of all ſuch Caſes, where ſome Obligation of Office or Duty required a Man's Preſence at ſome idolatrous Service; not as contributing any Ways his Aſſiſtance in it, or communicating either directly or indirectly in the Service; but only performing what properly belonged to him by Vertue of his lawful Employment; and being ready, ready, like Valentinian, to shew his Aversion to all superstitious and idolatrous Rites, when any more peculiar Occasion required it. The being present barely to perform some other Duty, was not interpreted in this Case any communicating with Idolatry, because the very Tenour of his Obligation and Duty sufficiently demonstrated it to be otherwise.

SECT. 16. Whether he might eat his own Meat in an Idol-Temple.

BUT where a Man had no such necessary Call or Obligation to perform any Duty that required his Presence in a Temple, then to be present at an idolatrous Service, or do any Thing that might look with a suspicious Aspect towards it, was a sufficient Reason to bring him under Ecclesiastical Censure. Thus no one could pretend any just Reason to carry his own Meat and eat it in an Idol-Temple, but this must needs imply some Disposition towards Idolatry: And therefore the Council of Ancyra [c] made a Decree, that such as feasted with the Heathen upon any Idol-Festival in any Place set apart for that Service, though they carried their own Meat and eat it there, should do Two Years Penance for it. The Canon does not expressly call the Place an Idol-Temple, but τόπον ἀφωρισμένον, a Place set apart for the Service; which whether we take it for a Temple, or any other Place of Feasting, is all one, since it was a Place appropriated to the Worship of the Idol on a Festival peculiarly dedicated to the Honour of some Heathen God.

SECT. 17. Or feast with the Heathen on their Idol-Festivals.

AND this Sort of Feasting with the Heathens on their proper Festivals, whether in a Temple or out of a Temple, was precisely forbidden under the Notion of Communicating with them in their Impiety. Which are the express Words of the Council of Laodicea, prohibiting this Practice of keeping such Festivals with the Gentiles [d]. Among the Apostolical Canons [e] there is also one that forbids Christians to carry Oyl to any Heathen Temple, or Jewish Synagogue, or to set up Lights on their Festivals, under the Penalty of Excommunication. Which shews, that Christians were sometimes inclined to concur with the Heathens in this Practice.

AND this seems to be the most rational Sense that can be given of those two Canons of the Council of Eliberis, which so much trouble Interpreters; the one of which forbids the lighting [f] Wax-Candles by Day in the Cemeteries or Burying-Places of the Martyrs, for fear of disquieting the Spirits of the Saints, under the Penalty of Excommunication: And the other [g] prohibits the setting up of Lamps in publick under the same Penalty of being cast out of the Communion of the Church. Albaspiny thinks these Orders were made upon a mistaken Notion, That the Souls of the Martyrs were still waiting under the Altars; which, he says, was the Opinion of Cyprian [h] and Tertullian. But it is more probable, that the Council forbad these Rites upon another Ground, because they were superstitious and idolatrous Rites used by the Heathen in their Solemnities, as is expressly said by Tertullian [i] and many others collected by Baronius [k]. And this seems to be the true Reason why the Council forbad them, That Christians might not symbolize with the Heathens in such superstitious Practices. But to proceed, The Heathen Festivals are known in the Civil Law under the general Name of Vota, and Votorum Celebritas, solemn Days of Prayer and Worship of their Gods. And as Gothofred [l] has accurately distinguished them, they comprized, 1. All their Ludi, or Days of Publick Shews, which were in Honour of their Gods. Among which the Maiuma is very famous, there being a Title in the Theodosian Code [m] concerning the Permission and Regulation of it under the Christian Emperors, till at last it was finally put down by Arcadius. 2. Their other Days of publick Feasting. 3. The Kalends of January, or Beginning of the new Year. Against the superstitious Observation of which there are frequent Invectives in the Writings of the Ancients, particularly in St. Ambrose [n], Asterius Amasenus [o] and Prudentius [p]. 4. The third of January, which was a noted Festival or Day of Heathen Devotion for the Emperor's Safety. Among these may be also reckoned their Bromialia, forbidden by the Council of Trullo [q]: And the Neomenia, or New-Moons, against which St. Chrysostom has a whole Discourse to dissuade Christians from the Observation of them: Where he particularly inveighs [r] against the impious Superstition that was still reigning in Mens Hearts as the Relicks of Paganism. For they were superstitiously addicted to the Observation of Times, and made Divination and Conjectures upon them; as, if they spent the New-Moon of such a Month in Mirth and Pleasure, the whole Year following would be Prosperous and Lucky to them. So both Men and Women

Women gave themſelves to Intemperance and Exceſs on theſe Days, out of this Diabolical Perſuaſion, as he juſtly terms it, that the good, or bad Fortune of the reſt of the Year depended upon ſuch an ominous Beginning of it. Which was the Devil's Invention to ruin the Practice of all Vertue. He obſerves farther, That [s] they were uſed in the Celebration of theſe Times to ſet up Lamps in the Market-Place, and crown their Doors with Garlands, which he condemns together with their Superſtition and Intemperance, as a Mixture of diabolical Pomp, and childiſh Folly. By which we ſee how prone Men were to follow the Heathen in ſuch Practices, even when they were delivered both from their Ignorance and Compulſion: And much more, may we ſuppoſe, were they under a Temptation to comply with them in the Obſervation of their Feſtivals, whilſt they were under the Terror of their Laws and violent Perſecutions. Nay, even in St. Auſtin's Time the Heathen were ſo inſolent in Africk, as to compel the Chriſtians to obſerve their Feſtivals, of which the African Fathers in the Fifth Council of Carthage [t], were forced to complain to the Emperor Honorius, and petition him by his Authority to redreſs the Grievance: They repreſent to him, How the Pagans in many Places, not only kept their ſuperſtitious Feaſts themſelves, but forced the Chriſtians to joyn with them; ſo that it looked like a ſecret Perſecution under Chriſtian Emperors: Wherefore they deſired him to make a Law to prohibit them both in City and Country, and reſtrain them by ſome ſuitable Penalty inflicted on them, which at firſt Honorius refuſed to grant, but afterward he complied with their Requeſt upon more mature Deliberation. The Law is ſtill extant in the Theodoſian Code [u], forbidding all holding of Feaſts or other Solemnities in Temples in Honour of the Gods; and enjoyning all Biſhops and Judges of the Provinces to take Care of the Execution of it. Yet this did not ſo root out the Superſtition, but that many Heathens ſtill continued in it; and ſome looſer Chriſtians were ready enough either to joyn with the Heathen in their Practices, or at leaſt to imitate the Luxury and Vanity of them under the Notion of Chriſtian Obſervations. St. Auſtin makes a bitter Complaint in one of his Epiſtles [x] of the Inſolence of the Heathen immediately after the Publiſhing of this Law; How upon one of their Feſtivals on the Kalends of June, they came Dancing in a petulant manner before the Doors of the Church: Which when the Clergy endeavoured to prohibit, they ſtoned the Church; and when the Biſhop complained to the Judges, they ſtoned it again, and a third Time, ſetting Fire to the Houſes belonging to the Church, and killing ſome of the Clergy, and cauſing others to fly for their Lives. An inſolent and daring Attempt, not to be paralleled by any thing, he ſays, that was done in the Time of Julian! And what was worſe than all, no one of the Magiſtrates or Chief Men of the Place either offered to quell the Riot, or give any Aſſiſtance to the Sufferers, except a Stranger of ſome Authority, who delivered many of the Servants of GOD out of their Hands, whilſt the reſt only looked on the Abuſe with Pleaſure, and ſome of them were ſtrongly ſuſpected as working underhand to excite this Tumult and ſet the Heathen upon them, being grieved at this new Law which laid a Reſtraint upon theſe Feſtivals, in which they were wont to take ſo much Pleaſure. Which ſhews how deeply the Love of theſe Heathen Feſtivals was rooted in the Hearts of many Carnal and Libertine Chriſtians. In another Epiſtle he makes as ſad a Complaint to Aurelius Biſhop of Carthage [y] of the Intemperance and Debauchery which many ſuch Chriſtians were wont to commit upon the Feſtivals of their own Martyrs, and other Anniverſary Commemorations of their deceaſed Friends; which was only acting all the Impurity of the Heathen Feſtivals under the Name of Chriſtian. He prays him therefore to take ſome Method, to drive away ſuch profane and ſacrilegious Impurities from the Houſe of GOD [z]. But he thinks this could not be done by any rough Methods, or in any imperious Way, but by Inſtruction rather than Commanding; and by Admonition rather than Threatning: For that was the only Way [a] to deal with a Multitude: The Severity of Diſcipline was only to be exerciſed upon Sinners when their Numbers were ſmall. This is a grievous Complaint indeed, and he often repeats it in other Places [b]: Which ſhews how cloſe the Superſtition perſtition and Pleaſure of the Heathen Feſtivals ſtuck to the Hearts of many ignorant and carnal Men, even after they became Chriſtian: And their Multitudes in Africk were ſo great, that though their Crimes deſerved the Severity of Excommunication, yet St. Auſtin in ſuch Circumſtances, could not think that the proper Remedy to cure the Diſtemper. St. Ambroſe and other Italian Biſhops, he ſays, did happily root out this evil Cuſtom, and that was ſome Ground to hope it might be effected in Africk: But yet long after this we find the Complaint renewed againſt Chriſtians retaining the Relicks of Heathen Superſtition in this Matter of obſerving Feſtivals. For the Council of Trullo has a Canon [c] that forbids the Obſervation of the Kalends, and the Bota, and the Brumalia, and the Solemnity of the firſt of March, or May (as different Copies read it) and the publick Dancings, and other Ceremonies uſed by Men and Women, as handed down by ancient Cuſtom under the Names of the Heathen falſe Gods; Prohibiting likewiſe the interchanging of Habits in Men and Women, and wearing of comical and tragical Masks, and ſatyrical Dreſſes, and calling upon the Name of Bacchus in Treading the Wine-preſs, with ſome other ſuch ridiculous Vanities, proceeding from the Impoſture of the Devil. The Kalends here ſignify the firſt of January. The Bota is explained by Balzamon, and others who follow him, the Feaſt of the God Pan, becauſe Βοῦα ſignifies Sheep: But Gothofred [d] and Suicerus [e] more judiciouſly render it Vota, it being only the Latin Name Vota turned into Greek, and denoting the Heathen Feſtival of the third of January for the Safety of the Emperor. The Brumalia is by Balzamon underſtood of the Feaſt of Bacchus: But it may be better explained from Tertullian, who among many other Heathen Feſtivals, which ſome Chriſtians were very much inclined to obſerve, reckons the Brumæ, or Brumalia; and objects it [f] by way of Reproach to ſuch Chriſtians, That they were not ſo true to their Religion, as the Heathens were to theirs: For the Heathens would never obſerve any Chriſtian Solemnity, either the Lord's-Day, or Pentecoſt, or any other: They will not communicate with us in theſe Things; for they are afraid of being thought Chriſtians: But we are not afraid of being thought Heathens: whilſt we celebrate their Saturnalia, and Januariæ, and Brumæ, and Matronales, and mutually ſend Preſents and New-Year's Gifts, and obſerve their Sports and Feaſts. Where by the Brumæ, Learned Men [g] underſtand, not the Feaſts of Bacchus, but the Feſtivals of the Winter-Solſtice, properly called Bruma, from which they made a Conjecture, whether the Remainder of Winter would prove fortunate to them or not. This Superſtition, being a Relick of old Paganiſm, continued in the Minds of many Chriſtians to the Time of the Council of Trullo, An. 692. Which was the Reaſon why this Council forbad it, with many other Obſervations of the like Nature, under the Penalty of Excommunication; which, as we have ſeen, was always the Puniſhment of ſuch Crimes, except when the Multitude of Offenders (as St. Auſtin ſays) made it impoſſible to exerciſe the Severity of Eccleſiaſtical Diſcipline upon them.

I TAKE no Notice here of the Idolatry that might be committed in the Worſhip of Angels, or Saints and Martyrs, or the Virgin Mary, or Images, or the Euchariſt, becauſe I have had Occaſion before to ſpeak more at large of theſe in ſeveral Parts [*] of this Work. And it will be ſufficient here only to obſerve in general, That none but profeſſed Hereticks were ever accuſed of this Sort of Idolatry in the Primitive Ages, ſuch as the Angelici for worſhipping Angels, and the Simonians and Carpocratians for worſhipping Images, and the Collyridians for worſhipping the Virgin Mary: And theſe being Hereticks by Profeſſion, there is no Queſtion but that the Cenſures of the Church were inflicted on them, and all ſuch as adhered to or went over to them; which is ſufficient to remark here for explaining and confirming the Exerciſe of Diſcipline in the Church.

SECT. 19. Of Encouragers of Idolatry and Conniverſ at it.

THERE is but one Thing more to be noted concerning the Practice of Idolatry, which is, That all Favourers and Encouragers of Idolatry were equally reputed guilty of the Crime with Idolaters themſelves, as partaking in their Sin. If a Maſter ſent his Servant to ſacrifice for him, the Act was the Servant's, but the Guilt rebounded on the Maſter's Head, as the principal Author of it, as we have ſeen before in the Caſe of the Libellatici, who employed their Servants to ſacrifice for them. If a Judge who was obliged by his Office to extripate Idolatry, when the Law gave him Authority and Power to do it, did either publickly neglect his Duty, or ſecretly connive at the Practice of Idolaters, he was reputed guilty of the Crime by Participation. Thus St. Auſtin charges the Magiſtrates of a certain City as Criminals in this Reſpect [h], That when the Laws had empowered them to root out all the Remainders of Idolatry, they were negligent and remiſs in putting them in Execution: Though the Laws themſelves, to which [i] he refers, Had laid a Penalty of Twenty Pound of Gold upon any Judge, or Officer belonging to him, if by any Diſſimulation of theirs the Force of the Law, prohibiting Heathen Feſtivals, was fraudulently evaded. So before Idolatry was forbidden by the Imperial Laws, whilſt under the Countenance of Heathen Emperors it rode Triumphant, Chriſtians were obliged not only to abſtain from ſacrificing themſelves, but to lend no helping Hand by their Authority to the Sacrifices; not to make a Trade of ſelling Victims; not to be a Guardian or Curator of any Temple, or Collector of their Revenues; not to exhibit the Publick Games and Shews, either at his own Expence, or the Expence of the Publick, or ſo much as preſide in them when they were acted; not to uſe any of their ſolemn Words or Forms peculiar to idolatrous Worſhip, nor to ſwear by the Names of their Gods: All which Tertullian remarks and puts together in one [k] Place; giving this as a Reaſon why a Chriſtian under an Heathen Government could not ſafely take upon him the Office of a Judge; becauſe that Poſt would oblige him to countenance Idolatry either by his Authority, or ſome other of thoſe Ways, which he could not do without injuring his Conſcience and doing Violence to the Laws of his own Religion, which do not allow a Man to help forward the Practice of Idolatry in others. And for this Reaſon the Council of Eliberis [l] made an Order, that no Poſſeſſors or Landlords ſhould allow of any Thing that was brought in their Accounts by their Managers or Tenants, as given to an Idol, under the Penalty of Five Years Suſpenſion from the Communion. And in another Canon [m] they order all Maſters to prohibit their Servants, from retaining any Idols in their Houſes, as far as lay in their Power; or if they could not do this in Times of Perſecution for fear their Servants ſhould uſe ſome Violence toward them, that is, inform againſt them or betray them, they ſhould at leaſt keep themſelves pure, or otherwiſe be caſt out of the Church. In Times of Peace they were to carry their Power a little farther: For by a Rule of the ſecond Council of Arles [n], after Laws were made by the State to prohibit and root out Idolatry, every Presbyter within his own Territory or Diſtrict, was to proſecute all Infidels that ſtill continued to light Torches to Idols, or worſhip Trees, or Fountains, or Stones, under the Penalty of being himſelf reputed guilty of Sacrilege, if he neglected ſo to do. And every Lord or Governor of the Place, who upon Admonition ſhould refuſe to correct ſuch Errors in thoſe under his Command, was to be deprived of the Communion. By another Canon of the Council of Eliberis [o], all Perſons both Men and Women are prohibited to lend any Heathen their Cloaths and Apparel to ſet off their ſecular Pomp, under the Penalty of Three Years Suſpenſion from the Communion. Where by the ſecular Pomp it is moſt reaſonable to underſtand the idolatrous Ceremonies of the Heathen on their publick Feſtivals. But there is one Caſe peculiarly guarded againſt in that Council, becauſe many well-meaning Chriſtians, in a miſtaken Zeal againſt Idolatry, were apt to run in a contrary Extreme, and think themſelves obliged to break and deface Idols where-ever they found them: To correct which Error the Council [p] was forced to make another Decree to forbid this unwarrantable Practice, and to order, That if any one was ſlain in ſuch a Fact, he ſhould not be enrolled in the Catalogue of Martyrs: Becauſe the Goſpel gives no ſuch Command, neither do we find it ever practiſed by the Apoſtles. This Obſervation of the Council concerning the Practice of the Apoſtles, ſeems to be very Juſt. For whatever Zeal they had againſt Idolatry, we never read that they went in a tumultuous Way into the Heathen Temples to demoliſh their Idols; but rather the contrary Character is given by the Teſtimony of the very Heathen. Of which we have an illuſtrious Inſtance in the Apology which the Town-Clerk

Clerk of Epheſus made for Paul and his Companions, when they were accuſed by Demetrius and the Crafts-Men who made Silver Shrines for Diana, as if they had done Violence to her Temple, and to the Image which fell down from Jupiter: Ye have brought hither theſe Men, ſays he, which are neither Robbers of Churches, nor yet Blaſphemers of your Goddeſs, Acts xix. 37.

'TIS true indeed, Eulalia the Martyr had done ſome ſuch Thing not long before in Spain: But the Council would not have her Action, which might be done by a peculiar Impulſe of the SPIRIT, drawn into Example; becauſe it was an unneceſſary Provocation of the Heathen, and prejudicial to the Church, without any Warrant from Scripture; which bids Men confeſs CHRIST when they are called to do it, but not to provoke the Enemy by an imprudent Zeal, when there is no juſt Reaſon for it. And this is what Cyprian before them had always taught his People both his Preaching and his Writing, That they [q] ſhould raiſe no Tumults, nor offer themſelves of their own accord to the Gentiles; but when they were apprehended and delivered up to the Magiſtrate, then to ſpeak what the LORD put into their Hearts in that Hour, who would have us to confeſs him when called to do it, but not raſhly put ourſelves upon it. Thus the Ancients in this Matter of Idolatry, the great Crime of that Age, ſteered their Diſcipline with an even Courſe, keeping a juſt Medium between two Extremes; neither allowing any ſinful Compliance or Communication with it, nor encouraging any indiſcreet and over-zealous Oppoſition to it. And if Tertullian in the former Caſe has ſtretched the Matter a little too far; as when he determines it to be a Species, and Smatch of Idolatry for a Schoolmaſter to teach the Names of the Heathen Gods to his Scholars, or for a Chriſtian to fly in Time of Perſecution; it is eaſy to Account for theſe Singularities, knowing out of what School they came, and that they were not the Dictates of the Spirit of CHRIST, but the Spirit of Montanus: And it is a ſufficient Anſwer to any ſuch Pretences, that we meet with no ſuch dogmatical Aſſertions in purer Writers, nor any ſuch Rules in Eccleſiaſtical Diſcipline, nor any ſuch over-bearing Cuſtom in the Church of GOD. I have been the more curious in ſtating the Senſe of the Ancients upon theſe ſeveral Queſtions, both becauſe they are uſeful to explain the Diſcipline of the Church, and alſo becauſe that they may have their Uſe when applied to other Caſes: And it is not very common to find the Subject of Idolatry treated of in this Way by Modern Authors.

CHAP. V.

Of the Practice of curious and forbidden Arts, Divination, Magick, and Inchantment: And of the Laws of the Church made for the Puniſhment of them.

SECT. 1. Of the ſeveral Sorts of Divination. Particularly of Aſtrology.

ANOTHER great Crime againſt Religion was the Practice of curious and forbidden Arts, which are almoſt innumerable, from the great and various Inclinations of Men to Superſtition. I ſhall ſum them up under three general Names, Divination, Magick and Inchantment. Divination comprehends all the Arts and Ways of diſcovering Secrets, or foretelling Future Events, not knowable by any Rules of Nature; Magick, All the Arts of miſchievous Operations by ſecret and unknown Means, which is commonly called Sorcery, and by the Latins, Veneficium and Maleficium, from poiſoning and doing Miſchief; Inchantment chiefly relates to a pretended Skill and Power of doing good, as of curing Diſeaſes by certain Charms, and Words, and Signs, and Amulets, which has made it the more agreeable to weak and ſuperſtitious Perſons, becauſe it has a Pretence and Shew of being uſeful and beneficial to Mankind. Among the ſeveral Species of Divination one of the moſt noted and infamous was that of Aſtrology, or the Pretence of diſcovering Secrets by the Poſition or Motion of the Stars, Men who profeſſed this Art are commonly called Mathematici, Drawers of Schemes and Calculations; under which Name they are condemned in both the Codes [a]. And they were infamous not only under the Chriſtian Adminiſtration, but alſo under the old Romans. For there is a Law of Diocletian [b] in the Juſtinian Code, which allows the Art of of Geometry as an uſeful Science, but forbids the Ars Mathematica, the Aſtrologers Art, as a damnable Practice. And Tacitus [c] ſays, There were Decrees of the Senate made in the Reign of Tiberius for expelling all the Aſtrologers and Magicians out of Italy: But he likewiſe obſerves [d], That they were a Sort of Men, which were always forbidden, and yet always retained. For though they were deceitful and fallacious to great Men, yet they ſtill had an Inclination now and then upon Occaſion to conſult them. Their Expulſion out of Italy is alſo noted by Suetonius, as done twice [e] in the Reigns of Tiberius and Vitellius. Upon which Tertullian [f] in a ſmart and elegant Way, tells ſome Chriſtians, who pleaded for a Toleration of themſelves in the Profeſſion of this wicked Art, That Aſtrologers were expelled out of Italy and Rome, as their Angels were out of Heaven: The ſame Penalty of Baniſhment was inflicted on the Scholars, as had been on their Maſters before them. Now then the Laws of the State, both Heathen and Chriſtian, being thus ſevere againſt them, it was but reaſonable that the Cenſures of the Church ſhould be as ſharp upon them, becauſe they were a Species of Idolaters, and owed the Original of their Art to the Invention of wicked Angels. For this Reaſon the Conſtitutions [g] put Aſtrologers into the Black Liſt of ſuch as were to be rejected from Baptiſm, unleſs they would promiſe to renounce their Profeſſion. The firſt Council of Toledo [h] condemns the Priſcillianiſts with Anathema for the Practice of it. For we muſt know, That the Priſcillianiſts aſcribed all to Fate and the neceſſary Influence of the Stars, as St. Auſtin informs us: They aſſerted that Men were bound to fatal [i] Stars, and that our Bodies were compounded according to the Order of the twelve Signs of the Zodiack, as they who are commonly called Mathematici, or Aſtrologers maintain, appointing Aries for the Head, Taurus for the Neck, Gemini for the Shoulders, Cancer for the Breaſt, and ſo running through the other Signs, till they came to the Feet, which they attributed to Piſces, which is the laſt Sign in the Aſtrologers Computation. Leo [k] in one of his Epiſtles gives the ſame Account of them, That they maintained that the Bodies and Souls of Men were bound to fatal Stars, by which Folly Men were embarraſſed in the Errors of the Pagans, and obliged to worſhip thoſe Stars that were favourable to them, and appeaſe thoſe that were againſt them: But they who followed ſuch Vanities, could have no Place in the Catholick Church: For he that gives himſelf to ſuch Perſuaſions, is wholly departed from the Body of CHRIST. Sozomen [l] ſays, Euſebius Biſhop of Emeſa was accuſed of the Practice of this Art, and forced to fly from his Biſhoprick upon it. He gives it indeed another Name, calling it Apoteleſmatical Aſtronomy: But that [m] ſignifies the ſame Thing: For there were two Sorts of Aſtronomy, the one teaching the Nature and Courſe of the Stars; which was a lawful Art? And the other, the ſecret Effects and Powers of them in their Oppoſitions, Conjunctions, &c. which Effects were called their Apoteleſmata, and the Art itſelf Apoteleſmatica, and the Practicers of it anciently Apoteleſmatici, as afterwards Mathematici and Chaldæi. Some think [n] alſo theſe Apoteleſmata were little Figures and Images of Wax, made by Magical Art to receive the Influence of the Stars, and uſed as Helps in Divination. So that the Apoteleſmatical Art was the ſame in all Reſpects with Judicial Aſtrology. And therefore Euſebius Emiſſenus was condemned for the Practice of it, as an unlawful Art, utterly unbecoming the Character of a Chriſtian Biſhop. For by the Account that has been given, it is plain, that all ſuch Kind of Divination was looked upon as Idolatry and Paganiſm, as owing its Original to wicked Spirits, and as introducing an abſolute Fate and Neceſſity upon human Actions, and ſo taking away all Freedom from human Will, and making GOD the Author of Sin: Which Blaſphemies are commonly charged upon this Art by the Ancients, St. Auſtin [o] Lactantius [p], Tertullian [q], Euſebius [r], Origen and Bardeſanes Syrus, who wrote particular Diſſertations againſt it, mentioned by Euſebius, who gives ſome Extracts out of them. We may note farther out of St. Auſtin, That theſe Aſtrologers had ſometimes the

the Name of Genethliaci [s] from pretending to calculate Mens Nativities by erecting Schemes and Horoſcopes, as they called them, to know what Poſition the Stars were in at their Birth, and thence prognoſticate their good or bad Fortune, or any Accidents of their Life, by the Conjunction of the Stars they were born under. And becauſe ſome of theſe pretended to determine poſitively of the Lives and Deaths of Kings, which was reputed a very dangerous Piece of Treaſon; therefore the Laws of the State were more ſevere againſt them even under the Heathen Emperors, as Gothofred ſhews out [t] of the ancient Lawyers, Ulpian and Paulus: And that was another Reaſon, why the Church thought it proper to animadvert upon theſe with the utmoſt Severity of Eccleſiaſtical Cenſures; as thinking that what the Heathen Laws had puniſhed as a Capital Crime, ought not to paſs unregarded in the Diſcipline of the Chriſtian Church. It was this Crime that expelled Aquila from the Church. For Epiphanius ſays [u], He was once a Chriſtian; but being incorrigibly bent upon the Practice of Aſtrology, the Church caſt him out; and then he became a Jew, and in Revenge ſet upon a new Tranſlation of the Bible, to corrupt thoſe Texts which had any Relation to the Coming of CHRIST. St. Auſtin [x] gives a famous Inſtance of an Aſtrologer, who being excommunicated for his Crimes, afterwards became a Penitent, and was reconciled to the Church by his Miniſterial Abſolution. The Sum of his Crimes was this: He taught the fatal Influence of the Stars, That it was Venus that made Men commit Adultery, and not his own Will; and that it was Mars, and not his own Will, that made him commit Murder; and that if any Man was righteous, it was not from GOD, but from the Influence of Jupiter, a Star ſo called in the Heavens. And by this Art he had defrauded many People of their Money; but at laſt he became a Convert, and upon his Confeſſion and Repentance, was received into the Church again, to Lay-Communion, but for ever denied all Promotion among the Clergy. By which one Inſtance, we may judge of the Greatneſs of the Crime, and the Proceedings of the Church againſt ſuch Offenders.

SECT. 2. Of Augury and Soothſaying.

ANOTHER Sort of Divination was, that which was called Augury and Soothſaying. Which was committed ſeveral Ways. Sometimes by obſerving ſeveral Signs and Appearances in the Entrails of the Sacrifices, which was properly called Aruſpicina and Haruſpicium. Sometimes by Obſervations made upon the Motion, or Flying, or Singing of Birds, which was called Augury, in the ſtricteſt Senſe. Sometimes by Remarks made upon the Voice of Men, or their Sneezing, which was called an Omen, and the Thing reputed ominous. Sometimes by obſerving certain Signs in the Figure and Lineaments of the Body; as in the Hands, which was called Chiromancy; or in the the Face and Forehead, which was called Μεωποσκοπία, or Phyſiognomy; or in the Back, called Νωμαντεία, with many other Obſervations of the like Nature. The old Romans were much given to theſe Superſtitions, inſomuch that they had their Colleges of Augurs, and would neither fight, nor make War or Peace, or do any thing of Moment without conſulting them. The Squeeking of a Rat, was ſometimes the Occaſion of Diſſolving a Senate, or making a Conſul or a Dictator [y] lay down his Office, as begun with an ill Omen. Now though Chriſtianity was a profeſſed Enemy to all ſuch Vanities; yet the Remains of ſuch Superſtition contiued in the Hearts of many after their Converſion. So that the Church was forced to make ſevere Laws to reſtrain them. The Council of Eliberis [z] makes the Renunciation of this Art a Condition of Baptiſm, if an Augur had a mind to be baptized: And if afterward he returned to the Practice of it, he was to be caſt out of the Church. Which is alſo the Rule in the Apoſtolical Conſtitutions [a], and the Councils of Agde [b], Vannes [c], Orleance [d] and ſeveral others. The Conſtitutions not only cenſure Aſtrologers, Magicians, and Inchanters, but alſo wandring Fortune-Tellers, Augurs, and Soothſayers, Obſervers of Signs and Omens, Interpreters of Palpitations, Obſervers of Accidents in meeting others, and making Divination upon them, as upon a Blemiſh in the Eye, or in the Foot, Obſervers of the Motion of Birds or Weeſels, Obſervers of Voices and ſymbolical Sounds.

SECT. 3. Of Divination by Lots.

AND it is obſervable, That in the French Councils laſt mentioned, there is a peculiar Sort of Augury condemned under the Name of Sortes Sacræ, Divination by holy Lots. Which was a Piece of new Superſtition grafted upon an old Stock, and introduced with a more ſpecious Shew in the Room of an Heathen Practice. For the Heathens were uſed to divine by a Sort of Lots, which they called Sortes Virgilianæ: Which was done by a caſual opening of the Book of Virgil, and then the firſt Verſes

Verſes that appeared, were taken and interpreted into an Oracle. Thus Spartian ſays, [e] Hadrian had the Empire prognoſticated to him by drawing his Lots out of Virgil. For the firſt Words that appeared, Miſſus in Imperium magnum, portended that he ſhould become the Roman Emperor. And ſo Lampridius [f] in the Life of Alexander Severus, ſays, That Emperor alſo underſtood by this ſort of Divining-Lots out of another Verſe of Virgil, that he ſhould obtain the Government of the Roman Empire. Now many ſuperſtitious Chriſtians were of Opinion, that this ſort of Divination might be much better made by uſing the Holy Scriptures after the ſame Manner, and to the ſame Purpoſe: And therefore as the Heathen uſed Virgil, ſo they uſed the Bible, to learn their Fortune by ſacred Lots, as they called them, taking the firſt Paſſage that preſented itſelf, to make their Divination and Conjecture upon: And it appears, that ſome of the inferior Clergy, out of a baſe Spirit, and Love of filthy Lucre, encouraged this Practice, and made a Trade of it in the French Church. Whence the Gallican Councils are very frequent in the Condemnation of it. The Council of Agde [g] takes notice, That ſome of the Clergy and Laity followed after Soothſaying, to the great Detriment of the Catholick Religion; and under the Name of feigned Religion; profeſſed the Art of Divination, by what they called the Lots of the Saints, making uſe of a caſual Inſpection of the Scriptures to divine Futurities by. It is decreed therefore, "That "whoever of the Clergy or Laity ſhould be "detected in the Practice of this Art, either "as Conſulting or Teaching it, ſhould be caſt "out of the Communion of the Church". This had been decreed about ſixty Years before in the Council of Vannes, An. 465. in the very ſame Words. And the firſt Council of Orleance [h] about five Years after the Council of Agde, repeats the Decree with a very little Variation. But the Practice continued for all this: For Gregory of Tours [i] ſays, Kramnus the Son of King Clotharius conſulted the Clergy of Dijon upon ſome Points, and they gave him an Anſwer by this Sort of Divination. Some reckon St. Auſtin's Converſion owing to ſuch a Sort of Conſultation: But the Thought is a great Miſtake, and very injurious to him: For his Converſion was owing to a providential Call, like that of St. Paul from Heaven. He ſays [k], He heard a Voice he knew not whence, ſaying, Tolle lege, Tolle lege, Take up the Bible and read: Which he did, and the firſt Words he chanced to caſt his Eye upon were thoſe of St. Paul, Rom. xiii. Let us walk honeſtly as in the Day; not in Rioting and Drunkenneſs, not in Chambering and Wantonneſs, not in Strife and Envying: But put ye on the Lord JESUS CHRIST, and make not Proviſion for the Fleſh, to fulfil the Luſts thereof. Which Words being appoſite to his Caſe, he looked upon them as ſpoken directly to himſelf, and accordingly applied them to his own Condition: And ſo by GOD's Providence they became the Means of fixing him in that Piety, Purity and Sobriety, for which he was after ſo famous in the World. Here was nothing of Divination in all this; but a ſeaſonable Application of a proper Paſſage to himſelf, as he ſays St. Anthony had made of thoſe Words of our SAVIOUR, Go, ſell all that thou haſt, and give to the Poor, and thou ſhalt have Treaſure in Heaven, and come follow me. Which he took as an Oracle ſpoken immediately to himſelf, and they were the Occaſion of his turning to the LORD. As to any other Uſe of the Scripture for Divination, St. Auſtin was an Enemy to it, and expreſſes himſelf againſt it, reflecting on ſome who uſed it to that Purpoſe: As for thoſe [l] ſays he, who divine by Lots out of the Goſpel, though it be more deſirable they ſhould do this, than run to ask Counſel of Devils; yet I am diſpleaſed at this Cuſtom, which turns the Divine Oracles, which ſpeak of Things belonging to another Life, to the Buſineſs of this World, and the Vanities of the preſent Life. By which it is plain, he looked upon this Sort of Divination as a great Abuſe of the Goſpel, though not ſo bad as going directly to conſult Devils. As for thoſe which are commonly called Diviſory Lots, there is no Harm in them, when applied to Things in our own Power; as to dividing of Lands by Lot, or determining in an Army who ſhall firſt invade the Enemy; or in Time of a Plague or Perſecution, What Miniſters ſhall ſtay in a City to take Care of the Church; which is a Caſe particularly mentioned by St. Auſtin [m], and allowed as lawful. So a Prince may diſtribute his Puniſhments by Lot, when he is minded to ſpare ſome Criminals, and puniſh others. And when

when there are two Objects of Charity in equal Circumstances, and we cannot relieve both, St. Austin [n] thinks there is no Harm in casting Lots to determine which of them shall have our Charity. And there are many other indifferent Cases of the like Nature, in which Lots may be used without any Prejudice to Religion. And therefore the Church never made any Laws to forbid and censure them, save only in disposing of Ecclesiastical Offices, and the Lives of Men, which are too sacred to be committed to mere Chance or Lots without some special Divine Direction, as in the Case of Matthias and Jonas, which St. Jerom [o] says, are not to be drawn into Example; because special Privileges cannot make a common or general Law for all Cases: And it is plain, that without such special Direction, Lots of that Kind will be Matter of mere Chance, or else pure Divination.

THERE were some other Ways of Divination far more abominable than the former, because they were done by express Compact with the Devil, and always implied his Concurrence and Assistance. Sometimes he gave Answers by his Images and Idols, which were called Oracles. Sometimes by speaking in his Prophets, whom he possessed, who were called Pythonici and Pythonissæ, possessed with a Familiar, or Spirit of Divination, and Ἐγγαστριμύθοι, because these spake out of the Belly by the Navel. Sometimes Men used certain Ceremonies in sleeping, in such a Posture, in a Temple, in the Skins of the Sacrifices, &c. to receive his Impressions and Answers by Dreams, which was called Ὀνειρομαντεία. Sometimes he gave Answers by Spectres and Appearances from the Dead, as he did to Saul by the Witch of Endor. This they properly called Necromancy, that is, Divination by the Dead. Sometimes he spake by the Skull of a dead Man, called Κρανιομαντεία. Sometimes he gave Answers by certain Signs and Figures made in the Earth, or Water, or Air, or Fire, or a Glass, or a Riddle, and a Thousand other Ways of Imposture, either by real Appearances, or by deluding the Imagination. The Names of which and the Transactions may be seen in Delrio [p], or Lessius [q], or Du Moulin [r], who treat more particularly of them. That which is to our present Purpose, is only to observe, That as this Crime had in it a Mixture of Idolatry, Heresy, Infidelity, Apostacy, Sacrilege, Hypocrisy, Curiosity and Ambition; each one of which was a high Crime in itself; so the Church was always careful to lay the heaviest Censure of Excommunication upon it. The general Name, under which all the Species of it are condemned, is Μαντεία, prophecying, or divining, by Satan's Inspiration. In the Constitutions [s] among those that are to be denied Baptism, the Μάντεις, Oracle-mongers, are particularly specified. And in the Council of Ancyra [t] those that follow after such Diviners, οἱ καλαμαντευόμενοι, or take them into their Houses to exercise their wicked Arts, are to be excluded from Communion, and do Five Years Penance. By a Law of Constantius [u] in the Theodosian Code, the Vates and Harioli, are reckoned among others who practise forbidden Arts, such as Soothsayers, Astrologers, Augurs, Chaldeans, Magicians: And both they that use such curious Divinations, and they that consult them, are condemned to die, as guilty of a Capital Crime and Offence against Religion. Gothofred [x] observes, That this Law is often mentioned with some Regret by the Heathen Writers Ammianus Marcellinus, Mamertinus and Libanius, who give some Instances of Constantius's Severity in putting it in Execution. Constantine by a former Law or two [y] had indulged the Heathen in the Liberty of consulting their Augurs, provided they did it in Publick, and never put any Questions concerning the State of the Common-wealth or the Life of the Prince; which is noted also by Julius Firmicus Maternas [z] in his Books of Astrology written whilst he was an Heathen: But Constantius finding great Abuses made of this Permission, universally prohibited all such Consultations under the forementioned Penalty of Death: Which extended not only to Magicians, but to the Harioli and the Vates; the former of which waited on the Altars, to receive their Inspiration from the Fumes of the Sacrifices, as Tertullian [a] describes them; and the later, the Vates, were those who pretended to prophesy by the perpetual Motion of an indwelling Dæmon; whom therefore the Latins called Fanatici, and the Greeks, Enthusiasticks, and Θεόληπτοι, and Θεοφορούμενοι, &c. as may be seen in Theodoret [b] and Suidas [c], and many others. Now because no Christian could practice ctice this Art, nor conſult thoſe that did, without direct communicating with Devils, therefore the Civil Law made it a Capital Crime, and the Eccleſiaſtical Law puniſhed it with the ſevereſt Cenſure of Excommunication.

SECT. 5. Of Magical Inchantment and Sorcery.

NEXT to the Superſtition of Divination was that of Magick and Sorcery; which becauſe it commonly tended to work Miſchief, therefore they who gave themſelves to it, were uſually termed Venefici and Malefici, becauſe either by Poiſon or other Means of Faſcination they wrought pernicious Effects upon others. The Laws of the Theodoſian Code [d] frequently brand them with this Name of Malefici. Particularly they are charged by Conſtantine [e] as making Attempts by their wicked Arts upon the Lives of innocent Men, and drawing others by Magical Potions (called Philtra and Pharmaca) to commit Uncleanneſs. All ſuch, when they are detected, are appointed to be put to Death. Conſtantius [f] charges them farther with diſturbing the Elements, or raiſing of Tempeſts, and practiſing abominable Arts in the Evocation of the infernal Spirits to aſſiſt Men in deſtroying their Enemies: Whom he therefore orders to be executed, as unnatural Monſters, and quite diveſted of the Principles of Humanity. And it is obſervable, That in all thoſe Laws of the Chriſtian Emperors, which granted Indulgence to Criminals at the Eaſter-Feſtival [g], the Venefici and the Malefici, that is, Magical Practiſers againſt the Lives of Men, are always excepted, as guilty of too heinous a Crime to be comprized within the general Pardon granted to other Offenders. And according to theſe Meaſures the Laws of the Church were ſtrict and ſevere againſt all ſuch, under whatever Character or Denomination they were found guilty. The Council of Laodicea [h] condemns them under the Name of Magicians and Inchanters, together with thoſe called Mathematici and Aſtrologers, ordering all ſuch to be caſt out of the Church. The Council of Ancyra [i] forbids the Art under the Name of Pharmacy, Φαρμάκεια, that is, the Magical Art of inventing and preparing Medicaments to do Miſchief: And Five Years Penance is there appointed for any one that receives a Magician into his Houſe for that Purpoſe. St. Baſil's Canons [k] condemn it under the ſame Character of Pharmacy or Witchcraft, and lays Thirty Years Penance upon it. And the Fourth Council of Carthage cenſures it under the Name of Inchantment [l], joyning it with Augury, and denying Communion to all ſuch as follow after either, not to mention what private Writers, Origen [m], Tertullian [n], Hermes Paſtor [o], and many others have ſaid againſt it: Tertullian particularly obſerving, That there never was a Magician or Inchanter allowed to eſcape unpuniſhed in the Church.

SECT. 6. Of Amulets, Charms and Spels to cure Diſeaſes.

BUT there was one Sort of Inchantment, which many ignorant and ſuperſtitious Chriſtians, out of the Remains of Heathen Error, much affected: That was the Uſe of Charms and Amulets, and Spels to cure Diſeaſes, or avert Dangers and Miſchiefs both from themſelves and the Fruits of the Earth. For Conſtantine had allowed the Heathen, in the Beginning of his Reformation, for ſome Time not only to conſult their Augurs in Publick, but alſo to uſe Charms by way of Remedy [p] for bodily Diſtempers, and to prevent Storms of Rain and Hail from injuring the ripe Fruits, as appears from that very Law, where he condemns the other Sort of Magick, that tended to do Miſchief, to be puniſhed with Death. And probably from this Indulgence granted to the Heathen, many Chriſtians, who brought a Tincture of Heatheniſm with them into their Religion, might take Occaſion to think there was no great harm in ſuch Charms or Inchantments, when the Deſign was only, to do good and not evil. However it was, this is certain in Fact, that many Chriſtians were much inclined to this Practice, and therefore made Uſe of Charms and Amulets, which they called Periammata and Phylacteria, Pendants and Preſervatives to ſecure themſelves from Danger, and drive away bodily Diſtempers. Theſe Phylacteries, as they called them, were a Sort of Amulets made of Ribbands, with a Text of Scripture or ſome other Charm of Words written in them, which which they imagined without any natural Means to be effectual Remedies or Preservatives against Diseases. Therefore the Church, to root out this Superstition out of Mens Minds, was forced to make severe Laws against it. The Council of Laodicea [q] condemns Clergymen that pretended to make such Phylacteries, which were rather to be called Bonds and Fetters for their own Souls, and orders all such as wore them to be cast out of the Church. St. Chrysostom often mentions them with some Indignation: Upon those Words of the Psalmist, I will rejoice in thy Salvation [r], he says, We ought not simply to desire to be saved, and delivered from Evil by any Means whatever, but only by GOD. And this I say upon the Account of those who use Inchantments in Diseases, and seek to relieve their Infirmities by other Impostures. For this is not Salvation, but Destruction. In another Place dissuading Christians from running to the Jews, who pretended to cure Diseases by such Methods, he tells them, That Christians are to obey CHRIST, and not to fly to his Enemies: Though they pretend to make Cures, and promise you a Remedy to invite you to them, chuse rather to discover their Impostures [s], their Inchantments, their Amulets, their Witchcraft: For they pretend to work Cures no other Way; neither indeed do they work them truly at all, GOD forbid. But I will say one Thing farther, although they did work true Cures, it were better to die, than to go to the Enemies of CHRIST, and be cured after that manner. For what Profit is it, to have the Body cured with the Loss of our Soul? What Advantage, what Comfort shall we get thereby, when we must shortly be sent into everlasting Fire? He there proposes the Example of Job, and Lazarus, and the infirm Man who had waited at the Pool of Bethesda Thirty and eight Years, who never betook themselves to any Diviner, or Inchanter, or Jugler, or Impostor: They tied no Amulets nor Plates to their Bodies, but expected their Help only from the LORD: And Lazarus chose rather to die in his Sickness and Sores, than betray his Religion in any wise, by having Recourse to those forbidden Arts for Cure. This he reckons a Sort of Martyrdom [t], when Men chuse rather to die, or suffer their Children to die, than make Use of Amulets and Charms: For though they do not sacrifice their Bodies with their own Hands, as Abraham did his Son, yet they offer a mental Sacrifice to GOD. On the contrary, he says, the Use of Amulets was Idolatry, tho' they that made a Gain by it, offered a Thousand Philosophical Arguments to defend it, saying we only pray to GOD, and do nothing more; and, the old Woman that made them was a Christian and a Believer, with other such like Excuses. If thou art a Believer, sign thyself with the Sign of the Cross: Say, This is my Armour, this my Medicament; beside this I know no other. Suppose a Physician should come, and instead of Medicines belonging to his Art should use Inchantment only: Would you call him a Physician? No, in no wise: Because we see not Medicines proper to his Calling: So neither are your Medicines proper to the Calling of a Christian. He adds, That some Women put the Names of Rivers into their Charms; and others Ashes, and Soot, and Salt, crying out, That the Child was taken with an Evil Eye, and a Thousand ridiculous Things of the like Nature, which exposed Christians to the Scorn of the Heathen, many of whom were wiser than to hearken to any such fond Impostures. Upon the whole Matter he tells them, that if he found any henceforward that made Amulets or Charms, or did any other Thing belonging to this Art, he would no longer spare them: Meaning, that they should feel the Severity of Ecclesiastical Censure for such Offences. In other Places [u] he complains of Women that made Phylacteries of the Gospels to hang about their Necks. And the like Complaints are made by St. Basil [x], and Epiphanius [y]. Which shews that this Piece of Superstition, of trying to cure Diseases without Physick, was deeply rooted in the Hearts of many Christians.

THE Church indeed often cured Diseases without Physick, but then it was in the same Way that she dispossessed Devils, and wrought many Miracles for the Good of the World, by the Power of CHRIST, and Invocation of his Name. She did nothing, as Irenæus [z] says, by Invocation of Angels, or Inchantment, or any other Curiosity, but by directing her Prayers, pure and clean, and openly to the GOD that made all Things; and by Invocating the Name of the Lord JESUS CHRIST, she wrought Miracles for the Benefit of Men, and not for their Seduction. This was the Difference between Hereticks and the Church: Hereticks commonly made use of Inchantment, as is noted particularly by Irenæus concerning the Basilidians [a], who had their Images, which they used as Amulets, having the Name of Abraxas or Abracadabra, or as Baronius [b] thinks, the Names of their Three-Hundred Sixty-five Heavens, anſwering to the like Number of Members in human Bodies, written upon them. And St. Auſtin complains that ſome of Satan's Inſtruments, who profeſſed the Exerciſe of theſe Arts, were uſed to ſet the Name of CHRIST [c] before their Ligatures, and Inchantments, and other Devices, to ſeduce Chriſtians, and induce them to take the venemous Bait under the Covert of a ſweet and honey-Potion, that the bitter might lie hid under the ſweet, and make Men drink it without diſcerning, to their Deſtruction. To ſuch he gives this Advice, to ſeek CHRIST only in the Way which he has appointed. When we are afflicted with Pains in our Head, let us not run to Inchanters, and Fortune-tellers, and Remedies of Vanity. I mourn for you, my Brethren: For I daily find theſe Things done. And what ſhall I do? I cannot yet perſuade Chriſtians to put their Truſt only in CHRIST. With what Face can ſuch a Soul go unto GOD, that has loſt the Sign of CHRIST, and taken upon him the Sign of the Devil? In another Place, he bids [d] them, when they are ſick, to receive the Body and Blood of CHRIST, and anoint themſelves with that Unction, which may prove beneficial both to Body and Soul. For when they may have a double Advantage in the Church, why ſhould miſerable Men endeavour to bring upon themſelves ſuch Multiplicity of Evils by running to Inchanters, and Fountains and Trees, and diabolical Phylacteries, and Characters, and Soothſayers, and Diviners, and Fortune-tellers? He mentions many other Superſtitions of the like Nature, which were the Remains of Heatheniſm, ſuch as the ſacrilegious Cuſtom uſed about the Hind, their crying out when the Moon was eclipſed to defend themſelves from Witchcraft, their keeping Thurſday Holiday in Honour of Jupiter; concerning all which he concludes, That they who ſtill continued to follow ſuch Vanities, ought to be reproved [e] by their Fellow-Chriſtians; and if after that, they did not amend their Ways, they ſhould thenceforward baniſh them from all Society both in eating and Converſation. Some think this Homily rather belongs to Cæſarius Arelatenſis; and if ſo, it only ſhews, that this Crime prevailed among ſome in France, as it did for many Ages after: Which appears from the Capitulars of Charles the Great [f], where Decrees were made againſt Calculators, Inchanters, and Tempeſtarians, as they are called, that is, Raiſers of Storms and Tempeſt, and Obligators, or Makers of Phylacteries to bind about the Neck. Who are alſo noted and condemned in the Council of Rome [g] under Gregory II. An. 721. and in the Council of Trullo [h], which forbids any one to conſult Diviners, or thoſe called Centenarii, or any ſuch, to diſcover Secrets, under the Penalty of ſix Years Penance, according to the Rules of the ancient Fathers. And the ſame Penalty is impoſed upon thoſe who carry about She-Bears πρὸς παίγνιον, to the Deluſion and Hurt of the People, and uſe the Words, Fortune, and Fate, and Genealogy, and ſuch like Names to impoſe upon the Simple. Alſo all Obſervers of the Clouds, and Juglers, and Makers of Phylacteries [i] and Diviners, perſiſting in their heatheniſh and pernicious Practices, are ordered to be caſt out of the Church. For what Communion, ſays the Apoſtle, hath Light with Darkneſs? And what Agreement hath the Temple of GOD with Idols? And what Part hath he that believeth with an Infidel? And what Concord hath CHRIST with Belial? It is plain from this, there were ſtill ſome Remains of heatheniſh Superſtition and Idolatry among Chriſtians, eſpecially in the Uſe of Phylacteries and Divining, and other ſuch vain Obſervations. But it is hard to gueſs, what are meant by Centurions, who are here joined with Diviners, and forbidden to be conſulted. There is a Law of Honorius [k] in the Theodoſian Code, which Gothfoed thinks may give a little Light to this Canon. For there the Chiliarchæ and Centonarii, Captains of Thouſands, and Captains of Hundreds, are plainly ſpoken of as Leaders of the People, and Managers in ordering the idolatrous Pomps of the Gentiles; being joyned with Frediani and Dendrophori, which he ſhews to be thoſe Officers in the Pomp, who carried the Images of the Gods on their Shouldiers in Proceſſion. They were the Chief of certain Corporations or Companies, who are mentioned in another Law of Honorius under the Names of Collegiati and Viturarii (or Didumarii) the Officers of Apollo Didumæus; and Nemeſiaci, the Officers of the Goddeſs Nemeſis, Good Fortune; and the Diſpenſer of Fate; and Signiferi and Cantabrarii, who carried the Enſigns and Banners of their Gods in their Pomps, and Games, and Feſtivals [l]. And theſe, as Gothofred ſhews out of Commodianus [m] a Chriſtian Poet, pretended to divine and tell Fortunes, as inſpired by the Gods: And they incorporated others into theſe Colleges, as principal Officers in theſe Pomps; whence they were called Chiliarchæ and Hecatontarchæ, Captains of Thouſands, and Captains of Hundreds. All which agree with the Canon of the Council of Trullo, which joyns the Hecatontarchæ with the Vates, or Diviners, and makes them Fortune-Tellers, talking much of Fortune and Fate, and Genealogies or Nativites, to deceive the People. They who carried about She-Bears or other Animals, Balzamon ſays, were ſuch Impoſtors as pretended, that the Hairs of thoſe Bears, or Toys tied to them, were Remedies againſt Witchcraft. And ſo the Council forbids all theſe Ways of making and uſing Charms and Amulets, as the Relicks of Heathen Superſtition, ſtill remaining among the weaker and baſer Sort of Chriſtians. I have been the more curious in Searching into the true Meaning of this Canon, becauſe it is paſſed over in Silence by moſt Commentators, and the Reader with me muſt own himſelf beholden to the Learned Gothofred for the Explication of it.

SECT. 7. Of the Præſtigiæ or falſe Miracles wrought by the Power of Satan.

THERE is another Sort of Impoſtors mentioned in the ſame Canon under the Name of Γοητευταὶ, which is a general Name for all that uſe Tricks and Impoſtures; but here it is taken in a more reſtrained Senſe, for ſuch as pretended to work Miracles by the Power of Magick, ſuch as Jannes and Jambres among the Egyptians, and Simon Magus among the Jews, and Apollonius Tyanæus and other Impoſtors among the Gentiles. They are otherwiſe called Θαυματοποιοὶ and Ψηφάδες [n] by the Greeks, and Præſtigiatores by the Latin Writers. Their Tricks were chiefly ſhewed in making falſe Appearances of Things, and impoſing upon Men by the Deluſion of the outward Senſes. The ancient Author of the Recognitions deſcribes their Art [o] in the Perſon of Simon Magus, whom he brings in giving himſelf this Vain-glorious Character: I can make myſelf diſappear to thoſe that would apprehend me, and again, I can appear when I pleaſe; when I am minded to fly, I can paſs through Mountains and Stones, as through the Mire; when I caſt myſelf Headlong from a Precipice, I am carried as if I were Sailing to the Earth without Harm; when I am bound I can looſe myſelf, and bind them that bound me; when I am cloſe ſhut up in Priſon, I can cauſe the Doors to open of their own Accord; I can give Life to Statues, and make them appear as living Men; I can make Trees grow ſuddenly out of the Earth, and raiſe up Plants in a Moment; I can throw myſelf into the Fire, and not be burnt; I can change my Countenance, ſo as not to be known; yea, I can ſhew myſelf with two Faces unto Men: I can make myſelf a Sheep or a Goat; I can give little Children a Beard; and fly in the Air; I can ſhew much Gold, or turn Lead into Gold; I can ſet up Kings, and dethrone them at Pleaſure. Now Tertullian [p] obſerves, That Simon Magus, for theſe juggling Practices, and Miracles belonging to his Profeſſion, was anathematized by the Apoſtles, and caſt off as an Alien from the Faith. And all ſuch Sophiſters, as he terms them, had ever the ſame Fate from the Beginning of the Goſpel. Which Obſervation of Tertullian's is moſt certainly true, and might be confirmed by Abundance of Inſtances in ancient Story; and eſpecially of Hereſiarchs, or Founders of new Hereſies, who pretended commonly to work Miracles and Wonders, to gain a Reputation to their novel Opinions. I will only mention one or two that were famous in this Kind. The Heretick Marcus, the Father of the Marcoſians, is thus deſcribed by an ancient Author, who wrote before the Time of Irenæus [q] in theſe Words: O Marcus thou Idol-Maker and Wonder-Worker, Empirick in Aſtrology and Art of Magick, by which thou doſt propagate thy ſeducing Doctrines, making a Shew of Signs and Miracles to them that are led into Error by thee, which are the Works of the Apoſtate Power, Satan thy Father inables thee to do by the Angelical Power of Azazel, uſing thee as the Fore-runner of the Antichriſtian Deceit. And Irenæus [r] himſelf takes notice of one of his juggling Tricks, which was, That when he pretended to conſecrate the Euchariſt in a Cup of Wine and Water, he made it appear of a Purple and Red Colour, by a long Prayer of Invocation, that it might be thought the Grace from Above diſtilled the Blood into the Cup by his Invocation. Such another Impoſture is mentioned by Firmilian in his Letter to Cyprian, where he he ſpeaks of a Woman who pretended to be inſpired by the HOLY GHOST, but was really acted by a diabolical Spirit [s], by which ſhe counterfeited Exſtaſies, and pretended to prophecy, and wrought many wonderful and ſtrange Things, and boaſted that ſhe would cauſe the Earth to move. Not that the Devil has ſo great Power, either to move the Earth, or ſhake the Element by his Command; but the wicked Spirit fore-ſeeing and underſtanding that there will be an Earthquake, pretends to do that which he foreſees will ſhortly come to paſs. And by theſe Lyes and Boaſtings, the Devil ſubdued the Minds of many to obey him, and follow him whereſoever he was pleaſed to command or lead them. And he made that Woman walk bare-foot through the Snow in the Depth of Winter, and feel no Trouble or Harm by running about after this Faſhion. But at laſt, after having played many ſuch Pranks, one of the Exorciſts of the Church diſcovered her to be a Cheat, and ſhewed that it was a wicked Spirit, which before was thought to be the HOLY GHOST. There are many other ſuch Inſtances in the Hiſtory of the Montaniſts [t] and Pepuzians, and the Apellians and Severians [u] mentioned by St. Auſtin and other Writers: But theſe are ſufficient to ſhew what Pretences were commonly made by Hereticks to the Power of Working Miracles, which the Church, apprehending them to be wrought by the Power of Satan, and not by the HOLY SPIRIT, rejected as Impoſtures, and puniſhed the Pretenders with the ſevereſt of her Cenſures. For ſo Euſebius [x] out of Apollinaris particularly tells us of the Montaniſts, That their new Propheſies being judged impious and profane, their Doctrine was condemned, and the Authors expelled from the Communion of the Church, as Enthuſiaſts and Demoniacks, who were always excluded from the Participation of the Holy Myſteries, whilſt they remained under the Power and Agitation of Satan. St. Baſil [y] appoints the ſame Penance for thoſe who profeſs Conjuration, γοητείαν, as for thoſe who are guilty of Murder, that is, Twenty Years in ſeveral Stations of Repentance.

SECT. 8. Of Obſervation of Days and Accidents, and making Preſages and Omens upon them.

THERE was one Piece of Superſtition more, which the Ancients frequently cenſure as a Breach of Mens Baptiſmal Vow, and Part of the Pomp and Service of Satan, which they profeſſed to renounce in Baptiſm. This was, the Obſervation of Days and Accidents, as lucky or unlucky, and making Preſages and Omens upon them. St. Chryſoſtom [z] has a large Invective againſt this Sort of Superſtition. The Pomps of Satan, ſays he, are the Theatre and the Games of the Cirque, together with the Obſervation of Days, and Preſages and Omens. And what are Omens? Why? ſuppoſe when a Man goes firſt out of his Doors he meets a Man that has but one Eye, or is lame, he reckons this ominous, or foreboding ſome ill Fortune to him. This is Part of the Pomps of Satan. For the Meeting of a Man does not make the Day evil, but the ſpending of it in Sin. Keep from Sin, and the Devil himſelf cannot hurt you: But if you make Preſages upon meeting of a Man, you diſcern not the Devil's Snare, who makes you without Reaſon an Enemy to one who has done you no Harm. But there is one Thing more ridiculous than this, which I am aſhamed to ſpeak, and yet I muſt mention for your Salvation. If a Man meets a Virgin, he cries out preſently, This will be a fruitleſs Day with me: But if he meets an Harlot, it will be a good and lucky Day, and bring him in great Gain and Advantage. See how the Devil here hides his Craft, to make us abhor a Chaſte and Modeſt Woman, and love an impudent Harlot. But what ſhall a Man ſay of thoſe who uſe Inchantments and Ligatures, binding the braſen Medals of Alexander the Great about their Heads or Feet? Are theſe, I pray, the Hopes of a Chriſtian, that after the Croſs and Death of our LORD, we ſhould place our Hopes of Salvation or Health in the Image of an Heathen King? Know you not what great Things the Croſs has done? How it has deſtroyed Death, aboliſhed Sin, taken away the Force of Hell and the Grave, and diſſolved the Power of Death? And canſt thou not truſt it for curing thy bodily Diſtempers? It has raiſed the whole World from the Dead, and canſt not thou confide in it? But thou doſt not only ſeek after ſuch Ligatures, but Inchantments, entertaining old drunken and ſtaggering Women in thy Houſe for this Purpoſe. And the Apology you make for ſo doing, is worſe than the Error itſelf. The Woman, ſay you, who makes the Charm, is a Chriſtian, and ſhe does nothing but make uſe of the Name of GOD. For that very Reaſon I the more deteſt and abhor her, becauſe ſhe uſes the Name of GOD to diſhonour and reproach it; becauſe ſhe is called a Chriſtian, and does the Works of an Heathen. The Devils confeſſed the Name of GOD, yet they were Devils for all that: They ſaid to CHRIST, We know thee who thou art, the Holy One of GOD, yet notwithſtanding he rebuked them and caſt them out.

out. Wherefore I beſeech you, keep yourſelves pure from this Deceit, and let this word (I renounce thee Satan) be your Staff. As you would not go into the Market without your Shoes and Clothes, ſo never go forth of your Doors without firſt uſing this Word, I renounce thee Satan, and thy Pomp and Service, and I make a Covenant with thee, O CHRIST. Go no where without this Word, and it will be your Staff, your Armour, your impregnable Tower. Join with this Word the Sign of the Croſs in your Forehead, and ſo not only the Meeting of any Man, but the Devil himſelf cannot hurt you. St. Auſtin gives a like Caution againſt this Sort of ſuperſtitious Obſervations. To this Kind [a] ſays he, belong all Ligatures and Remedies, which the School of Phyſicians reject and condemn, whether in Inchantments, or in certain Marks, which they call Characters, or in other Things that are to be hanged and bound about the Body, and kept in a dancing Poſture, not for any Temperament of the Body, but for certain Significations either Occult or Manifeſt: Which by a gentler Name they call phyſical, that they may not ſeem to affright Men with the Appearance of Superſtition, but do good in a natural Way: Such are Ear-rings hanged upon the Tip of each Ear, and Rings made of an Oſtriches Bones for the Fingers, or when you are told in a Fit of the Convulſions or Shortneſs of Breath, to hold your Left-Thumb with your Right-Hand. To which may be added a Thouſand vain Obſervations, as, if any of our Members beat; if when two Friends are walking together, a Stone, or a Dog, or a Child happens to come between them: They tread the Stone to Pieces, as the Divider of their Friendſhip, and this is tolerable in Compariſon of beating an innocent Child that comes between them. But it is more pleaſant, that ſometimes the Childrens Quarrel is revenged by the Dogs; for many Times they are ſo ſuperſtitious, as to dare to beat the Dog that comes between them, who turning again upon him that ſmites him, ſends him from ſeeking a vain Remedy to ſeek a real Phyſician indeed. Hence proceed likewiſe thoſe other Superſtitions: For a Man to tread upon his Threſhold when he paſſes by his own Houſe: To return back to Bed again, if he chance to ſneeze whilſt he is putting on his Shoes: To return into his Houſe, if he ſtumble at his going out: If the Rats gnaw his Cloths, to be more terrified with the Suſpicion of ſome future Evil, than concerned for his preſent Loſs. He ſays, Cato gave a wiſe and ſmart Anſwer to ſuch an one, who came in ſome Conſternation to conſult him about the Rats having gnawed his Stockins: That, ſaid he, is no great Wonder, but it would have been a Wonder indeed, if the Stockins had gnawed the Rats. St. Auſtin mentions this witty Anſwer of a wiſe Heathen, to convince Chriſtians the better of the Unreaſonableneſs and Vanity of all ſuch ſuperſtitious Obſervations. And he concludes [b], That all ſuch Arts, whether of trifling or more noxious Superſtition, are to be rejected and avoided by Chriſtians, as proceeding originally frome ſome pernicious Society between Men and Devils, and being the Compacts and Agreement of ſuch a treacherous and deceitful Friendſhip. The Apoſtle forbids us to have Fellowſhip with Devils: And that, he ſays, reſpects not only Idols and Things offered to Idols, but all imaginary Signs pertaining to the Worſhip of Idols, and alſo all Remedies and other Obſervations, which are not appointed publickly by GOD to promote the Love of GOD and our Neighbour, but proceed from the private Fancies of Men, and tend to corrupt the Hearts of poor deluded Mortals. For theſe Things have no natural Vertue in them, but owe all their Efficacy to a preſumptuous Confederacy with Devils: And they are full of peſtiferous Curioſity, tormenting Anxiety, and deadly Slavery. They were firſt taken up, not for any real Power to be diſcerned in them, but gained their Power by Mens obſerving them. And therefore by the Devil's Art they happen differently to different Men according to their own Apprehenſions and Preſumptions. For the great Deceiver knows how to procure Things agreeable to every Man's Temper, and inſnare him by his own Suſpicions and Conſent. As this is an excellent Account of theſe ſuperſtitious Obſervations, ſo it ſeems to intimate, that ſome Difference was made between the Profeſſors of theſe Arts, and thoſe who through Ignorance were deluded by them: And therefore though the former might fall under the ſevereſt Diſcipline of the Church, yet the latter ſeem rather to have been chaſtiſed by Admonitions and Rebukes, as here by St. Auſtin and St. Chryſoſtom, and not to have incurred the higheſt Cenſure of Excommunication, becauſe of their Simplicity, and perhaps becauſe of the Numbers of thoſe who were daily inclined to mind ſuch Obſervations of Days and Accidents, without conſidering either the Original of the Superſtition, or the Miſchief thereby done to Piety and Religion. I have inſiſted a little longer upon theſe Things, becauſe it is to be feared, there is always Reaſon for a ſerious Caution againſt ſuch Superſtitions, which are apt to creep upon unwary Men in all Ages of the Church.

CHAP. VI.

Of Apoſtacy into Judaiſm and Paganiſm, of Hereſy and Schiſm, Sacrilege and Simony.

SECT. 1. Of ſuch as apoſtatized totally from Chriſtianity to Judaiſm.

BESIDES the forementioned Crimes againſt the firſt and ſecond Commandments, there were a great many others worth our Obſervance, as bringing Men under the ſevereſt Cenſures of the Church. Among theſe the Diſpoſition which many ſhewed toward the antiquated Religion and Ceremonies of the Jews, is often taken Notice of by the Ancients in their Accounts of Church-Diſcipline. And of theſe we may obſerve Three Sorts or Degrees. Some entirely abandoned the Chriſtian Religion, and went totally over to the Jews; others mingled the Jewiſh Ceremonies and ſome of their Doctrines with the Chriſtian Religion; and others complied ſo far with them as to communicate with them in many of their unlawful Practices, though they made no formal Profeſſion of their Religion. Of the firſt Sort was Aquila the Tranſlator of the Bible, who at firſt was a Chriſtian, as Epiphanius [a] informs us, till being expelled from the Church for adhering to Aſtrology, he fled over to the Jews and took Sanctuary among them, ſetting about a new Tranſlation of the Bible in Spite to the Chriſtians. And ſuch were many in the Days of Barchochab the great Impoſtor, who compelled many Chriſtians to deny and curſe CHRIST, as Juſtin Martyr [b] acquaints us. Now tho' the Imperial Laws allowed thoſe that were originally Jews the Freedom of their Religion, and many Privileges for a long time under the Reigns of Chriſtian Emperors, yet they ſeverely prohibited any Chriſtian going over to them, and laid very great Penalties upon all ſuch Apoſtates. Conſtantine [c] left it to the Diſcretion of the Judges to puniſh ſuch Apoſtates with Death, or any other condign Puniſhment. His Son Conſtantius [d] ſubjected them to Confiſcation of Goods. And Valentinian Junior [e] laid upon them the Penalty of being Inteſtate, denying them and all other Apoſtates the Privilege of beſtowing their Eſtates by Will. And in Compliance with theſe Laws of the State, the Church after ſhe had anathematized ſuch Apoſtates, ſhewed her Deteſtation of them farther in denying them the Privilege of being accepted as credible Witneſſes in any of her Courts of Judicature. For he cannot be faithfull to Man, ſays the Fourth Council of Toledo [f], who has been unfaithfull to GOD. Therefore thoſe Jews, who were heretofore Chriſtians, and now prevaricate from the Faith of CHRIST, ought not to be admitted to give Teſtimony, although they call themſelves Chriſtians: Becauſe as they are ſuſpected in the Faith of CHRIST, ſo their Credit ought to be queſtioned in human Teſtimony. Therefore their Evidence is of no Force, ſeeing they have falſified in the Faith; neither is any Credit to be given to them, who have caſt off the Word of Truth.

SECT. 2. Of ſuch as mingled the Jewiſh Religion and the Chriſtian together.

ANOTHER Sort there were, who did not wholly caſt off the Chriſtian Religion, but made up a new Religion for themſelves by a Mixture of both together. Such a Miſcellany, was the Hereſy of the Nazarenes, and thoſe of the Ebionites, and Cerinthians, and Elceſaites, and Sampſeans, who obſerved Circumciſion, and other Rituals of the Jewiſh Law, together with ſo much as they retained of the Chriſtian; as may be ſeen in the Accounts which St. Auſtin [g] and other ancient Writers give of them. And Gothofred thinks the Cælicolæ, who are ſpecified and condemned in two or three Laws of Honorius in the Theodoſian Code, were a Mongrel Sect of the ſame Nature. They joyned Circumciſion and Baptiſm together; agreeing both with Jews and Chriſtians in rejecting Idols, and Worſhipping only Heaven, that is, the GOD of Heaven, whence they had the Title of Cælicolæ; but in this they agreed with the Jews only, That they rejected the Doctrine of a TRINITY in the Godhead, and only worſhipped GOD in One Perſon. In which reſpect the Sabellians alſo, and Paulianiſts, and Praxeans, and Theodoſians, and Arians, and Photinians, who either denied the Divinity of CHRIST, or confounded the Three Divine Perſons into One are commonly charged by the Ancients as flying back to Judaiſm in this Point, [g] Aug. de Hæreſ. cap. 8, 9, 10, & 32.

Point, whilſt they ſubverted the true Doctrine of the Chriſtian TRINITY by their heterodox Innovations. 'Tis particularly remarked by Learned Men [b] concerning Paulus Samoſatenſis, That the true Reaſon why he denied the Divinity of CHRIST, was to compliment Queen Zenobia, who was a Jewiſh Proſelyte: For he thought, that by reducing CHRIST to be a mere Man, he might reconcile both Religions, and take away the Partition-Wall that divided the Jews and Chriſtians, nothing being ſo great an Offence to the Jews, as that CHRIST was owned by his Diſciples to be GOD. There was another Sect which called themſelves Hypſiſtarians, that is, Worſhippers of the Moſt High GOD, whom they worſhipped, as the Jews, only in One Perſon: And they obſerved their Sabbaths, and uſed Diſtinction of Meats, clean and unclean, tho' they did not regard Circumciſion, as Gregory Nazianzen [i], whoſe Father was once one of this Sect, gives the Account of them. Now 'tis certain, the Church never allowed any of theſe Miſcellaneous Doctrines, or Mongrel Sects; but condemned them all as Hereticks, and excluded them from her Communion. And the Laws of the State were particularly ſevere againſt the Cœlicolæ, thoſe who joyned Circumciſion and Baptiſm together, there being Three Laws of Honorius in the Theodoſian Code directly formed againſt them. In the firſt of which he ranks them with the Donatiſts, and Manichees, and Priſcillianiſts and Heathens; ordering all general Penal Laws againſt Hereticks to be put in Execution againſt them; and particularly appointing, that the Houſes of the Cœlicolæ, where that new Sect held their Conventicles, ſhould with the reſt [k] be forfeited to the Church. In the ſecond, he calls them [l] the new audacious Sect of the Jews, which preſumed to diſturb the Sacraments of the Church, becauſe they rebaptized the Catholicks, as the Donatiſts did. In the third [m], he ſtyles them again, the new Sect of the Cœlicolæ, who brought in an unheard Superſtition. And he threatens them, That unleſs within a Year they returned to the Service of GOD and the Chriſtian Worſhip, all the Laws made againſt Hereticks ſhould lay hold of them. St. Auſtin alſo in one of his Epiſtles [n] mentions this Sect of the Cœlicolæ, and intimates, that they joyned with the Donatiſts in rebaptizing the Catholicks. And that he means a Sect which apoſtatized from the Chriſtian to the Jewiſh Religion, is evident from the Title of Majores, given by him to their Miniſters. For by this Title the Jewiſh Miniſters are frequently [o] diſtinguiſhed in the Theodoſian Code. So that it is plain, that this Sect of the Cœlicolæ was a Mixture of the Chriſtian and Jewiſh Religion together, and as ſuch were both puniſhed by the Laws of the State, and rejected from Communion by the Laws of the Church.

SECT. 3. Of ſuch as communicated with the Jews in their unlawful Rites and Practices.

BESIDES theſe, there were ſome Chriſtians, who neither went over wholly to the Jews Religion, nor in any main Point complied with them, who yet in ſome more remote Rites and Practices refuſed not to communicate with them, as in obſerving their Feſtivals, and Feaſting, and marrying with them, and receiving their Eulogiæ, and having recourſe to them for Phylacteries and Charms to cure Diſeaſes: All which therefore are condemned under the Penalty of Eccleſiaſtical Cenſure. The Council of Laodicea forbids [p] Chriſtians to judaize by reſting on the Sabbath, under Pain of Anathema: Likewiſe it prohibits keeping Jewiſh Feaſts, and accepting [q] Feſtival Preſents ſent from them: As alſo receiving Unleavened Bread from them, which is accounted a Partaking with them in their Impiety. To the ſame Purpoſe, among the Apoſtolical Canons we find one forbidding to faſt [r] or feaſt with the Jews, or to receive any of their Feſtival Preſents, or Unleavened Bread, under the Penalty of Depoſition to a Clergyman, and Excommunication to a Layman. And by another of the ſame Canons [s], to carry Oyl to a Jewiſh Synagogue, or ſet up Lights on their Feſtivals, is paralleled with the Crime of doing the like for an Heathen Temple or Feſtival, and both of them equally puniſhed with Excommunication. So a Biſhop, Prieſt or Deacon, who celebrate the Eaſter Feſtival before the Vernal Equinox [t] with the Jews, is to be depoſed. Though this is a little more ſevere than the Conſtitution that was made about it in the Time of Irenæus, and afterward was confirmed by Conſtantine [u] and the Council of Nice: For they forbid the the Celebration of Eaſter with the Jews, but lay not the Penalty of Depoſition or Excommunication upon thoſe that followed that Cuſtom, becauſe they had ſome Pretence of Apoſtolical Tradition for their Practice. The Council of Eliberis [x] forbids Chriſtians to have Recourſe to the Jews for Bleſſing the Fruits of the Earth, and that under the Penalty of Excommunication, becauſe it was a Reproach to the Manner of Bleſſing them in the Church, as if that was weak and ineffectual. The ſame Council [y] forbids both Clergy and Laity to eat with the Jews, upon Pain of being caſt out of the Communion of the Church. And the Reaſon of this is aſſigned by the Council of Agde [a]; becauſe they uſe not the Meats that are commonly uſed among Chriſtians: Therefore it is an unworthy and ſacrilegious Thing to eat with them: For as much as they reputed thoſe Things unclean, which the Apoſtle allows us to receive; and ſo Chriſtians are rendred Inferior to the Jews, if we eat of ſuch Things as they ſet before us, and they contemn what we offer them. Which Canon is repeated in the ſame Words in the Council of Vannes [b], and there is a Rule in the Council of Epone [c] to the ſame Purpoſe. It appears alſo from the Fourth Council of Toledo, that the Spaniſh Churches were much infeſted with this Sort of complying and judaiſing Chriſtians; ſome patronizing the Jews in their Perfidiouſneſs; others turning down-right Apoſtates, and ſubmitting to Circumciſion; and others indifferently converſing with them to the manifeſt Danger of their own Subverſion. Againſt which laſt Sort of Compliers the Sixty-firſt Canon of that Council is particularly directed; and there are ſix or ſeven Canons more in the ſame Place one after another relating to Caſes of the like Nature, which need not here be related. The Council of Clermont [d] makes it Excommunication for a Chriſtian to marry a Jew. And the Third Council of Orleans prohibits it under the ſame Penalty [e], together with Sequeſtration of the Perſons from each other. St. Chryſoſtom inveighs againſt thoſe who went out of Curioſity to the Jewiſh Synagogues, ſaying [f], It was the ſame Thing as going to an Idol-Temple: If any one ſees thee, who haſt Knowledge, go to a Synagogue, to ſee the Trumpets, ſhall not the Conſcience of him that is Weak, be emboldened to admire the Jewiſh Ceremonies? Although there be no Idol there, yet the Devils inhabit the Place. Which I ſay not only of the Synagogue which is here, but of that of Daphne, that more impure Pit of Hell, which they call Matrona. I hear many of the Faithful go thither, and ſleep in the Place. But GOD forbid I ſhould call them the Faithful. For the Temple of Apollo and Matrona are equally prophane. Is not that a Place of Impiety, where Devils dwell, although there be no Image there? Where the Murderers of CHRIST aſſemble, where the Croſs is caſt out, where GOD is blaſphemed, where the Father is not known, where the Son is reviled, where the Grace of the Spirit is rejected? He particularly bewails thoſe [g], who went either to ſee or join with them in the Celebration of their Faſts and Feſtivals, the Feaſt of Trumpets, the Feaſt of Tabernacles, and the Faſt of the great Day of Expiation, which came all in the Month Tiſri, or September, when he preached his Sermons againſt the Jews. He notes alſo the Wickedneſs of ſome [h] who would draw others by Force to go and take an Oath in a Jewiſh Synagogue, upon a moſt unaccountable Perſuaſion, that an Oath given there was more formidable than any other whatſoever. For theſe and many other Reaſons, which he there largely purſues [i], He ſtiles all ſuch only Half-Chriſtians, χειστιανὸι ἥμισέας. He has two other [k] whole Sermons againſt thoſe who obſerved the Jewiſh Faſts, and frequented their Synagogues: In the latter of which he addreſſes himſelf to them in theſe Words: We have now clearly proved that the Places where the Jews aſſemble, are inhabited by Devils. How then dareſt thou, after being in the Chorus of Devils, return to the Aſſembly of the Apoſtles? How is it that thou art not afraid, after communicating with thoſe who ſhed the Blood of CHRIST, to come and communicate at the Holy Table, and partake of that precious Blood? Does not Horror and Trembling ſeize thee, after having committed ſo great Wickedneſs? Doſt thou not Reverence the Holy Table? Wherefore I exhort you, admoniſh and edifie one another. If any Man be a Catechumen, who labours under this Diſtemper, let him be driven from the Doors of the Church: If he be one of the Faithful, and initiated in the holy Myſteries, let him be driven from the holy Table. All Sins need not Exhortation and Counſel: There are ſome that naturally require a more quick and ſharp Abſciſſion. I therefore from henceforth ſhall abſtain from all farther Admonition, and proteſt, and proclaim, claim, If any Man love not the Lord JESUS CHRIST, let him be Anathema. And what greater Argument can there be of any ones not loving CHRIST, than his communicating with thoſe in their Feſtivals, who killed CHRIST? It is not I that anathematize theſe, but Paul, yea CHRIST that ſpeaks by Paul, and ſays, Whoever of you are juſtified by the Law, ye are fallen from Grace. In his Comment upon thoſe Words of St. Paul to Titus [l], Rebuke them ſharply, that they may be ſound in the Faith, he ſpeaks again of this Matter: If they who make a Diſtinction of Meats, are not ſound, but weak, what ſhall we ſay of thoſe who faſt with the Jews, and obſerve their Sabbaths with them, and go to their Synagogues, to that at Daphne, called the Cave of Matrona, and that in Cilicia, called the Place of Cronus, or Saturn? In his ſixth Homily againſt the Jews [m], he inveighs vehemently againſt thoſe who went to the Synagogues to get Charms and Amulets to cure Diſeaſes, in which the Jews pretended to a peculiar Art above others, and this tempted many vain Chriſtians to have Recourſe to them: But of this I have ſpoken before in the laſt Chapter out of Chryſoſtom, and ſhall only here add, That the Jews boaſted much of this Art as coming to them from ſome Apocryphal Writings of King Solomon, ſuch as his Book of Prayers, or Inchantments to cure Diſeaſes, and his Book of Exorciſms, or Conjurations to caſt out Devils, both which are mentioned by Joſephus [n], who magnifies the Art as ſtill remaining among them, ſpeaking of one Eleazar, who according to the Rules there preſcribed, pretended to cure one poſſeſſed with a Devil in the Preſence of Veſpaſian. Origen alſo [o] mentions theſe Books, and ſays, ſome Chriſtians adjured Devils after the ſame manner by Forms out of Apocryphal and Hebrew Books, in Imitation of thoſe of Solomon, which he does by no Means allow, but ſays, it is Judaical, and not according to the Power given by CHRIST to his Diſciples. By all which it appears, That as the Jews pretended much to this Power, ſo many Chriſtians were ſo vain as to have ſecret Recourſe to them (for Chryſoſtom ſays, they were aſhamed to do it in Publick) imagining their Inchantments to be of more Efficacy than any others. Which was a double Crime, firſt to make Uſe of Charms, and then to take them from the Enemies of CHRIST, to the flagrant Scandal of the Chriſtian Religion. Whenever therefore any were convicted of this Crime, they were ſure to feel the utmoſt Severity of Eccleſiaſtical Cenſure.

SECT. 4. Of ſuch as apoſtatized voluntarily into Heatheniſm.

ANOTHER Sort of Apoſtates were ſuch as fell away voluntarily into Heatheniſm, after they had for ſome Time made Profeſſion of Chriſtianity. Theſe differed from common Lapſers into Idolatry in this, that the common Lapſers fell by Violence, and the Fear and Terror of Perſecution; but theſe fell away by Principle and Choice, and out of a diſlike to Religion, and Love of Gentiliſm, which they preferred before the Religion of CHRIST, when they might without any Moleſtation have continued in it. And as the one uſually returned as ſoon as they had Opportunity, ſo the other commonly continued Apoſtates all their Days. The Imperial Laws, at leaſt from the Time of Theodoſius, denied ſuch the common Privilege of Roman Subjects, depriving them of the Power of diſpoſing of their Eſtates by Will. As appears from two Laws [p] of Theodoſius the Great in the Theodoſian Code, which the other ſucceeding Emperors confirmed. Particularly Valentinian Junior not only denied them the Power of making their own Wills, but of receiving any Benefit [q] from others by Will: No Man might make them his Heirs, nor could they ſucceed to any Inheritance. They were to have no Commerce or Society with others; their Teſtimony was not to be taken in Law; they were to be infamous and of no Credit among Men, among whom they were allowed to live without baniſhing, only to make it the greater Puniſhment, to live among Men, and not enjoy the common Privileges of Men. Nay, they were never to regain their ancient State: Though they repented and returned, this ſhould be no Benefit to them in this Reſpect; their Repentance ſhould never obliterate their Crime, becauſe they had broken their Faith to GOD. This was their Condition in Temporals. As to their ſpiritual Eſtate, by ſome Canons of the Church they were as ſeverely treated. The Council of Eliberis [r] denies Communion to the laſt

to all such Apostates, because they doubled their Crime, not only in absenting from the Church, but in defiling themselves with Idolatry also. Whereas such lower Apostates as only absented themselves from religious Assemblies [s] for a long Time, and did not commit Idolatry, if afterward they returned again to the Church, they might be admitted upon Ten Years Penance to the Communion. Cyprian [t] says, Many of his Predecessors in Africk denied Communion to the very last to all such as were guilty of the Three great Crimes, Apostacy, Adultery and Murder. And though this Rigour was a little abated in his Time, yet they still held idolatrous Apostates to Penance all their Lives. Which is also noted by [u] Siricius Bishop of Rome, who says, Apostates were to do Penance as long as they lived, and only to have the Grace of Reconciliation at the Point of Death. And this Favour was allowed them only upon Proviso that they returned and submitted to Penance voluntarily in their Life-time, before any Necessity or Sickness drove them to it: For if they continued Apostates to the last Extremity, and only desired to be reconciled when the Fear of imminent Death was upon them, then Cyprian [x] assures us, it was denied them; because it was not Repentance, but the Fear of approaching Death only that made them desire a Reconciliation. And the first Council of Arles [y] made a like Decree, That such Apostates should not be received to Communion, unless they recovered, and brought forth Fruits worthy of Repentance. The true Reason of which Severity was to deter Men from depending too much on a Death-Bed Repentance. For except in the Case of Martyrdom (which Cyprian [z] allows) such Apostates had no Time to demonstrate by their Works that they were real Penitents; and therefore the Church denied them Absolution, and remitted them wholly to GOD's unerring Judgment.

SECT. 5. Of Hereticks and Schismaticks, and their Punishments, both Ecclesiastical and Civil.

THE next Sort of Delinquents against the first Commandment were Hereticks and Schismaticks, the one of which transgressed against the Doctrine of Faith delivered by the Church, and the other against the Unity of the Worship and Discipline, which compacted the Church into one Mystical Body of CHRIST. In each of these there were several Degrees of Sin, which were accordingly treated with different Degrees of Ecclesiastical Censure. But because it was impossible for Lawgivers to know the particular Motives and Inducements that might ingage Men in Heresy or Schism, therefore the Laws were made in general Terms against them, and the Allowances that were proper to be made upon any Occasion for the Abatement of the Rigor of them with Respect to particular Persons, were left to the Discretion of the Judges that were to put them in Execution. I shall first give a short Account of the Civil Penalties that were inflicted on them by the Imperial Laws of the State, and then consider the Ecclesiastical Punishments that were inflicted on them by the Laws of the Church.

SECT. 6. Of the Civil Punishments inflicted on them by the Laws of the State.

THE Laws of the State made against Hereticks and Schismaticks by the Christian Emperors from the Time of Constantine, are chiefly comprized under one Title de Hæreticis, in the Theodosian Code, which are too many and long to be here recited: Therefore I shall only give a short Abstract of them, as they are collected by Gothofred [a] in his Premonition to that Title. There he observes Eleven distinct Kinds of Punishment inflicted on them in general, besides the particular Laws that were made against their Teachers, their Bishops and Clergy, and their Conventicles, and all such as favoured or abetted them.

THE First of these is the general Note of Infamy affixed to them all in Common: The Laws always stiling them infamous Persons. Leg. 7. 13. 54. de Hæreticis. Leg. 2. de Fide Catholica.

Secondly, THE affixing on some particular Sects special Names of Infamy and Reproach; as when Constantine ordered the Arians to be called Porphyrians; and Theodosius Junior the Nestorians to be branded with the Name of Simonians. Leg. 66. de Hæreticis.

Thirdly, ALL Commerce forbidden to be held with them. Leg. 17, 18, 36, 40, 48. de Hæreticis.

Fourthly, THE depriving them of all Offices of Profit and Dignity in the Militia Palatina, or Civil Administration. Which was first enacted by Theodosius, and confirmed by the succeeding Emperors. Leg. 9, 25, 29, 42, 48, 58, 61, 65. Particularly Gothofred commends that as an elegant Saying of Honorius, Leg. 42. De Hæreticis. Nullus nobis sit aliqua ratione conjunctus, qui a nobis Fide & Religione discedat, We will have none employed about us, that differs from us in Faith and Religion. Yet he observes that all burdensome Offices both of the Camp and Curia, what we now call Military and Municipal cipal Offices, were impoſed upon them. Which is confirmed by one of Juſtinian's Novels [b], which the Learned Reader may ſee in the Margin.

Fifthly, THEY were rendred Inteſtate, that is, They were unqualified either to diſpoſe of their Eſtates by Will, or receive Eſtates from any others. Thus particularly the Manichees were puniſhed, Leg. 7, 9, 18, 65. De Hæreticis. & Leg. 3. De Apoſtatis. And ſo the Eunomians, Leg. 17, 25, 49, 50, 58. De Hæreticis. And the Donatiſts, Leg. 54. De Hæreticis. & Leg. 4. Ne ſanctum Baptiſma iteretur. Purſuant to which Laws all the Goods of Hereticks, or whatever was left them, were liable to be confiſcated either to the Emperor's Exchequer, or to the People of Rome, Leg. 7, 9, 17, 18, 49. De Hæreticis.

Sixthly, THE Right of Giving or Receiving Donations was denied them, Leg. 7, 9, 36, 40, 49, 50, 58, 65. De Hæreticis. & Leg. 4. Ne ſanctum Baptiſma iteretur. Only by one Law ſome few Perſons were excepted, to whom they might give Donations, Leg. 65. De Hæreticis.

Seventhly, THE Manichees, Cataphrygians, Priſcillianiſts, or Followers of Priſcilla, the Montaniſts, Donatiſts, and all that were rebaptized by them, are deprived of the Right of Contracting, Buying and Selling. Leg. 40, 48, 54. De Hæreticis, & Leg. 4. Ne ſanctum Baptiſma iteretur.

Eighthly, PECUNIARY Mulcts and Fines were impoſed upon them, Leg. 39, 52, 54. De Hæreticis. And theſe are often mentioned by St. Auſtin [c] who yet intimates that they were ſeldom executed againſt them, and frequently begged off by the Catholicks interceding for them.

Ninthly, THEY were Proſcribed, Tranſported and Baniſhed, Leg. 13, 14, 15, 16, 18, 20, 29, 40, 52, 53, 57, 58. De Hæreticis. Thus Sozomen [d] ſays, Conſtantine baniſhed Arius, and all who oppoſed the Decrees of the Council of Nice. And St. Auſtin [e] ſays, Conſtantine baniſhed the Donatiſts, and all the ſucceeding Emperors, except Julian the Apoſtate, made ſevere Laws againſt them. And Julian only recalled them in deviliſh Policy, thinking by Diviſion of Chriſtians into ſeveral Sects, to deſtroy them totally out of the World. Honorius baniſhed Jovinian into Boa, an Iſland of Dalmatia, as is ſaid in the Law particularly [f] made againſt him in the Code. And Theodoſius Junior baniſhed Neſtorius, as the Hiſtorians [g] note, after the Council of Epheſus had depoſed him.

Tenthly, THEY were alſo in many Caſes ſubjected to Corporal Puniſhment, Scourging, &c. before they were ſent into Baniſhment, Leg. 21, 53, 54, 57. De Hæreticis. & Leg. 4. Ne ſanctum Baptiſma iteretur.

Eleventhly, FINALLY in ſome ſpecial Caſes they were terrified by ſanguinary Laws, which made them liable to Death, though by the Connivence of the Princes, or the Interceſſion of the Church they were rarely put in Execution againſt them. Gothofred ſays, the firſt Law of this Kind was made by Theodoſius, An. 382. againſt the Encratites, the Saccophori, the Hydroparaſtatæ, and the Manichees, which is the Ninth Law de Hæreticis. After which Example many other ſuch Laws were made againſt the heretical Prieſts, who pretended to exerciſe their Superſtition againſt the Prohibition of the Law: And againſt ſuch Poſſeſſors as allowed them a Conventicle to meet in: And againſt ſuch as retained and concealed their pernicious Books. Leg. 15, 16, 34, 35, 36, 38, 43, 44, 51, 53, 54, 56, 63. De Hæreticis.

BESIDES theſe Laws and Puniſhments, which chiefly affected their Perſons, Gothofred obſerves ſeveral other Laws which tended to the Extirpation of Hereſy. Such as Firſt, Thoſe which forbid heretical Teachers to propagate their Doctrine publickly or privately. Leg. 3, 5, 13, 24. De Hæreticis, & Leg. 2. Ne ſanctum Baptiſma iteretur.

Secondly, THE Laws which forbid Hereticks to hold publick Diſputations by gathering Companies of People together. Leg. 46. De Hæreticis. & Leg. 1. & 2. & 3. De his qui ſuper Religione contendunt.

Thirdly, THOSE which forbid Hereticks to ordain Biſhops, Presbyters, or any other Clergy. Leg. 12, 14, 21, 22, 24, 26, 27, 57, 58, 65. De Hæreticis.

Fourthly, SUCH as deny to thoſe that are ſo ordained, the Names and Privileges of Biſhops and Clergy. Leg. 1, 24, 26, 28. De Hæreticis. Leg. 2. & 3. de Epiſcopis. Leg. 1. Ne ſanctum Baptiſma iteretur.

Fifthly, SUCH Laws as prohibit all heretical Conventicles and Aſſemblies. Leg. 4, 5, 6, 10, 11, 12, 14, 15, 19, 20, 21, 26, 30, 45, 52, 53, 54, 56, 65. De Hæreticis. & Leg. 7. Ne ſanctum Baptiſma iteretur.

Sixthly, SUCH as forbid Hereticks to build Conventicles. Leg. 1, 2, 6, 7, 8, 12, 30, 65. De Hæreticis. & Leg. 3. de Fide Catholica. And forbid any one to leave any Legacy to them.

THIS is the ſhort Account of thoſe ſeveral Penal Laws, which the Emperors made againſt Hereticks, from the Time of Conſtantine to Theodoſius Junior and Valentinian III. which the Learned Reader may find at length under their reſpective Titles in both the Theodoſian and Juſtinian Code. It is ſufficient here to have given an Abſtract of them, which may ſerve to give ſome Light to the Laws of the Church that were made againſt them, which I now proceed to give a more particular Account of, as more properly relating to the Diſcipline of the Church.

SECT. 7. How Hereticks were treated by the Diſcipline of the Church. 1. They were anathematized and caſt out of the Church.

AND here we may obſerve in the firſt Place, That Hereſy was always accounted one of the principal Crimes that a Chriſtian could be guilty of, as being a Sort of Apoſtacy from the Faith, and a voluntary Apoſtacy, which was a Circumſtance that added much to the Heinouſneſs of the Offence. Therefore Cyprian comparing the Crimes of Hereticks and Schiſmaticks with thoſe that lapſed into Idolatry by the Violence of Perſecution, ſays [b], This is a worſe Crime than that which the Lapſers may ſeem to have committed, who yet do a ſevere Penance for their Crime, and implore the Mercy of GOD by a long and plenary Satisfaction. The one ſeeks to the Church, and humbly intreats her Favour; the other reſiſts the Church, and proclaims open War againſt her. The one has the Excuſe of Neceſſity: The other is detained in his Crime by his own Will only. He that lapſes, hurts himſelf alone: But he that endeavours to make an Hereſy or Schiſm, draws many others with him into the ſame Deluſion. Here is only the Loſs of one Soul: But there a Multitude is drawn into Danger. The Lapſer is ſenſible that he has committed a Fault, and therefore he mourns and laments for it: But the other grows proud, and ſwells in his Crime, and pleaſing himſelf in his Errors, he divides the Children from the Mother, tempts and ſollicites the Sheep from the Shepherd, and diſturbs the Sacraments of GOD. And whereas a Lapſer ſins but once, he ſins every Day. Finally a Lapſer may afterward become a Martyr, and obtain the Promiſes of the Kingdom; but the other, being out of the Church, cannot attain to the Rewards of the Church, although he be ſlain for Religion. This laſt Argument is often inſiſted on by Cyprian [i], and St. Auſtin and Chryſoſtom and others, to deter Men from ingaging in Hereſy and Schiſm: And it implies that Hereticks did voluntarily cut themſelves off from the Communion of the Church, and ſtood condemned of themſelves (as the Apoſtle words it, and ſome of the Ancients underſtand it) by a voluntary Excommunication, or Separation of themſelves from the Church. Yet this did not hinder, but that notwithſtanding any ſuch Separation of themſelves, the Church ordinarily pronounced a more formal Anathema or Excommunication againſt them. As the Council of Nice ends her Creed with an Anathema againſt all thoſe who oppoſed the Doctrine there delivered; and the Council of Gangra cloſes every Canon with Anathema againſt the Euſtathian Hereticks; and there are innumerable Inſtances of this Kind in the Tomes of the Councils, which it would be next to impertinent here only to refer to, they are ſo well known to all that have ever looked into them.

SECT. 8. Secondly, Debarred from entring the Church by ſome Canons, though not by all.

TO proceed then, When they were once formally excommunicated, ſo long as they continued impenitent, they were by ſome Rules of Diſcipline debarred from the very loweſt Privileges of Church-Communion; being forbidden to enter the Church, ſo much as to hear the Sermon, or the Scriptures read in the Service of the Catechumens. The Council of Laodicea [k] has a Canon to this Purpoſe, "That Hereticks, "ſo long as they continue in their Hereſy, "ſhall not be permitted to enter into the "Houſe of GOD." And it is probable this Rule might be obſerved in the ſtrict Diſcipline pline of ſome Churches. But it was no general Rule: For I have had Occaſion to ſhew before [*] out of the African and Spaniſh Councils, and ſeveral Paſſages of St. Chryſoſtom's Homilies, That Liberty was granted to Hereticks, together with Jews and Heathens, to come into the Church and hear the Sermon preached and the Scriptures read, being theſe were proper for their Inſtruction. They thought it not impoſſible but that Hereticks might be converted in the Church, as Polemon, a debauched young Man, was converted in the School of Xenocrates; when coming drunk and with his Bacchanal Wreaths about his Head to hear the Philoſopher read his Lecture (which happened to be about Temperance and Modeſty) he was ſo affected therewith, that he not only became his Scholar and Convert, but his Succeſſor alſo in the School of Plato [l]. The Hiſtorians tell us, That Chryſoſtom by this Means brought over many to acknowledge the Divinity of CHRIST, whilſt they had Liberty to come to hear [m] his Sermons. And the Fathers of the Council of Valentia in Spain [n] give this as the Reaſon, why they allowed Heathens and Hereticks to come and hear the Biſhops Preaching, and the Reading of the Scriptures, becauſe they had found by Experience, that many by this Means had been converted to the Faith. So that the Church, which always ſtudied Mens Edification, and not their Deſtruction, in Prudence ſo ordered her Diſcipline, as to encourage Hereticks to frequent one Part of her Service, which ſhe allowed to her Penitents and Catechumens. And if Hereticks were at any time denied it, there was ſome very particular and extraordinary Reaſon for it.

Sect. 9. 3dly, No one to encourage Hereticks and Schiſmaticks, by frequenting their Aſſemblies.

BUT there was not the ſame Reaſon for allowing Catholicks to frequent the Aſſemblies or Conventicles of Hereticks and Schiſmaticks; becauſe this inſtead of converting them, had rather been to have confirmed and hardened them in their Errors: And therefore the Prohibition in this Caſe was more peremptory and univerſal, That no one ſhould joyn with Hereticks in any religious Offices, and leaſt of all in their Conventicles, under Pain of Excommunication. To this Purpoſe the Apoſtolical Canons, if any Biſhop, Preſbyter or Deacon pray with Hereticks, let him be ſuſpended: But if he ſuffer them to officiate as Clergymen [o], let him be depoſed. And again [p], If any Clergyman or Layman go into a Synagogue of Jews or Hereticks to pray, let him be excommunicated or depoſed. In like manner the Council of Laodicea [q], None of the Church are permitted to go to the Cemeteries or Martyries of Hereticks for Prayer or Worſhip, under Pain of Excommunication for ſome Time, till they repent and confeſs their Error. And again [r], It is not lawful to pray with Hereticks or Schiſmaticks. The Aſſembly of Hereticks, ſays the Council of Carthage [s], is not a Church, but a Conventicle. Therefore with Hereticks [t] no one ſhall either pray or ſing Pſalms. If a Catholick, ſays the Council of Lerida [u], offer his Children to be baptized by Hereticks, his Oblation ſhall in no wiſe be received in the Church. But then this was to be underſtood, where a Man might have Baptiſm from a Catholick, and he choſes rather to go to an Heretick to receive it, without any Neceſſity to compel him ſo to do. For otherwiſe, as has been obſerved before out of ſeveral Places of St. Auſtin [x] in Caſes of extreme Neceſſity, a Man was allowed to receive Baptiſm from an Heretick, rather than die without it. This was not eſteemed any Breach of Catholick Unity, neither was it the Caſe which the Diſcipline of the Church reſpected, when ſhe forbad Men to encourage Hereticks by a voluntary joyning with them, and receiving Baptiſm from them. Cyril of Jeruſalem in this Senſe [y], bids his Catechumen abhor eſpecially the Conventicles of impious Hereticks, and have no Communcation with them. Chryſoſtom compares Hereticks to thoſe [z] that deface the King's Coin: Though it be but in one Point, they ſubvert the Goſpel thereby, and therefore Catholicks ought to make a Separation from them. No one, he ſays [a], ought to maintain any Friendſhip with Hereticks. Since they maintain different Doctrines, Men ought not to mingle or joyn in their Aſſemblies with them. And he adds, That to divide the Church by Schiſm, is no leſs a Crime than to fall into Hereſy, becauſe it expoſes the Church to the Ridicule of the Gentiles. There he alſo urges [b] that famous Saying of Cyprian, The Blood of Martyrdom cannot blot out this Crime. For why art thou a Martyr? Is it not for the Glory of CHRIST? If therefore thou layeſt down thy Life for CHRIST, why doſt thou lay waſte his Church, for which CHRIST laid down his own Life? Thus the Ancients diſſuade Men from encouraging Hereticks and Schiſmaticks by reſorting to their Aſſemblies.

SECT. 10. 4thly, No one to eat or converse with Hereticks, or receive their Presents, or retain their Writings, or make Marriages with them, &c.

THERE were many other Marks of Infamy and Disgrace set upon Hereticks by the Laws of the Church joyning with the Laws of the State, to give Men a greater Abhorrence of them. No one was so much as to eat at a Feast, or converse familiarly with them; No one might receive their Eulogiæ, or Festival Presents; nor read or retain their Writings, but discover and burn them; No one might make Marriages, or enter into any Affinity with them, except they would promise to return into the Catholick Church. As long as they continued in Heresy, their Names were struck out of the Diptychs of the Church: And if they died in Heresy, no Psalmody or other Solemnity was used at their Funeral; no Oblations were offered for them, nor any Memorial ever after made of them in the solemn Service of the Church. But because I have spoken of these Things fully in the general Description of the Church's Treatment of excommunicate Persons before [*], it may be sufficient only to have hinted these several Points in this Place, because these Punishments were not peculiar to Hereticks, but belonged to all in general that were under the Censure of Excommunication.

SECT. 11. 5thly, Hereticks not allowed to be Evidences in any Ecclesiastical Cause against a Catholick.

YET there are Two Things of this Kind, which it may not be improper to speak a little more particularly of here. 1. That by the Laws of the Church, as well as the State, Hereticks were rendered infamous, and their Testimony was not to be taken as Evidence in any Ecclesiastical Cause whatsoever. The Testimony of an Heretick shall not be taken against a Bishop, says [c] the Apostolical Canons. In all Judgment, says the Council of Carthage [d], Examination shall be made into the Conversation and Faith both of the Accuser and Defendant. In the African Code there are Two Canons to this Purpose, the one forbidding all excommunicate [e] Persons (under which Hereticks are comprehended) to be Evidence against any Man, during the Time of their Suspension. And the other expresly naming Hereticks [f] among many others whose Testimony was not to be admitted in Law: Such as Slaves and Freedmen against their own Masters; all Mimicks and Actors, and such other infamous Persons; all Jews and Heathens; and all such whose Testimony was reprobated by the Laws of the State; except it were in some Matter of their own private Concerns, in which Case every Man was to have Justice, and any one allowed to accuse another. The same equitable Distinction is made by the general Council of Constantinople [g]: A Man might have a private Cause of Complaint against a Bishop; as, That he was defrauded in his Property, or in any the like Cases injured by him: In which Case his Accusation was to be heard, without considering at all the Quality of the Person or his Religion. For a Bishop was to keep a good Conscience, and any Man that complained of being injured by him, was to have Justice done him, whatever Religion he was of. But if the Crime was purely Ecclesiastical that was alledged against him; then the Personal Qualities of the Accusers were to be examined; and in the first Place Hereticks are not allowed to accuse Orthodox Bishops in Causes Ecclesiastical; neither any excommunicated Persons, before they had first made Satisfaction for their own Crimes. Gothofred indeed questions whether there be any Law in the Theodosian Code, which thus unqualifies Hereticks from giving Evidence: For though there be a Law of Valentinian's twice repeated [h] in two distinct Titles, declaring the proper Qualifications of Witnesses; yet he thinks in both Places it is to be understood of Apostates only, and not of Hereticks. But it is certain in Justinian's Code [i] this same Law is applied to Hereticks, rendring them uncapable of giving Evidence. And Justinian made two Laws of his own to confirm this Sense of the ancient Law. In one of which [k] he says, That whereas the Judges were at some Doubt, Whether they should admit the Testimony of Hereticks in determining Causes, he thus resolved the Matter for their Instruction: That where a Catholick was concerned in any Dispute, neither Heretiek nor Jew should be allowed lowed to give Evidence, whether both Parties were Catholicks, or only one: But in ſuch Cauſes as Jews or Hereticks had between themſelves, the Teſtimony of either might indifferently be admitted, as fit Witneſſes for ſuch Diſputers: Yet with an Exception to all thoſe who were of the mad Sect of the Manichees, of which the Borboritæ were a Part, and all who ſtill followed the Pagan Superſtition; alſo all Samaritans, and Montaniſts, and Taſcodrogitæ and Ophitæ, who differed not much from the Samaritans in the Likeneſs of their Guilt; all ſuch are prohibited univerſally either to give Teſtimony, or to proſecute any Action at Law. And he mentions and confirms this Decree in one of his Novels [l] alſo. But Whether Juſtinian was the firſt that made this Law in the State againſt Hereticks, as Gothofred would have it, or not, is not very material: It is certain there was ſuch a Rule in the Church long before. For St. Auſtin pleads it in Behalf of one of his Presbyters [m] Secundinus of Germanicia, a Place in his Diocеſe: Againſt a Catholick Presbyter we neither can nor ought to admit the Accuſations of Hereticks. And ſo he ſays again, in the Caſe of Cecilian Biſhop of Carthage, whom the Donatiſts accuſed of many Crimes: Neither Piety, nor Charity, nor Truth [n], will allow the Teſtimony of thoſe Men againſt him, whom we ſee to be out of the Church. And long before him, Athanaſius [o] pleaded the ſame in his own Behalf: When he was accuſed for ſuffering Macarius, one of his Presbyters to break the Communion-Cup, he urged, That his Accuſers were Melitians, who ought not to be credited, being Schiſmaticks, and Enemies both to him and the Church. A great many ſuch Rules are collected by Gratian [p] out of the Epiſtles of the ancient Popes, which tho' they be ſpurious, yet they are founded upon this known Practice of the Church, That the Teſtimony of an Heretick was not to be received againſt a Catholick in an Eccleſiaſtical Cauſe, which we have ſeen fully evinced in the preceding Allegations.

SECT. 12. 6thly, Hereticks not allowed to ſucceed to any Paternal Inheritance.

THE other Thing here to be obſerved is, That by the Laws of the Church all Men, or Eccleſiaſticks at leaſt, were obliged to diſcourage Hereſy by denying obſtinate Defenders of it ſuch Temporal Benefits and Privileges as it was in their Power to deny them. Thus for Inſtance, the Council of Carthage [q] forbids the Biſhops and Clergy to confer any Donations upon Hereticks, though they be of their Kindred, either by Gift or Will. And the Civil Law gave Force to this Decree, by rendring all Hereticks Inteſtate, that is, uncapable either of diſpoſing of their own Eſtates, or of receiving any Benefit from the Wills of others; as we have ſeen before (n. 6.) in ſpeaking of the Civil Sanctions made againſt them.

SECT. 13. 7thly, No Heretick to have Promotion among the Clergy after his Return to the Church.

ANOTHER Law of this Kind was that which forbad the Ordination of ſuch as were either baptized in Hereſy, or fell away after they had been baptized in Catholick Unity in the Church. They were allowed to be received as penitent Laymen, but not to be promoted to any Eccleſiaſtical Dignity in any Order of the Clerical Function. But this was a Piece of Diſcipline, that might be inſiſted upon, or diſpenſed with and waved, according as Church-Governors in Prudence thought moſt for the Benefit and Advantage of the Church. And therefore, though the Council of Eliberis [r] and ſome others inſiſt upon this Rule, yet the Council of Nice diſpenſed with it in the Caſe of the Novatians, and the African Fathers in the Caſe of the Donatiſts, to encourage thoſe Schiſmaticks to return to the Unity of the Church. But I only juſt mention this here, becauſe I have more fully ſtated it on both Sides upon other Occaſions in the preceding Parts [*] of this Work, to which the Reader may have Recourſe.

SECT. 14. 8thly, No one to be ordained who kept any of his Family that were not of the Catholick Faith.

AND there I have alſo noted another Rule, which relates to the Matter now in hand; which was, That no one ſhould be ordained Biſhop, Presbyter or Deacon, who had not firſt made all the Members of his Family Catholick Chriſtians. This is a Rule we find in the third Council of Carthage [s] where St. Auſtin was preſent: And there is no queſtion but that it was chiefly deſigned againſt the Donatiſts, though it equally affects all Hereticks, and Jews, and Pagans, and all who ſecretly by Connivence gave any Encouragement to them: It being thought abſurd to promote thoſe to the Government of the Church, who had had not Zeal or Intereſt enough to ſecure the Practice of true Religion within the Walls of their own Families. And the Rule tending directly to diſcourage Hereſy, I therefore mention it here as a Branch of the Ancient Diſcipline worthy our Obſervation.

SECT. 15. No one to bring his Cauſe before an heretical Judge, under Pain of Excommunication.

NEITHER can I paſs over another Rule of the Fourth Council of Carthage, which forbids Catholicks [t] to bring any Cauſe, whether juſt or unjuſt, before an heretical Judge, under Pain of Excommunication. This does not indeed deprive heretical Judges of their Office, or render their Deciſions Null, when the State thinks fit to allow them, as it ſometimes did under Conſtantius and Valens, and other heretical Emperors. For the Church has no Power in this Caſe, which belongs to the Civil, and not the Eccleſiaſtical Power, as has been [*] ſhewed before. But the Church had Power to lay an Injunction upon all her Members, not to bring their Cauſes before an heretical Judge, by a juſt Analogy to that Rule of the Apoſtle, not to go to Law before the Unbelievers. And this was one Way to diſcountenance Hereſy in Men of the higheſt Station: And for this Reaſon we may ſuppoſe the Church injoined it, to give a Check to Hereticks, by obliging Catholicks to end their Controverſies among themſelves, and have no Communication with Hereticks or Unbelievers.

SECT. 16. What Term of Penance impoſed upon relenting Hereticks.

WE have hitherto conſidered the Puniſhments laid upon Hereticks continuing in their Obſtinacy and Perverſeneſs, and bidding Defiance to the Communion of the Church. We are now to view the Church's Diſcipline and Behaviour toward them, when they ſhewed any Diſpoſition to relent and return to the Unity of the Faith. Now Hereſy being reckoned among the greateſt of Crimes, a proportionable Term of Penance was laid upon it. The Council of Eliberis [u] appoints ten Years Penance for ſuch as went over from the Catholick Church to any Hereſy, if ever they returned and made Confeſſion of their Crime, before they ſhould be admitted to Communion. Only an Exception is made in the Caſe of Infants, becauſe their Fault was not their own, but their Parents: Therefore they are ordered to be received without any Delay. The Council of Rome under Felix [x] ſets a more particular Mark upon Biſhops, Presbyters and Deacons, who ſuffered themſelves to be rebaptized by Hereticks, becauſe this was in effect to deny their Chriſtianity, and own that they were Pagans. Such are denied Communion even among the Catechumens all their Lives, and only allowed Lay-Communion at the Hour of Death. Others [y] are injoined the ſame Penance as the Council of Nice puts upon Lapſers, that is, twelve Years, in the ſeveral Stations of Penitents, unleſs they had the Plea of Neceſſity or Fear, or Danger to excuſe them. But if they were Children [z], their Ignorance and Immaturity was a more reaſonable Plea to ſhorten their Penance, and reſtore them more ſpeedily to Communion. The Council of Agde [a] contracted this Term of Penance univerſally for all ſuch Lapſers into Hereſy, reducing it to the Term of Three Years only. For tho' the Ancient Canons impoſed a longer Penance, yet they ſaw good Reaſon to relax this Severity, and make the Conditions of Reconciliation a little eaſier The Council of Epone [b] repeats and confirms this Decree, with a little various Reading of one Clauſe, which reduces the Term of Penance to two Years only.

SECT. 17. How this varied according to the Age and State and Condition of ſeveral Sorts of Hereticks.

IT appears from ſome of the forementioned Canons, that a great Difference was made in the Term of Penance impoſed upon Hereticks, with Reſpect to the Age of the Offenders. Children were more favourably dealt with, by Reaſon of their Ignorance and want of mature Judgment, than adult Perſons. And we may obſerve the ſame Difference made in many other Caſes of the like Nature. They who were baptized and educated in the Catholick Faith, were more ſeverely treated, if after that they deſerted the Church, and fell into Hereſy, and eſpecially ſuch Hereſies as required them to take a new Baptiſm. The foreſaid Canons chiefly reſpect Deſerters; and particularly that of Felix in the Roman Council, ſuch as were rebaptized in Hereſy: Concerning which both the Civil and Eccleſiaſtical Laws ſpeak with great Indignation and Severity;

Severity; the one confiſcating the Goods of all Rebaptizers, and baniſhing their Perſons; and the other requiring the rebaptized to go through a long Courſe of Penance in order to their Re-admiſſion to the Communion of the Church again; of which the Reader may find a more ample Account in a former Book [*] under the proper Title of Re-baptization. Whereas they that were born and bred and baptized originally among Hereticks, had more favourable Allowances made them, with Reſpect to their difficult Circumſtances, and great Prejudices naturally ariſing thence. This is expreſsly ſaid by St. Auſtin [c] in one of his Epiſtles to a Donatiſt Biſhop: The Church has one Way of treating thoſe who deſert her, if ever they repent; and another Way of treating thoſe who were never before in her Boſom, till they come to beg her Peace: She humbles the former by a ſeverer Diſcipline, but receives the later more gently, loving both, and miniſtring to the Cure of both with the Charity and Affection of a Mother. So again, in his Book of One Baptiſm [d] againſt Petilian, We obſerve this Diſtinction, to humble thoſe who were once in the Catholick Church, and afterward deſert it, with a ſeverer Penance, than thoſe who were never in it. Neither do we admit them into the Clergy, whether they were rebaptized by them, or run over to them, or were Clergymen or Laymen among them. This Diſtinction was particularly obſerved by the African Synods with Relation to ſuch Perſons as were baptized in their Infancy among the Donatiſts: In the Council of Carthage, An. 397, which is inſerted into the African Code [e], a Propoſal was made, That ſuch as had been baptized among the Donatiſts in their Infancy, by their Parents Fault, without their own Knowledge and Conſent, ſhould upon their Return to the Church, be allowed the Privilege of Ordination: And in the next Conncil [f] the Propoſal was accepted, and a Decree paſſed accordingly in Favour of them. The Council of Nice [g] granted the ſame Indulgence to the Novatian Clergy: But we rarely find any of thoſe who deſerted the Church, in which they had been baptized, allowed this Privilege; the Laws being more peremptory againſt them, to debar them from all Clerical Dignity, and only receive them as private Chriſtians to Lay-Communion.

YET Conſiderations of Prudence ſometimes obliged the Church to diſpenſe with thoſe Laws alſo, and receive even Deſerters, in ſome Caſes, to Clerical Dignity again; of which I have given ſome Inſtances in a former Book [*]. But then ſhe always ſet a Mark of Infamy upon Hereſiarchs, or firſt Founders of Hereſy, making a Diſtinction between them and thoſe that followed them; allowing the one ſometimes to continue in the Clerical Function upon their Repentance, but commonly Degrading the other without Hopes of Reſtitution. St. Auſtin takes Notice of this Difference in the Caſe of the Donatiſts: He ſays [h], The Church of Africk obſerved this Moderation from the Beginning toward them, according to the Decree made by thoſe in the Roman Church, who were appointed to judge and decide the Diſpute between Cecilian and the Party of Donatus: They condemned only Donatus, who was proved to be the Author of the Schiſm; but ordered the reſt to be received in their Clerical Honours upon their Repentance, although they were ordained out of the Catholick Church.

SECT. 19. And voluntary Deſerters more ſeverely, than they who complied only out of Fear.

ANOTHER Diſtinction was made, as in the Caſe of Lapſers into Idolatry, between ſuch Hereticks as voluntarily deſerted the Church out of Choice, and thoſe who complied with heretical Errors only by Force and Compulſion, being terrified into them by the Violence of ſome Perſecution. In this later Caſe, Biſhops were allowed to moderate their Penance, as the Circumſtances of the Matter ſeemed to require. As appears from the Direction [i] given by Pope Leo to the Biſhop of Aquileia, concerning the Penance of ſuch as were compelled by Fear and Violence offered to them by certain Hereticks, to ſubmit to a ſecond Baptiſm: They were to be put under Penance, he ſays, for ſome time, but a Moderation was to be uſed in the Term of it, according to the Biſhop's Diſcretion.

SECT. 20. A Difference made between such Hereticks as retained the Form of Baptism, and such as rejected or corrupted it.

ANOTHER Difference was made between such Hereticks as retained the due Form of Baptism, and those who wholly rejected it, or corrupted it in any essential Part. The former were to be received only by Imposition of Hands, confessing their Error, as having received a true Baptism, though out of the Church before; but the other were to be received only as Heathens, having never been truly baptized, and therefore were obliged to receive a new Baptism to make them Members of the Church. Of which, because I have given a full Account [*] elsewhere, I need say no more in this Place.

SECT. 21. No one to be reputed a formal Heretick before he contumaciously resisted the Admonition of the Church.

FINALLY, they made some Distinction between such Hereticks as contumaciously resisted the Admonitions of the Church, and such as never had any Admonition given them, or amended quietly upon the first Admonition. Men might entertain very dangerous Errors, but till the Church had given them a first and second Admonition, according to the Apostle's Rule, they were not reputed formal Hereticks, nor treated as such, till they joyned Contumacy to their Error. St. Austin [k] puts the Case thus between two Men, who are equally involved in the Error of Photinianism, denying the Divinity of CHRIST; but the one is baptized in Heresy, out of the Communion of the Catholick Church; the other is baptized in the Catholick Church, having the same Error, which he believes to be the Catholick Faith: I do not yet call this Man an Heretick, unless when the Doctrine of the Catholick Faith is declared to him, he chuses rather to resist it, and hold to his former Opinion: Before he does this, he that is baptized out of the Church, is plainly the worse of the two. But that Man is worse than both the former, who knowing this Opinion, which he holds, only to be taught among Hereticks divided from the Church, yet for some secular End and Advantage chuses to be baptized in the Church, and continue in it after Baptism: This Man is not only to be accounted a Separatist, but so much the more wicked one for adding Heresy to his Error, and Dissimulation and Hypocrisy to the Division of the Faith. In another Place [l] he says, They are properly Hereticks, who when they are reproved for their unsound Opinions, contumaciously resist; and instead of correcting their pernicious and damnable Doctrines, persist in the Defence of them, and leave the Church, and become her Enemies. But they who [m] defend not their Opinion, though false and perverse, with any pertinacious Animosity, especially, if they were not the first Broachers of it, but received it from the Seduction of their Parents, and were careful in their Enquiries after Truth, being ready to embrace it when they found it; they were not to be reckoned among Hereticks. And with much stronger Reason, we have heard him [n] say before, That a Man who in extreme Necessity received Baptism from Hereticks, when he could not have a Catholick to administer it to him, was in no Fault, because his Mind and Will was still united to the Catholick Church. From all which it is easy to discern, how great a Difference they made in the Degrees of Heresy and its Guilt, and how the Discipline of the Church was managed in a great Measure according to these Distinctions.

SECT. 22. The like Distinctions observed in inflicting the Censures of the Church upon Schismaticks, according to the different Nature and various Degrees of their Schism.

I HAVE already [*] shewed that a like Discrimination was made between Schismaticks of different Kinds, and that the Censures of the Church were inflicted on them only in Proportion to the Quality of their Offence, observing the different Nature and various Degrees of their Separation or Schism. Some only absented from Church for a short Time, suppose two or three Lord's-Days successively, without any justifiable Reasons for it: And it was thought sufficient to correct such by a moderate Punishment of as many Weeks Suspension. Others attended some Part of the Service, suppose the Sermon, and the Psalmody, and the first Prayers for the Catechumens; but then withdrew, as if they had been Penitents, when the Service of the Faithful or the Communion-Office came on, and the Eucharist was to be offered and received by all that were not for some Fault excluded from it: And these as greater Criminals, were denied the Privilege of making any Oblations, and excluded for some Time from all other holy Offices of the Church. A third Sort of Separatists, which are most properly called Schismaticks, were such as withdrew totally and universally from the Communion of the Church; pretending that her Communion was polluted and profane by the the Mixture of Sinners; or finding out other ſuch Reaſons to charge her with ſinful Terms of Communion, and juſtify their own Separation by many the like Pretences, of which the Hiſtory of the Novatians and Donatiſts affords many Inſtances. Now againſt theſe the Church commonly proceeded more ſeverely, uſing the higheſt Cenſure of Excommunication or Anathema, as againſt more profeſſed and formal Schiſmaticks, and the Deſtroyers of that inviolable Unity and Peace which ought to be moſt ſacredly preſerved in the Body of CHRIST. Of all which Schiſmaticks and their Puniſhments, becauſe I have ſpoken particularly before in diſcourſing of the Unity of the Church, I need ſay no more in this Place, but proceed to another Crime, that of Sacrilege, which comes next in order to be conſidered.

SECT. 23. Of Sacrilege. Particularly of diverting Things appropriated to ſacred Uſes, to other Purpoſes.

THE Roman Caſuiſts [o] are wont to call many Things Sacrilege, which the Ancients reckoned no Crimes at all: As the laying Taxes or Tribute upon Eccleſiaſticks by the Civil Power, without the Conſent of the Pope, for which Secular Princes are excommunicated by the famous Bull in Cœna Domini, as they call it: And bringing Eccleſiaſtical Perſons for any Crime before the Secular Tribunals. Some other Things they brand with the odious Name of Sacrilege, which many of the Ancients reckoned to be Vertues, and Inſtances of Zeal and Piety towards GOD: As the removing Images out of all Places of Divine Worſhip; for which the Council of Eliberis, and Epiphanius, and many others, were ſo remarkable in ancient Hiſtory, who yet, if we were to ſpeak in the Style and Language of theſe Modern Caſuiſts, were to be reckoned guilty of the horrid Sin of Sacrilege. Since therefore the Matter ſtood thus, we are not to expect to find any Puniſhments in the Penitential Diſcipline of the ancient Church, allotted to ſuch mere pretended Crimes and imaginary Vices. But againſt real Sacrilege, none could be more zealous than the Ancients. Particularly againſt diverting any Thing to private Uſe, which was given to the publick Service of the Church. "If any one, ſay the Apoſtolical Canons [p], "either of the Clergy or Laity take Wax or "Oyl out of the Church, let him be caſt out "of Communion, and make Reſtitution with "the Addition of a Fifth Part." And again [q], "Let no one divert to his own Uſe "any of the ſacred Utenſils of Gold, or Silver, or Linen; for it is a flagitious Thing: "And if any one be apprehended ſo doing, "let him be excommunicated." So likewiſe in the Fourth Council of Carthage, "Let "thoſe [r] who deny the Church ſuch Oblations as are given by the Dead, or give "them not without Difficulty, be excommunicated as Murderers of the Poor." And the ſecond [s] Council of Vaiſon, "They who "detain the Oblations, and refuſe to give "them to the Church, are to be caſt out of "the Church as Infidels; for ſuch a Provocation of GOD, is a denying of the Faith: "Both the Faithful, who are gone out of the "Body, are defrauded of the Plenitude of "their Vows, and the Poor alſo of the Comfort of their Food and neceſſary Subſiſtance. "Such are to be eſteemed Murderers of the "Poor and Infidels with reſpect to the Judgment of GOD." Whence one of the Fathers ſays, To take from a Friend, is Theft; but to defraud the Church, is Sacrilege. This is cited from St. Jerom. And St. Ambroſe [t] goes a little farther, and ſays, They who give their own Eſtates to the Church, and then in a fickle Humour retract, and revoke them again, like Ananias and Sapphira, loſe the Reward both of their firſt and ſecond Action: The firſt Act is void of Judgment, and the ſecond is downright Sacrilege. Therefore, whether a Man retracted what he himſelf had given to the Church, or detained what was given by others, or robbed her of what ſhe was actually poſſeſſed of, it was all the ſame Species of Sacrilege, and the Canons [u] equally puniſh them all with the ſame Sentence of Excommunication; reducing Clergymen, when found guilty of this Crime, to the Communion of Strangers, which was a Puniſhment peculiar to them, of which more hereafter. I have already ſhewed in a former Book [*] That for this Reaſon Biſhops, who were intruſted with the Goods and Revenues of the Church, were not allowed to alienate any Part of them, except it were in great Neceſſity, to relieve the Poor, or redeem Captives; in which Caſe, St. Ambroſe himſelf, and many others, diſpoſed of the Plate of the Altar, and the Veſſels and Utenſils belonging to the Church; thinking it better, that the inanimate Temples of GOD ſhould ſhould want their Ornaments, than that his living Temples ſhould periſh for want of Relief. This was not Sacrilege in the Eye of the Law, either Eccleſiaſtical or Civil, but an Act of Mercy allowed by both: For the Laws againſt Sacrilege, next to the Honour of GOD, had always a View to the Neceſſities of the Poor: And therefore as this Practice tended to relieve them in great Exigencies, it was juſt the Reverſe of that inhuman Sacrilege, which the Ancients called Murdering the Poor, againſt which ſo many ſevere Laws were made to aboliſh and correct it.

ANOTHER great Crime of near a-kin to the former, which was ſometimes condemned and puniſhed under the Name of Sacrilege, was Robbing of Graves, or Defacing and Spoiling the Monuments of the Dead. Theſe were always eſteemed a Sort of ſacred Repoſitories, and inviolable Sanctuaries even by the very Heathen, as appears from the Edict of Julian [x], and what Gothofred [y] has collected at large out of the old Laws and Heathen Writers upon the Subject. And the Violation of them was always eſteemed a Piacular Crime, and ſometimes puniſhed with Death. The Imperial Laws made it Capital, and therefore when the Chriſtian Emperors at Eaſter granted their Indulgence or Pardon to Criminals in Priſon, they ſtill excepted Robbers of Graves [z] among thoſe other flagitious Criminals, which were to have no Benefit from their Indulgence, as has been ſhewed before [*] in ſpeaking of thoſe called Atrocia Crimina, Great and Capital Crimes. That which tempted Men to commit this Wickedneſs, was, That often Riches and Jewels were buried with the Dead, and fine Marble Pillars and Statues, Ornaments and Monuments were erected over their Graves; all which became Spoil and Plunder to ſuch as were impiouſly and ſacrilegiouſly diſpoſed to invade them. Now as the Imperial Laws proſecuted ſuch Criminals with ſuitable Puniſhments, Fines, Tortures, Tranſportation and Death: So the Eccleſiaſtical Laws purſued them with Spiritual Penalties, agreeable to her Spiritual Regimen and Juriſdiction. Gregory Nyſſen [a] ſays, The holy Fathers teach us to place the Violation of Burial Places among thoſe Sins, which are to be expiated by publick Penance. But he diſtinguiſhes two Degrees of this Crime, the one puniſhable by Eccleſiaſtical Cenſure, the other not ſo. For if any one took the Stones or Materials, which are uſually caſt up before the Burial-Places of the Dead, and applied them to ſome other uſeful Purpoſe, without expoſing the Corps to the Air or Light, or offering any Abuſe or Injury to it: Though this was not commendable or allowable; (for indeed the Civil Laws abſolutely forbad [b] it, as was ſaid before;) yet Cuſtom however exempted this from any publick Puniſhment in the Church, becauſe there was ſome Benefit in it by an Application of the Materials to a more uſeful Purpoſe; and as Gothofred [c] alſo obſerves, There was ſomething of ſeeming Zeal in it, to demoliſh the Heathen Altars and Images, which were often erected at the Graves of Pagans. But then, as Gregory adds, there was another Degree of this Crime, which was more horrible, when Men raked into the Aſhes of the Dead, and diſturbed their Bones, in Purſuit of Treaſure, Cloaths, or other Ornaments, that might be buried with them: And this, he ſays, was puniſhed with the ſame Term of Penance as ſimple Fornication, that is, Nine Years in the ſeveral Stations of Repentance. The fourth Council of Toledo [d] makes it a double Puniſhment for any Clergyman to be guilty of this Crime: "If any Clerk is "apprehended demoliſhing Sepulchres, for as "much as this is a Crime of Sacrilege puniſhable with Death by the publick Laws, "he ought by the Canons to be depoſed "from his Orders, and after that do three "Years Penance for ſuch his Tranſgreſſion." The Reader that pleaſes may ſee elegant Invectives againſt this Crime in Sidonius Apollinaris [e] and St. Chryſoſtom [f], who juſtly repreſent it as one of the moſt unnatural and inhuman Barbarities that can be offered to the Nature of Man, becauſe the Dead are altogether innocent and paſſive, and in a Condition to excite Pity and Compaſſion only; being deſtitute and without Ability to reſiſt or right themſelves againſt Invaders.

SECT. 25. The Sacrilege of the ancient Traditors, who delivered up their Bibles, and holy Utenſils to the Heathen to be burnt.

ANOTHER Sort of Men, who were anciently accuſed and condemned as ſacrilegious Perſons, were thoſe whom they commonly called Traditors, for delivering up their Bibles, and other ſacred Utenſils of the Church to the Heathen to be burnt, in the Time of the Diocletian Perſecution. The firſt Council of Arles [g] held immediately after the Perſecution, makes it Depoſition Depoſition from his Order for any Clergyman, who could be convicted by the publick Acts of this Crime, either of Betraying the Scriptures, or any of the holy Veſſels, or the Names of his Brethren to the Perſecutors. The Donatiſts frequently, but falſely objected this Crime to Cecilian Biſhop of Carthage, and thoſe that ordained him, That they were Traditors: Upon which St. Auſtin [h] tells them, That if they would evidently make good the Charge, the Catholicks would not ſcruple to anathematize them after Death. But the Truth of the Matter was, Theſe very Objectors were Traditors themſelves, though they had the Impudence to abſolve one another, while they threw the Charge upon innocent Men, as Optatus [i] and St. Auſtin [k] ſhew out of the Acts of their own Council of Cirta, where they acted this Comedy, which ſtood as a Witneſs againſt them.

SECT. 26. The Sacrilege of Profaning the Sacraments, and Churches, and Altars, and the Holy Scriptures, &c.

NEITHER was this the only Sacrilege the Donatiſts were guilty of, but they and their Accomplices ſtand charged with many others. Optatus objects [l] to them their Breaking and Burning the Communion Tables which they found in the Catholick Churches. And their Profaning the Holy Sacrament in a moſt vile manner, of which he gives a moſt remarkable Inſtance: Some of the Donatiſt Biſhops in their mad Zeal ordered the Euchariſt, which they found in the Catholick Churches, to be thrown to the Dogs, but not without an immediate Sign of Divine Vengeance upon them: For the Dogs inſtead of Devouring the Elements, fell upon their Maſters, as if they had never known them, and tore them to pieces, as Robbers, and Profaners of the Holy Body of CHRIST: Which makes Optatus [m] put them in mind of that Admonition of our SAVIOUR, Give not that which is Holy unto the Dogs, neither caſt ye your Pearls before Swine, leſt they trample them under their Feet, and turn again and rent you. It was a like Profanation of the Holy Euchariſt, which Cornelius charges upon Novatian [n] when he obliged his Partizans, inſtead of ſaying Amen, at the Reception of it, to ſwear by the Body and Blood of CHRIST, that they would never deſert his Party, nor return to Cornelius. It was alſo reckoned a Piece of Sacrilege to give the Catholick Churches to Hereticks, in which St. Ambroſe ſtoutly oppoſed the Younger Valentinian, when he ſent him an Order to deliver up one of the Churches of Milan to the Arians: He returned him this couragious Anſwer, Thoſe Things [o] which are GOD's, are not ſubject to the Emperor's Power. If my Patrimony is demanded, you may invade it; if my Body, I will offer it of my own Accord. I will not fly to the Altar, and ſupplicate for Life, but more joyfully ſacrifice my Life for the Altar. There are ſome Inſtances of Men turning Churches [p] into Stables: But as theſe were very abominable, ſo there were but Few that fell into ſuch prodigious Profanations. We may reckon alſo all Sorts of Idolatry, and Divination, and Magick, and the Abuſe of Scriptures for Lots and Charms and Amulets among the Species of Sacrilege, as ſome of the Ancient Councils do [q]: But I have ſpoken fully of theſe under former Heads, and therefore there is no Occaſion here to repeat them. I only add, That to moleſt or hinder a Clergyman in the Performance of his proper Office by Avocation to other Buſineſs, and laying him under a Neceſſity of following other Imployments inconſiſtent with the Duties of his proper Station and Function, is, in the Civil Law, called Sacrilege. Conſtantine in his firſt Settlement of Religion made a Law [r], That they who miniſtred in the Service of GOD, ſhould be excuſed from all Perſonal Duties in the State; that the ſacrilegious Envy of ſome, who gave them Diſturbance, might not withdraw them from the Service of Religion. And agreeable to the Tenour of this Law, we find a Rule of the Church as ancient as St. Cyprian, That no one ſhould imploy a Clergyman in the Buſineſs of a ſecular Truſt [s], to be a Guardian or Curator of his worldly Concerns by his laſt Will and Teſtament, under the Penalty of Excommunication, or having his Name blotted out of the Diptychs of the Church after Death.

THERE are Abundance of Laws in the Theodoſian Code, beſide that of Conſtantine, ſettling great Privileges, Exemptions, and Immunities upon the Clergy, in regard to their Office; as alſo upon Churches, in regard to the Reſpect and Veneration that is due to them, as the Houſes of GOD and Places of Divine Worſhip: Upon which Account they were made Sanctuaries or Places of Refuge for Men in certain proper Caſes, whence they might not be taken by Violence, without the Imputation of a Sort of Sacrilege fixed on the Invaders. But of all theſe Privileges and Immunities, I have had Occaſion to diſcourſe at large [*] before, in ſpeaking of Churches and the Clergy, and therefore need not here repeat them; but only mention a Law of Honorius norius [t], which expreſsly charges the Crime of Sacrilege upon all ſuch as offered any Injury or Affront to Miniſters officiating in the Church, or to the Service itſelf, or to the Place: Ordering all ſuch Criminals to be notified by publick Officers (not waiting for the Biſhop's Accuſation of them) to the Governor of the Province, who was to proceed againſt them, and condemn them with the Puniſhment of Capital Offenders.

SECT. 27. The Sacrilege of Depriving Men of the Uſe of the Scripture, and the Word of God, and the Sacraments, particularly of the Cup in the Lord's-Supper.

THERE is one Species of Sacrilege more, which the Caſuiſts of the Romiſh Church for a good Reaſon never mention: That is, the grand Sacrilege of their own Church in Depriving Men of the Uſe of the Holy Scriptures, and the Cup in the Lord's-Supper, both which, with unparalleled magiſterial Authority are ſacrilegiouſly and injuriouſly taken from them. That the Ancients reckoned it the Sin of Sacrilege to divide the Communion without Reaſon, and deny Men the Uſe of the Cup, needs no other Proof at preſent but the Teſtimony of Gelaſius, one of their own Popes, which is ſtill extant in their Canon-Law [u], in the Words of the following Decree: "We underſtand there are ſome, who "receive only a Portion of the Holy Body, "and abſtain from the Cup of the Holy "Blood. Who doubtleſs being bound by "ſome vain Superſtition, ought either to re-"ceive the whole Sacrament, or to be ex-"cluded from the Whole: Becauſe one and "the ſame Myſtery cannot without grand Sa-"crilege be divided." Such ſacrilegious Dividers of the Communion, are alſo condemned by Pope Leo [x], and ordered to be excommunicated. And they who take the Euchariſt, and uſe it for any other End beſides Communicating, are cenſured by the firſt Council of Toledo, Can. 14. and that of Cæſaraugusta, Can. 3. as ſacrilegious alſo, deſerving to be baniſhed the Church with Anathema or Excommunication. But of theſe, I have diſcourſed more at large in a former Book. See Book XV. Chap. iv. n. 13. and Chap. v. n. 1. againſt Communicating in one Kind.

THERE were many Hereticks in the ancient Church, who were guilty of Sacrilege in relation to the other Sacrament of Baptiſm. Some rejected it wholly, others corrupted it in the material Part, and others in the Form of Words neceſſary to the Adminiſtration: Of all which the Reader may find a large Account in a former Book [*], which particularly handles the Subject of Baptiſm. But there were none that ever preſumed ſacrilegiouſly to deny Chriſtians their proper Birth-right, which is to read the Scriptures. Some Hereticks corrupted them; and others rejected ſuch Parcels of them, as they thought moſt oppoſite to their peculiar Notions: But none, who allowed them to be the inſpired Writings and Oracles of the HOLY GHOST, ever denied the People Liberty to ſearch and examine them for their own Inſtruction. This is a Piece of Sacrilege peculiar to theſe later Ages, which the Ancients knew nothing of, and therefore had no Occaſion to make Canons or Rules of Diſcipline to correct it. There are many Exhortations to read the Scriptures; but no Orders to keep them locked up in an unknown Tongue, or to forbid the People to uſe them upon any Occaſion. And the only Reaſon why there are no Cenſures anciently to be found againſt this Sort of Sacrilege, is, becauſe the Sin itſelf was utterly unknown to the Primitive Ages.

THERE was indeed ſometimes a Neglect in ignorant or careleſs Teachers in Preaching the Word of GOD to the People: And this is cenſured by ſome Laws [y] even in the Civil Code, as a ſacrilegious Withdrawing from the People the neceſſary Food of their Souls. But of this I need ſay no more in this Place, having fully repreſented the Laws [†] obliging Biſhops and Presbyters to be faithful and diligent in Diſcharging this Part of their Duty, while we were diſcourſing of Preaching, and the Uſages relating to it, in the ancient Church.

THERE are ſome other Things, which ſometimes bear the Name of Sacrilege; but becauſe they more properly belong to other Species of Sin, as Breach of Vows, to Perjury; and Defilement of conſecrated Virgins, to Fornication; we will conſider the Diſcipline and Treatment of theſe and the like Offences, under their proper Heads, and proceed to the laſt Sort of Sin, which ſhews Irreverence to GOD in the Uſe of ſacred Things, commonly called Simony, which is alſo a Sort of Sacrilege, becauſe it ſets ſpiritual and ſacred Things to Sale, which are not the Subject of a ſecular Contract.

SECT. 28. Of Simony in Buying and Selling Spiritual Gifts.

THIS is commonly distinguished by the Ancients into Three Sorts. 1. Buying and Selling of spiritual Gifts. 2. Buying and Selling spiritual Preferments. 3. Ambitious Usurpation, and sacrilegious Intrusion into Ecclesiastical Functions without any legal Election or Ordination. The first Sort was that which most properly had the Name of Simony from Simon Magus, who pretended with Money to purchase the Gift of the HOLY GHOST. And this was always thought to be committed, when Men either offered or received Money for Ordinations. Which was a Crime of a very high Nature, and always punished with the severest Censures of the Church. The Apostolical Canons [z] seem to lay a double Punishment, both Deposition and Excommunication, upon such of the Clergy as were found guilty of this Crime: "If any Bishop, Presbyter, or Deacon obtain this Dignity for Money, both "he that is ordained, and the Ordainer, shall "be deposed, and also cut off from all Communion, as Simon Magus was by Peter." The general Council of Chalcedon has a Canon to the same Purpose, "[a] That if any Bishop "gave an Ordination, or any Ecclesiastical "Office, or Preferment of any Kind for Money, he himself should lose his Office, and "the Party so preferred be deposed." The same Punishment is appointed in the second Council of Orleans [b], the second of Braga [c], the fourth of Toledo [d], the eleventh of Toledo [e], the Council of Constantinople under Gennadius [f], the Decrees of Gelasius [g], Symmachus [h], Hormisdas [i] and Gregory the Great [k], St. Basil [l], the second Council of Nice [m] and the Council of Trullo [n]. Particularly the eighth Council of Toledo [o] makes it both Degradation and Excommunication in every Clerk so ordained. And also punishes the Receivers of Simoniacal Gifts with equal Severity; if Clergymen, with the Loss of their Honour; if Laymen, with perpetual Excommunication to the Hour of Death. And the Civil Law also provided [p] in this Case, to prevent Simoniacal Ordinations, That both Persons ordained, and also their Electors and Ordainers should all take an Oath, That there was nothing given or received, or so much as contracted or promised for any such Election or Ordination. And for any Bishop to ordain another without observing this Rule, is Deposition by the same Law, both for himself, and him that is so ordained by him.

THE Ancients also reduce to this Sort of Simony, the exacting of any Reward for administring Baptism, or the Eucharist, or Confirmation, or Burying, or Consecration of Churches, or any the like spiritual Offices, which were to be administred freely without demanding any Reward. The Council of Trullo [q] particularly forbids any Clergyman to require any thing for administring the Eucharist: For Grace is not to be set to Sale, neither do we impart the Sanctification of the SPIRIT for Money, but give it without Craft to all that are worthy. And he that does otherwise, shall be deposed as a Follower of the wicked Error of Simon Magus. The Eleventh Council of Toledo forbids not only the taking of Money for Promotions to holy Orders, but also for administring Baptism, or Confirmation [r] or Chrism; and the Bishop that connives at any of his Clergy so doing, is ordered to be excommunicated for Two Months: And if a Presbyter without his Knowledge commits such Offence, he is to be excommunicated four Months; a Deacon three Months; and those of the Inferior Orders, excommunicated at Discretion. There are several other ancient Canons to the same Purpose in the Council of Eliberis [s], and Braga [t], and the Decrees of Gelasius [u] which have been mentioned on another Occasion [*], where we treated of the proper Methods of raising Funds and Maintenance for the Clergy, and need not here be repeated.

SECT. 29. Of Simony in purchasing Ecclesiastical Preferments.

BUT they did not only call that Simony, which consisted in trafficking for the Gifts of the HOLY SPIRIT, but also all Purchases made of the spiritual Preferments of the Church, and all Promotions made without just Merit, out of mere Favour and Affection. The Council of Chalcedon [x] not only threatens Deposition to any Bishop that sets Grace to Sale, and ordains a Bishop, or Chorepiscopus, or Presbyter, or Deacon, or any Clerk for Money; but also if he promotes an OEconomus or Steward, or an Ecdicus, that is, an Advocate or Defensor, or a Paramonarius, that is a Bailiff or Steward of of the Lands, for his own filthy Lucre. And both the Clergy ſo ordained, are to be degraded; and the Officers ſo promoted, to loſe their Places: And if any one be Inſtrumental as a Mediator in ſuch diſhonourable and unlawful Traffick; if he be a Clerk, he is to be degraded; if a Layman, or a Monk, to be anathematized. By the Laws of Juſtinian [y] every Elector was to depoſe upon Oath, that he did not chuſe the Party elected either for any Gift or Promiſe, or Friendſhip, or any other Cauſe, but only becauſe he knew him to be a Man of the true Catholick Faith, and unblameable Life, and good Learning. Gregory the Great ſays [z], there were ſome who took no Reward of Money for Ordination, and yet were in ſome Meaſure guilty of Simony, becauſe they gave holy Orders for human Favour, and thence ſought the Reward of Praiſe and Favour among Men. They did not give freely what they had freely received, becauſe for giving an holy Office they required the Gift of Favour. For there were three Sorts of Bribes, one from Obſequiouſneſs, another from the Hand, and another from the Tongue. That from Obſequiouſneſs was a ſervile Subjection unduly paid; that from the Hand was Money; that from the Tongue was Favour. But whether this Sort of Simony made Men liable to Eccleſiaſtical Cenſure, he does not ſay, but only ſpeaks againſt it as a great Corruption from which they who give holy Orders, ought to keep themſelves free, according to that of the Prophet, Iſa. xxxiii. 15. He that ſhaketh his Hands from holding of Bribes.

SECT. 30. Of Simony in ambitious Uſurpation of holy Offices, and Intruſion into other Mens Places and Preferments.

THE laſt Sort of Simony was when Men by ambitious Arts and undue Practices, by the Favour and Power of ſome great or wealthy Perſon, got themſelves inveſted in any Office or Preferment, to which they had no regular Call or legal Title: Or when they intruded themſelves into other Mens Places, which were legally filled before. This was the common Practice of ſchiſmatical and other ambitious Spirits, who would either thruſt themſelves irregularly into a vacant See, or uſurp upon one that was already lawfully poſſeſſed and held by another. Thus Novatian got himſelf clancularly and ſimoniacally ordained to the Biſhoprick of Rome, to which Cornelius had been legally ordained before him, as Cyprian [a] and others often complain. And ſo Majorinus was ordained Anti-Biſhop of Carthage in Oppoſition to Cecilian the legal Biſhop, by the help of Lucilla a wealthy Woman, who ſpirited the Faction that was the firſt Beginning of the Schiſm of the Donatiſts, as Optatus [b] and St. Auſtin at large inform us. Now all ſuch Ordinations, being founded on Ambition and Uſurpation, and generally obtained either by Force, or Favour, or Fraud, or Bribery, were uſually vacated and declared Null, and both the ordained and their Ordainers proſecuted as Criminals by Degradation and Reduction to the State and Communion of Lay-men: Of which becauſe I have given a full Account in a former Book [*], I will not ſtand to make any farther Proof in this Place. But only note, That it was equally a ſimoniacal Crime for any Biſhop ambitiouſly to thruſt himſelf irregularly into any vacant See, or remove himſelf by any ſiniſter Arts from a leſſer See to a greater, in Contempt and Deſpite of the Rules preſcribed by the Church in that Caſe to be obſerved. For as I have noted in ſpeaking formerly [†] upon this Subject, there were many ſevere Laws made againſt Biſhops arbitrarily removing themſelves from one See to another. Though the Tranſlation of Biſhops was not abſolutely and univerſally forbidden (becauſe the Church had ſometimes occaſion for this Expedient:) Yet Care was taken, that ambitious Spirits ſhould not move themſelves at Pleaſure, but all Tranſlations were regularly to be made only by the Authority, Conſent and Approbation of a Provincial Council: And to do otherwiſe was eſteemed a Crime of ſimoniacal Ambition of the higheſt Nature, as proceeding from Avarice or Love of Pre-eminence, and uſing irregular Methods, Bribery, Favour and Faction to compaſs an End againſt the Laws of the Church. And therefore the ancient Canons of Nice [c] and Antioch, and thoſe called Apoſtolical, not only barely forbid and diſallow this Practice: But the Council of Sardica [d], finding by Experience that ſimple Prohibitions were not ſufficient to repreſs it, and reſtrain aſpiring Men from it, backed her Injunctions with the higheſt Cenſures, making two very remarkable Canons, which run in theſe Words: "That "evil Cuſtom and pernicious Corruption is "by all Means to be rooted out, That no "Biſhop have Liberty to remove himſelf "from a leſſer City to another. For the "Reaſon why he does this, is plain; ſeeing "we never find a Biſhop labouring to re-"move himſelf from a greater City to a leſs. "Whence

" Whence it is manifeſt, that all ſuch are in" flamed with Ardor of Covetouſneſs, and ra" ther ſerve their Ambition and Vainglory,
" that they may ſeem to be inveſted with " greater Authority and Power. Wherefore
" this ſiniſter Practice ought to be puniſhed
" more ſeverely ". And in my Opinion ſays Hoſius the Preſident of the Council, ſuch ought not to be allowed ſo much as Lay-Communion. The next Canon adds, " That if any " one be ſo vain or preſumptuous, as to think
" to excuſe himſelf in this Matter, by ſaying,
" that he received Letters of Invitation from " the People: Seeing it is poſſible ſome might " be corrupted by Bribes and Rewards to raiſe
" a Faction in the Church, and deſire to have
" him for their Biſhop: " I think, ſays Hoſius again, theſe fraudulent Arts and underhand Practices ought to be undoubtedly puniſhed, ſo as that ſuch an one ſhould not be allowed even Lay-Communion at his laſt Hour. And to this the Council readily agreed: Which ſhews what Apprehenſions they had of this Sort of Simony, as moſt dangerous and pernicious to the Church. And it is worth remarking farther, That whereas it might happen, that ſuch an ambitious Biſhop might by the Power of a Faction, be able to maintain himſelf in his Uſurpation, in Spite of all Eccleſiaſtical Cenſures: Therefore in this Caſe the third Council of Carthage gave Orders [e], That Recourſe ſhould be had to the ſecular Magiſtrate againſt ſuch a refractory and contumacious Biſhop, who would not ſubmit to the milder Sentence of an Admonition; and that in ſuch an Exigence of abſolute Neceſſity the Ruler of the Province ſhould be intreated, according to the Directions of the Imperial Laws, to uſe his judicial Authority to expel him out of the Church, which he kept Poſſeſſion of by Force, without giving any Signs of acquieſcing or Amendment. Whether there were any Imperial Laws made with a direct View to this particular Caſe, I cannot ſay: But it is certain there were general Laws made by Gratian and Honorius [f], obliging all Biſhops, who were cenſured and depoſed by any Synod, to ſubmit to the Sentence of the Synod, not to make any Diſturbance by endeavouring to keep or regain the Sees out of which they were ſynodically expelled, under the Penalty of being baniſhed an Hundred Miles from the City where they pretended to raiſe any ſuch Diſturbance. This was the Law of Honorius, which refers to a former Law made by Gratian upon the ſame Subject, which is alſo mentioned by Sulpicius Severus [g] in his Hiſtory as enacted againſt the Priſcillianiſts, though it be not now extant in the Theodoſian Code. And to theſe Laws the African Fathers might refer, when they order all ſuch contumacious Biſhops to be expelled by the Authority of the Civil Magiſtrate, according to the Tenor of the Imperial Laws made in this Behalf, to which they refer alſo in other Canons [b] relating to the ſame Purpoſe. And thus much of the ſeveral greater Crimes againſt the Firſt and Second Commandments, which made Men liable to the Penitential Diſcipline and Cenſures of the Church.

CHAP. VII.

Of Sins againſt the Third Commandment, Blaſphemy, Prophane Swearing, Perjury, and Breach of Vows.

SECT. 1. The Blaſphemy of Apoſtates.

THE greater Sins againſt the third Commandment, which chiefly brought Men under Publick Eccleſiaſtical Cenſure, were Blaſphemy, Prophane Swearing, Perjury, and Breach of Vows ſolemnly made to GOD. For all theſe reflected a particular Diſhonour upon his Name. Blaſphemy they diſtinguiſhed into three Sorts; 1ſt. The Blaſphemy of Apoſtates and Lapſers, whom the Heathen Perſecutors obliged not only to deny, but curſe CHRIST. 2dly. The Blaſphemy of Hereticks and other prophane Chriſtians. 3dly. The Blaſphemy againſt the HOLY GHOST. The firſt Sort we find mentioned in Pliny, who giving Trajan an Account of ſome Chriſtians who apoſtatized in the Perſecution in his Time, tells him, They all worſhipped his Image, and the Images of the Gods, and alſo curſed CHRIST [a]. And that that this was the common Way of renouncing their Religion, appears from the Demand which the Proconsul made to Polycarp, and Polycarp's Answer to it: He bid him revile CHRIST, Λοιδόρησον τὸν Χριστὸν [b]: To whom Polycarp replied, These Eighty-six Years I have served him, and he never did me any harm: How then can I blaspheme my King and my Saviour? In the Epistles of Dionysius Bishop of Alexandria, where he gives an Account of the Persecution that happened there, we find, this was the usual way whereby the Heathen required the Christians to abjure their Religion. They bid Metras the Martyr [c] say the Atheistical Words, which when he refused to do, they stoned him to Death. So again they bid Apollonia say [d] the impious Words, beating out her Teeth, and threatning to burn her alive, if she refused to comply with them: And threatning all others with the same Punishment, that would not say the blasphemous Words. Now though Valesius thinks it difficult to tell what these impious, blasphemous and atheistical Words were, yet it seems plain enough they meant blaspheming CHRIST, which was the Thing the Heathen insisted on, as their certain Indication of Christians renouncing their Religion. And so Justin Martyr [e] says, when Barchocab the Ringleader of the Jewish Rebellion under Adrian, persecuted the Christians, he threatned to inflict terrible Punishments upon all that would not deny CHRIST and blaspheme him. This then being only a more solemn way of renouncing Religion, by adding Blasphemy to Apostacy, all Lapsers of this Kind were deservedly reckoned among Apostates, and accordingly punished with their Punishment, to the highest Degree of Ecclesiastical Censure.

Sect. 2. The Blasphemy of Hereticks and profane Christians.

ANOTHER Sort of Blasphemers, were such as made Profession of the Christian Religion; but yet either by impious Doctrines, or profane Discourses, uttered blasphemous Words against GOD, derogatory to his Majesty and Honour. In this Sense Hereticks are commonly charged with Blasphemy, and more especially those whose Doctrines more immediately detracted from the Excellencies, Properties, and Actions of the Divine Nature. Thus Chrysostom [f] terms those Blasphemers, who introduced Fate in Derogation to the Providence of GOD: And Irenæus those likewise who denied GOD to be the Creator of the World [g]. And the Arians and Nestorians are generally charged with Blasphemy, Impiety and Sacrilege [h] for denying the Divinity of our SAVIOUR, and the Incarnation of the Divine Nature. So that the same Punishment as was inflicted upon Hereticks and sacrilegious Persons, was consequently the Lot of this Sort of Blasphemers. St. Chrysostom joyns Blasphemers [i] and Fornicators together, as Persons that were to be expelled from the Lord's-Table. He says farther [k], Under the Mosaical OEconomy the Law was, Let him that curseth Father or Mother, die the Death. What shall we then say of those, who in the Time of Grace and Truth, and such extraordinary Knowledge, not only curse Father and Mother, but blaspheme the GOD of the Universe? All the Punishments of this World and the next are not sufficient to chastize a Soul that is arrived to this prodigious Height of Wickedness. For there is no Sin greater than this, none equal to it. It is an Addition to all other Crimes, confounding all Religion, and drawing inexpiable Punishment after it.

NEITHER was it only this Doctrinal Blasphemy of Hereticks, proceeding from corrupt and vicious Principles, that they thus treated both with their Censures and Invectives; but also all other Blasphemies of profane Christians, whether occasioned by ill Opinions fixed in the Mind, or other sudden Emotions of a vicious Temper. This we learn from Synesius's Way of proceeding against Andronicus, the oppressing Governor of Ptolemais. He admonished him for his other Crimes while there was any Hopes of making a just Impression on him: But when he added Blasphemy to all the rest, presuming to say, No Man should escape his Hands, though he laid hold of the very Foot of CHRIST; Synesius thought he was no longer to be admonished, but to be cut off as a putrified Member; and accordingly he proceeded to pronounce against him that famous Excommunication [l] which we have had so often Occasion [*] to mention, as the most Formal Sentence that occurs in ancient Story. I only add, That the Civil Laws set a particular Mark upon this Crime. For by the Laws of Justinian [m] Blasphemy is reckoned a Capital Offence, to be punished with Death. And by the former Laws, since Heresy was reputed Blasphemy against GOD, all the Penalties inflicted on Hereticks (one of which was in some Cases Death also) must be supposed to be Punishments awarded by Law to this Sort of Blasphemers.

SECT. 3. The Blaſphemy againſt the Holy Ghoſt. What Notions the Ancients had of it: And what Cenſures they inflicted on it.

ANOTHER Sort of Blaſphemy, was, the Blaſphemy againſt the HOLY GHOST, of which I muſt be a little more particular, becauſe the Senſe of the Ancients concerning it is not very commonly underſtood. Some apply it to the great Sin of Lapſing into Idolatry, and Apoſtacy, and Denying CHRIST in Time of Perſecution. Thus Cyprian underſtands it, when he [n] ſays, They who commit Idolatry by the Violence of Perſecution, know their Offence to be a very great Crime, ſeeing our LORD and Judge has ſaid, Whoſoever ſhall confeſs me before Men, him will I confeſs before my FATHER which is in Heaven. But he that denieth me, him will I alſo deny. And again, All Sins and Blaſphemies ſhall be forgiven to the Sons of Men: But he that blaſphemeth againſt the HOLY GHOST, ſhall not have Forgiveneſs; but is guilty of Eternal Sin. St. Hilary [o] gives the ſame Account of this Blaſphemy, making it to conſiſt in Denying CHRIST to be GOD. And therefore he alſo charges the Arians and all other ſuch Hereticks with this Blaſphemy [p], becauſe their Doctrine robbed CHRIST of his Divinity, and denied him to be of the ſame Subſtance with the FATHER, however they venerated him as GOD, and aſcribed the Name of GOD to him upon the account of his admirable Works and glorious Operations. Athanaſius, and the Author of the Queſtions to Antiochus under his Name, are of the ſame Opinion. Athanaſius has a particular Diſcourſe upon this Subject, where he both notes the Errors of Origen and Theognoſtus upon it, and delivers his own Opinion in Oppoſition to them. They ſaid [q], That all they who had received the Gifts of the HOLY GHOST in Baptiſm, and afterward run into Sin, committed the unpardonable Sin againſt the HOLY GHOST. Which he refutes both from the Practice of St. Paul, who received the inceſtuous Corinthian, and other great Sinners to Pardon; and alſo from the Practice of the Church in Oppoſition to the Novatians. Why then, ſays he, are we angry at Novatus for taking away Repentance, and ſaying, There is no Pardon for thoſe that ſin after Baptiſm? His own Opinion he delivers after [r] this manner: The Phariſees in our SAVIOUR's Time, and the Arians in our Days, running into the ſame Madneſs, denied the real WORD to be incarnate, and aſcribed the Works of the GODHEAD to the Devil and his Angels, and therefore juſtly undergo the Puniſhment, which is due to this Impiety, without Remiſſion. For they put the Devil in the Place of GOD, and imagined the Works of the Living and True GOD, to be nothing more than the Works of the Devils. Which was the ſame Thing, as if they had ſaid, that the World was made by Beelzebub, that the Sun aroſe at his Command, and the Stars in Heaven moved by his Direction. For as the one were the Works of GOD, ſo were the other: And if the one were done by Belzebub, ſo were the other alſo. For this Reaſon CHRIST declared their Sin unpardonable, and their Puniſhment inevitable and eternal. In another Place [s] he ſays, They who ſpake againſt CHRIST, conſidering him only as the Son of Man, were pardonable, becauſe in the Beginning of the Goſpel the World looked upon him only as a Prophet, not as GOD, bnt as the Son of Man: But they who blaſphemed his DIVINITY after his Works had demonſtrated him to be GOD, had no Forgiveneſs, ſo long as they continued in this Blaſphemy: But if they repented, they might obtain Pardon: For there is no Sin unpardonable with GOD to them who truly and worthily repent. And the ſame is ſaid by the Author of the Queſtions to Antiochus [t] under his Name. St. Ambroſe alſo defines this Sin to be Denying the Divinity of CHRIST [u], Whoever does not confeſs GOD in CHRIST, and CHRIST to be of GOD, and in GOD, deſerves no Pardon.

SOME again make it to conſiſt in denying the Divinity of the HOLY GHOST. Thus Epiphanius [x] brings the Charge againſt the Pneumatomachi, or Macedonian Hereticks, whoſe Error conſiſted particularly in oppoſing the Godhead of the HOLY GHOST, and making him a mere Creature. He ſays, All Hereticks blaſpheme and deny the Truth, ſome more, ſome leſs: As theſe Pneumatomachi did, blaſpheming the LORD and the HOLY SPIRIT, and having Pardon of Sins neither in this World, nor the World to come. He ſhews how they were not pardoned in this World, becauſe their Doctrine was condemned by the Church in the Council of Nice, and their Perſons ſons anathematized or caſt out of the Communion of the Church. But then as they might be admitted to Communion again upon their Repentance, ſo we muſt ſuppoſe, he means, their Sin was capable of Pardon in the next World upon the ſame Condition, and only unpardonable upon the Suppoſition of Obſtinacy and Continuance in it without Repentance. St. Ambroſe [y] alſo in his Treatiſe of the HOLY GHOST, writing againſt the ſame Hereticks, charges them as guilty of this Blaſphemy againſt the HOLY GHOST, for denying the Divinity of his Perſon. And the ſame Charge is brought againſt them by Philaſtrius [z], when he ſays, The LORD declared that all Sins ſhould be forgiven unto Men beſide the Blaſphemy againſt the heavenly Eſſence of the HOLY SPIRIT. Concedi omnia peccata hominibus præter Blaſphemiam de Divini & adorandi Spiritus Eſſentia.

PHILASTRIUS [a] brings the Charge in general againſt all Hereticks, as Blaſphemers of the HOLY GHOST. And St. Ambroſe does the ſame [b], but then he does not aſſert the Sin to be abſolutely unpardonable, but exhorts them to return to the Church, with hopes of obtaining Mercy and Forgiveneſs.

OTHERS place this Sin in a perverſe and malicious aſcribing the Works of the HOLY SPIRIT to the Power of the Devil. And ſome of theſe ſuppoſe the Malignity of it to conſiſt in doing this againſt Knowledge and manifeſt Convictions of Conſcience, which renders them ſelf-condemned, and their Sin ſimply and abſolutely unpardonable. The Author of the Queſtions upon the Old and New Teſtament under the Name of St. Auſtin [c], who is ſuppoſed to be one Hilary a Roman Deacon, expreſsly delivers his Opinion after this manner: The Jews, ſays he, did not ſin againſt the HOLY GHOST out of Ignorance, but Maliciouſneſs. For they knew the Works which our SAVIOUR did, to be the true Works of GOD: But to divert the People from believing on him, they pretended againſt their own Knowledge and Conſcience to ſay, That they were the Works of the Prince of the Devils. Upon which Account our LORD ſaid to them, Ye have the Key of Knowledge, and ye neither enter yourſelves, nor ſuffer others to enter. That Sentence then was pronounced againſt the Malignant, for whom there is no Remedy to be found to bring them to Salvation. For this is the greateſt of all Sins, pretending that to be falſe, which Men know to be true, and denying the wonderful Works of GOD againſt their own Knowledge and Conſcience.

BUT in Two Things this Author is ſingular. 1. In ſaying the Jews acted againſt Knowledge and Conſcience. For St. Auſtin [d] expreſsly ſays, They did it in Ignorance, by that Blindneſs which happened to Iſrael in Part, till the Fulneſs of the Gentiles be come in. And it ſeems evident from thoſe Words of St. Peter in his Sermon to them, Acts iii. 17. I wot, Brethren, that in Ignorance you did it, as did alſo your Rulers. 2. In that he makes their Sin ſimply and abſolutely unpardonable, which the Ancients generally do not, ſave only when it is accompanied with inſuperable Obſtinacy and final Impenitency, which in the Nature of the Thing can have no Pardon. For all others among the Ancients ſuppoſe it poſſible for Men to repent of this Sin, and thereby make themſelves capable of Pardon, though with great Difficulty; and that the Unpardonableneſs of it ariſes from Mens own Obſtinacy and Impenitency only, which makes them liable to Puniſhment both in this World and the World to come. Thus St. Chryſoſtom delivers his Opinion in his Comment [e] upon the Words of our SAVIOUR. Is there no Remiſſion for thoſe who repent of their Blaſphemy againſt the SPIRIT? How can this be ſaid with Reaſon? For we know it was forgiven to ſome that repented of it. Many of thoſe Jews which blaſphemed the HOLY GHOST, did afterwards believe, and all was forgiven them. What is therefore the meaning of it? That it is a Sin leſs capable of Pardon than all others. And unleſs they repented of it (ſo Anianus tranſlates it) they ſhould be puniſhed in both Worlds, and have Pardon in neither. Which he obſerves to be the Difference between this kind of Sinners and many others. For ſome Sinners are puniſhed both in this World and the next; Others only in this World; Others only in the next; and others neither in this World, nor the next. He gives Examples of all theſe. Some are puniſhed both here and hereafter: As theſe blaſpheming Jews: For they ſuffered Vengeance here in the great Calamities which befell them in the Deſtruction of Jeruſalem: And hereafter they muſt undergo intolerable Torments, as the Men of Sodom, and many others. Some ſuffer only in the next World, as the rich Man, who is tormented in Flames, and not Maſter of ſo much as a Drop of Water to cool his Tongue. Some ſuffer only in this World, as he that committed Fornication among among the Corinthians: And others neither in this World, nor the next, as the Apoſtles, and Prophets, and holy Job, and ſuch like. For their Paſſions were not Puniſhments for their Sins, but only Exerciſes and Combats to crown them with Victory. Now he ſuppoſes that Blaſphemy againſt the HOLY GHOST is a Sin of the firſt Kind, that is, one of thoſe, for which Men, if they do not timely repent of it, ſhall ſuffer both here and hereafter, as the Men of Sodom; in which reſpect it is ſaid never to have Forgiveneſs, neither in this World, nor the next, becauſe it is puniſhed in both. *Vid. VICTOR of Antioch, who was Cotemporary with St. Chryſoſtom, gives the ſame Account of the Unpardonableneſs of this Sin. He ſays [f], when our SAVIOUR diſcourſes of the Sin of Blaſphemy, he neither determines Blaſphemy againſt the SON to be abſolutely remiſſible, nor the Blaſphemy againſt the HOLY GHOST to be ſimply irremiſſible; as if there was no Place of Repentance left for ſuch Blaſphemers, when they were diſpoſed to return to a ſober Mind: But only by drawing a Compariſon betwixt the one and the other, he ſhews that the Blaſphemy againſt the SON ought to be eſteemed the Leſſer of the two, becauſe it ſeems to be levelled againſt him only as Man.

NOW from what has hitherto been diſcourſed, it is eaſy to conceive after what manner the Diſcipline of the Church was exerciſed upon ſuch Sort of Blaſphemers. For firſt, if all Apoſtates, and Idolaters, and ſuch as denied CHRIST, or blaſphemed him, or denied his Divinity, or the Divinity of the HOLY GHOST, and ſuch as fell into Hereſy or Schiſm, were reputed in ſome meaſure to blaſpheme the HOLY GHOST: Then the ſame Puniſhments that were inflicted on all ſuch Offenders, muſt conſequently be reckoned the Puniſhments of thoſe that blaſphemed the HOLY GHOST. And ſince we have ſeen thoſe Puniſhments under thoſe reſpective Heads before, we need enquire no farther after them in this Place; but only obſerve. 2*dly*, That the Ancients, as many at leaſt as went upon this Suppoſition, That the Blaſphemy againſt the HOLY GHOST was committed in theſe ſeveral Crimes, could not imagine it to be a Sin ſimply and abſolutely uncapable of Pardon: Becauſe they did not ſhut the Door of Repentance to any ſuch Offenders, or reckon them altogether Reprobate and Deſperate, but invited them to repent, and prayed for their Converſion, and received them again to Peace and Communion upon their humble Confeſſion and Evidences of a true Repentance. Which argues, That they did not believe the Sin againſt the HOLY GHOST to be altogether unpardonable, but only to the impenitent; ſince they granted Pardon to the Penitent in this World, and gave them hopes of obtaining Pardon from GOD in the World to come.

'TIS true indeed, St. Auſtin, and ſeveral others in the Latin Church, ſeem to ſay, that this Sin is altogether unpardonable both in this World and the next. But if we rightly take their meaning, they differ not at all from the former. For they ſuppoſe, that no Man perfectly commits the Sin againſt the HOLY GHOST, but he that finally dies Obdurate, and in Reſiſtance to all the gracious Motions and Operations of the HOLY SPIRIT to the End of his Days: In which Caſe, 'tis but natural to conclude from the Nature of the Thing, that ſuch Men can have no Pardon for their Sin, neither in this World nor the World to come: Not becauſe any Thing they do in their Life time, makes it an unpardonable Sin in itſelf; but becauſe they wilfully continue impenitent to the laſt, and ſo make it impoſſible and impracticable upon the Principles of the Goſpel, to obtain Pardon either of GOD or his Church, in this World or the World to come: Since the Covenant of Grace and Pardon only reſpects thoſe who embrace it in this Life, and not ſuch as put off Repentance to another World, where they will repent without Remedy, or, in the Apoſtle's Words, find no Room for Repentance, or Change of GOD's Purpoſes, though they ſeek it carefully with Tears.

IN this Senſe Fulgentius underſtands our SAVIOUR's Words, as menacing Puniſhment to thoſe that obſtinately continue in their Wickedneſs, and let Judgment overtake them in their Sins. He ſays Repentance is of Advantage to every Man in this Life, whatever Time he truly turns to GOD, Quamlibet iniquus, quamlibet annoſus, although he be the greateſt of Sinners, although he be grown old in Sin: But if he continue Obdurate to the laſt, there is no Mercy for him. For as Mercy will receive and abſolve thoſe that are converted [g], ſo Juſtice will repel and puniſh the Obdurate. For they are thoſe who ſin againſt the HOLY GHOST, and ſhall not have Remiſſion of Sins either in this World or the World to come. The Author of the Book, Of True

True and False Repentance [h], under the Name of St. Austin, says the same, That they only sin against the HOLY GHOST, who continue impenitent to Death. For the Holy Spirit is Love, who gives his Grace unto us as an Earnest. He therefor that sins, and desires not to recover his Grace, nor ever after is concerned to be loved by him, nor seeks to him from whom he received his Earnest, sins against the Holy Spirit, and shall never obtain Pardon, either Living, or after Death: But no one sins against the Holy Spirit, that flies unto him for Mercy, and therefore he says, Our SAVIOUR's Words to the Jews, were rather an Admonition to them, not to continue in Sin, because if they went on as they had begun, their Blasphemy would lead them unto Death. Bacchiarius [i], an African Writer about the Time of St. Austin, explains himself after the same manner. He says, This Sin consists in such a Despair of GOD's Mercy, as makes Men give over all Hopes of attaining by the Power of GOD to that State and Condition from which they are fallen. And so consequently go on in Sin without Repentance to their Lives End.

ST. Austin speaks often of this Crime, and he places it in a continual Resistance of the Motions and Graces of the Holy Spirit, by an invincible Hardness of Heart, and final Impenitence to the End of a Man's Days. Some, says he [k], placed it in the Commission of Mortal Sins after Baptism, and after having received the HOLY GHOST, as doing Despite to so great a Gift of CHRIST, by falling into such Sins as Adultery, Murder, Apostacy, or Separation from the Catholick Church. But this, he thinks, cannot be the Meaning of it; because the Church allows Room for Repentance for all Sins, and corrects Hereticks only with this Intent, That they may repent. He says farther [l], That it consists not in the Denying the Divinity or Person of the HOLY GHOST, or believing him to be a Creature, unless Men persist in their Errors to the End of their Days. For many Catholick Christians were once Jews, or Pagans, or Hereticks, such as the Arians, Eunomians, Macedonians, Sabellians, Patripassians and Photinians, who all deny either the Divinity or the Personality of the HOLY GHOST. And if all these, who speak against the HOLY GHOST, have no Forgiveness, in vain do we promise or preach to Men, That they should turn to GOD, and obtain Peace and Remission of Sins by Baptism, or in the Church. For it is not said, with any Exception, this Sin shall not be forgiven, save only in Baptism; but, It shall not be forgiven, neither in this World, nor in the World to come. Hence he infers, That it is not all Kind of Blasphemy against the HOLY GHOST, but a particular sort of Blasphemy that is thus threatned. And that is final Impenitency, or Resisting to the uttermost the gracious Offers of Remission of Sins made by the HOLY GHOST. This Impenitency [m], is the Blasphemy that has neither Remission in this World, nor in the World to come. But of this Impenitency no one can judge, so long as a Man lives in this Life. We are to despair of no Man, so long as the Patience of GOD leads him to Repentance, and does not snatch away the Sinner out of Life, who would not the Death of a Sinner; but rather that he should return and live. A Man is a Pagan to Day: But how knowest thou, but that he may become a Christian to Morrow? To Day he is an Unbelieving Jew: But what if to morrow he should believe in CHRIST? To Day he is an Heretick; But what if to Morrow he should embrace the Catholick Truth? To Day he is a Schismatick: But what if to Morrow he should return to the Peace of the Church? What if they, whom you mark as immersed in any Kind of Error, and damn as Desperate, should repent before they end this Life, and find true Life in the World to come? Judge nothing, Brethren, before the Time. For this Blasphemy of the SPIRIT, which has no Remission, and which we have shewed to be a persevering Hardness of an impenitent Heart, cannot be descried in any Man whilst he continues in this Life. At last he concludes [n]. There is but one Way to avoid the Condemnation of this unpardonable Blasphemy, which is, to beware of an impenitent Heart, and to believe that Repentance profits not but only in the Catholick Church, where Remission is granted, and the Unity of the Spirit is preserved in the Bond of Peace. St. Austin often repeats [o] this Notion, and he gives the same Account of what the Apostle calls the Sin unto Death, for which he forbids Men to pray. He says, It means that Hardness and Impenitency of Heart, whereby Men obstinately reject Faith, and Charity, and Remission of Sins to their last Hour. And whereas he had seemed to say in one Place [p], That this Blasphemy consisted in a malicious and envious Opposition to Brotherly Charity, after a Man had received the Grace of the HOLY GHOST: He explains this in his his Retractions [q] saying, There ought to be added this Condition, If he ends this wicked Perverseness of Mind: Because we are not to despair of the very worst Man, while he continues in this Life; neither is there any Imprudence in Praying for him, of whom we do not Despair. He confirms this Notion again at large in his Commentary upon the Epistle to the Romans. Where he first gives this Description [r] of it: That Man sins against the HOLY GHOST, who despairing, or deriding, or contemning the Preaching of Grace, by which Sins are washed away, and the Preaching of Peace, by which we are reconciled to GOD, refuses to repent of his Sins, and resolves to continue hardning himself in the impious and deadly sweetness of them, and therein persists to his last End. He then shews by great Variety of Instances, that any other Blasphemy against the SPIRIT is capable of Pardon, except this which includes Obduration to the last. The Pagans daily blaspheme the whole TRINITY, and the whole System of the Christian Religion: And yet the Church makes no Scruple to receive them to Pardon of Sins by Baptism upon their Conversion. The Jews are charged by Stephen for resisting the HOLY GHOST, and yet Paul, who was then one of the Number of those whom he so charged, was afterwards filled with the same SPIRIT, which he had resisted. The Samaritans opposed the HOLY GHOST, and yet both CHRIST and his Apostles attest to the Conversion of many of them. Simon Magus had conceived very ill Opinions of the HOLY SPIRIT, so as to think his Gifts might be purchased with Money; yet St. Peter did not despair of him, so as to leave him no Room for Pardon, but kindly admonished him to repent. Neither does the Catholick Church shut the Gate of Pardon to any Hereticks or Schismaticks, or leave them without Hopes of appeasing GOD, upon their Correction and Amendment: Though some of them deny the very Being and Person of the HOLY GHOST; others make him a mere Creature, and deny his Godhead; others make the Substance of the whole TRINITY mutable and corruptible; others deny the Mission of the HOLY GHOST upon the Apostles, and make his first Descent to be upon Montanus; and others despise his Sacraments, and rebaptize those who were baptized before in the Name of the Father, Son, and Holy Ghost. Nay he thinks some of those very Jews, to whom our Saviour gave a Caution against this Crime, afterward repented of their Blasphemy, though proceeding from Envy and Malice: and that St. Paul may be reckoned one of that Number; being a Blasphemer, and a Persecutor, and Injurious, as they were, in Ignorance and Unbelief; and putting himself in the Number of those who were sometimes foolish, disobedient, deceived, serving divers Lusts and Pleasures, living in Envy and Malice, hateful and hating one another. If therefore neither Pagans, nor Hebrews, nor Hereticks, nor Schismaticks, yet unbaptized, are precluded from the Sacrament of Baptism, whatever Opposition they have made to the HOLY GHOST before, if they sincerely repent, and condemn their former Life; if also they who have attained to the Knowledge of the Truth, and are baptized, may, after they have fallen into Sin and resisted the HOLY GHOST, be restored to the Peace of GOD by Repentance; finally if they to whom our SAVIOUR objected Blasphemy against the HOLY GHOST, might repent and be healed by flying to the Mercy of GOD: What remains, but that by the Sin against the HOLY GHOST, which our LORD says, Is never forgiven, neither in this World nor in the World to come, we should understand nothing else [s] but Perseverance in Malignity and Wickedness, with Despair of the Indulgence and Mercy of GOD? For this is to resist the Grace and Peace of the SPIRIT, of which we are speaking. He says also, That our SAVIOUR in the same Place where he reproves the Jews for their Blasphemy, intimates, that the Door of Repentance and Amendment was not yet shut against them, when he says, Either make the Tree good, and its Fruit good; or else make the Tree evil, and its Fruit evil. Which could not with any Reason have been said to them, if now for that Blasphemy they could not have changed their Mind for the better, and have brought forth the Fruit of good Works, or should in vain have brought them forth without Remission of their Sin. He therefore concludes, That they had not yet committed fully the unpardonable Sin, but only begun it, in saying, That he cast out Devils by Beelzebub; and that CHRIST admonishes them not to compleat it, by resisting his Grace and Peace, either by despairing of Pardon, or presuming on their own Righteousness, or continuing Impenitent, and persevering in their Sins: For this was to speak the blasphemous Word against the HOLY GHOST, by which CHRIST wrought those Miracles to bring them to his Grace and Peace. He observes here, That to speak Blasphemy against the HOLY GHOST, is not put to denote barely the uttering it with the Tongue, but the conceiving it in the Heart, and expressing preſſing it in Actions. For as they are not properly ſaid to confeſs GOD, who do it only with the Sound of their Lips, and not with their good Works: So he who ſpeaks the unpardonable Word againſt the HOLY GHOST, is not preſumed to ſay it perfectly, unleſs he do, as well as ſay it: That is, Deſpair of the Grace and Peace which the SPIRIT gives, and reſolves to perſevere in his Sins. That as the other deny GOD in their Words, ſo theſe ſay by their Works, that they reſolve to perſevere in an evil Life and corrupt Morals, and ſo ſay, and ſo do; that is, continue in them to the End of their Days. Which if they do, what needs any one wonder that their Blaſphemy ſhould be unpardonable? Or who is it now that cannot underſtand both that the Lord JESUS by that Commination called the Jews to Repentance, that he might grant them Grace and Peace by their believing on him: And alſo how it becomes impoſſible, that they ſhould have Pardon either in this World or the World to come, who reſiſt this Grace and Peace, and after this manner ſpeak the Word of Blaſphemy againſt the HOLY GHOST, that is, by a deſperate and impious Obſtinacy of Mind perſevere in their Sins, and proudly reſiſt GOD without any Humility of Confeſſion or Repentance?

THIS was St. Auſtin's conſtant and invariable Senſe of this Matter, out of which the Schoolmen, I know not how, have raiſed ſix ſeveral Species of Blaſphemy againſt the HOLY GHOST, viz. Deſpair, Preſumption, final Impenitency, Obſtinacy in Sin, oppoſing and impugning the Truth which a Man knows, and envious Malice againſt the Grace of the Brethren: Whereas nothing can be plainer, than that St. Auſtin reſolves the whole Matter into Obſtinacy in oppoſing the Methods of Divine Grace, and continuing in this Obduration finally without Repentance. Other Sins may lead the Way to this Blaſphemy, in Word or Action, as Infidelity or Reviling the Spirit in Jews or Heathens; or Hereſy, or Schiſm, or an immoral Life in Chriſtians after Baptiſm: But all this is only inchoative Blaſphemy, which does not render it abſolutely unpardonable; For many of all theſe Sorts have repented and obtained Pardon: But when Men continue obſtinate in any of theſe Sins, and finally die Impenitent in them, then their Sins become puniſhable in both Worlds, and pardonable in neither; not for Want of Mercy in GOD or his Church, but for Want of Repentance and Capacity in the Subject.

AND by this Account it is eaſy now to determine what ſort of Puniſhments and Eccleſiaſtical Cenſures were inflicted on this Crime, as well in the firſt Riſe and Beginning, as in the Progreſs and Conſummation of it. The ſame Puniſhment that was laid upon Idolatry, or Apoſtacy, or denying the Divinity of CHRIST, or the HOLY SPIRIT, or lapſing into any great Immorality, or other Blaſphemy after Baptiſm, was laid upon this Sin of blaſpheming the HOLY GHOST: Becauſe it uſually began in ſome of theſe notorious Miſdemeanours; of which if Men truly repented, the Door of Mercy was ſtill open to them, and the Church was ready to receive them again to Communion: But if they continued obdurate all their Lives, and died in their Impenitency; as this was eſteemed the Conſummation of the great Sin againſt the HOLY GHOST, and properly the Sin unto Death; ſo it could have no Forgiveneſs in this World, nor the World to come. They died excommunicate, and ſo had neither the Solemnity of a Chriſtian Burial, nor the Suffrages of the Church after Death; being ſtruck out of her Diptychs, and no Memorial ever after made of them, as of Perſons deſperate, and entirely out of GOD's Favour. I have been the longer in explaining the Senſe of the Ancients upon this Point, not only becauſe it is not very commonly known, but alſo becauſe it may be of Uſe both to caution ungodly Men againſt the Danger of final Impenitency, which is the Conſummation of the Blaſphemy againſt the HOLY GHOST; and likewiſe ſerve to comfort the Pious, who need be in no Concern about the Commiſſion of this Sin, ſo long as they truly repent of all Sin, and deſire to pleaſe GOD in the conſtant Tenor of an holy Life. For this Sin cannot conſiſt with a true Repentance: And though Men have begun in any Degree to commit it, yet according to the general Senſe of the Ancients, they are ſtill capable of Pardon, if they do not render it unpardonable by their own Obſtinacy and wilful Impenitency to the Hour of Death, after which it can have no Forgiveneſs in this World or the World to come.

SECT. 4. Of prophane Swearing. All Oaths not forbidden.

THE next Tranſgreſſion of the Third Commandment, which they puniſhed with Eccleſiaſtical Cenſures, was prophane Swearing, or reproaching and diſhonouring the Name of GOD by Oaths and Execrations. By which they did not mean all Oaths in general, nor yet any ſingle Act of raſh and haſty Swearing (unleſs attended with ſome other aggravating Crime or Circumſtance of Apoſtacy, Idolatry, Perjury, or the like) but only the Habit and Cuſtom of prophane Swearing. Chryſoſtom indeed, and ſome others in their ſharp Invectives againſt common Swearing [t] ſeem ſometimes to carry the Matter ſo far, as to deny the Lawfulneſs of all Oaths to Chriſtians in any Caſe whatſoever. But whatever private Opinions ſome few might have of this Matter (in which they were not conſtant or conſiſtent with themſelves, as as Learned Men [u] have obſerved :) It is certain there never was any Publick Rule of of the Church to forbid this, and much leſs to make it the Subject of Eccleſiaſtical Cenſure. The Generality of Chriſtians always eſteemed the Taking of an Oath in neceſſary Caſes for Confirmation of Truth, to be a very lawful Thing, as appears both from the Laws themſelves, Eccleſiaſtical as well as Civil, and from general Practice. One of Conſtantine's Laws is confirmed with a ſolemn Oath in the very Body of it, where he promiſes to encourage any one that ſhall give juſt Information againſt the corrupt Practices of his Miniſters [x], with his formal Aſſeveration, As the Moſt High GOD ſhall be merciful to me, and preſerve me in Safety, according to my Deſire, in the flouriſhing State of the Commonwealth. Nothing was more uſual than the taking of Oaths for Confirmation of Contracts, as is evident from that famous Law of Arcadius [y] which inflicts many ſevere Penalties upon all that violate their Contracts made in the Name, and confirmed by the Authority of Almighty GOD: And alſo on ſuch as broke their Contracts, which they confirmed by an Oath taken in that peculiar Form of Swearing by the Emperor's Safety. Which was an uſual Form of an Oath among Chriſtians, as ancient as Tertullian, who mentions it in Anſwer to an Objection made by the Heathen againſt them, as if they were Enemies to the Government, and guilty of Treaſon, becauſe they refuſed to ſwear by the Emperor's Genius: To this he replies [z], That though they did not ſwear by the Emperor's Genius, yet they made no Scruple to ſwear by the Emperor's Safety, a Thing more Auguſt than all the Genii in the World. For the Genii were nothing but Devils. In the Emperors they acknowledged GOD's Inſtitution and Authority, who ſet them over the Nations: And therefore they deſired their Safety and Preſervation, as GOD's Appointment, and made a great and ſolemn Oath of that: But for the Dæmons, or Genii, they were uſed to abjure them, in order to caſt them out of the Bodies of Men, not to ſwear by them, and thereby confer Divine Honour upon them. Athanaſius mentions the ſame Form as uſed in his Time both by the Catholicks, and by Syrianus the Prefect of Egypt, telling Conſtantius [a] that he ſwore by his Safety. And the like Inſtances are given by Sozomen [b], and Zoſimus [c] the Heathen Hiſtorian. In the Collation of Carthage, Marcellinus the Emperor's Commiſſioner, who was appointed to hear the Debate between the Catholicks and the Donatiſts in the Time of Honorius, at the Entrance of the Diſpute promiſed both Sides upon Oath by the admirable Myſtery of the TRINITY, and the Sacrament or Myſtery of the Divine Incarnation, [d] and the Safety of the Emperors, that he would judge truly according to the Allegations of the Parties. And the ſame Form was obſerved in the Military Oath taken by the Soldiers, when they entred upon the Muſter-Roll, as we learn from Vegetius, who lived in the Time of the Younger Valentinian: He ſays [e], They ſwore by GOD, by CHRIST, and the HOLY SPIRIT, and the Majeſty of the Emperor, which next to GOD is to be loved and honoured by Mankind. In many other Caſes the Law required Men to ſwear upon weighty Concerns. Conſtantine [f] required every Witneſs to take an Oath before he gave his Teſtimony in any Cauſe. And Juſtinian [g] not only confirmed this in his Code, but added ſeveral other Caſes in which not only Witneſſes, but alſo both the Plaintiff and Defendant, and the Advocates were to take their ſeveral Oaths upon the Goſpels. And this was called Juramentum de Calumnia, The Oath of Calumny [*], where the Plaintiff was particularly obliged, before he could proſecute his Action, to ſwear, that he did not bring his Action againſt his Adverſary with any Deſign to calumniate him, but becauſe he thought he had a juſt and righteous Cauſe: And the Defendant was to take a like Oath before he could give in his Anſwer. They were likewiſe obliged by another [h] Law to ſwear, That they had given no Bribe to the Judges or any other Perſon, nor promiſed to give any, nor would hereafter give any. And it has been obſerved before [†], That to prevent Simony in Elections to Eccleſiaſtical Preferments, the Electors were obliged by the ſame Laws of Juſtinian [i] to depoſe upon Oath, That they did not chuſe the Party elected either for Gift, Promiſe, or Friendſhip, or any other Reaſon, but becauſe they knew him to be in every reſpect well qualified for ſuch a Station. And the Party ordained was likewiſe to take an Oath [k] upon the holy Goſpels, at the Time of his Ordination, That he had neither given by himſelf, or other, nor promiſed to give, nor would hereafter give to his Ordainer, or to any of his Electors, or any other Perſons any Thing to procure him an Ordination. And for any Biſhop to ordain another Biſhop without obſerving this Rule, is Depoſition by the ſame Law both for the Ordained and his Ordainer. Which ſhews alſo, That the Injunction of taking neceſſary Oaths, did not only bind in ſecular and Civil Affairs, but in Eccleſiaſtical and Sacred likewiſe. And here not to inſiſt upon all that is ſaid in Private Writers; as Athanaſius [l] requiring of Conſtantius, That his Accuſers might be put to their Oath; and Evagrius Archdeacon of Conſtantinople [m] Swearing upon the Holy Goſpels; and what is ſaid by St. Auſtin [n] and many others in Juſtification of this Practice in neceſſary Caſes: I only obſerve that in ſome Councils Oaths are expreſsly required by General and Provincial Councils in many Caſes. The Oath of Fidelity to Kings is required by the Fifth Council of Toledo [o], to be taken by all, both Clergy and Laity. And a Reference is made to a former Council of all Spain, where the ſame Oath was eſtabliſhed. That is the Fourth Council of Toledo, where a Complaint is made [p] of many Nations breaking the Oath of Fidelity taken to their Kings: Which, they rightly obſerve, deſtroys their Credit with all Nations in Matters of Leagues and Treaties about Peace and War. For what Enemy can depend upon their Promiſes, though given upon Oath, who do not preſerve the Faith which they ſwear to their own Kings? Such Violation of Oaths and Fidelity to their Kings, is Sacrilege: Becauſe it is not only a Breach of Compact againſt them, but againſt GOD, in whoſe Name the Promiſe is made. The ſame Council [q] takes Notice of Kings promiſing upon Oath to pardon Criminals in ſome ſpecial Caſes. And the Eighth Council of Toledo, mentions many Caſes in which it was uſual to confirm Matters with a ſolemn Oath [r]; as the making of Leagues; the ſettling of laſting and inviolable Friendſhip; the taking of the Evidence and Depoſitions of Witneſſes in Law; and in Want of ſuch Evidence, the allowing a Man to clear his own Innocence by an Oath of Purgation. And in the Sixth General Council held at Conſtantinople, Georgius Chartophylax is appointed ſeveral Times to take his Corporal [s] Oath by the Holy Scriptures and GOD that ſpeaks in them, concerning certain Things, the Truth of which he was to atteſt before the Council. From all which it is evident, that the ancient Chriſtians thought it a very lawful Thing to ratify and confirm their Faith by the Formality of an Oath, upon juſt and neceſſary Occaſions: And conſequently, that there could be no Rule to prohibit it, much leſs to make it a Crime worthy of Eccleſiaſtical Cenſure.

SECT. 5. But only the Cuſtom of vain and common Swearing.

NEITHER was it every ſingle Act of vain and common Swearing, that brought a Man under publick Diſcipline. For though every ſuch Act was eſteemed a Crime, yet it was not like the ſingle Act of Apoſtacy or Idolatry, or Murder, or Adultery, but it muſt be a Cuſtom or Habit of this Vice that made a Man liable to the Severity of Excommunication. Tertullian [t] ſays expreſsly, That every raſh and vain Oath did not bring a Man under the Diſcipline of publick Penance, but was reckoned among the Sins of daily Incurſion, for which private Repentance was appointed. And St. Chryſoſtom, who is moſt vehement and ſevere againſt this Vice, does not threaten Men with Excommunication for every ſingle Act of it, but for obſtinate Continuance in the Cuſtom and Practice of it after ſufficient Admonition. Having preached a whole Lent againſt Swearing to the People of Antioch, he thus concludes his laſt Diſcourſe: The Forty Days of Lent are already paſt [u]; if Eaſter paſſes likewiſe without reforming this wicked Cuſtom, I will thenceforward pardon no Man, nor uſe any longer Admonition, but commanding Authority, and Sharpneſs not to be deſpiſed. It is no juſt Apology in this Caſe to plead Cuſtom. For why may not the Robber as well plead Cuſtom, and thereby excuſe himſelf from Puniſhment? And why may not the Murderer and Adulterer do the ſame? Therefore I proteſt and denounce beforehand, That if I apprehend any who have not corrected this Vice, I will inflict Puniſhment upon them, and order them to be excluded from the Participation of the Holy Myſteries. So again, in another Homily [x] to the People of Antioch: For this Sin we mourn and lament: But if I find any any to perſiſt in it, I will exclude them from entring the Doors of the Church, and partaking of the Heavenly Myſteries. Nor let any one think to inſult me by the Help of his Riches or Power. Thoſe Things are no more to me than a mere Fable, a Shadow, or a Dream. No rich Man will be able to be my Advocate, when I am accuſed before GOD's Tribunal, That I did not with all my Power and Might aſſert and vindicate the Laws of GOD, by puniſhing the Tranſgreſſors of them.

SECT. 6. And Swearing by the Creatures.

ANOTHER Tranſgreſſion of this Command, was Swearing by the Creatures. The Fourth Council of Carthage [y] orders a Clergyman that was found guilty of this Crime, to be firſt ſharply reproved, and if he perſiſt in his Fault, to be excommunicated. St. Jerom ſays [z], our SAVIOUR prohibited it in thoſe Words, Thou ſhalt not ſwear by Heaven, nor by Earth, nor by Jeruſalem, nor by thy Head. And there goes a Decree under the Name of Pope Pius I. [a] which forbids Men not only to ſwear by the Hair, or Head of GOD, or any other ſuch blaſphemous Oaths, but by the Creature, under the Penalty of Excommunication.

BUT becauſe this may ſeem to contradict what they ſaid before, That a Man might lawfully ſwear by the Emperor's Safety; we are to conſider, That in ſuch Oaths they did not properly ſwear by the Creatures, invoking them as Witneſſes of the Truth of what they ſaid, but only naming them with ſome Relation to GOD, by whom they ſwore. Which, as Learned Men [b] obſerve, may lawfully be done two Ways. 1. In Execratory Oaths, when a Man devotes any Creature, in which he himſelf has ſome Right and Property, and as it were oppignorates it to the ſevere Vengeance of GOD the Judge, if he ſwear falſely. Thus a Man may in a ſerious Matter devote his Head, his Soul, his Children, or any other Thing belonging to him, if he knowingly forſwear himſelf. Such Examples of Oaths we have in Scripture, which reſpect GOD always directly as Witneſs and Judge; and the Creature only as ſome thing dear to us, which we are willing to pawn, to certify our Neighbour thereby, that we intend not to deceive him, to the Deſtruction of ourſelves, or any Things that are highly valued by us. Thus David ſwears, Pſal. vii. 5. If I have done any ſuch Thing, O Lord, my God, or if there be any Wickedneſs in my Hands, then let my Enemy perſecute my Soul. So St. Paul, 2 Cor. i. 23. I call God for a Record upon my Soul. And thus Men were uſed to ſwear by their Head, devoting it to a Curſe, if they wittingly falſied. This Way of uſing the Name of a Creature in an Oath is reputed lawful; becauſe this is not properly the Oath, but only an Appendix of it. 2. The other Way of mentioning the Creatures in an Oath, without Swearing by them, is, when by a Teſtification of the Civil Reſpect and Affection they have for them, they likewiſe ſignify in the Preſence of GOD, the Truth of what they ſay to Men, That it is as certainly true, as they certainly and undoubtedly wiſh the Wealth and Proſperity of ſuch a Creature or Perſon. Thus Joſeph, when he ſwore by GOD, mentioned the Life of Pharaoh, Gen. xlii. 15. which the the Vulgar Latin renders, Per Salutem Pharaonis, from the Septuagint, νὴ τὴν ὑγίειαν φαραὼ by the Safety of Pharaoh: Which is the ſame Form, that, as we have ſeen before, the Primitive Chriſtians uſed, when they inſerted the Words, Per Salutem Imperatoris, into their ordinary Oaths conceived in the Name of GOD only. For neither of theſe intended to ſwear by the Creatures, but to teſtify in the Preſence of GOD, that what they aſſerted was as certainly true, as they wiſhed the Safety of Pharaoh, or the Emperor, or as certainly as they were in Health and in Being. For ſuch Forms may be taken either by Way of Prayer, or Aſſeveration and Proteſtation: Where the Proteſtation is plainly expreſſed, but that which is properly the Oath in the Name of GOD, is covertly underſtood. And in this Senſe both the ancient Chriſtians and Joſeph are to be underſtood. For, as St. Baſil [c] obſerves, there are ſome Modes of Expreſſion which ſeem to be Oaths, but are not properly Oaths, but only Aſſeverations, to confirm the Truth to Men: He inſtances in that of Joſeph, who ſware, νὴ τὴν ὑγίειαν φαραὼ, by the Safety of Pharaoh.

SECT. 7. And by the Emperor's Genius, and Saints and Angels.

BUT the Caſe was otherwiſe when Men ſwore directly by any Creatures, as Judges and Revengers of their Thoughts, if they were falſe and perfidious in their Depoſition. Therefore though the Chriſtians admitted the naming of the Emperor's Safety in their Oaths, they would never ſwear by the Emperor's Genius, becauſe this was Idolatry, and in Effect Apoſtatizing to Heatheniſm, and Renouncing the Chriſtian Religion. The Perſecutors required no more of them but this, as a Teſtimony of their Renunciation. In the Paſſion of Polycarp, recorded by Euſebius [d], the Proconſul required him frequently to ſwear by the Emperor's Genius: To which he conſtantly replied, That he was a Chriſtian.

Ὅμοσον τὴν Καίσαρος τύχην.

So in the Acts of the Scillitan Martyrs [e] in Africk, the Judge bids them only ſwear by the Emperor's Genius, and that ſhould paſs for an Acknowledgment of the Gentile Religion: But they anſwered, We know nothing of the Emperor's Genius, but we worſhip and ſerve the GOD of Heaven. The like is ſaid by Origen [f], We ſwear not by the Emperor's Fortune or Genius: For whether Fortune be only a caſual Thing, as ſome repute it, we ſwear not by that as a God, which is Nothing in the World, leſt we ſhould apply the Power of an Oath to that which we ought not; or whether Fortune be one of the Dæmons, as others ſay, we rather chuſe to die, than ſwear by an impious and wicked Devil. The like is ſaid by Minucius [g], That it was peculiar to the Heathens to ſwear by the Emperor's Genius, that is, his Dæmon; and that it was ſafer to forſwear themſelves by the Genius of Jupiter, than the Genius of the Emperor. Tertullian [h] ſays, Chriſtians abſolutely refuſed to ſwear by this Form, though they ſcrupled not to ſwear by the Emperor's Safety. But the Heathen Rebels were uſed to ſwear [i] by the Emperor's Genius, at the ſame time that they were plotting Treaſon againſt him; which he frequently retorts upon them, becauſe they were uſed to charge Chriſtians [k] as Traitors, becauſe they would not ſwear by the Emperor's Genius. The Nature of this Crime then, we ſee, was plainly Idolatry and Apoſtacy, in giving Divine Honour to a Dæmon, inſtead of GOD, and thereby Renouncing at once the Chriſtian Religion. Whatever Penalties therefore were impoſed on Idolaters and Apoſtates, the ſame we may conclude to have been the Puniſhment of thoſe who in Times of Perſecution complied with the Demands of the Heathen, to ſwear by the Emperor's Genius or Dæmon, which was to give Divine Honour to Creatures, and the worſt of Creatures, the Apoſtate Angels, who were in profeſſed Rebellion againſt GOD.

To ſwear by Good Angels, or Saints, or the Virgin Mary, or their Images and Relicks, though it had a more ſpecious Pretence, was not much ſhort of the former Vice. For all Divine Worſhip being appropriated to GOD by the Doctrine of the Ancients; and the Taking of an Oath being one ſolemn Act of that Worſhip; they were no more diſpoſed to ſwear by an Angel or a Saint than by the Emperor's Genius, or any other Thing that might reaſonably be interpreted a conferring the Honour of GOD upon the Creature. Therefore Optatus objects it to the Donatiſts, as a great Piece of Inſolence and Impiety, That whereas [l] Men ought to ſwear only by GOD alone, Donatus ſuffered thoſe of his Party to ſwear by himſelf as a God. And his Succeſſors as greedily embraced this Honour. For Optatus [m] charges the ſame Impiety upon them all in general: The People ſwear by you, and are now commonly known to put your Perſons in the Place of GOD. Men are uſed to name the Name of GOD in Oaths to confirm their Faith and Veracity: But while they ſwear by you, there is no mention of GOD and CHRIST among your Party. If Divine Religion be tranſplanted from Heaven to you, ſeeing Men ſwear by your Name, why do you not aſſume the Power of preventing all Diſeaſes in yourſelves, and thoſe of your Party? Let no one die: Command the Clouds to Rain, if you can: That Men may ſwear more pefectly by your Name, and take no Notice of GOD. O Sacrilegium Impietati commixtum: O the Sacrilege and Impiety that concurs together in your Actions, whilſt you willingly hear Men ſwear by your Names, and let not the Name of GOD be once mentioned in your Ears. He ſays farther, That they were [n] uſed to ſwear by their pretended Martyrs, though they were Men that ſuffered for their Crimes, and not for the Cauſe of Religion. By which it is evident, that in the Time of Optatus, to ſwear by the Name of a Man, whether living or dead, was reckoned no leſs a Crime than Sacrilege and Impiety as transferring the Honour of GOD upon the Creature. And conſequently, the ſame Puniſhment that was due to Sacrilege and Impiety, muſt be ſuppoſed to be the Puniſhment of this Crime in all thoſe that were guilty of it; though we read of Few beſides theſe Hereticks in thoſe Days that were diſpoſed to run into it, till the Worſhip of Saints, and Angels, and the Virgin Mary, began to creep into the Church; and then together with that Corruption came in this other of joyning the Virgin Mary, and the Archangels Michael and Gabriel, in the ſame Oath of GOD. The Form of which ſort of Oaths, we have in one of Juſtinian's Novels [o], which obliges every Governor of a Province to take an Oath of Allegiance, Allegiance, and an Oath againſt Bribery, or corrupt Entrance into his Office, in this Form: "I ſwear by GOD Almighty, and his onely "begotten Son our Lord JESUS CHRIST, "and the HOLY GHOST, and the moſt "holy glorious Mother of GOD, and ever-"Virgin Mary, and by the Four Goſpels which "I hold in my Hand, and by the holy Arch-"angels Michael and Gabriel, That I will keep "a pure Conſcience, and pay faithful and "true Allegiance to their moſt ſacred Ma-"jeſties Juſtinian and Theodora his Conſort, "who put me into this Office. And I ſwear "by the ſame Oath, That I neither gave, "nor will give, nor promiſed to give any "Thing to any one whatſoever for his Pa-"tronage or Aſſiſtance in procuring me this "Adminiſtration; but as I received it with-"out Bribery, ſo I will execute it with Pu-"rity, being content with the publick Salary "that is appointed me." The Matter of this Oath is exceeding good, but it muſt be confeſſed, the Form of it is a Deviation from the Purity and the Simplicity of former Ages, when Oaths were only made in the Name of GOD, as a Speciality of Divine Worſhip peculiarly belonging to him. This is the firſt Inſtance I remember of any Oath of this Kind allowed in the Church: And it ſerves to ſhew in how ſhort a Time Corruptions may gain Ground by Authority: For that which was reputed Sacrilege and Impiety in the Time of Optatus, was now become an Inſtance of ſingular Devotion to the Archangels and the Virgin Mary. There are many other Things might be noted concerning Oaths; but here I only ſpeak of ſuch Things as relate to the Diſcipline of the Church.

SECT. 8. Of Perjury, and its Puniſhment.

THE next great Crime that might be committed againſt the Name and Majeſty of GOD, was Perjury; which might be committed either at the Time of taking the Oath, by Swearing to a falſe Thing, or Swearing to do ſome wicked and unlawful Thing; or elſe afterward, by not performing what a Man lawfully might, when he was ſolemnly engaged upon Oath to do it. He that ſwore to do an unlawful Thing, as ſuppoſe to live in perpetual Enmity with another Man, and never be reconciled to him, was by the Council of Lerida [p] to be caſt out of Communion a whole Year for his Perjury, and obliged to repent of his unlawful Oath, and be reconciled to his Brother. For in this Caſe, as the Fathers and Canons [q] determine, the unlawful was not to be kept, leſt it ſhould involve him, like Herod, in a double or triple Sin; but he was to retcind his Oath, and repent of his Perjury, which was better than to add one Sin to another under Pretence of Piety and Religion. In this Caſe the Penance was ſo much the ſhorter, becauſe Men were ſuppoſed by ſome haſty Paſſion to be involved raſhly in this Guilt, and not by any ſettled Conſideration.

BUT in other Caſes, Perjury in atteſting a falſe Thing, or not performing a lawful Oath, was more ſeverely treated. For Chryſoſtom reckons Perjury in the ſame Claſs with Murder, Fornication [r] and Adultery. And St. Baſil [s] impoſes eleven Years Penance upon thoſe that were guilty of it: The perjured Perſon ſhall be a Mourner two Years, an Hearer three, a Proſtrator four, a Co-ſtander one. The firſt Council of Maſcon [t] orders thoſe that drew others into falſe Witneſs or Perjury, to be caſt out of Communion to the Hour of Death; and thoſe that were ſo drawn in, to be for ever after uncapable of giving Teſtimony, and to be noted as infamous Perſons according to the Laws: Meaning probably, the Laws of the State, as well as the Laws of the Church. For, as Gothofred ſhews at large, the Civil Law under the old Romans, ſet the Brand of Infamy upon all ſuch perjured Perſons; and Honorius added ſeveral other Penalties [u] to give new Vigor to the ancient Laws, and make them more effectual. I cannot here omit the Relation which Euſebius gives of the Divine Vengeance purſuing three perjured Villains, who combined together to ſwear to a falſe Accuſation, which they had plotted before-hand againſt Narciſſus Biſhop of Jeruſalem; becauſe it ſhews that when Church-Diſcipline cannot take Effect for Want of Evidence againſt the Criminal, Providence is ſometimes pleaſed to interpoſe, and revenge this Crime by an immediate divine Judgment. Three Men, he ſays [x], who were afraid to be called in Queſtion by the Biſhop, and puniſhed for their wicked Lives, reſolved to be beforehand with him, by contriving and bringing an heavy Accuſation againſt him. And to gain Credit to their Accuſation before the Church, they each confirmed it with a ſolemn Oath. One of them wiſhed, That if he ſwore falſely, he might periſh by Fire; another, That his Body might be conſumed by ſome ſome peſtilential Diſeaſe; and the third, That he might loſe his Eyes. The Church gave no Credit to their Oaths, as knowing the Biſhop to be of a clear and unblameable Life: However, he being not able to bear the Calumny, and being otherwiſe of a long Time deſirous of a retired Life, he thereupon withdrew into the Wilderneſs, leaving his Church to live the Life of an Hermit. But the great Eye of Juſtice did not thus ſuffer the Matter to reſt, but preſently revenged the Miſcreants with the Curſes they had imprecated upon themſelves. For the firſt by a little Spark of Fire, that caſually happened in his Houſe, and whereof no one could give any Account, was in the Night, himſelf, Family and Houſe univerſally burnt to Aſhes; the ſecond was from the Sole of the Foot to the Crown of his Head over-run and conſumed by the ſame peſtilential Diſeaſe which he had wiſhed upon himſelf; and the third ſeeing what had befallen the other two, and fearing the inevitable Vengeance of the All-ſeeing GOD, confeſſed the whole Plot and Contrivance of the Calumny which they had formed: And he teſtified his Repentance with ſo deep a Sorrow, that with the Multitude of his Tears he loſt his Sight. Thus theſe perjured Wretches were puniſhed by the Hand of GOD, when Eccleſiaſtical Cenſure for Want of Evidence could not touch them.

SECT. 9. Of Breach of Vows.

THE laſt Tranſgreſſion of this Commandment, that was puniſhed with Eccleſiaſtical Cenſure, was Breach of Vows, or Promiſes ſolemnly made to GOD. And this was both in Things and Perſons. If a Man vowed to give his Eſtare, or any Part of it, to the Service of GOD; it was a Breach of Vow, including Sacrilege to retract it. Ananias was ſeverely cenſured for this, in ſuch an extraordinary Way by the Apoſtolical Rod and Mouth of St. Peter, as in St. Baſil's Judgment [y], left him no Room for Repentance. The Church in after-Ages could not puniſh ſuch Delinquents in that extraordinary Manner: But as every ſuch Breach of Vow was a Piece of Sacrilege, as well as Perfidiouſneſs and Perjury, we may be ſure, the common Penalties that were inflicted on thoſe two Crimes ſingly, were no leſs carefully impoſed on this Crime, where they centered both in Combination. There was alſo a Breach of Vow, which concerned the Dedication of Perſons to GOD. The Clergy were ſuppoſed to be more peculiarly GOD's Inheritance, dedicating themſelves by a ſolemn Act of their own voluntary Choice to the Miniſtry of his Church: And therefore none of this Order were allowed to deſert their Station, and turn Seculars again, upon the ſevereſt Penalty of Excommunication. As appears from the Rules of the General Council of Chalcedon [z] and the Council of Tours [a]. Which the Laws of the State confirmed by proper Sanctions [b] of a Civil Nature, ordering all ſuch Deſerters to be delivered up to the Curia of their City, to ſerve there all their Lives; and to forfeit all ſuch Eſtates as they were poſſeſſed of, to the Church or Monaſtery to which they belonged. For the ſame Penalties were inflicted on Monks and conſecrated Virgins and Widows, who by any ſolemn Vow had bid Adieu to the World, and had betaken themſelves to the Aſcetick Life. If after this they married and returned to a Secular Life; though the Church did not annul their Marriage, under the Notion of being adulterous (which is now commonly done in the Romiſh Communion) yet ſhe impoſed a certain Penance upon them as guilty of Perfidiouſneſs and Breach of Vow. The Council of Chalcedon [c] orders both Monks and Virgins to be excommunicated, if they married after their ſolemn Conſecration and Profeſſion. St. Baſil ſays [d] they were to do the Penance of Fornicators or Adulterers. Not that he reckoned their Marriage Fornication or Adultery, but only to aſſign the Term of their Penance. For as we have ſhewed elſewhere [*] out of St. Auſtin [e], ſuch Marriages were never reputed Adultery, but true Marriages, and therefore not annulled by the Rule of the ancient Church: Though now by the Authority of the Council of Trent, the contrary Practice prevails in the Romiſh Church, where all ſuch Marriages are reverſed, and the Parties obliged to ſeparate from one another.

Of Sins againſt the Fourth Commandment, or Violations of the Law injoining the Religious Obſervation of the Lord's-Day.

SECT. 1. Abſenting from Religious Aſſemblies on the Lord's-Day, how puniſhed by the Laws of the Church.

SOMETHING has already been noted concerning the religious Obſervation of the Lord's-Day in a former Book [*], and more will be ſaid hereafter, when we come to ſpeak of the Feſtivals, of which this was always reckoned the Principal in the Chriſtian Church. Here therefore our preſent Subject only requires us to remark ſuch Violations of the Law injoining the religious Obſervation of the Lord's-Day, as made Men liable to Eccleſiaſtical Cenſure. And firſt, it being a Rule, that Men ſhould meet together, to celebrate all Divine Offices in Publick on the Lord's-Day: The voluntary abſenting from this Service, either in Whole, or in Part, was ever reputed a Crime worthy of Eccleſiaſtical Cenſure. To abſent wholly, as Hereticks and Schiſmaticks did, by a choſen Separation, though they met in private Conventicles of their own, was eſteemed ſuch a Violation of the Law, as the Church thought fit to puniſh with the ſevereſt Cenſure of Anathema: As appears from ſeveral Canons of the Council of Gangra [a], which having been related at length before [†] I need not here repeat them. Secondly, If Men, who were otherwiſe Orthodox, neglected for any conſiderable Time to frequent the Church on the Lord's-Day, this was a Miſdemeanor deſerving to be corrected by a judicial Suſpenſion from the Communion. This may be ſeen in the Canons of Eliberis [b], Sardica [c] and the Council of Trullo [d], which for the ſame Reaſon I forbear to recite.

Thirdly, To frequent ſome Part of Divine Service on the Lord's-Day, and neglect and withdraw from the reſt, was in thoſe Days a Crime of a very high Nature, and puniſhable with Excommunication. This is evident from thoſe called the Apoſtolical Canons, one of which orders [e], That all Communicants, who came to Church to hear the Sermon and the Scriptures read, but did not ſtay to join in the Prayers and receive the Euchariſt, ſhould be ſuſpended, as Authors of Confuſion and Diſorder in the Church. The ſame is decreed in the Council of Antioch [f] in the ſame Terms, and under the ſame Penalty. The Council of Eliberis [g] forbids the Biſhop to receive the Oblations of ſuch as did not communicate. Which was in Effect to exclude them from the Communion of the Church. And the firſt Council of Toledo [h] orders ſuch as come to Church, but neglect to frequent the Communion, to be admoniſhed; and if upon Admonition they amend not, then to put them under publick Penance, as great Offenders. And another Canon [i] of the ſame Council adds, That if any preſent themſelves to the Communion, and take the Euchariſt at the Hands of the Prieſt, and yet forbear to eat it, they ſhall be driven out of the Church as ſacrilegious Perſons. All theſe Canons ſuppoſe, what we have fully evinced in a former Book [*], That the Celebration of the Euchariſt was a ſtanding Part of Divine Service every Lord's-Day; and that every Chriſtian Communicant, who was not under Penance, was obliged to partake thereof, to fulfill the Duty he owed to GOD upon this Day: And therefore all ſuch as neglected this Part of Divine Worſhip, were to be cenſured as Tranſgreſſors, for contemning one Principal Part of the religious Obſervation of the Lord's-Day. I cannot write this without lamenting the hard Fate of many pious Perſons in the preſent Age, whoſe Diſpoſition would incline them to be conſtant Communicants every Lord's-Day, but they want Opportunity in the preſent Poſture of Affairs to execute their good Deſigns. Such muſt content themſelves with that of the Apoſtle, If there be firſt a willing Mind, it is accepted, according to that a Man hath, and not according to that he hath not; and in the mean Time pray to GOD to find out a Method in his good Providence to reſtore the ancient Diſcipline and Primitive Fervour. But I proceed.

SECT. 3. Faſting on the Lord's-Day prohibited under Pain of Excommunication.

IT was an ancient and general Cuſtom in the Primitive Church, to keep the Lord's-Day as a Feſtival, and a Day of Rejoycing, in Memory of our Saviour's Reſurrection; and never to faſt on that Day, no not even in the Time of Lent. And therefore to faſt perverſely on on this Day was always reputed a Crime deſerving Eccleſiaſtical Cenſure. Tertullian [k] ſays, They counted it a Crime to faſt on the Lord's-Day. And he remarks, That even the Montaniſts, who were the moſt rigid in obſerving their Times of Faſting, omitted [l] both Saturday and Sunday throughout the Year. For though they obſerved Three Lents, and two Weeks of Xerophagia, or dry Meats beſides, yet they excepted the Sabbath or Saturday, and the Lord's-Day from theſe Laws of Faſting. St. Ambroſe likewiſe tells us [m], That the Catholicks were uſed to except theſe two Days in their Lent-Faſts. They never faſted on the Lord's-Day, but thought they had Reaſon to condemn the Manichees for [n] ſo doing: For to appoint that Day to be a Faſt-Day, was in Effect to disbelieve the Reſurrection of CHRIST. Several other Hereticks beſide the Manichees, were condemned for this Practice by the firſt Council of Braga [o]: They particularly name the Cerdonians, Marcionites and Priſcillianiſts, whom they anathematized upon this Account, as Faſting on the Day of CHRIST's Nativity and the Lord's-Day, becauſe they did this in Derogation to the Truth of CHRIST's Human Nature. Pope Leo notes the Priſcillianiſts [p] upon the ſame Account. And the Fourth Council of Carthage [q] cenſures them as no Catholicks, who chuſe to faſt upon this Day. St. Auſtin [r] not only ſays, that it was the Cuſtom of the whole Catholick Church to abſtain from Faſting on this Day, but that no one could do otherwiſe without giving great Scandal to the Church, becauſe the impious Manichees had choſen this Day particularly [s] to faſt upon in Oppoſition to the Church. Upon theſe Grounds and Reaſons the Canons are very ſevere in their Cenſures of ſuch Tranſgreſſors. If any one faſt on the Lord's-Day, ſays the Council of Gangra [t], though it be under Pretence of leading an Aſcetick Life. Let him be Anathema. In like manner the Apoſtolical Canons [u], If any Clergyman faſt on the Lord's-Day, or Sabbath (one only excepted, viz. the Sabbath before Eaſter) let him be depoſed. If he be a Layman, let him be caſt out of the Communion of the Church. And this is repeated in the Council of Trullo [x], and other Rules of the ancient Church.

SECT. 4. Frequenting the Theatre and other Shews and Paſtimes on this Day, how puniſhed.

THERE were many other Rules made by the Ancients for the decent Obſervation of the Lord's-Day: As that Men ſhould abſtain from all unneceſſary bodily Labour; that all Law-Suits and Pleadings and Proſecutions ſhould ceaſe upon this Day; that Divine-Service ſhould be performed ſtanding, in Memory of our SAVIOUR's Reſurrection: But as the Tranſgreſſions of theſe Rules are not uſually mentioned with the ſame Commination of Eccleſiaſtical Puniſhments, the Conſideration of them belongs not to this Head, but ſhall be reſerved for its proper Place, under the Title of Feſtivals, where the Obſervation of the Lord's-Day will come again more particularly to be conſidered. But there is one Thing more that muſt not here be omitted: Which is, That when Men neglected the Publick Service of GOD, to follow vain Sports and Paſtimes on this Day, this was thought a Crime worthy to be corrected by the ſevereſt Cenſures of the Church. The Imperial Laws forbad all publick Games and Shews on this Day. Theodoſius the Great [y], ſpeaks of two Laws made by himſelf to this Purpoſe. And Theodoſius Junior made another [z], wherein he not only forbids the exhibiting of the Shews on the Lord's-Day, but on the other great Feſtivals, the Nativity, Epiphany, Eaſter and Pentecoſt. But no Penalties being annexed to theſe Laws, there was ſtill Occaſion for the Laws of the Church to reſtrain Men by Eccleſiaſtical Cenſures. And therefore the Canons made this Crime to be noted as an heinous Offence, and puniſhed the Tranſgreſſors with Excommunication. If any one on a ſolemn Day, ſays the Fourth Council of Carthage [a], leave the ſolemn Aſſembly of the Church, to go to the Shews, let him be excommunicated. And another Canon [b] excommunicates thoſe who leave the Church, whilſt the Biſhop is Preaching. The Fifth Council of Car-

Carthage, as it is related in the African Code [c], petitioned the Emperor Honorius to forbid all Theatrical Shews on the Lord's-Day and all the great Feſtivals. St. Chryſoſtom [d] calls them σαλαινὰ συνέδρια, the Conventions of Satan, and tells his Auditory, he would no longer uſe gentle Remedies, but Stypticks and Cauſticks, to put a Stop to the raging Diſtemper. They that continued in this Crime after this formal Admonition, ſhould be no longer endured, but feel the Weight of the Eccleſiaſtical Laws, and learn thereby not to contemn the Divine Oracles. By which it is evident, that though the Games and Paſtimes of the Circus and the Theatre where ſtill allowed under the Chriſtian Emperors, yet they were preciſely forbidden on the Lord's-Day: And to frequent them at that Time, was one of thoſe great Tranſgreſſions for which Men felt the heavieſt Cenſures of the Church.

CHAP. IX.

Of great Tranſgreſſions againſt the Fifth Commandment, Diſobedience to Parents, and Maſters; Treaſon and Rebellion againſt Princes; and Contempt of the Laws of the Church.

SECT. 1. Children not to deſert their Parents under Pretence of Religion. The Cenſure of ſuch as taught otherwiſe.

UNDER the Name of Parents is commonly underſtood not only the natural Parents, but alſo the Political or Civil, that is, Magiſtrates and Rulers; as alſo ſpiritual Parents, that is, the Governors of the Church; and OEconomical Parents, that is, Maſters of Families; whoſe Authority reſpectively over their Children, Subjects, People, and Servants being very great, it was thought proper to ſecure it not only by the Laws of the State, but alſo by the Laws and ſpiritual Cenſures of the Church.

CHILDREN by the old Roman Law were eſteemed ſo much the Property and Poſſeſſion of their Parents, that they had Power of Life and Death [a] over them; and alſo might ſell them to be Slaves without Redemption [b] in Caſes of extreme Neceſſity for their own Maintenance, as appears from ſeveral Laws in both the Codes; and the Complaints made by the Ancients [c] of this Hardſhip; and the Alluſion which our SAVIOUR makes in the Parable to the like Cuſtom among the Jews. Mat. 18. where the LORD commands his Debtor to be ſold, and his Wife and Children and all that he had, and Payment to be made. And though the Laws of Chriſtian Emperors a little reſtrained this exorbitant Power of Parents; taking from them the Power of Life and Death; and allowing Children [d] to be maintained out of the publick Revenue, to prevent being ſold; or to be redeemed again if ſold: Yet ſtill they left a conſiderable Power in the Hands of Parents to diſpoſe of their Children whilſt they were Minors or under Age, only excepting the Caſes of Slavery and Death. For till the Time of Juſtinian, Children were not allowed to betake themſelves to a Monaſtick Life without or againſt the Conſent of their Parents. Which is evident from the Rule of St. Baſil [e] which forbids Children to be received into Monaſteries, unleſs they were offered by their Parents, if their Parents were alive. And the Council of Gangra lays an heavy Penalty [f] upon them: If any Children under Pretence of Religion forſake their Parents, and give them not the Honour due unto them, let them be Anathema. This Doctrine was taught and propagated by the Euſtathian Hereticks, who alſo taught, that Women might leave their Husbands, and Parents deſert their Children, and take no farther Care of them, under the ſame Pretence of betaking themſelves to a Monaſtick Life. Againſt whom [g] the ſame Council made ſeveral other Canons, impoſing the like Penalty upon them.

SECT. 2. Children not to marry without Conſent of their Parents.

ANOTHER Branch of paternal Power was the Right which Parents had to diſpoſe of their Children in Marriage: Which Right was ſo carefully guarded by the Imperial Laws, that we ſcarce find any Crime ſo ſeverely revenged, as the Violation of it, when Children who were under their Parents Power, married without or againſt the Conſent of their Parents, or ſuch Guardians and Tutors as were in the Room of them. Witneſs that famous

Law of Conſtantine in the Theodoſian Code [b], which runs in theſe Terms: If any one, without firſt obtaining the Conſent of Parents, ſteal a Virgin againſt her Will, or carry her off by her own Conſent, hoping that her Conſent will protect him; he ſhall have no Benefit from ſuch Conſent, as the ancient Laws have determined; but the Virgin herſelf ſhall be held guilty, as Partaker in the Crime. If any Nurſe be Inſtrumental or Acceſſory to the Fact by her Perſuaſions, which often defeat the Parents Care, her deteſtable Service ſhall be revenged by pouring molten Lead into her Mouth, that miniſtred to ſuch wicked Counſels. If the Virgin be detected to have given her Conſent, ſhe ſhall be puniſhed with the ſame Severity as the Raptor himſelf: Seeing ſhe that is ſtolen away againſt her Will, is not ſuffered to go unpuniſhed; becauſe ſhe might have kept herſelf at home; or if ſhe was taken by Violence out of her Father's Houſe, ſhe ſhould have cried out for Help to the Neighbourhood, and uſed all Means poſſible to defend herſelf. But on ſuch we impoſe only a lighter Puniſhment, denying them the Right of ſucceeding to their Father's Inheritance. But the Raptor himſelf, being clearly convicted, ſhall have no Benefit of Appeal. If Parents, who are chiefly concerned to proſecute this Crime, connive at it, they ſhall be baniſhed. All who are Partners or Aſſiſtants to the Raptor, ſhall be liable to the ſame Puniſhment without Diſtinction of Sex. And if any ſuch be Slaves, they ſhall be burnt alive. This Law of Conſtantine's is confirmed by another Law of his Son Conſtans: Only with this Difference [i], That whereas Conſtantine's Law ordered the Criminals to be burnt alive, or thrown to the wild Beaſts, as Gothofred interprets it; this of Conſtans ſo far moderated the Puniſhment, as to let it be only a common Death, that it might more duly be put in Execution. Yet if any Slaves were concerned in aiding the Raptors in ſuch Attempts, they were ſtill to be burnt alive, according to the Tenor of the former Law. By another Law of Valentinian [k] and Gratian, Widows are not allowed to marry a Second Time without the Conſent of their Parents, if they were under the Age of Twenty-five Years, although they were ſui juris, and enjoyed the Liberty of Emancipation. And there are many other Laws in both the Codes [l], to the ſame Purpoſe. The Eccleſiaſtical Laws in this concur with the Civil Law. St. Auſtin [m] ſays expreſsly, That Mothers as well as Fathers have this Right in their Children, to diſpoſe of them in Marriage, unleſs they be of that Age, which gives them Liberty to chuſe for themſelves. Tertullian ſays the ſame [n], That Children cannot lawfully marry without the Conſent of their earthly Parents. St. Baſil [o] in one of his Canons gives Directions, that they who ſtole Virgins ſhould be treated as Fornicators, that is, do Four Years Penance; and when the Virgins were reſtored to their Guardians, it was at their Diſcretion whether they would give them in Marriage to the Raptors or not. In another Canon [p] he ſays, If Slaves marry without the Conſent of their Maſters, or Children without the Conſent of their Parents; 'tis not Matrimony, but Fornication, till they ratify it by their Conſent. Again [q], If Virgins, who are under the Power of their Parents; marry without their Conſent, they are to be treated as Harlots. If their Parents are afterward reconciled to them, and give their Conſent, yet they ſhall do three Years Penance for their firſt Tranſgreſſion. And again [r], If a Slave marry without the Conſent of her Maſter, ſhe differs nothing from an Harlot. For Contracts made without the Conſent of thoſe under whoſe Power they are, have no Validity, but are Null. And therefore though the Maſter afterward give his Conſent, and make the Marriage good, yet the firſt Fault ſhall be puniſhed as Fornication.

SECT. 3. Nor Slaves without the Conſent of their Maſters.

IT appears from two of theſe laſt mentioned Canons, that Slaves were as much under the Power of their Maſters, as Children were under their Parents: And therefore it was equally a Crime for a Slave to marry without the Conſent of the Maſter, as for a Child to do it without Conſent of Parents. And for the ſame Reaſon a Slave was not allowed either to enter himſelf into a Monaſtery, or take Orders, without the Conſent of his Maſter, as has been ſhewed [*] in other Places, becauſe this was to deprive his Maſter of his legal Right of Service, which by the Original State and Condition of Slaves was his Due: And the Church would not be acceſſory

SECT. 4. The Puniſhment of Treaſon and Diſreſpect to Princes.

ANOTHER Sort of Parents, whoſe Honour was intended to be ſecured by this Command, were the Political Parents, Patres Patriæ, Kings and Emperors, whoſe Authority and Majeſty was reputed ſacred and ſupreme next under GOD. And therefore all Diſloyalty and Diſreſpect ſhewed to them, either in Word or Action, was always ſeverely chaſtized by the Laws of the Church. I need not here ſuggeſt what Civil Penalties were inflicted by the Laws of the State upon Tranſgreſſors in this Kind, becauſe the ancient Civil Codes are full of them under ſeveral Titles, which the Learned Reader may conſult at his own Leiſure, ſuch as ſpeaking evil [s] of Dignities; Counterfeiting their [t] Letters; Corrupting or Counterfeiting their Coin [u]; Conſulting Augurs or Aſtrologers about the Term [x] of their Life, or uſing any Curious Arts to know who ſhould be their Succeſſor, Raiſing of Tumults [y] to the Diſturbance of the Publick Diſcipline; Conſpiring againſt their Lives [z] or Government; Bearing Arms [a] without their Authority; and the like Crimes, which come under the general Names of Sedition, Treaſon, Conſpiracy and Rebellion, which were always excepted in thoſe general Indulgences [b] that the Emperors were wont to grant at Eaſter to other Criminals. I need not ſay farther, That the Contempt of the Imperial Laws was uſually reputed a Sort of Sacrilege [c] by the Laws themſelves, and puniſhed under that Title. That which I am chiefly concerned to remark here, is the Eccleſiaſtical Puniſhment of Diſloyalty and Treaſon, and all ſcandalous Contempt of Civil Government; againſt which Sort of Crimes, whether in Word or Deed, the Ancients ſhewed great Reſentment. For the firſt Three Hundred Years they gloried greatly over the Heathens in this, That though the Emperors were Heathens, and ſome of them furious Perſecutors of the Chriſtians, yet there were never any ſeditious or diſloyal Perſons to be found among the perſecuted Chriſtians. You defame us, ſays Tertullian [d], with Treaſon againſt the Emperor, and yet never could any Albinians, Nigrians, or Caſſians (Perſons that had taken Arms againſt the Emperors) be found among the Chriſtians. Such as thoſe, are they that ſwear by the Emperor's Genii, that have offered Sacrifice for their Safety, that have often condemned Chriſtians; theſe are the Men that are found Enemies to the Emperors. A Chriſtian is no Man's Enemy, much leſs the Emperor's; knowing him to be the Ordinance of GOD, he cannot but love, revere and honour him, and deſire that he and the whole Roman Empire may be in Safety to the End of the World. We worſhip the Emperor as much as is either lawful or expedient, as one that is next to GOD; we ſacrifice for his Safety, but it is only to his and our GOD; and in ſuch Manner as He has commanded, only by holy Prayer. For the Great GOD needs no Blood or ſweet Perfumes: Theſe are the Banquets and Repaſt of Devils, whom we not only reject but expel at every Turn. For this Reaſon, during this Interval, there was no need of Eccleſiaſtical Puniſhments to correct Traitors againſt the Civil Government, becauſe there were no ſuch among Chriſtians. But when the whole World was become Chriſtian, there was Occaſion for ſuch Laws to be made againſt Sedition and Treaſon. And then we find ſeveral Canons to prevent or correct it. The Fourth Council of Carthage [e] forbids the Ordination of any ſeditious Perſons, as thoſe that would be a Scandal to the Profeſſion. And this is repeated in the ſame Words by the Council [f] of Agde. The Fourth Council of Toledo [g] orders all Clergymen that took Arms in any Sedition, to be degraded from their Order, and to be confined to a Monaſtery, to do Penance there all their Lives. The Fifth Council of Toledo [h] mentions an Oath of Allegiance, which in a former general Council of all Spain was appointed to be taken by all the Subjects to the King and his Heirs: And a moſt ſevere Anathema is pronounced againſt all that ſhould violate any Part of it. Particularly they excommunicate and anathematize all that ſhould pretend to uſurp the Throne [i] without the Consent of the Nobility of the whole Gothick Nation; all that should make any Curious [k] and Unlawful Enquiries about the fatal Period of the Life of the Prince; all that should speak evil of him: For it is written, Thou shalt not speak evil of the Ruler of thy People. If Railers shall not inherit [l] the Kingdom of GOD, how much rather ought such Contemners of the Divine Law, to be cast out of the Church? Finally, They made an Order [m], That in every Council held in Spain, this Decree concerning Allegiance due to Princes should be read, when all other Things were done, to the End that no one might be unmindful of his Duty and Obligations to the Sovereign Power. And accordingly, we find the same Decree repeated and confirmed in several other [n] Councils of that Nation.

THE last Sort of Parents to whom Honour and Obedience is due, are the spiritual Parents, or Governors of the Church; the Contempt of whose Laws and Rules made for the good Government, Order, and Edification of the Church, was always thought a Matter worthy of Ecclesiastical Censure. There are innumerable Instances of this in the Acts and Canons of the ancient Councils: I shall content myself with relating two or three which concern Matters purely of Ecclesiastical Observation. The Council of Antioch [o] excommunicates all those who pertinaciously oppose the Rule made about Easter in the Council of Nice. The first Council of Carthage [p] more generally censures all Opposers of Ecclesiastical Orders: If any one viciously transgress or contemn the Decrees of the Church; if he be a Layman, let him be excommunicated; if a Clergyman, let him be deprived of the Honour of his Order. The Council of Epone in like Manner [q] concludes her Decrees with this Sanction: If any one disorderly transgress the Rules and Observations, which the holy Bishops have made in this present Council, and confirmed with their Subscriptions, let him know that he shall be liable to the Judgment both of GOD and the Church. The Fourth Council of Toledo [r] orders such as reject the Use of the Hymns and Prayers appointed by the Church, to be punished with Excommunication. And King Reccaredus in the third Council of Toledo [s], besides Excommunication, orders a Civil Penalty of Confiscation and Banishment to be inflicted on such as proudly contemned the Rules then made in Council, and refused to yield Obedience to them. And Laws of the same Import occur every where both in the Civil and Ecclesiastical Codes, so that I need not trouble the Learned Reader with any more of them, having suggested these few as a Specimen of that Obedience which was required to be paid to the Laws and Authority of the Church under the Penalty of Excommunication.

SECT. 1. Murder ever reckoned a Capital and unpardonable Crime by the Laws of the State.

WE are now come to the great Sin of Murder, which the Civil Laws always reckon among those called, Atrocia Delicta, and Atrocissima Crimina, those Heinous and Capital Crimes, for which they neither allowed Pardon nor Appeal after clear Conviction. This Crime was always excepted in those Indulgences [a] or general Pardons which the Emperors granted to Criminals upon the Account of their Childrens Birth-Days, or the annual Returns of the Easter-Festival, or any the like Occasion. And whereas many other Criminals were allowed the Benefit of appealing, this was wholly denied [b] to Murderers; nor might any such Criminals anciently pretend to shelter themselves by taking Sanctuary in the Church; which is expressly provided by a Law of Justinian [c], determining who may or may not take Refuge in the Church; where among those to whom whom this Privilege is denied, Murderers, Adulterers, and Raviſhers of Virgins are particularly recounted.

SECT. 2. How puniſhed by the Laws of the Church.

BY the moſt ancient Laws of ſome Churches, Murderers ſeem to have been ſubjected to a perpetual Penance all their Lives, and by ſome denied Communion even at the Hour of Death. Tertullian [d] ſays plainly that neither Idolaters nor Murderers were admitted to the Peace of the Church. And that he means not here, by the Church, his own Sect of the Montaniſts, but the Catholick Churches, is concluded by Learned [e] Men from hence, That he is arguing with the Catholicks, that they ought to deny Adulterers the Peace of the Church, by the ſame Reaſon and Rule that they denied it to Idolaters and Murderers. Which implies at leaſt that ſome Catholick Churches in Africk refuſed to admit Murderers to Communion. Which is the more probable from what Cyprian ſays of ſome of his Predeceſſors, That they were uſed to deny Fornicators and Adulterers [f] the Peace of the Church, though they did not upon this break Communion with others that admitted them. Now Murder being as great a Crime as Adultery, it is likely they rejected Murderers as well as Adulterers utterly from their Communion. In the following Ages the Term of their Penance was a little moderated. For the Council of Ancyra [g] obliges them only to do Penance all their Lives, and allows them to be received at the Hour of Death. Other Canons reduce their Penance to a certain Term of Years. St. Baſil [h] appoints the wilful Murderer Twenty Years Penance; Four Years as a Mourner; Five Years as an Hearer; Seven Years as a Proſtrator; Four Years as a Co-ſtander only, to hear the Prayers, without receiving the Communion.

SECT. 3. The Heinouſneſs of Murder when joined with other Crimes, ſuch as Idolatry, Adultery, and magical Practices.

YET in ſome Caſes the Diſcipline continued ſtill to be more ſevere againſt Murder, when it happened to be complicated with other great Crimes, ſuch as Idolatry, Adultery, and the Practice of magical and diabolical Arts againſt the Lives of Men: Becauſe theſe were great Aggravations to inflame the Account of Murder. Thus in the Council of Eliberis [i], If any Chriſtian took upon him the Office of an Heathen Flamen, and therein ſacrificed and committed Adultery andMurder; (which might be done either directly, by a perſonal Commiſſion of thoſe Crimes; or indirectly by exhibiting the Games and Shews, wherein Adultery and Murder were committed by their Authority and Concurrence;) in ſuch a Caſe he was to be denied Communion even at the Hour of Death, becauſe he had doubled and trebled his Crime, as the Canon words it. So again, If any one uſed Pharmacy or Magical Art [k] to kill another, he was not to be received into Communion even at the Hour of Death, becauſe here was a Conjunction of Idolatry with Murder. In like manner another Canon [l] of the ſame Council orders, That if a Woman conceive by Adultery in the Abſence of her Husband, and after that murder her Child, ſhe ſhall be rejected to the very laſt, becauſe ſhe has doubled her Crime. But the Council of Ancyra is a little more favourable in the Caſe of ſimple Fornication joyned with Murder. For it is there obſerved [m], That if a Woman committed Fornication, and murdered her Infant, or cauſed Abortion, ſhe ſhould only do Ten Years Penance, tho' by former Canons ſhe was obliged to do Penance all her Life. The Council of Lerida [n] appoints Seven Years Penance for common Murder; but if it be done by Sorcery, then it was Penance for the whole Life.

SECT. 4. Cauſing of Abortion condemned and puniſhed as Murder.

AND here we may obſerve, That cauſing of Abortion was eſteemed one Species of Murder, and accordingly puniſhed as ſuch, when wilfully procured. So it is determined not only in the forementioned Canon of Ancyra, but in the Canons of St. Baſil [o]. Let her that procures Abortion, undergo Ten Years Penance, whether the Embryo be perfectly formed or not. So again, They are Murderers who take Medicines to procure Abortion. And ſo the Council of Trullo [p]: They who give Medicines to cauſe Abortion, and they who take pernicious Phyſick to deſtroy the Embryo in the Womb, are to undergo the Penance of Murderers. The Council of Lerida puts thoſe who deſtroy the Conception in the Womb, by certain Potions [q], into the ſame Claſs with thoſe that kill Infants after they are born; and appoints a Courſe Courſe of Seven Years Penance, for both Sorts, as joyning Murder to Adultery. The private Writers among the Ancients with one Conſent declare this to be Murder. In the Prohibition of Murder, ſays Tertullian [r] We are forbidden to deſtroy the Conception in the Womb, whilſt the Blood is in its firſt Formation of an human Body. To hinder that which might be born, is but an Anticipation or Haſtening of Murder: And it is all one, whether a Man deſtroy that Life which is already born, or diſturb that which is preparing to be born. He is a Man, who is in a Diſpoſition to be a Man, and all Fruit is now in its Seed or Principle of Exiſtence. This he ſays in Anſwer to the Heathen Objection, who charged the Chriſtians with feaſting upon the Blood of an Infant in their ſacred Myſteries. Minucius [s] inverts the Charge upon the Heathen, telling 'em, it was their own Practice by medicated Potions to deſtroy Man, that would be, in his firſt Original, and for Mothers to commit Parricide before they brought forth. But as for Chriſtians, ſays Athenagoras, writing in their Behalf [t], How ſhould they be guilty of murdering Men, who declare, That Mothers who uſe Medicines to cauſe Abortion, are Murderers, and muſt give Account of their Wickedneſs unto GOD. St. Jerom [u] calls this Crime in Women, drinking of Barrenneſs, and murdering of Infants before they were born. And it was a Crime which the old Roman Law [x] puniſhed with Baniſhment, and ſometimes with Death [y]: As Tryphonius the Lawyer obſerves out of Tully; though Tertullian complains, that theſe Laws were very much neglected and contemned. However we ſee in the Chriſtian Church this Sort of Murder was reckoned a very heinous Crime by all Writers, and puniſhed with great Severity by the Canons againſt wilful Murder in the Church.

Sect. 5. The Puniſhment of Parricide.

INDEED, this Sort of Murder was one Species of Parricide, which included not only the Murder of Parents but of Children, and other Relations, to whom Men were bound by natural Affection. And this had a noted and peculiar Puniſhment among the old Romans, which was to tye up the Parricide in a Sack with a Serpent, an Ape, a Cock and a Dog, and throw them all alive into the Sea; of which Gothofred will furniſh the Curious Reader with great Variety of Inſtances out of the old Roman Laws and Writers. The Lex Pompeia changed this Puniſhment into that of the Sword, or Burning, or throwing to wild Beaſts. But Conſtantine introduced the ancient Puniſhment; and from his Law [z], which I ſhall tranſcribe, we may take the Account and Deſcription of it. "If any one haſten the Fate "of his Parent, or Son, or any the like Re- "lation, which goes under the Name of Par- "ricide, whether he attempt it privately or pub- "lickly, he ſhall not be puniſhed with the "Sword, or with Fire, or with any other com- "mon Death, but be ſowed up in a Sack with "Serpents and other Beaſts, and be caſt into "the Sea, or a River, as the Nature of the "Place will admit: That he may be deprived "of the Uſe of all the Elements as long as he "remains in Being; that he may have nei- "ther Air to breath in whilſt he lives, nor "Earth to receive him when he is dead." This was the Puniſhment of ſuch as ſlew Father or Mother, or Son or Daughter, or any ſuch Relation in the direct Line: But if it was any other Relation, then only the common Death of Murderers was inflicted on them, as we learn from Juſtinian's Inſtitutes [a] and his Code, where this Matter is determined. Now the Church having no Power of the Sword, could make no ſuch Diſtinction; but puniſhed both Sorts in the ſame Way, with the Spiritual Cenſure of Excommunication.

Sect. 6. Of Self-Murder.

AND ſo ſhe treated all thoſe who laid violent Hands upon themſelves, who were known by the common Name of Biathanati, or Self-Murderers. Becauſe this was a Crime that could have no Penance impoſed upon it, ſhe ſhewed her juſt Reſentment of the Fact, by denying the Criminals the Honour and Solemnity of a Chriſtian Burial, and letting them lie excommunicate and deprived of all Memorial in her Prayers after Death. If any one, ſays the firſt Council of Braga [b], bring bring himſelf to a violent End, either by Sword, or Poiſon or a Precipice, or an Halter, or any other Way, no Commemoration ſhall be made of him in the Oblation, nor ſhall his Body be carried to the Grave with the uſual Pſalmody. And they who ſuffer Death for their Crimes, ſhall be treated after the ſame manner. The Reaſon of treating both theſe Sorts of Men in this manner, was becauſe they were acceſſory to their own Deaths; either directly, by offering Violence to their own Lives; or indirectly, by committing ſuch Capital Crimes as brought them in the Courſe of Juſtice to an untimely End. Both the Greeks and Latins ſtyle them Biothanati, or Biathanati, from offering Violence to themſelves, or coming to a violent Death. And Caſſian particularly notes the Diſcipline of the Church [c], then uſed toward ſuch after Death, ſpeaking of the Caſe of one Hero, an Egyptian Monk, whom Satan under the Diſguiſe of a good Angel had tempted to throw himſelf into a deep Well, upon Preſumption that no Harm could befall him for the great Merit of his Labours and Vertues: For which Fact, he ſays, Paſuntius the Abbot could hardly be prevailed upon not to reckon him among the Biothanati, or Self-Murderers, and deny him the Privilege of being mentioned in the Oblation for thoſe that were at Reſt in the LORD. Which is ſufficient to ſhew us the manner of treating ſuch in the ancient Diſcipline of the Church.

SECT. 7. Of Diſmembring the Body.

IT was alſo reckoned a Species or lower Degree of this Crime, for any one to diſfigure his own Body, by cutting off any Member or Part thereof, without juſt Reaſon to engage him ſo to do. The Canons forbad any ſuch to be ordained, as Men who were in Effect Self-Murderers [d] and Enemies of the Workmanſhip of GOD, as has been ſhewed at large [*] in another Place. What is farther to be noted here, is, That this Diſcipline extended to Laymen as well as Clergymen. For one of the Apoſtolical Canons [e] orders, That a Layman who diſmembers himſelf, ſhall be debarred from the Communion three Years, becauſe he inſiduouſly makes an Attempt upon his own Life. But if Men were either born with a natural Defect, or the Barbarity of the Perſecutors, or the Neceſſity of a Diſeaſe deprived them of any Member, in order to effect the Cure of the Body, and ſave the whole; in all theſe Caſes there was no Crime, becauſe the Thing was involuntary; in which Caſes the Law itſelf made an Exception, and freed Men from incurring the Cenſures [f] of the Church, as may be ſeen in the Nicene Canons, which particularly mention theſe as excepted Caſes. I only obſerve one Thing farther out of the Laws of Conſtantine, That he had ſo great a Regard to the Face, as the Image of the Divine MAJESTY in all human Bodies whatſoever, that he would not ſuffer any Mark of Infamy to be ſet upon it, to ſtigmatize the greateſt Criminals. For whereas by the old Roman Laws notorious Criminals might be branded in the Forehead, to make their Offence more infamous and publick: Conſtantine by one of his firſt Laws cancelled and revoked this Cuſtom [g], ordering, That whatever Criminal was condemned either to fight with wild Beaſts, or to dig in the Mines, he ſhould not be ſtigmatized in the Face, but only in the Hands or Legs; that the Face, which was formed after the Image of the Divine MAJESTY and Beauty, might not be diſfigured. Which certainly was intended piouſly by Conſtantine, as a juſt Caution to reſtrain Men from offering Violence to their own Bodies, which was created after the Image and Similitude of GOD in ſome Meaſure, though that Likeneſs was more viſibly ſeen in the Original Perfections of the Soul.

SECT. 8. Of involuntary Murder by Chance, or Man-Slaughter.

ALL theſe Caſes reſpect ſuch Actions as have ſome Tendency toward voluntary Murder. Beſides which the Church allotted ſometimes a proportionable Puniſhment to accidental and involuntary Murder, though the Civil Law took little or no Notice of it. For by the old Roman and Chriſtian Laws, a Maſter was allowed to puniſh and correct his Slave with great Severity: And if in that Correction the Slave chanced to die, no Action of Murder could be brought [h] againſt the Maſter, unleſs it appeared that he uſed ſome Weapon or Fraud in his Puniſhment, that tended directly to kill him. But notwithſtanding this, the Eccleſiaſtical Law, having a more tender Regard even to the Life of Slaves, took Cognizance of ſuch Cruelties, and obliged the Actors to a certain Term of Penance, though the Murder was only caſual, and not directly intended. To this Purpoſe it is decreed in the Council of Eliberis nenum, aut per præcipitium, aut ſuſpendium, aut quolibet modo violentam ſibi ipſis inferunt mortem, nulla pro illis in Oblatione Commemoratio fiat, neque cum Pſalmis ad Sepulturam eorum corpora deducantur. —— Similiter & de his placuit fieri, qui pro ſus Sceleribus puniuntur.

Eliberis [i], That if any Miſtreſs in the Heat of her Anger ſo ſcourge her Slave, that the Slave die within three Days; whereas it might be uncertain whether it was a Voluntary, or a Chance-Murder; if it was a Voluntary Murder, ſhe was to do Penance Seven Years; if caſual, only Five Years: And all the Favour that was allowed in this Caſe, was, That if Sickneſs ſeized her, ſhe might be admitted to Communion ſooner. We find a like Decree in the Diſcipline of the French Church, made by the Council of Epone, An. 517, That if any one put his Slave to Death [k] without a legal Tryal before the Judge, he ſhould expiate his Murder by Excommunication for Two Years. And it is remarked of Cæſarius Arelatenſis by the Author [l] of his Life, That he was uſed to proteſt to the Prefects of the Church, who had then Power to inflict corporal Puniſhment, That if he ſcourged any one to an immoderate Degree, ſo as that he died under his Stripes, they ſhould be held guilty of Murder. Nay, ſo tender was the Church in this Point of ſhedding Man's Blood, that ſhe would not ordinarily allow any Soldier to be ordained to any ſacred Office of Presbyter or Deacon; nor ſuffer her Biſhops to ſit as Judges in Capital Cauſes, where they might be concerned to give Sentence in Caſes of Blood; as I have had Occaſion to ſhew more at large in their proper Places [*], to which I refer the Reader. Among the Apoſtolical Canons, there is one that orders, That if any Clergyman [m] in a Brawl or Scuffle ſmite another, ſo as to kill him, though it were by the firſt Blow, he ſhall be depoſed; if a Layman, he ſhall be caſt out of Communion. And St. Baſil's Canons [n] impoſe Eleven Years Penance upon all voluntary Murderers whatſoever.

SECT. 9. Falſe-Witneſs againſt any Man's Life reputed Murder.

NEITHER was it only actual Murder which they thus cenſured, but all Actions that had any direct or immediate Tendency towards it; Bearing Falſe-Witneſs againſt a Man's Life. For, as Lactantius [o] well expreſſes it, there is no Difference between killing a Man with the Sword or with the Tongue: It is Murder ſtill in either Species, and a Violation of GOD's Law againſt invading the Life of Man, which admits of no Exception. And therefore the Civil [p] Law appointed the Puniſhment of Retaliation to be inflicted on every falſe Accuſer, That if any one called another Man's Credit, or Fortune, or Life, or Blood, into Queſtion in Judgment, and could not make out the Crime alledged againſt him, he ſhould ſuffer the ſame Penalty that he intended to bring upon the other. And no one could formally implead another at Law, till he had bound himſelf to this Condition which the Law [q] terms Vinculum Inſcriptionis, the Bond of Inſcription. Now though the Eccleſiaſtical Law could not inflict the Puniſhment of Retaliation for falſe-Witneſs againſt any Man's Life; yet all falſe-Teſtimony being a Crime puniſhable with Excommunication; (as we ſhall ſee more fully under the Puniſhment of Sins againſt the Ninth Commandment; we may be ſure, ſuch falſe-Teſtimony as tended directly to deprive Men of their Lives, muſt be reputed by the Church among the higheſt Species both of Calumny and Murder; and conſequently bring them under all the Penalties that were due to thoſe Crimes in any Degree whatſoever. Vid. Conc. Eliber. Can. 74.

SECT. 10. Informers againſt the Brethren in Time of Perſecution treated as Murderers.

YEA, a bare Information, or Diſcovery of the Names of the Brethren to the Heathen Magiſtrates, for as much as That in Times of Difficulty and Perſecution might endanger their Lives, was juſtly reputed and cenſured as Murder likewiſe. The firſt Council of Arles [r] orders, that if any ſuch Informers were found among the Clergy, and convicted from the publick Acts, that they had betrayed either the Holy Scriptures, or the ſacred Utenſils, or the Names of their Brethren to the Heathen, they ſhould be degraded from their Orders. And the Council of Eliberis goes [s] a little farther, and determines, That if any Chriſtian informed againſt his Brethren, ſo

SECT. 11. Expoſing of Infants reputed Murder.

ANOTHER Sort of interpretative Murder, was, the expoſing of Infants, againſt which the Ancients commonly declaim with great Vehemency in the Practice of the Heathen. You accuſe us, ſays Tertullian, of murdering Infants; but let me turn to your People, and appeal to their Conſciences, and then how many may I find among thoſe that ſtand about us, and thirſt after Chriſtian Blood; nay, among thoſe juſt and ſevere Judges that condemn us, who kill their Children as ſoon as they are born, or elſe expoſe [t] them to Cold, and Famine, and Dogs? You expoſe your Children to the Mercy of Strangers, and the next Comers that will take Pity on them, and adopt them more kindly for their own Children. The ſame Charge is brought againſt them by Minucius Felix [u], That they expoſed their Children, as ſoon as they were born, to Wild Beaſts and Birds of Prey. Athenagoras ſays [x] expreſsly, All ſuch are Parricides or Murderers of their Children. And Lactantius [y] a little more largely inveighs againſt them upon the ſame Foundation. They pretended, he ſays, by a Sort of falſe Piety, to expoſe them only to keep them from ſtarving, becauſe they were Poor and not able to maintain them. But they cannot be deemed innocent, who caſt their own Bowels as a Prey to Dogs, and as much as in them lies, kill them more cruelly than if they ſtrangled them. Who can queſtion the Impiety of him, who leaves no Room for others to ſhew Mercy? But admit that he attains his End, which he pretends, that his Child is thereby nouriſhed and brought up; yet doubtleſs he condemns his own Blood either to Slavery or the Stews; of which there were many Examples in both Sexes. Therefore he concludes, that for Men to expoſe their Children, was the ſame baſe and villainous Action as to kill them. And whereas Men were apt to complain of their Poverty, and pretend they were not able to bring up many Children: He not only anſwers this from Conſiderations of Providence, in whoſe Power the Fortunes and Poſſeſſions of all Men are, to make rich Men poor, and poor Men rich; but is alſo thought by his prudent Advice to have induced Conſtantine to enact thoſe two excellent and charitable Laws, ſtill extant in the Theodoſian [a] Code, whereby it is provided by his great Munificence in ſeveral Parts of the Empire, that poor Parents who had numerous Families, which they could not maintain, ſhould have Relief out of the publick Revenues of the Empire; that they might be under no Temptation either to expoſe, or kill, or ſell, or oppignorate and enſlave their Children; of which there had been ſo great Complaints under the former Reigns of Heatheniſm. Conſtantine [b] and Honorius added two other Laws to theſe, in Favour of ſuch as took Care of expoſed Children, that Parents ſhould have no Right to claim them again, nor accuſe thoſe of Theft or Plagiary, who ſhewed Mercy on thoſe whom they expoſed to Death, and by there Neglect ſuffered to periſh; provided only that the Collectors of ſuch Children made Evidence before the Biſhop, that they were really expoſed and deſerted. And in this Caſe the Eccleſiaſtical Laws concurred with the Secular, adding the Penalty of Excommunication, to be inflicted on all Parents, who thus proved themſelves guilty of murdering their Children. For ſo the Canons expreſsly word it. The Council of Vaiſon firſt preſcribes the Method of aſcertaining ſuch Children to the Right and Poſſeſſion of thoſe who became their Foſter-Fathers, according to the Tenor of the Imperial Laws; and then pronounces thoſe who expoſed them, guilty of Murder by their own Confeſſion. "A Clamour [c], ſays the Coun- "cil, is made on all Sides, and Complaint "brought before us concerning expoſed Chil- "dren, that they are now no longer expoſed "to the Mercy of Chriſtians, but to be devour- "ed by Dogs, becauſe every one refuſes to "take them up, for fear of Proſecution from "falſe Accuſers: We therefore Decree, that "according to the Laws of pious Emperors "and Princes, whoever takes up an expoſed "Child, ſhall make Teſtimony thereof unto "the Church, and the Miniſter on the Lord's-Day ſhall publiſh it at the Altar, that if any "one owns it within Ten Days, he may re- "ceive it again; giving a Recompence to the "Finder for his charitable Care for that Term, "or letting him keep it for ever as his own "Poſſeſſion." But the next Canon [d] adds, "That if any one, after this legal Form of "Proceeding has been obſerved in the Caſe, "pretend to claim the expoſed Infant, or ac- "cuſe the Finder as a Plagiary or Man-ſtealer, "he himſelf ſhall be puniſhed as a Murderer "by the Cenſures of the Church." All which manifeſtly manifeſtly proves, That in the Account of Conſcience and the ancient Diſcipline, the Parent who deſerts his Infant, and leaves it defenceleſs to the Injuries of Fortune, or Want, or the Weather, or wild Beaſts, is a real Murderer, as doing that in Conſequence of which Murder neceſſarily enſues, unleſs ſome favourable Providence interpoſes to prevent it.

SECT. 12. If a Virgin deflowred, kills herſelf for Grief, the Corrupter is reputed guilty of the Murder.

FOR the ſame Reaſon ſome Canons appointed all Acceſſories to Murder to do the ſame Penance as the Murderers themſelves. The Council of Ancyra puts a ſpecial Caſe of this Nature. A Man that is eſpouſed to a Woman, deflours her Siſter, and and afterward marries the other: She that is ſo defiled, hangs herſelf for Grief: The Man, as Acceſſory to the Murder [e], is ordered to do Ten Years Penance for his Crime, before he is allowed to appear among the Coſtanders at the Communion.

SECT. 13. The Laniſtæ or Fencing-Maſters reputed Acceſſories to Murder, and their Calling condemned.

THE Caſe of the Laniſtæ, or Maſters of Fencing, was much of the ſame Nature. Their Art in preparing Gladiators for the Theatre, was always reputed a ſcandalous Trade; being in Effect no better than teaching Men to Murder and Butcher one another. And therefore the Church would never allow it as a lawful Profeſſion. Tertullian [f] ſays expreſsly, That the Prohibition of Murder ſhewed that there was no Place for Fencers in the Church: For they were impleaded guilty of ſhedding that Blood, which they taught others to ſhed. The Author of the Conſtitutions, puts Gladiators in the Number of thoſe who were to be rejected from [g] Baptiſm. And Conſtantine prohibited the Art itſelf as Unchriſtian [h], ordering ſuch Criminals as were uſed to be condemed to fight for their Lives upon the Stage, rather to be ſent to the Mines, that they might ſuffer Puniſhment without Blood. For though in the Beginning of his Reign he allowed it to be uſed as a Puniſhment for ſome Crimes: (As in the Caſe of Plagiary or Man-ſtealing, which they that were guilty of, were condemned [i] to fight for their Lives with wild Beaſts or one another:) Yet afterwards he ſeems to have revoked this alſo. And Valentinian abſolutely forbad any Chriſtian or any Palatine Soldier to be condemned [k] to this Puniſhment. Nay ſome of the wiſer Heathens always abhorred and declared againſt it. And therefore there was more Reaſon to prohibit the whole Art and Practice of Gladiators under the Chriſtian Inſtitution, which Honorius the Emperor [l] quite aboliſhed and deſtroyed.

BUT the Chriſtian Laws and Rules of the Church went a little farther. They not only condemned the Murders of the Stage, but forbad any one to be a Spectator of them, under the Penalty of being reputed acceſſory to the Murder. Cyprian deſcribing the Impiety and Barbarity of theſe inhuman Games, elegantly ſtyles [m] all Spectators of them, Occulis Parricidas, Men guilty of Murder with their Eyes: Intimating, That no one could entertain himſelf with the pleaſing Sight of them without partaking in the Guilt, and defiling his Soul with the Contagion of the Murders committed in them. There is little Difference [n], ſays Athenagoras, between ſeeing ſuch Murders, and committing them; and therefore we wholly abſtain from the Sight of them, leſt any of their Wickedneſs and Defilement ſhould cleave to us. Lactantius in his elegant and fluent Way declaims more copiouſly and vehemently, againſt them. He that accounts it a Pleaſure ſays he [o], to ſee a Man killed before his Eyes, though it be a Criminal condemned for his Villanies, pollutes his Conſcience, as much as if he were both a Spectator and Partaker of any ſecret Murder. And yet they call theſe Things only Games and Diverſions, wherein human Blood is ſhed. So far are Men forſaken of Humanity, that they count it but Sport to deſtroy Mens Lives or Souls, being really more wicked and injurious than thoſe very Criminals, whoſe Blood they make their Diverſion. Upon this Account, in the Eye of the Church, to frequent theſe inhuman Games was the ſame Thing as to commit Murder, and no Man could aſſociate with ſuch Company, and follow ſuch Diverſions, but he was reputed to bid Adieu to all Humanity, Piety, and Juſtice, and to make himſelf Partaker in all the Guilt of thoſe publick Murders.

SECT. 15. Famiſhers of the Poor and Indigent reputed guilty of Murder.

THE Charge of Murder was alſo brought againſt thoſe, who denied the Poor their neceſſary Maintenance, and defrauded their indigent Parents of their proper Livelihoods, ſuffering them to periſh by Famine or Want, againſt the Laws of Piety and natural Affection. The Fourth Council of Carthage [p] upon this Account terms thoſe, who defrauded the Church of

of the Oblations of the Dead, Egentium necatores, Murderers of the Poor, and, as ſuch, orders them to be proſecuted to Excommunication. And Cyprian ſpeaking of the Villanies of Novatus, ſays, among other Inſtances of his being guilty of Parricide and Murder (ſuch as cauſing his Wife to miſcarry by a Kick on the Belly, when ſhe was great with Child) he ſuffered his own Father to ſtarve [q] and periſh by Famine, and left him unburied after Death. For which Crimes he had certainly been expelled not only from the Presbytery, but from all Communion with the Church, had not the difficult Times of approaching Perſecution prevented the Day of his Tryal, and given him Opportunity to eſcape the Condemnation that was due to him by the juſt Diſcipline and Cenſures of the Church. All theſe were reckoned guilty of Murder, indirectly at leaſt, as Acceſſories, and Partakers in the Sin, though their Hands were not actually and directly ingaged in ſhedding of Blood.

SECT. 16. And all thoſe by whoſe Authority Murder was committed.

BUT none were reputed more guilty of Murder than they by whoſe Authority it was committed. Though the inferior Inſtruments were not acquitted, yet the Crime was chiefly laid to the Charge of the principal Authors. As David was charged by Nathan with the Murder of Uriah, though he was ſlain through the Treachery of Joab by the Sword of the Children of Ammon: So Theodoſius, when by his Orders and Authority Seven thouſand Men were ſlaughtered at Theſſalonica, was charged by St. Ambroſe as the principal Author of the Murder, and according to the Rules of Diſcipline denied the Communion of the Church, till he had made a ſuitable and reaſonable Satisfaction. For though, as Cyprian complains [r] to his Friend Donatus, under the Heathen Emperors publick Murder was eſteemed a Virtue, which in private Men was puniſhed as a great Crime; yet it was not ſo under the Chriſtian Inſtitution, but there was a Power to bring even Emperors and Princes under Diſcipline for ſuch publick Offences, as appears from the Caſe of Theodoſius now mentioned. And the Caſe of the Munerarij, that is, ſuch Chriſtian Magiſtrates as exhibited the Munera, or inhuman Games, where Men murdered one another upon the Stage, is a farther Evidence of this Power and Practice. For the Canons of the Church [*] order all ſuch Magiſtrates to be excommunicated, as contributing by their Authority and Expences both to Idolatry and Murder. So that Murder, in whatever Species it appeared, or by whatever Perſons it was committed, was always reputed a Crime of the firſt Magnitude, expoſing Men to the utmoſt Severity of Eccleſiaſtical Cenſure.

SECT. 17. Enmity and Strife and Contention puniſhed as lower Degrees of Murder.

AND it muſt be added, That all open Enmity and Quarrelling, Strife, Envy, Anger and Contention, profeſſed Malice and Hatred, were puniſhed with Excommunication, as Tendencies toward this great Sin, and lower Degrees of Murder. St. John ſays, He that hateth his Brother, is a Murderer, and no Murderer hath Eternal Life abiding in him. Our SAVIOUR alſo declares, That he that is angry with his Brother without a Cauſe, ſhall be in Danger of the Judgment; and whoſoever ſhall ſay to his Brother, Raca, ſhall be in Danger of the Council: But whoſoever ſhall ſay, Thou Fool, ſhall be in Danger of Hell-fire. Now agreeably to theſe Inſtructions, the Church, to prevent or correct all Tendencies toward the great Sin of Murder, laid proper Reſtraints and Penalties upon the unruly Paſſions of Men, whenever they diſcovered themſelves in any viſible Acts of Malice or Hatred, and Strife and Contention. The Communion was the great Symbol of Love and Charity, and the Covenant of Peace and Unity, and the great Uniter of Mens Hearts and Affections. Therefore all who viſibly wanted theſe neceſſary Qualifications, were thought unworthy of that venerable Myſtery, and accordingly obliged by the Diſcipline of the Church (till they were ſo qualified) to abſtain from it. The Fourth Council of Carthage [s] made an Order, That the Oblations of ſuch as were at Enmity or open Variance with their Brethren, ſhould neither be received into the Treaſury of the Church, nor at the Altar: Which was as much as to ſay, They ſhould not communicate whilſt they were in that Condition. And the Second Council of Arles [t] removes thoſe from the Privilege of joyning with the Aſſemblies of the Church, who break forth into publick Hatreds and Animoſities one againſt another, untill they are reconciled, and return to Peace again. They that evil intreat their Servants or Slaves with Stripes, Famine, or hard Bondage, are ordered to be refuſed Communion by the Rules [u] of the Conſtitutions. And Chryſoſtom often warns [x] the Clergy, that they ſhould admit no cruel or unmerciful Man to the Communion. For if they gave the Euchariſt wittingly to any ſuch flagitious Man, his Blood would be required at their Hands. Though it be a General, though it be a Conſul, though it be him that wears the Crown, reſtrain him, if he comes unworthily: Thou haſt greater Power than he. But this was to be underſtood of great great and enormous Violations of Charity, expreſſing themſelves in open and profeſſed Acts of Cruelty; not of every lower Degree of Anger, eſpecially raſh and ſudden Anger, which, as I ſhewed before [*], was to be cured by other Methods, and not by the higheſt Remedies of Severity in the Exerciſe of Eccleſiaſtical Cenſure. Theſe were the Rules of Diſcipline, whereby the Church proceeded in cenſuring and puniſhing the great Sin of Murder, with all its Species and Appendages, ſo far as it was either poſſible or proper to take Notice of them; reſerving the reſt for the gentler Methods of Admonition and verbal Correction, which in ordinary Caſes and lighter Tranſgreſſions of this Kind was ſufficient for the Amendment of the Sinner.

CHAP. XI.

SECT. 1. The Puniſhment of Fornication.

ANOTHER Sort of great Crimes, which always made Men liable to the Severities of Eccleſiaſtical Diſcipline, were the Sins of Uncleanneſs, or Tranſgreſſions of the Seventh Commandment: Such as Fornication, Adultery, Raviſhment, Inceſt, Polygamy, and all Sorts of unnatural Defilement with Beaſts or Mankind, and all Things leading or paving the Way to ſuch Impurities, as Rioting and Intemperance, writing or reading laſcivious Books, acting or frequenting obſcene Stage-plays, allowing or maintaining Harlots, or whatever of the like Kind may be called making Proviſion for the Fleſh to fulfill the Luſts thereof. To begin with ſimple Fornication: The Heathen Laws were ſo far from laying any effectual Reſtraints, that they not only allowed it with Impunity, but many Times encouraged it in the very ſacred Rites and Myſteries of their Gods, as the ancient Apologiſts often object it againſt their Religion: Whereas the Chriſtian Religion laid great and ſevere Penalties upon all ſuch as under the Name of Chriſtians were found guilty of it. The Apoſtolical Canons [a], and thoſe of Neocæſarea [b] forbid ſuch ever to be received into Holy Orders, or to be ſuſpended, if unwittingly ordained. The Council of Eliberis [c] ſuſpends Virgins, who keep not their Virginity, a whole Year from the Communion; obliging them to marry thoſe that defiled them; otherwiſe they are to undergo Five Years ſolemn Repentance, becauſe if they are corrupted by others, they become guilty of Adultery, which as we ſhall preſently ſee, had a more ſevere Puniſhment than ſimple Fornication.

SECT. 2. Of Adultery.

FOR whereas St. Baſil's Canons appoint Seven Years Penance for Fornication only, they preſcribe Fifteen for Adultery [d], and ſometimes double [e] the Number. The Council of Ancyra [f] impoſes Seven Years for Adultery, but makes no expreſs mention of Fornication. The Council of Eliberis appoints Five Years Penance for a ſingle Act [g] of Adultery; and Ten Years [h], if repeated: But if any continued in it all their Lives, they were not to have the Communion at their laſt Hour. And in ſome of the African Churches before the Time of St. Cyprian, this was the common Puniſhment for all Adultery. For he ſays [i], ſome of his Predeceſſors refuſed the Peace of the Church to all Adulterers, and ſhut the Door of Repentance wholly againſt them, after which they might be reſtored to the Peace of the Church. Whence Biſhop Pearſon [k] rightly reproves Albaſpinæus for aſſerting, That Adulterers were never received into Communion before the Time of Cyprian. For Cyprian ſays expreſsly, They were received to Repentance in moſt Churches, though rejected by ſome. And it appears plainly from Tertullian, who lived before fore Cyprian, and wrote his Book De Pudicitia, as a Montaniſt, againſt the Catholicks, for receiving Adulterers to their Communion. Yet in the Caſe of the Clergy, the Law continued ſtill a little more ſevere. For by a Rule of the Council of Eliberis [l], If a Biſhop, Presbyter, or Deacon was convicted of Adultery, he was to be denied Communion to the very laſt, as well for the Greatneſs of the Crime, as for the Scandal he gave to the Church thereby. And by another Canon of the ſame Council [m], Every Clergyman who knew his Wife to be guilty of committing Adultery, and did not preſently put her away, was alſo to be denied Communion to the very laſt: That they who ought to be Examples of good Converſation, might not by their Practice ſeem to ſhew others the Way to ſin. And the Council of Neocæſarea [n] has a Decree of near Affinity to this, That if a Layman's Wife be convicted of Adultery, it ſhall render him uncapable of Orders: Or if after his Ordination ſhe commits Adultery, he muſt diſmiſs her; under Pain of Degradation from his miniſterial Office, if he retains her. The Civil Law both under the Heathen and Chriſtian Emperors made this Crime Capital, as Gothofred [o] ſhews by various Inſtances both out of the Code and Pandects. And Conſtans the Son of Conſtantine, in particular, appointed its Puniſhment to be the ſame as that of Parricide, which was Burning alive, or drowning in a Sack with a Serpent, an Ape, a Cock and a Dog tied up with the Criminals. When Adultery [p], ſays he, is proved by manifeſt Evidence, no dilatory Appeal ſhall be allowed: But the Judge is obliged to puniſh thoſe who are guilty of the ſacrilegious Violation of Marriage, as manifeſt Parricides, either by Drowning them in a Culleus, or Sack, or Burning them alive. And this was one of thoſe Crimes to which the Emperors at Eaſter would grant no Indulgence [q], nor allow any Appeal to be made from the Judge to themſelves in Favour of the Criminals, as appears not only from this Law of Conſtans, but ſeveral others [r]. It may not be amiſs alſo to obſerve out of one of the Laws [s] of Theodoſius, That for a Chriſtian, Man or Woman, to marry a Jew, was reputed the ſame Thing as committing Adultery, and made the offending Party liable to the ſame Puniſhment; becauſe it was at leaſt a ſpiritual Adultery, and a ſacrilegious Proſtitution of the Members of CHRIST to the Inſolence and Power of his greateſt Enemies. And indeed there is nothing that the Ancients more generally [t] condemn than this of Chriſtians joyning in Marriage with Jews, or Heathens, or Hereticks, or any Perſons of a different Religion; not becauſe it was ſtrictly and properly Adultery, but becauſe it was againſt the Rule of the Apoſtle, (which orders Women to marry only in the Lord) and therefore dangerous to the Faith, by running themſelves into Temptation of changing their Religion, either by Perverting and Corrupting the Faith, or wholly Deſerting and Apoſtatizing from it.

SECT. 3. Of Inceſt.

ANOTHER Sort of Uncleanneſs was committed by inceſtuous Marriages, that is, when Perſons of near Alliance, either by Conſanguinity or Affinity, made Marriages one with another, within the Degrees prohibited by GOD in Scripture. As, if a Man married his Father's Wife, or his Wife's Daughter, or his Brother's Wife, or his Wife's Siſter; which are Caſes in Affinity, which are particularly mentioned in the Council of Auxerre [u] as prohibited Caſes. St. Baſil [x] ſays, Inceſt with a Siſter, was to be puniſhed with the ſame Penance as Murder; and all inceſtuous Conjunction, as Adultery [y]. He that committed Inceſt with an Half-Siſter [z], was to do Eleven Years Penance; and he who committed Inceſt with his Son's Wife [a], was to do the ſame. He who ſucceſſively married two Siſters [b] was to do the Penance of an Adulterer, which was Fifteen Years. And about all Caſes of this Nature, the Ancients were perfectly agreed. Among the Perſians, it was allowed by Law for the Father to marry his own Daughter, or a Son his own Mother or Siſter, as is obſerved by Origen [c]; Minucius ſays [d] the ſame of the Egyptians and Athenians; Theodoſius, ſpeaking particularly of the Perſians in his own Time [e] ſays, It was then a Mark a Mark of Honour and Religion for their Princes to marry their own Mothers or Sisters, or Daughters. And Gothofred [f] gives many Instances among the Romans of Men marrying their Sisters Daughters, and their Brothers Daughters, the latter of which was never forbidden by any of their Laws, though the former had sometimes a Restraint laid upon it. But Constantius [g] made it a Capital Crime for any one to marry his Brother's or Sister's Daughter, which was abominable. He equally condemned the marrying of two [h] Sisters, or a Brother's Wife (though the Jewish Law allowed the latter in a certain Case) under the Penalty of having their Children Illegitimate, and accounted spurious. And Theodosius Junior [i] thought it proper to repeat the same Law, though Honorius himself had made a Stretch upon it, by marrying two Sisters, the Daughters of Stilicho, successively the one after the other. The Ecclesiastical Law dissolved all such Marriages, as incestuous, and obliged the Parties to do Penance for their Lewdness. The Council of Eliberis [k] requires Five Years Penance, unless some intervening Danger of Death require the Time to be shortned. The Council of Neocæsarea [l] orders the Woman that is married to two Brothers, to remain excommunicate to the Day of her Death, and then only to be reconciled by receiving the Sacrament in Extremity, upon Condition, That if she recovers, she shall dissolve the Marriage, and submit to a Course of solemn Repentance. St. Basil argues at large [m] for the Nullity and Dissolution of all such Marriages, in an Epistle to Diodorus Tarsensis, under whose Name there went a feigned Treatise in Defence of them. And among the Apostolical Canons [n] there is one that orders; That whoever marries two Sisters, or his Brother's Daughter, shall never be admitted among the Clergy.

SECT. 4. Whether the Marriage of Cosen-Germans was reckoned Incest.

BUT they are not so clear and unanimous in the Question about the Marriage of Cosen-Germans. Till the Time of St. Ambrose and Theodosius there was no Law against it, but Theodosius by an express Law absolutely forbad it. This Law is not extant now in either of the Codes, but there is Reference made to it by many ancient Writers. Honorius in one of his Laws makes [o] mention of it, confirming the Prohibition, though under a different Penalty. For whereas Theodosius made the Penalty to be Confiscation and Burning, he moderated the Punishment into Confiscation of the Parties Goods, and Illegitimation of their Children. And Arcadius by another Law [p] took off Confiscation also, but made all such still guilty of incestuous Marriage, and rendred them Intestate, and their Children Illegitimate, and uncapable of succeeding to any Inheritance, as being only a spurious Off-spring. Gothofred [q] has observed likewise, That there is mention made of this Law of Theodosius in the Writings of Libanius [r] who speaks of it as a new Law made by him, to forbid the Marriage of Ἀνέψιοι, that is, Cosen-Germans. The like is said by St. Ambrose [s], who takes Notice of the severe Punishment, which the Emperor laid upon all those that married in Contradiction to the Law. And it is thought that St. Ambrose was the Emperor's Adviser in the Case, being of Opinion himself that such Marriages were incestuous and prohibited in Scripture. St. Austin was of a different Judgment from St. Ambrose, yet he mentions the Emperor's Law, and advises Men to refrain from such Marriages [t]; because though neither the Divine Law, nor any human Law before that of Theodosius, had prohibited them, yet most Men were scrupulous about them, and such Marriages were very rarely made, because becauſe Men thought they bordered very near upon unlawful; whilſt the marrying a Coſen-German was almoſt deemed the ſame Thing as marrying a Siſter, and the Propinquity of Blood gave Men a Sort of natural Averſion to ſuch Engagements with their near Kindred. It appears from this, that there was no human Law before that of Theodoſius to prohibit this Sort of Marriages; and in St. Auſtin's Opinion there was nothing to hinder them in the Law of GOD. Athanaſius [u] was of the ſame Judgment; for he ſays expreſsly, That by the Rule of GOD's Commands the Conjunction of Coſen-Germans, or Brothers and Siſters-Children in Matrimony, was lawful Marriage. And afterwards Arcadius revoked all former Laws that he himſelf or others had made in Derogation of ſuch Marriages [x] declaring them Legal, and that no Action or Accuſation ſhould lie againſt them; but that if Coſen-Germans married together, whether they were the Children of two Brothers, or two Siſters, or a Siſter and a Brother, their Matrimony ſhould be lawful, and their Children legitimate. Juſtinian made this the ſtanding Law of the Empire, not only by inſerting it into his Code, but by declaring the ſame Thing [y] in his Inſtitutions. Where Contius [z] rightly obſerves, That though ſome Copies and ſome ancient Writers, as Theophilus and others, read it negatively, Conjungi non poſſunt: Yet the other is certainly the true Reading, both becauſe it is agreeable to the Law of Arcadius in the Code, and becauſe Gregory the Great ſo alledges it in his Anſwer to Auſtin the Monk [a] upon this Queſtion, ſaying, The Civil Law of the Roman Empire allows the Marriage of Coſen-Germans, but the ſacred Law forbids it. And this was now the known Difference between the Civil and Eccleſiaſtical Law. For though Zepper [b] alledges the Council of Epone and the ſecond of Tours, as allowing ſuch Marriages, yet he plainly miſtakes in both. For the Council of Epone [c] expreſsly ſtiles them Inceſt and Adultery, ranking them with Marriages contracted with a Siſter, or the Relict of a Brother, or a Father's Wife. And the Council of Tours [d] is as plain in the Matter, quoting the foreſaid Canon of Epone, and another of the Council of Arvern or Clermont againſt them. Gregory II. made a like Decree [e] in a Council at Rome, An. 721. and in the following Ages the Prohibition extended to the ſixth or ſeventh [f] Generation. The ſhort of the whole Matter is this: Before the Time of Theodoſius there was no Law, Eccleſiaſtical or Civil, to prohibit the Marriage of Coſen-Germans: Under the Reign of Theodoſius they were forbidden, but allowed again in the next Reign, and under Juſtinian, who fixed the Allowance in the Body of his Laws. But ſtill the Canons continued the Prohibition, and extended it to a greater Degree. But as this was not the Original Conſtitution, nor the Practice of the Church for ſome Ages, to bring ſuch Marriages under penitential Diſcipline, as inceſtuous or ſimply unlawful; ſo I have not here laid this Load upon them, but given the fair Account of Mens Sentiments on both Sides, and the different Practices both of Church and State in ſeveral Ages; acting the Part of an Hiſtorian, but not inducing the Reader to condemn what was once allowed by the General Vote of the Cathoclick Church, however differently repreſented in later Ages.

SECT. 5. Of Polygamy, and Concubinage.

THE next Queſtion may be about Polygamy, which denotes either having many Wives at once, or many ſucceſſively one after another. As to the former, Socrates [g] tells a very ſtrange Story of the Emperor Valentinian, that by the Advice of his Wife Severa he married a ſecond Wife, whilſt ſhe was living; and upon that made a Law to grant Liberty to all that would, to have two Wives at the ſame Time. The Author of the Book, called, Polygamia Triumphatrix, makes a great Stir with this pretended Law in Favour of Polygamy; which in all Probability is a mere fabulous Story, which Socrates too haſtily took up from the Relation of ſome craſty Impoſtor. For there is no Footſtep of any ſuch Law in either of the Codes, but much to the contrary. For even the Heathen Law [h] forbad it to the old Romans, as is evident from an Edict of Diocletian in the Juſtinian Code, where he ſays, No Roman was allowed to have two Wives at once, but was liable to be puniſhed before a competent

And though Julius Cæſar [l] attempted to have a Law paſs in Favour of it, he could not effect it. And Plutarch remarks [m], That Mark Antony was the firſt that had two Wives among the Romans. But that which is moſt Deciſive, is, That neither Zoſimus, nor Ammianus Marcellinus, the Heathen Hiſtorians, object any ſuch thing to Valentinian; which they would not have failed to have done, had he taken or granted any ſuch Liberty contrary to the Laws of the Romans before him; but on the other hand, Ammianus Marcellinus ſays expreſsly [n] of him, That he was remarkable for his Chaſtity both at Home and Abroad, and had no Contagion of Obſcenity upon his Conſcience; by which Means he was able to bridle the Petulancy of the Imperial Court, and keep it in good Order. And Zoſimus [o] rather intimates, that he did not marry his ſecond Wife Juſtina, till Severa his firſt was dead. Whence Baronius [p] and Valeſius [q] rightly conclude, That this Story in Socrates, muſt needs be a mere groundleſs Fiction, and that there never was any Law to authorize Polygamy in the Roman Empire. As to the Laws of the Church, St. Baſil [r] obſerves, That the Fathers ſaid little or nothing of Polygamy, as being a bruitiſh Vice, to which Mankind had no very great Propenſity. But he determines it to be a greater Sin than Fornication, and conſequently it ought to have a longer Courſe of Penance aſſigned it: For Fornication was to have Seven Years Puniſhment by St. Baſil's Rules, and yet the Term of Penance for Polygamy in this Canon, is only Four Years: Which makes Learned Men ſuſpect, that this Part of the Canon is corrupted by the Negligence of Tranſcribers, and that St. Baſil originally aſſigned a longer Term of Penance for this Sin, than appears from any Copies now extant, which only requires One Year's Penance in the Quality of Mourners, and Three Years in the Claſs of Co-ſtanders, without any mention of their being Hearers or Proſtrators, which are uſually ſpecified in moſt other Canons of this Author. In the firſt Council of Toledo [s] there is alſo a Rule, which accounts it the ſame Thing as Polygamy for a Man to have a Wife and a Concubine together; for ſuch an one may not communicate. But if he have no Wife, but only a Concubine inſtead of a Wife, he may not be repelled from the Communion, provided he be content to be joyned to one Woman only, whether Wife or Concubine, as he pleaſes. The Difficulty which ſeems to be in the latter Part of this Canon, I have been at ſome Pains to explain [*] in a former Book, where I ſhew that in the Senſe of the Eccleſiaſtical Law, a Concubine differs nothing from a Wife; though the Civil Law made a greater Diſtinction between them; calling her only a Concubine, who was married againſt any of the Rules which the Laws of the State preſcribed, and denying her the Privileges, Rights and Honours, which belonged to a legal Wife: For ſhe could claim no Right from her Husband's Eſtate, nor her Children ſucceed to his Inheritance: Yet ſhe was not reputed guilty of Fornication, nor the Husband accounted an Adulterer in the Eye of the Church, becauſe they kept themſelves faithfully and entirely to each other by an exact Performance of the mutual Contract made between them. Which was the Reaſon why the Church allowed ſuch a Man to communicate, who was united to a Concubine (in the foreſaid Senſe) inſtead of a Wife; but reckoned him guilty of Polygamy, who kept a Concubine and a Wife together.

SECT. 6. Of Marrying after unlawful Divorce.

ANOTHER Sort of Polygamy was, the marrying of a ſecond Wife after the unlawful Divorcement of a former. For this in Effect was reputed the ſame as having two Wives at once. There were ſome Caſes in which a Man might lawfully put away his Wife, without any Tranſgreſſion againſt the Rules of Church or State, or Violation of any Law human or divine. The Civil Law allowed it in many Caſes. Conſtantine ſpecifies [t] three Caſes in which a Man was at Liberty to put away his Wife, or a Woman her Husband. A Woman might not divorce herſelf from her Husband at Pleaſure for any ordinary Cauſe, as, becauſe he was a Drunkard,

Drunkard, or a Gameſter, or given to Women; but only for theſe three Crimes, if he was a Murderer, or a Poyſoner, or a Robber of Graves: If otherwiſe, ſhe was to forfeit all her Title to his Subſtance, and be ſent into Baniſhment. In like manner, the Husband was not to put away his Wife, but only for the three Crimes of Adultery, Poyſoning, and the Practice of Baudery. If otherwiſe, the Woman might claim her own Portion, and the Man was incapacitated to marry again. The following Emperors [u] allowed many other Cauſes of lawful Divorce, as, if an Husband was an Adulterer, or a Murderer, or a Poyſoner, or guilty of Treaſon againſt his Prince, or a Perjured Perſon, or a Plunderer of Graves, or Robber of Churches, or an Highway Man, or Harbourer of ſuch, a Stealler of Cattle, or a Man-ſtealer, or one frequenting the Company of lewd Women (which extremely exaſperates a Chaſte Wife,) if he attempted her Life by Poyſon, or the Sword, or any the like Means; if he beat her as a Slave, contrary to the Rules of uſing Free-born Women: In any of theſe Caſes ſhe had Liberty to uſe the neceſſary Help of a Divorce, making Proof of the Cauſe before a competent Judge. And the ſame Liberty was allowed the Man againſt his Wife upon theſe and the like Reaſons. But the Eccleſiaſtical Laws were much ſtricter, and admitted of Divorces only in Caſe of Adultery, and malicious Deſertion. In the Caſe of Adultery, Women as well as Men were allowed to divorce themſelves from the offending Party, as appears from the Caſe related by Juſtin Martyr [x], and out of him by Euſebius [y], and ſeveral Places of St. Auſtin [z]. And ſome Canons oblige the Clergy [a] to diſmiſs their Adulterous Wives, under Pain of Eccleſiaſtical Cenſure, whilſt St. Auſtin pleads with the Laity [b], rather to be reconciled to an adulterous Wife upon her Repentance, than diſmiſs her entirely, becauſe of many great Inconveniencies that might attend it. One of which was, That he thought the Scripture forbad both Man and Woman to marry again, even after a lawful Divorce, till one of the Parties was dead. But he does not ſo dogmatically aſſert this, as to make Marrying after ſuch a lawful Divorce, to be a Crime worthy of Excommunication. For in another Book, where he treats of the Qualifications of Baptiſm [c], he ſays, A Man who puts away his Wife for Adultery, and marries another, is not to be ranked with thoſe who put away their Wives without Cauſe, and marry again. For the Queſtion is ſo obſcurely reſolved in Scripture, Whether he that putting away his Wife for Adultery, marries again, be upon that Score an Adulterer, that a Man may be ſuppoſed to err venially in the Matter. Therefore thoſe Crimes of Uncleanneſs, which are manifeſtly ſo, ought to debar a Man from Baptiſm, unleſs he change his Mind, and correct his Crimes by Repentance: But for thoſe that are dubious, all that is to be done, is to endeavour to perſuade Men not to ingage in ſuch Marriages. For what need is there for Men to run their Heads into ſuch dangerous Ambiguities? But if they are already done, I am not ſure that they who do them, ought therefore to be denied Baptiſm. By this it appears, that though St. Auſtin in his own Opinion was perſuaded, that Marrying after a lawful Divorce, was forbidden in Scripture; yet it was not ſo clearly forbidden, as to render a Man uncapable of Baptiſm; nor conſequently of the Communion: Theſe being of the ſame Account in Chriſtianity, and a Man that is uncapable of the one, is uncapable of the other. The firſt Council of Arles ſeems to have acted upon the ſame Sentiments. The Fathers there [d] declare it unlawful for Men, who put away their Wives for Adultery, to marry others: But they do not order, that the great Cenſure of Excommunication ſhall be inflicted on them, but only that they ſhall be dealt with and adviſed not to marry a ſecond Wife, while the other, who was divorced for Adultery, was living. The Author under the Name of St. Ambroſe [e], makes a Difference between the Man and the Woman: He ſays, The Man was allowed to marry a ſecond Wife, after he put away away a firſt for Fornication; but the Apoſtle did not allow the ſame Privilege to the Woman. In which Opinion he ſeems to be ſingular. For Epiphanius, ſpeaking of the ſame Matter [f], ſays, That as the Scripture allows Men to marry a ſecond Wife after the Death of the firſt: So if a Separation is made upon the Account of Fornication, or Adultery, or any ſuch Cauſe, it does not condemn either the Man that marries a ſecond Wife, or the Woman that marries a ſecond Husband, nor deny them the Privilege of Church-Communion or Eternal Life, but bears with them for their Infirmity. And Origen [g], though he himſelf was againſt the Thing, plainly declares, that there were ſome Biſhops in his Time, who allowed Women as well as Men to marry after ſuch Divorces, whilſt the ſeparate Party was ſtill living: Which he reckons to be indeed againſt thoſe Rules of the Apoſtle, A Woman is bound as long as her Husband liveth: And ſhe ſhall be called an Adultereſs, if as long as her Husband liveth, ſhe be married to another Man: Yet he thinks they might have Reaſons for permitting it: Becauſe perhaps they had Regard to the Infirmity of ſuch as could not contain, and only permitted an Evil againſt the Original Rule to avoid a greater Sin. Yet ſome Councils [h] forbad ſuch Marriages under the Penalty of Excommunication to thoſe that were of the Number of the Faithful; only making ſome Allowance to thoſe that were [i] mere Catechumens. To this Purpoſe there are two Canons in the Council of Eliberis, and one in the Council of Milevis [k] which orders, That according to the Evangelical and Apoſtolical Diſcipline, neither the Man that is divorced from his Wife, nor the Woman that is divorced from her Husband, ſhall marry others, but either abide ſo, or be reconciled: And they that contemn this Order, are to be ſubjected to publick Penance; and withall a Petition ſhould be preſented to the Emperor to deſire him to confirm this Rule by an Imperial Sanction. From all which we may eaſily perceive, that this was always reckoned a difficult Queſtion, Whether Perſons after a lawful Divorce might marry again in the Life-time of the relinquiſhed Party? The Imperial Laws allowed it; many of the ancient Fathers alſo approved it; ſome condemned it, but ſuffered it to paſs without any publick Puniſhment; and others required a certain Penance to be done for it in the Church. Of all which different Practices the Learned Reader, that is more curious, may find an ample Account in Cotelerius's [l] Notes upon Hermes Paſtor. But though they differed upon this Point, there was no Diſagreement upon the other, That to marry a ſecond Wife after a unlawful Divorce, whilſt the former was living, was profeſſed Adultery, and as ſuch to be puniſhed by the ſharpeſt Cenſures of the Church. The Apoſtolical Canons [m] order every One to be excommunicated, who either puts away his Wife and marries again, or marries one that is put away by another. And all Canons generally agree to debar ſuch from entring into holy Orders, as marry a Wife that is put away by another Man. The Council of Eliberis goes farther [n], and orders ſuch Women as forſake their Husbands without Cauſe, and marry others, to be refuſed Communion even at their laſt Hour. And ſuch as marry Men who have [o] put away their Wives unjuſtly, if they do it knowingly, are not to be received till the laſt Moment of their Days, or, as other Copies read it, No not at their laſt Hour.

SECT. 7. Of Second, Third, and Fourth Marriages.

SOME Canons alſo preſs hard upon Second, Third, and Fourth Marriages, by which they ſeem not to underſtand either ſimultaneous Polygamy, or marrying after Divorce, whilſt the former Wife was living; but marrying two or three Wives ſucceſſively after the Death of the former. For though they did not account this downright Adultery, nor with the Montaniſts and Novatians condemn them as ſimply unlawful; yet ſome of the Ancients were willing to diſcourage them, and therefore they impoſed a certain Term of Penance upon them. The Council of Neocæſarea [p] in one Canon ſays, "They that marry often, have a Time of "Penance allotted them:" And in another [q], "No Presbyter ſhall be preſent at the "Marriage-Feaſt of thoſe that marry twice: "For a Digamiſt requires Penance. How then "ſhall

" ſhall a Presbyter by his Preſence at ſuch " Feaſts give Conſent to ſuch Marriages ? " There are many other harſh Expreſſions in Athenagoras, Irenæus, Origen, Gregory Nazianzen, Chryſoſtom, Jerom and others concerning Second and Third Marriages, which the Learned Reader may find collected by Cotelerius [r] in his Notes upon Hermes Paſtor and the Conſtitutions. The later of which Writers declare alſo againſt Second and Third Marriages, as Tranſgreſſions of the Law, and brands Fourth Marriages with the hard Name of φανὴς πορνέα, manifeſt Fornication. But Hermes Paſtor is more Candid : For in Anſwer to the Queſtion, Whether Men or Women may marry after the Death of a firſt Conſort : He ſays, He that marries [s] ſins not : But if he continues as he is, he ſhall obtain great Honour of the LORD. He neither condemns Second Marriage, nor gives it any hard Name, nor lays any Penalty upon it ; but only makes it Matter of Counſel and Advice to refrain under the Proſpect of a great Reward. And St. Auſtin [t] anſwers the Queſtion after the ſame manner, That he dares not condemn any Marriages for the Number of them, whether they be Second, or Third, or any other. I dare not be wiſe above what is written. Who am I, that I ſhould define what the Apoſtle has not defined ? The Woman is bound, ſays the Apoſtle, as long as her Husband liveth. He ſaid not, the firſt Husband, or the ſecond, or the third, or the fourth ; but, The Woman is bound as long as her Husband liveth ; But if her Husband be dead, ſhe is at Liberty to be married to whom ſhe will ; only in the Lord. But ſhe is happier, if ſhe ſo abide. I ſee not what can be added to, or taken from this Sentence. Our LORD himſelf did not condemn the Woman that had had Seven Husbands. And therefore I dare not out of my own Heart, without the Authority of Scripture, condemn any Number of Marriages whatſoever. But what I ſay to the Widow that has been the Wife of one Man, the ſame I ſay to every Widow, Thou art happier if thou ſo abideſt. Epiphanius had Occaſion to diſpute the Matter both againſt the Montaniſts and Novatians ; where he ſays [u], The Montaniſts were of the Number of thoſe who forbid Men to marry, rejecting all ſuch as were twice married, and compelling them not to take a ſecond Wife : Whereas the Church impoſed no Neceſſity on Men, but only counſelled and exhorted thoſe that were able, laying no Neceſſity upon the Weak, nor rejecting them from Hopes of Eternal Life. In like manner he blames the Novatians [x] for making the Rule which was given to the Clergy, to be the Husband of one Wife, extend to all : Whereas it was lawful for the People, after the Death of a firſt Wife, to marry a ſecond. For though he who was content with one Wife, was had in more Honour and Eſteem by the Church : Yet the Scripture did not condemn him who married a Second after the Death of the Firſt, or after a Divorce made for Fornication or Adultery or any ſuch Cauſe ; neither did it reject him from the Privilege of Church-Communion or Eternal Life. And it is certain the great Council of Nice [y] thus determined the Matter againſt the Novatians, requiring them upon their Return to the Church, to make Profeſſion in Writing, that they would ſubmit to the Decrees of the Catholick Church, particularly in this, that they would διγάμοις κοινωνεῖν, communicate with Digamiſts, or thoſe that were twice married. So that whatever private Opinions ſome might entertain in this Matter, or whatever private Rules of Diſcipline there might be in ſome particular Churches in Relation to Digamiſts ; it is evident the general Rule and Practice of the Church was not to bring ſuch under Diſcipline, as guilty of any Crime, which at moſt was only an Imperfection in the Opinion of many of thoſe who paſſed an heavier Cenſure on it. As for ſuch as plainly condemned Second, Third, or Fourth Marriages, as Fornication or Adultery, I ſee not how they can be juſtified, or reconciled to the Practice of the Catholick Church ; And therefore I leave them to ſtand or fall by themſelves, and go on with the more unconteſted Diſcipline of the Church againſt ſome other Practices of Uncleanneſs.

SECT. 8. Of Raviſhment.

AMONG which they ſet a peculiar Mark upon Raviſhment, that is, uſing Force and Violence to Virgins and Matrons to compel them to commit Uncleanneſs. Conſtantine in one of his Laws [z] condemns all Sorts of Raptors to the Flames, as well thoſe that raviſhed Virgins againſt their Wills, as thoſe that ſtole them with their own Conſent againſt the Will of their Parents. And though Conſtantius a little moderated the Puniſhment, yet he ſtill made it a Capital Crime, to be puniſhed with Death [a] : And in Caſe a Slave was concerned in it, he was left to the Severity of the former Law, to be burned alive. Jovian alſo made it a Capital Crime [b] for any one not only to commit a Rape upon a conſecrated Virgin, but to ſollicit her to marry either willingly or unwillingly againſt the Rules of her Profeſſion. The Laws of the Church could inflict no ſuch Puniſhment, but when when there was Occaſion, they drew the Spiritual Sword againſt them. If any one offer Violence to a Virgin not eſpouſed to him, let him be excommunicated, ſay the Apoſtolical Canons [c]; neither ſhall he take any other Wife, but her whom he has ſo detained, although ſhe be poor. St. Baſil condemns [d] thoſe who are guilty of committing Rapes upon Virgins, to Four Years Penance, as Fornicators. Where by a Rape he means the loweſt Degree of it, that is, ſtealing a Virgin eſpouſed to another Man, and detaining her againſt her Father's Conſent. In which he alſo orders [e], Not only the Raptor to be excommunicated, but alſo his Family, and the Place or Village where he dwelt, if they were Accomplices, or aiding and aſſiſting to him in his Uſurpation. From whence we may infer, That if ſtealing and detaining a Virgin with her own Conſent was thus puniſhable; the defiling of her by Violence was a more heinous Crime, and cenſured with greater Severity in the Diſcipline of the Church.

SECT. 9. Of unnatural Impurities.

WHAT has hitherto been ſaid, relates to the Violation of the Laws of Chaſtity in the ordinary Courſe of Nature. Beyond which there were ſome monſtrous Impurities conſiſting in the ſeveral Species of unnatural Uncleanneſs; ſuch as the Defilement of Men with Brutes, commonly called Beaſtiality; and the Defilement of Men with Men, working that which is unſeemly, after the manner of Sodom; and the Defilement of Mens own Bodies with themſelves by voluntary Self-Pollution. Tertullian [f] calls all theſe, impious Furies of Luſt, which make Men change the natural Uſe of the Sex, into that which is againſt Nature; on which the Church laid an uncommon and ſingular Puniſhment, excluding them not only from all Parts of the Church, but from the very firſt Entrance of it; becauſe they were not ordinary Crimes, but Monſters. The Council of Ancyra has two Canons relating to theſe Crimes, the firſt of which orders, That they who are guilty of Beſtial Luſts before they are Twenty [g] Years old, be Proſtrators Fifteen Years, and after that communicate in Prayers only for Five Years; but if they exceed that Age, and be married when they fall into this Sin, they are to be Proſtrators Twenty-five Years, and Five Years after communicate in Prayers only; if they are above Fifty Years old, and be married, they are to do Penance all their Lives, and only communicate at the Point of Death. The next Canon orders [h], That they who are guilty of Beſtial Luſts, and are Leprous (that is, infect others by tempting and teaching them to commit the ſame Sin) ſhould pray εἰς τὸς χειμαζομένους, Inter Hyemantes, that is, either among the Demoniacks, or thoſe that were expoſed to the Weather without the Walls of the Church. Suicerus [i] thinks this Canon is to be underſtood of thoſe that were infected with the corporal Diſeaſe of Leproſy, who by the old Laws were removed without the Camp; but it is more probale it means the ſpiritual Leproſy of thoſe who infected others with the Contagion of the ſame beaſtly Sins, and taught or tempted them to commit the ſame Uncleanneſs. For otherwiſe, Leproſy under the Goſpel, would not deſerve the Extremity of Puniſhment, but Commiſeration and Mercy. St. Baſil impoſes [k] the Penance of Adulterers, that is, Twenty Years Penance, both upon thoſe that abuſe themſelves with Beaſts, and thoſe that abuſe themſelves with Mankind. And ſometimes he lengthens [l] the Term to Thirty Years, comparing theſe Sins with Murder, Idolatry, Witchcraft and Adultery; which, he ſays, all deſerves the ſame Puniſhment. The Council [m] of Eliberis impoſes a ſeverer Puniſhment upon thoſe that ſo abuſe Boys to ſatisfy their Luſts. For ſuch are denied Communion even at their laſt Hour. The Laws of the old Romans had provided no ſufficient Remedy for theſe Corruptions. There was an old Law, called, the Lex Scantinia, mentioned by Juvenal [n] and ſome others: But it lay dormant for many Ages, till the Chriſtian Emperors came to revive it. The frequent Complaints that are made by the Chriſtian Writers of the Three firſt Ages, Clemens Alexandrinus [o], Juſtin Martyr [p], Tatian [q], Minucius Felix [r], Tertullian [s], Cyprian [t] and Lactantius [u], ſufficiently ſhew, that theſe Vices were practiſed with Impunity among the Heathen. The Law made againſt them was only a Pecuniary [x] Mulct; and that was very rarely put in Execution againſt them. Suetonius [y] ſays, Domitian in the firſt and good Part of his Reign condemned ſome few Offenders by this Law: But the Diſtemper grew ſo raging and inveterate afterwards, that Alexander Severus, a much a much better Prince, durſt not effectually ſet about the Cure of it, as Lampridius [z] teſtifies in his Life. After him Philip the Emperor, who by ſome is called a Chriſtian, made a new Law to forbid it; but the main Buſineſs devolved at laſt upon thoſe that were more undoubtedly Chriſtians. Among whom Conſtantius [a] by one of his Laws extant in both the Codes, made it a Capital Crime, and ordered it to be puniſhed with Death by the Sword. Theodoſius [b] added to the Penalty by a ſeverer Sanction, ordering, That ſuch as were found guilty of this unnatural Vice, ſhould be burnt alive in the Preſence of all the People. Thus the Civil and Eccleſiaſtical Laws combined together to extirpate all Sorts of Uncleanneſs; deterring Men from ſuch Acts of Impurity, as were a Scandal to the Chriſtian Profeſſion, by ſuch Penalties, Temporal and Spiritual, as was thought moſt proper to be inflicted in order to reſtrain them.

NEITHER was it only the direct and immediate Acts of Uncleanneſs they thus cenſured and puniſhed, but all other Acts that opened and prepared the Way to them. Of which Kind, the maintaining or encouraging of Harlots, publickly or privately, was always reckoned a moſt infamous Practice. Great Complaints have been made by Writers [c] of divers Kinds of the Licentiouſneſs of many modern Popes in granting Tolerations at Rome to ſuch lewd and wicked Practices, and receiving annual Penſions for the Toleration of them. But the ancient Laws, both Civil and Eccleſiaſtical, were far from ſuch Abuſes. Heathen Rome in this Reſpect was more Chaſt and Modeſt, than the Modern Papacy. For even there we find a Law, recorded [d] out of Papinian in the Pandects, That whoever wittingly let his Houſe be the Place to commit Fornication or Adultery with another Man's Wife, or any Defilement with Mankind, or made any Gain of the Adultery of his own Wife, ſhould be puniſhed as an Adulterer, of whatever Condition he was. And it is remarkable in the Laws of Conſtantine [e], That a Man was allowed to put away his Wife, not only if ſhe was an Adultereſs herſelf, but if ſhe was a Conciliatrix, a Pander or Procurer of Adultery in others. By the Laws of Theodoſius Junior [f], If any Parent or Maſter proſtituted his Daughter or his Maid-Slave, they were to forfeit all Right of Dominion over them: The Parties ſo compelled might appeal to the Biſhop of the Place, or the Judge, or the Defenſor, and require their Aſſiſtance or Protection; and if after that, their Superiors, Maſter or Father would go on as Panders ſtill to compel them, their Goods were to be confiſcated, and their Perſons baniſhed and ſent to the Mines. Socrates [g] commends Theodoſius the Great for another good Law, whereby he demoliſhed the infamous Houſes, commonly called Seiſtra, at Rome. For till his Time a very evil Cuſtom prevailed there, That when any Woman was taken in Adultery, ſhe was condemned by Way of Puniſhment to be a common Proſtitute in the publick Stews: Which kind of Puniſhment, as Socrates truly remarks, did no ways contribute towards her Amendment, but only compelled her to add Sin to Sin. Therefore Theodoſius in his Zeal for the Piety and Purity of the Chriſtian Religion, aboliſhed this impudent and ſcandalous Puniſhment; providing other Penalties for Adultery, and deſtroying theſe infamous Houſes out of Rome. Theodoſius Junior did the ſame good Service at Conſtantinople by a new Law, ordering [b] all Panders, who kept infamous Houſes, to be publickly whipped and expelled the City, and that all their Slaves, whom they kept for ſuch vile Purpoſes, ſhould be ſet at Liberty. And whereas hitherto theſe Wretches had kept up their Trade in Spite of former Laws, under Pretence of paying a certain annual Tax to the Government out of their infamous Gain; Theodoſius abrogated this Tax; and in Lieu of it one Florentius a Nobleman, by whoſe pious Advice the Emperor did this, gave an equivalent out of his own Eſtate to the Exchequer, that there might be no Deficiency or Damage accruing to the publick Revenue, which might afterwards be uſed as a Plea to grant theſe Miſcreants a new Toleration. Thus theſe pious Emperors laboured to extirpate this abominable Vice out of their two great Capitals. And when ſome Remainders of it continued notwithſtanding all their Endeavours, Juſtinian reſumed the Matter, reviving and confirming all the preceding Laws by a new Edict [i] of his own, and augmenting the Puniſhments ſpecified in them, to root out this abominable Way of making Proviſion for Lewdneſs throughout his whole Empire. As to the Eccleſiaſtical Laws, there is no Crime they puniſhed more ſeverely than this. As may be eaſily collected from the Canons of the Council of Eliberis; one of which [k] orders, "That if a Father or a Mother or any "Chriſtian exerciſe the Trade of a Pander, "foraſmuch as they ſet to Sale the Body of "another, or rather their own, they ſhall not "be received to Communion, no not at their "laſt Hour. And another [l] decrees, That "if a Woman commit Adultery by the Con"ſent of her Husband, they ſhall be rejected "even to the laſt". The Reaſon of this is grounded upon what [m] Tertullian obſerves of the Law prohibiting Fornication, that it equally forbids any one to be aiding or aſſiſting or conſcious to another in the Practice of it. For what I may not do myſelf, I may not be inſtrumental to have it done by others. And therefore by the ſame Reaſon that I keep my own Body from the common Stews, I own myſelf obliged, neither to promote that infamous Trade, nor raiſe any Gain by or for others by ſuch vile Practices. Albaſpiny rightly obſerves from the forementioned Canons, that this Crime was eſteemed greater than Fornication and Adultery itſelf: Becauſe Adulterers were received to the Peace of the Church after a certain Term of Penance, but this Crime was denied Communion to the very laſt.

SECT. 11. Of writing and reading laſcivious Books.

ANOTHER Way of promoting Uncleanneſs was the Writing or Reading laſcivious or obſcene Books and Plays, than which there is no greater Incentive or Provocation to Impurity. And therefore as the Ancients burned and aboliſhed all Sorts of heretical Books, that they might not corrupt the Faith; ſo they equally forbad the Writing or Reading all other pernicious Books, which tended to debauch the Morals of Chriſtians, and ſeverely cenſured the Authors of them, if any ſuch were compoſed by Chriſtian Writers. Socrates [n] ſays, Heliodorus a Theſſalian Biſhop, when he was a young Man, wrote a laſcivious Romance, called his Ethiopicks; which others [o] tell us, occaſioned a Cenſure to be paſſed upon him, when he was Biſhop, and he was deprived of his Biſhoprick becauſe he would not recant it. For the ſame Reaſon they utterly diſcouraged the Reading of ſuch Heathen Books, as were ſtuffed with Impurities; and ſome Canons were made to prohibit the Clergy eſpecially from converſing with ſuch Writers, of which I have given a more ample Account [*] in a former Book.

SECT. 12. Frequenting of the Theatre and Stage-Plays forbidden upon this Account.

THEY are equally ſevere in their Invectives againſt all Frequenters of the Theatre and publick Stage-Plays upon the ſame Account: Becauſe theſe were the great Nurſeries of Impurity, where Inceſt and Adultery were repreſented with abominable Obſcenity, and in a manner acted over again, to corrupt the Spectators by their Contagion and Example. Here, as Cyprian ſays, Adultery was learned [p] by ſeeing it acted; Provocations to Vice were ſo much the ſtronger, becauſe they were recommended by the Authority of great Examples; the Matron which perhaps came Chaſte to the Theatre, returned back with a contrary Diſpoſition. The very Geſtures of the Actors were enough to corrupt Mens Morals, being Fomenters of Vice, and Purveyors of Nutriment for corrupt Diſtempers. Venus they repreſented in all her lewd Behaviour, Mars as an Adulterer; and their Jupiter no leſs a Prince in his Vices, than in his Kingdom, burning with his Thunderbolts in earthly Amours, ſometimes ſhining in the Plumes of a Swan, ſometimes deſcending in a golden Shower, and ſometimes ſending out his Eagles to fetch him a beautiful Ganymede. Conſider now whether a Spectator can be Innocent and Chaſte in viewing ſuch Sights as theſe. Men imitate the Gods which they worſhip, and by this Means become more wretched, becauſe their Vices were conſecrated into Religion. He ſpeaks this againſt the Heathen Spectators, but the Main of his Arguments will equally hold againſt the Chriſtian. For the Theatres by Reaſon of their Impurities were Places of unavoidable Temptation; the Devil's own Ground, his own Property and Poſſeſſion; as Tertullian [q] ſays, the Devil once called them, when being asked by a Chriſtian Exorciſt, in the Caſe of a Woman who was ſeized by him at the Theatre, How he durſt preſume to poſſeſs a Chriſtian? He anſwered confidently, I had a Right to do it; for I found her upon my own Ground. Tertullian [r] ſays farther, That the Theatre is properly the Temple of Venus upon a double account, account, both becauſe it was the School of Laſciviouſneſs, and becauſe when Pompey built his famous Theatre, he was forced to ſet the Temple of Venus upon it, for Fear the Roman Cenſors ſhould demoliſh it, as they had done ſome others, in their Concern for the Morals of the People, which they were ſenſible were corrupted by the Poyſon and Infection of the Theatres, which were nothing elſe (in the Opinion of the more Grave and Sober Romans) but the Citadel and Fortreſs of all impure and laſcivious Practices, For this Reaſon therefore, as well as becauſe they were accompanied with idolatrous Rites, Tertullian and all the Ancients declaim againſt them, and forbid Chriſtians to frequent them, under Pain of being deemed guilty of all the Impurities of the Place, and Partakers of all the Lewdneſs committed in them. As this was one Part of their Baptiſmal Renunciation, where the Impurities of the Stage were vertually renounced in Renouncing the Pomps [*] of Satan: So it was neceſſary for a Chriſtian to abſtain from them as a Spectator, for Fear of looſing his Title to Chriſtian Communion, and being accounted a Renegado to his firſt Profeſſion. It is certain it was ſo in the Time of Tertullian, and when the Author of the Conſtitutions [s] drew up his Collections. But in after-Ages, becauſe the Civil Law allowed the Interludes of the Theatre for the Diverſion of the People, when they were purged from Idolatry, but not from Lewdneſs; the Fathers contented themſelves to declaim againſt them with ſharp Invectives, and correct that reigning Humour by ſerious Admonitions, which the Iniquity of the Times would not ſuffer them to do by the more exact and primitive Diſcipline of the Church. Any one that will conſult St. Chryſoſtom's [t] or Cyril's Catechiſms [u] or Salvian [x], may find this Obſervation true, that though the Canons did not now make it peremptory Excommunication for a Man to frequent the Theatre, yet the Fathers inveighed as ſharply as ever againſt it, for the Impurity and Corruption of Morals, that were the natural Conſequences of it. There was anciently a famous Sight or Play, called Maiuma, a conſiderable Part of which Diverſion was, to ſee infamous Strumpets ſwim naked in the Water. Whence Learned Men obſerve, it had its Name: For Maiuma in the Syriack Tongue, ſignifies Water. Gothofred [y] obſerves, and Pagi [z] after him, That the People were ſo eagerly bent and inclined to this obſcene Diverſion, that though there were good Reaſons for aboliſhing it, yet the Imperial Laws from Conſtantine to Arcadius varied eight times about it; ſometimes allowing, and ſometimes reſtraining it; till at laſt Arcadius, who had at firſt permitted it, revoked his Licence, and finally aboliſhed it; allowing other Sports for the Diverſion of the People, but denying them this, as a baſe and unſeemly [a] Spectacle. And under that Character, St. Chryſoſtom [b] and others, with their utmoſt Force and Vehemence declaim againſt it.

SECT. 13. As alſo all Exceſs of Riot and Intemperance for the ſame Reaſon.

FOR the ſame Reaſon they made ſharp Invectives againſt Luxury, and Riot, and Intemperance, not only as they were Crimes in themſelves, but as they were the Avenues and Inlets to the greater Sins of Uncleanneſs. And therefore though they did not puniſh every ſingle Act of Drunkenneſs and Exceſs with Excommunication, yet they thought it proper to bring Habits and Cuſtoms of ſuch Sins under publick Diſcipline and Cenſure. It is an Obſervation of Tertullian [c], and a very true one, That Drunkenneſs and Luſt are two Devils combining and conſpiring together. Bacchus and Venus are nearly ally'd, and too well agreed. "Drunkenneſs, ſays one of the ancient Canons [d], "is the Fomenter and Nurſe of all Vices." And therefore it was ordered, that if any Clergyman of the loweſt Degree was found guilty of any ſingle Act of it, he ſhould either be ſuſpended from Communion for Thirty Days, or be ſubject to corporal Puniſhment for his Offence. This we find decreed in the Councils of Agde and Vannes, as a ſtanding Rule in the French Church. And there goes a Decree under the Name of Pope Eutychian [e], which makes the Habit of Drunkenneſs Matter of Excommunication to a Layman alſo, till he break off the Cuſtom by Reformation and Amendment. But it muſt be owned, this Vice was ſometimes ſo general and epidemical, that the Number of Tranſgreſſors made the Exactneſs of Diſcipline impracticable. St. Auſtin [f] complains and laments, that it was ſo in Africk in his Time. Though the Apoſtle had condemned Three great and deteſtable Vices in one Place, viz. Rioting and Drunkenneſs, Chambering and Wantonneſs, Strife and Envying: Yet Matters were come to that paſs with Men, that two of the Three, Drunkenneſs and Strife, were thought tolerable tolerable Things, whilſt Wantonneſs only was eſteemed worthy of Excommunication; and there was ſome Danger that in a little Time the other Two might be reputed no Vices at all. For Rioting and Drunkenneſs was eſteemed ſo harmleſs and allowable a Thing, that Men not only practiſed it in their own Houſes every Day, but in the Memorials of the holy Martyrs on ſolemn Feſtivals, and that in pretended Honour to the Martyrs alſo; which was a Thing that every one muſt needs lament, who did not look with carnal Eyes upon it. It is plain, St. Auſtin thought an habitual Courſe of Rioting and Drunkenneſs a Crime deſerving Excommunication, as well as Fornication and Adultery; but yet in Regard to the great Numbers that were given to this Sin, his Advice to Aurelius the Metropolitan of Africk, is, [g] That it ſhould be cured not with Aſperity and Roughneſs, nor in the imperious Way, but by Teaching rather than Commanding, and by Admonition rather than Commination. For ſo we muſt deal with a Multitude, but the Severity of Diſcipline is only to be exerciſed upon Sins, when the Number of Sinners is not very great. So that we may conclude, That Rioting and Drukenneſs was one of thoſe great Crimes for which Men were put to do publick Penance in the Church, except when the Multitude and Combination of Sinners made it not feaſible, and obliged the Church to take other Meaſures to correct it.

SECT. 14. And promiſcuous Bathing of Men and Women together.

IT muſt alſo be noted upon this Head, That as a Preſervative of Modeſty and Chaſtity, both the Canon and Civil Law prohibited Men and Women to go promiſcuouſly into the ſame Baths together. Let not a Woman go to waſh in the ſame Bath with Men, ſays the Author [h] of the Conſtitutions. And the Council of Laodicea [i], Neither Clergyman, nor Aſcetick, nor Layman, ſhall waſh in the ſame Bath with Women: For this is extremely ſcandalous, and culpable even among the Gentiles. The Council of Trullo [k] repeats this Canon Word for Word, and then adds in the Cloſe, If any Clergyman be found guilty of this Practiſe, he ſhall be depoſed; if a Layman, let him be excommunicated. The Obſervation made in theſe Canons, That this was a ſcandalous Crime even among the Heathens, is confirmed out of the old Roman Laws and Writers. Varro [l] ſays, The ancient Baths were divided into two diſtinct Buildings or Apartments, one for the Men, and the other for the Women to waſh in. And the ſame Account is given by Vitruvius [m] and Chariſius, and other Writers. And when the Degeneracy of the following Ages began to confound this Diſtinction, Spartian [n] ſays, Adrian made a Law againſt promiſcuous Bathing. And Julius Capitolinus [o] ſays the ſame of Antonius Philoſophus. Nay, the old Romans were ſo careful to preſerve Modeſty in this Matter, that Tully [p] ſays, They did not allow a Son to bath with his Father, nor a Son-in-law with his Father-in-law: Nature itſelf teaching Men that there was a Decency to be obſerved in making ſuch Diſtinctions. And the ſame Thing is related by Valerius Maximus [q] and much commended by St. Ambroſe [r]. Now the Caſe ſtanding thus even among the Heathens, it would have been extremely ſcandalous for the Chriſtians to have permitted promiſcuous Bathing; and therefore they prohibited it by their Eccleſiaſtical Laws under the ſevere Penalty of Excommunication. And the Imperial [s] Laws of Juſtinian carried the Matter a little farther. For among other lawful Cauſes of Divorce, authorizing a Man to put away his Wife, he allows this to be one, If a Woman be ſo intemperate and Luxurious as to go into a common Bath with Men. Private Writers declaim much againſt it. Epiphanius [t] condemns it in the Jews; and Cyprian not only [u] cenſures this, but many other Acts of Immodeſty in Virgins, as Painting, and overnice Dreſſing, and appearing unveiled (againſt which alſo Tertullian [x] has a whole Diſcourſe) with ſome other Indications of a looſe and unguarded Mind, which need not here be particularly mentioned or further purſued. I purpoſely alſo paſs over the ſcandalous Practice of ſome, who entertain their Agapetæ, or love Siſters, as they called them, with Profeſſions of the ſtricteſt Innocence and Vertue; becauſe I have formerly had Occaſion to ſhew with what Severity the ancient Rules [*] condemned this as a moſt ſuſpicious and intolerable Practice, and perfectly againſt the Laws of the Goſpel, which oblige Men not only to regard the Preſervation of their Innocence, but their Good-Name;

SECT. 15. And promiſcuous and laſcivious Dancing, wanton Songs, &c.

FOR the ſame Reaſon they prohibited all promiſcuous and laſcivious Dancing of Men and Women together. The Council of Laodicea [y] forbids it under the Name of Βαλλίζειν, which ſome interpret playing on Cymbals or other muſical Inſtruments. But more commonly it is underſtood by Learned [z] Men as a Prohibition of wanton Dancing at Marriage Feaſts, againſt which there are ſeveral other Canons of the ancient Councils, and ſevere Invectives of the Fathers. The Third Council of Toledo [a] forbids it under the Name of Ballimathiæ, which they interpret wanton Dances, joyning them with laſcivious Songs, the Uſe of which they complain of as an [b] irreligious Cuſtom prevailing in Spain among the common People on the ſolemn Feſtivals; which they order to be corrected both by the Eccleſiaſtical and Secular Judges. The Council of Agde [c] forbids the Clergy to be preſent at ſuch Marriages, where obſcene Love-Songs were ſung, or obſcene Motions of the Body were uſed in Dancing. And by another Canon [d], If they uſe any Scurrility or filthy Jeſting themſelves, they are to be removed from their Office. The like Canons occur in the Council of Lerida [e] and ſome others, forbidding to ſing or dance at Marriages, but feaſt with Modeſty and Gravity, as becomes Chriſtians. St. Ambroſe excellently deſcribes the Immodeſty of this ſort of Dancing uſed by drunken Women [f]: They lead up Dances, ſays he, in the Streets unbecoming Men in the Sight of intemperate Youths, toſſing their Hair, dragging their Garments flying open, with their Arms uncovered, clapping their Hands, dancing with their Feet, loud and clamorous in their Voices, irritating and provoking youthful Luſts by their theatrical Motions, petulant Eyes, and unſeemly Anticks and Fooleries. Mean while a Croud of Youth ſtands gazing upon them, and ſo it is a miſerable Spectacle indeed.

ST. Chryſoſtom [g] has Abundance to the ſame Purpoſe, particularly in one of his Homilies [*] he declaims againſt it, as one of thoſe Pomps of Satan which Men renounced in their Baptiſm. He ſays, The Devil is preſent at ſuch a Time, being called thither by the Songs of Harlots, and obſcene Words, and diabolical Pomps uſed upon ſuch Occaſions. And in another Homily ſpeaking of the Dancing of Herodias's Daughter, he ſays, Chriſtians now do not deliver up half a Kingdom, nor another Man's Head, but their own Souls to inevitable Deſtruction. By which it appears that theſe Dancings were Cauſes of great Corruption, being mixed with ribaldry and laſcivious Songs and wanton Geſtures, which are Incentives to Impurity, and wholly unhinge the Frame of the Chriſtian Temper: For which Reaſon the Ancients are ſo frequent and copious and ſevere in their Invectives againſt them.

SOME Canons alſo ſeverely condemn the promiſcuous Uſe of Habits, or Men and Women interchanging their Apparel peculiarly appropriated to their different Sex. Euſtathius taught his She-Diſciples to wear the Habit of Men under Pretence of Religion; and cut off their Hair upon the like ſuperſtitious Reaſon. But the Council of Gangra condemned both theſe Practices, as great Irregularities, confounding the Order of Nature, and laid the heavy Cenſure of Anathema upon them.

them. "If any Woman, says one Canon [h], "under Pretence of leading an Ascetick Life, "change her Apparel, and instead of the ac- "customed Habit of Women take that of Men, "let her be Anathema." And another [i], "If any Woman upon the account of an Asce- "tick Life cut off her Hair, which GOD has "given her as a Memorial of Subjection, let "her be Anathema, as one that annuls the De- "cree of Subjection." The Foundation of this Canon was the Order given by St. Paul, 1 Cor. xi. That a Woman should not be shorn or shaven. And the Foundation of the former Canon was the Rule given by GOD to the Jews, Deut. xxii. 5. The Woman shall not wear that which appertaineth to a Man, neither shall a Man put on a Woman's Garment: For all that do so, are an Abomination to the Lord thy God. Which the ancient Writers, Cyprian [k], Tertullian [l] and many [m] others understand simply and universally of Men and Women interchanging Habits, as was usually done in Stage-plays, which they condemned for this Reason as for many others. Some Modern Interpreters [n] after Lyra [o] and Maimonides [p] think there was a farther Design in this Precept, to prohibit the Idolatry of the ancient Zabij, in whose Magical Books it was commanded, that Men should put on the Womens painted Garments, when they stood to worship before the Star of Venus; and that Women should put on the Mens warlike Habit and Instruments, when they appeared before the Star of Mars. But as the ancient Christian Writers were not acquainted with this Interpretation, we have Reason to believe they took the Rule in the common and vulgar Sense, as an universal Prohibition of Men and Women interchanging Habits in all Cases whatsoever: It being a Thing against the Light of Nature and the Laws of Reason, as Diogenes Laertius [q] words it in the Life of Plato, for any one to walk naked in Publick, or for a Man to wear the Woman's Clothing. And for this Reason the Ancients prohibited it, as an indecent and shameful Thing, as ministring an Occasion to Uncleanness even when it was used under Pretence of greater Strictness in Religion.

SECT. 17. And suspected Vigils, or Pernoctations of Women in Churches under Pretence of Devotion.

AND for the same Reason the ancient Council of Eliberis forbad Women to keep private Vigils or Night-watches in the Dormitories or Churches, because often under Pretence of Prayer and Colour of Devotion, secret [r] Wickedness had been committed by them. This seems to be the most rational Account that can be given of the Meaning and Reason of this Canon, That it was intended to cut off the Occasion of Lewdness and Uncleanness, however artfully disguised under the Mark of greater Strictness in Religion; there being nothing that could reflect more Dishonour on the Christian Name, than the allowing such Opportunities of Sin under the feigned Pretence of Piety and Devotion in their Churches.

CHAP. XII.

Of great Transgressions of the Eighth Commandment, Theft, Oppression, Usury, Perverting of Justice, Fraud and Deceit in Trust and Traffick, &c.

SECT. 1. Of those who taught the Doctrine of Renunciation or having all Things Common.

THE Design of the Eighth Commandment is to secure Men in the quiet Possession of their own Rights and Properties, or whatever they have a just Title to by the Laws of GOD and the Community where they dwell. And therefore as many Ways as these Rights may be invaded or impaired, so many Ways there are of committing Robbery and transgressing this Command. There were in the ancient Church some Hereticks, who under Pretence of greater Heights in Religion, would allow no Men to possess any Thing as their own Right and Property in this World; but obliged all Men to renounce their Title to every Thing, and to have all Things in Common; pronouncing a peremtory Sentence against all rich Men, that unless they gave up their Possessions, and forsook all that they enjoyed, they could not enter into the Kindom of Heaven. These Men called themselves Apotactici, from renouncing the World; and Apostolici, from their pretended Imitation of the Apostles; and Encratitæ, from their Ostentation of Temperance and Abstinence nence above other Men. St. Auſtin [a] ſays, They would receive none into their Communion that lived in the Conjugal State, or that poſſeſſed any Thing as their Property in this World; they ſeparated from the Church upon this Account, and would allow no Man to have any Hope of Salvation, that did not practice as they did; and therefore the Church condemned them as Hereticks for laying ſuch a Doctrinal Neceſſity upon theſe Things, which are left to every Man's Liberty in Practice. The Euſtathians maintained the ſame Doctrine, but the Council of Gangra [b] condemned it as heretical, and anathematized the Authors and Defenders of it. So that this was a general Sort of Invaſion of the Rights and Properties of Mankind, robbing them of every Thing in an unuſual and extraordinary Way, not by any open Violence or ſecret Stealth, but by turning Religion into an Art, and inducing Men to rob themſelves of every Thing under Pretence of Piety and greater Heights of Devotion. The Factors and Agents in this Cauſe ſeem not to have had any Deſign to enrich themſelves, but to make all Men poor, and bring them to a Level, and lay all Things Common: Which was ſuch a ſcandalous Repreſentation of the Chriſtian Religion in the Eyes of the Heathen, that the Fathers thought they could not be too ſevere upon it, however it was coloured over with the Varniſh and Diſguiſe of Holineſs, pretending a great Contempt of the World, and a Divine and Heavenly Temper. As therefore they condemned the Doctrine for heretical, ſo they never failed to purſue the Abettors of it with the utmoſt Severity of Eccleſiaſtical Cenſures. And the Imperial Laws concurred [c] with them, ſubjecting theſe Apotactites, or Renouncers, to all the Civil Penalties that were impoſed upon Hereticks in all other Caſes, except that of Confiſcation of Goods, which ſignified nothing to thoſe, whoſe very Crime conſiſted in a perverſe Way of Renunciation of all Things, which left them nothing to forfeit.

SECT. 2. Of Plagiary or Man-ſtealing.

NEXT to this general Sort of Robbery, the Laws ſet a particular Mark upon that which is commonly called Plagiary, or Man-ſtealing. The old Roman Law condemned ſuch as were guilty of it, either in a pecuniary Mulct, or ſent them to the Mines. But Conſtantine thought this was not a ſufficient Puniſhment for the Crime, and therefore he added to it, and made it Capital [d], ordering every ſuch Criminal to be thrown to the wild Beaſts in the Theatre, and if they were likely to eſcape with their Lives thence, to be put to Death with the Sword. The Eccleſiaſtical Laws appoint no particular Puniſhment for this Crime: But it being of the ſame Nature with Murder in the Law of GOD, it may be ſuppoſed that the Penance of Murderers was inflicted on thoſe that were found guilty of it.

SECT. 3. Of Malicious Injuſtice.

I TAKE no Notice here of Sacrilege, becauſe though that be a Species of Theft, yet the Puniſhment of that has been conſidered under [*] another Title. The remaining Sorts of Injuſtice may be ſummed up under theſe Four Heads: 1. Malicious Injuſtice. 2. Simple Theft. 3. Open Violence and Oppreſſion. 4. Fraud and Deceit. Malicious Injuſtice is doing Hurt and Prejudice to our Neighbour in his Goods out of pure Hatred and Ill-will, when we can do ourſelves no Benefit or Kindneſs by it. As when Men ſet Houſes or Stacks of Corn on fire out of Malice and Revenge to their Neighbours, or poyſon or kill their Cattle, or do them any the like Injury in their Goods, without reaping any Advantage from it, but only gratifying a ſpiteful and revengeful Temper. The old Roman Law adjudges all ſuch to be guilty of Capital Crimes, and particularly thoſe whom they term Incendiaries [f], who ſet Towns on Fire, either out of Enmity, or to make Plunder or Prey of them: Which Sort of Criminals were by Way of juſt Retaliation often ſentenced to be burnt alive. The Eccleſiaſtical Code of the ancient Church has no particular Laws againſt ſuch [g]; but as their Crimes were often a Complication of many great Sins; Enmity and Malice, and Theft and Murder commonly concurring in Incendiaries; ſo it may be preſumed their Puniſhment and Penance was aſſigned according to the Nature and Quality of the ſeveral Offences which made up this compound Vice, than which few can be conceived more heinous, becauſe it has in it ſo much of the pure malicious a nd diabolical Temper.

SECT. 4. Of ſimple Theft.

SIMPLE Theft was reckoned among the great Crimes which brought Men under publick Penance, and therefore there is the more Reaſon to conclude it of thoſe complicated Crimes. St. Auſtin frequently in diſtinguiſhing between great and ſmall Sins [b] puts Theft into the firſt Claſs of heinous Crimes, for which Men were to do a more formal Penance in the Church. And among St. Baſil's Canons [i] there is one that particularly ſpecifies the Time of Penance: The Thief, if he diſcover himſelf, ſhall do One Year's Penance; if he be diſcovered by others, Two: Half the Time he ſhall be a Proſtrator, the other half a Co-ſtander. Only St. Auſtin intimates [k], There were ſome Circumſtances in which they were forced to bear with this as well as other Sins: He means, when ſome inſuperable Difficulties or Danger made it either impoſſible, or unadviſable, to put the Diſcipline of the Church ſtrictly in Execution againſt them.

SECT. 5. Of detaining loſt Goods from the true Owner.

UNDER this Head they reckoned ſuch as detained any loſt Goods, which they found, from the true Proprietor, when he could lay a juſt Claim to them. St. Auſtin expreſsly condemns this as manifeſt Robbery. If thou haſt found [l] any Thing, and not reſtored it, thou art guilty of Robbing the true Owner. He that denies what he finds of another Man's, would take it from him if he could. In this Caſe GOD examines the Heart, and not the Hands. Origen [m] ſays the ſame, That not to reſtore what a Man finds, is equal to Robbery; however ſome had the Vanity to think there was no Sin in it, and were ready to ask, To whom ſhould I reſtore, ſeeing GOD has put it into my Hands? The old Roman Laws was much more equitable than the Conſcience of ſuch. For they reckon it Theft to detain what a Man finds, even when they know not who is the true Owner of it. In which Caſe [n] they direct him to put up a Libel of Inquiry after the Proprietor, and when he is found, to take of him what they call εὑρέσεα, and μήνυσεα, and σῶσεα, a Reward for finding and ſaving what was loſt: Though this they rather accounted a diſhonourable and ſcandalous Demand, if preciſely exacted. St. Auſtin gives a very remarkable Inſtance of this Sort of Generoſity in refuſing the Reward of finding loſt Goods, in one who was a poor Chriſtian Uſher to an Heathen Schoolmaſter at Milan. He found a Bag of Money about the Value of Two hundred Shillings, and not knowing who was the Owner, according to Law he put up a Libel publickly [o] to enquire after him. For he was ſenſible he ought to return it, though he knew not as yet to whom. The Man who had loſt the Money, upon Notice given in the Libel, comes to him, and tells the Marks, the Condition of the Bag, the Seal, and the Sum, and receives his own again. And with great Joy, Thankfulneſs and Gratitude, offers him the Tythe, Twenty Shillings, as his Requital and Reward; but he would not accept it. He offers him Ten; but he would not accept it. He intreats him however, at leaſt to take Five; but he refuſed. Upon which, the Man in Anger caſt down his Bag, and ſaid, I have loſt nothing: If thou wilt receive nothing of me, I have loſt nothing. What a brave Contention, ſays St. Auſtin [p], what a Prize, what a Strife and noble Conflict was this, where the whole World was the Theatre, and GOD the Spectator! At laſt the Man is ſubdued by mere Importunity, and prevailed upon to accept what was offered him; but he immediately gave it all to the Poor, and would not carry one Shilling of it home with him to lay up for his own private Uſe. By this Relation we may judge, how great a Crime it was reckoned to conceal or detain what was loſt from the right Owner, ſince even the exacting any Reward for finding it was reputed diſhonourable and ſcandalous, and ſome ancient Canons ſet a particular Mark of Infamy upon it, as a Species of filthy Lucre. Men ought not, ſays Gregory Thaumaturgus [q] to exact a Reward for ſaving, or diſcovering, or finding any Thing that was loſt, but to live without filthy Lucre.

SECT. 6. Of refuſing to pay juſt Debts.

THEY put into the ſame Claſs all ſuch as refuſed to pay their juſt Debts, eſpecially ſuch as uſed any baſe or ſiniſter Arts to excuſe themſelves from the Payment of them. It was uſual with many Jews to pretend to become Converts to Chriſtianity, only to ſhelter themſelves from their Creditors, and the Juſtice of the Law in many Criminal Caſes alſo, by claiming the Privilege of Sanctuary in the Church. To correct which Abuſe, Arcadius made made a Law [r], That no ſuch Practice ſhould be allowed; but that they ſhould be repelled from the Church, and not be received till they had faithfully diſcharged all their Debts, and demonſtrated their Innocence in other Reſpects, as a neceſſary Qualification for their Admiſſion. In ſome Caſes indeed, when Men were unable to pay their Debts, the Church in Charity was inclined to protect them: But then, in that Caſe, ſhe was alſo obliged to pay their Debts as appears from ſeveral Laws [s] made in their Behalf; and from the Inſtance which St. Auſtin [t] gives of his own Church paying the Debts of one Faſtius, who fled from his Creditors to her Protection: And this Caſe of Neceſſity was very different from that fraudulent and criminal Refuſal of Paying Debts when Men lay under no ſuch Straits and Difficulties. As therefore the one was Matter of Commiſeration, and made Men Objects of Pity and Compaſſion: So the other made them odious and abominable, as deceitful Villains, and rendered them fit Objects of legal Severity and Eccleſiaſtical Cenſure.

SECT. 7. And what Men are bound to by the Obligation of Promiſe and Contract.

AMONG juſt Debts they always reckoned thoſe which Men contracted by the Obligation of Promiſe and mutual Engagements to each other: And therefore all Breach of Faith in ſuch Caſes, came under the Denomination of Theft, and was accordingly puniſhed as a Species of that Tranſgreſſion. The Council of Eliberis [u] applies this particularly to ſuch Parents as break the Eſpouſals of Antenuptials Contracts, to which they have agreed in Behalf of their Children: For which Offence they are obliged to abſtain Three Years from the Communion. This in Effect was a Robbery committed both upon Perſons and Things, depriving the Man of his Wife, and the Woman of her Husband, and each of them of all thoſe Rights and Benefits that might have accrued to them by ſuch Matrimonial Contracts. For which Reaſon it was ranked among thoſe more heinous Thefts, and perfidious Injuries offered to Mens Rights, which were thought to deſerve a publick Cenſure.

SECT. 8. Of Removing Bounds and Land-marks.

AND among theſe, the Removing or Defacing ancient Bounds and Land-marks, was accounted no ſmall Crime. Even among the old Romans it was puniſhed as a Capital Offence. Numa Pompilius divided the Roman Fields by certain Marks erected of Stone, which they called Lapides ſacri, becauſe they were conſecrated to Jupiter; and the Covering or Transferring theſe was reckoned ſuch an Offence, that any one who was taken in it, might lawfully [x] be ſlain, as a ſacrilegious Perſon. The Law of GOD lays a Curſe upon it, Deut. xxvii. 17. Curſed be he that removeth his Neighbour's Land-mark. Conſtantine reckons it among thoſe criminal Actions which were to be puniſhed in an extraordinary Way [y], as Pithæus and Gothofred have obſerved from an old Remark made upon the Sentences of the Famous Lawyer Paulus, which ſays, In eum qui per vim Terminos dejecerit, vel amoverit; extra ordinem animadvertitur: Upon which the Annotator ſays, That the ſame Thing was determined by Conſtantine in the Theodoſian Code. Which makes Gothofred conclude, That either that Law is wanting now in the Theodoſian Code, or elſe that it refers to Conſtantine's firſt Law under that Title, which ſays, Invaſor ille Pœnæ teneatur addictus, Such an Invader ſhall be liable to Puniſhment, tho' the particular Manner of Puniſhment be not expreſſed. However, it was a Crime of that Nature, as to require a peremptory Puniſhment without Appeal, as appears from another Law of Conſtantine's [z] in the ſame Code. The Eccleſiaſtical Law always condemned this as a curſed Crime from the Law of GOD: Curſed be he that removeth his Neighbour's Land-mark. And, Remove not the ancient Land-mark, which thy Fathers have ſet. Under this Title they alſo cenſured all ſuch ambitious Biſhops, as not content with the Limits of their own Dioceſes, invaded the Territory of others, and endeavoured to bring Places out of their Diſtrict under their Juriſdiction. Pope Innocent [a] writing to a Biſhop upon ſuch an Occaſion, reminds him of what the Scripture has ſo often ſaid, That we ought not to remove the Bounds which our Fathers have ſet, and therefore admoniſhes him to quit his Pretenſions, unleſs he was minded to feel the Severity of Eccleſiaſtical Cenſure.

SECT. 9. Of Oppreſſion.

THIS Sort of Robbery may alſo be reckoned under another Species of Theft, which the Law calls Compound Theft, becauſe it joyns ſomething of Violence or Oppreſſion to the Robbery. Such as hoſtile Invaſion, robbing with Arms upon the Highway, breaking Houſes in the Night, Piracy at Sea, cruel Exactions of Judges, and other publick Officers above what the Law allows, perverting of Juſtice Juſtice by Bribery or rigorous Interpretations of the Law, together with Extortion and unjuſt Uſury. All which the Law condemns under the general Name of Oppreſſion, and the ancient Canons make it Matter of Excommunication. The fourth Council of Carthage [b] has one Canon forbidding the Prieſts to receive any Oblations from thoſe that oppreſs the Poor: And another [c] appointing ſuch as deny'd to the Church the Oblations of the Dead, or refuſed to pay them without Difficulty and Trouble, to be excommunicated, as Murderers of the Poor. Agreeable to which is that of St. Chryſoſtom [d], directing his Clergy not to admit any cruel or unmerciful Man to the LORD's Table: Although it be a General, although it be a Governour or Conſul, although it be he that wears the Crown, prohibit him: Thou in this Caſe haſt greater Power than he. And again, inveighing againſt Oppreſſors, who offered Alms out of what they had violently taken from others, he ſays [e] elegantly, That GOD will not have his Altar covered with Tears: CHRIST will not be fed with Robbery; ſuch ſort of Suſtenance is moſt ungrateful to him: It is an Affront to the LORD, to offer unclean Things to him: He had rather be neglected, and periſh by Famine (in his poor Members) than live by ſuch Oblations. The one is Cruelty, but the other is both Cruelty, and an Affront likewiſe. It is better to give nothing, than to give that which of right belongs to other Men. After the ſame manner St. Auſtin anſwers the plauſible Apologies of Spoilers and Oppreſſors. Their Plea was, I make [f] Feaſts of Charity, I ſend Meat to them that are bound in Priſon, I clothe the Naked, I entertain Strangers. Do you imagine this is properly giving? Do not take from others, and then you may be ſaid to give. He, to whom you give, rejoices; but he, from whom you take, laments: Which of the two will GOD hear? You ſay to him, to whom you give, Give Thanks, becauſe you have received. But he, on the other Hand, from whom you have taken it, ſays I mourn: You keep almoſt the whole, and give a ſmall Portion to the other. If therefore you give to the Poor what you take from others, GOD is not pleaſed with ſuch Works. GOD ſays to thee, Thou Fool, I commanded thee to give, but not that which is another Man's. If thou haſt ought, give of that which is thine own: If thou haſt not of thine own to give, it is better thou ſhouldſt not give, than ſpoil ſome to give to others. He ſays in another Place [g], Some were ſo vain as to think, that a little Alms before they died would effectually expiate all their Sins, however wicked or rapacious they had been all their Lives before: Againſt whom he diſputes accurately and ſharply in ſeveral Books [h] which it would be needleſs here to cite at large. I only add, That agreeable to theſe Rules, the Author of the Conſtitutions under the Name of the Apoſtles, giving Directions to Biſhops about the Perſons from whom they were to receive Oblations at the Altar, or refuſe them, among many other Criminals, orders them to reject thoſe who afflict the Widow, and oppreſs [i] the fatherleſs by their Power, and fill the Priſons with innocent Perſons, and evil intreat their Servants with Stripes, Famine or hard Bondage; and lay Waſte whole Cities; all Lawyers that plead for Injuſtice or unrighteous Cauſes; all unrighteous Judges; all wicked Publicans, and Uſurers, and Soldiers that are falſe Accuſers, and not content with their Wages, but oppreſs the Poor.

SECT. 10. Of the Exactions and Bribery of Judges.

AND that this was agreeable to the common Diſcipline of the Church, will appear by examining the Particulars. To begin with that which was the moſt flagitious and intolerable, the Oppreſſion committed by Judges in their Office, partly by cruel Exactions, partly by feigned Accuſations, and partly by Perverſion of Juſtiee for the ſake of Bribery and filthy Lucre: Which Sorts of Oppreſſion the Law commonly terms Crimen Repetundarum & Peculatus. For though Peculatus often ſignifies robbing the Publick by private Stealth, yet it ſometimes alſo denotes the Oppreſſions and Injuries done by Magiſtrates to the Subject. In which Caſe the Cenſures of the Church were often inflicted upon oppreſſing Governors. As we have a famous Inſtance of Syneſius [k] excommunicating Andronicus the Governor of Ptolemais, for his violent Oppreſſion of the People. The Imperial Laws were alſo very numerous and very ſevere in this Caſe, to ſecure the Rights and Properties of the People from ſuch violent Invaſion. They did not indeed allow the Subject, for ſome Time, to accuſe the Magiſtrate during the Year of his Adminiſtration: But Theodoſius [l] took off even that Reſtraint, and not only gave Men Liberty, but invited and encouraged Men of all Orders to bring Informations againſt corrupt Judges, if

if they had either ſuffered any Violence from them themſelves, or knew them to be guilty of Bribery, or ſetting Juſtice to ſale, or any the like Improbity: And that as well in the Time of their Adminiſtration as afterward; promiſing a a Reward to any that ſhould make good ſuch Charges againſt them. The like Encouragement was given by Conſtantine [m] and Valentinian Junior [n], as appears by their Laws now extant in the Theodoſian Code. And whereas the Puniſhment of ſuch Corruption in the Magiſtrate was only a pecuniary Mulct before, Theodoſius [o] by a new Law made it Death, as thinking no Puniſhment too great for ſuch an Offence. At Carthage they had a peculiar Cuſtom, which tended much to diſcourage all ſuch rapacious Practices in their Magiſtrates. For Proſper [p] tells us, That every Year the new Proconſul was uſed upon a certain Day, which they called, Albi Citatio, to read over a Liſt of the Governors that had been before him: And then they that had been Juſt in their Adminiſtration, and gone through their Office without Covetouſneſs, or Rapaciouſneſs, or any ſuch flagrant Crimes, were honoured in their Abſence by the Applauſes of the People: But on the other Hand, they whom Covetouſneſs had driven into ſcandalous Meaſures of Robbery and Violence, were noted with Marks of Infamy by general Hiſſings and Reproaches.

SECT. 11. Of the Exactions of Publicans, and Collectors of the Publick Revenues, and other Officers of the Roman Empire.

THE Laws were equally ſevere againſt all Super-Exactors, as they are called, of the Publick Revenues. The common Burden of Tribute and Taxes was generally hard enough, even as ſettled by Law in the Roman [q] Government: But the illegal Exactions of the Publicans and Collectors made it a much more intolerable Burden. Therefore the Laws were forced to reſtrain and chaſtize their Oppreſſions with great Severity. Conſtantine made ſeveral Laws to this Purpoſe, [r] condemning this Crime as a Capital Offence, according to Gothofred's Interpretation of ſevere Puniſhment. Valentinian and Valens [s] obliged the Exactor to make Reſtitution fourfold to the injured Party, and condemned the Judge in the ſame Quadruple Sum, if he refuſed upon Complaint to do him Juſtice. But Arcadius finding that this Law of Valentinian did not effectually put a ſtop to theſe exorbitant Demands, made it Death for any Exactor to go [t] beyond his Bounds. And Honorius ſome Years after joined both Puniſhments together, ordering the Exactor [u] to be put to Death, and Quadruple Reſtitution to be made out of his Eſtate to the injured Perſon; laying a Fine withal of Thirty Pound of Gold upon any Judge that neglected to put the Law in Execution. Now what the Civil Law ſo ſeverely condemned, there is no Queſtion but that the Eccleſiaſtical Law puniſhed in the ſpiritual Way with equal Severity, under the general Name of Oppreſſion.

SECT. 12. Of the Exactions of Advocates, and Lawyers, and Apparitors of Judges.

THERE was another cruel Way of Oppreſſion under Colour of Law, much practiſed by Advocates and Lawyers, commonly called, Scholaſtici & Defenſores, and the Apparitors and Officers of the Civil Courts, and Attendants of Judges. Their Exactions and Extortions upon Mens Neceſſities, are frequently complained of, and provided againſt by ſeveral Laws. The Law allowed them certain ſtated Wages, or Canonical Penſions, as the Term is, for Pleading and Managing Cauſes: But beyond theſe they often made no Scruple to exact Maintenance for themſelves and their Horſes, whereever they came, in the City, or in Manſions, without any Pay; which Super-exactions are particularly noted in Advocates and Officers by Conſtantius [x] as Inſtances of inſatiable Covetouſneſs: And therefore he gives orders to Judges to defend the People from ſuch Extortions, and not ſuffer their Injuries and Encroachments ments to go unpuniſhed. Conſtantine reflects [y] upon the like Extortion of Advocates in making wicked Bargains with their Clients, to make over to them the beſt of their Lands, their Cattle, and their Slaves; which he calls Spoiling and Pillaging thoſe that ſtood in Need of their Patronage; and orders, That ſuch rapacious Vulturs, as Gothofred terms them, ſhould be expelled the Court, and never after be allowed the Liberty of Pleading. Another Way, whereby wicked Advocates were wont to oppreſs the Poor, was, by encouraging their Clients to draw their Adverſaries in a Civil Cauſe from the Cognizance of the ordinary Judges to a Military Tribunal, where they had more Liberty by Bribery, and other corrupt Practices, to oppreſs them. Great Complaints are made by Ammianus [z] Marcellinus of this Sort of Depredation made upon the Poor in the Time of Valens, who, he ſays, opened the Doors to Robbery, which gained Strength every Day by the Pravity of the Judges and Advocates, who ſold the Cauſes of poor Men to the Rulers in the Army, or ſuch as bore Sway in the Palace, by which Means they increaſed their Wealth, or brought themſelves to Preferment. To correct this Abuſe, Arcadius made a Law [a], that whoever transferred a Civil Cauſe from the Ordinary Judges to a Military Court, ſhould be liable to Baniſhment, beſides other Penalties inflicted by former Laws; and the Advocate concerned in ſuch a Cauſe, ſhould forfeit Ten Pounds of Gold, except they had a ſpecial Licence from the Emperor for ſuch a Removal. Valentinian III. added to this, That the Advocate ſhould loſe his Office [b] and the Counſellor be baniſhed alſo. And there were many other Laws made by Theodoſius, Valentinian Junior and Marcian, to the ſame Purpoſe, which the curious Reader may find in Gothofred upon the forementioned Law of Arcadius. 'Tis true, the Eccleſiaſtical Law does not particularly ſpecify theſe Things; but we may ſuppoſe, they being great Crimes, were included in the general Notion of illegal Oppreſſion, which was thought to deſerve Eccleſiaſtical Cenſure.

SECT. 13. Of griping Uſury and Extortion.

BUT there is one Sort of Oppreſſion, which the Laws of the Church more particularly take notice of, and condemn both in the Clergy and Laity, that is, griping Uſury or Extortion upon the Poor. The Nature of Uſury, and the ſeveral Degrees of it, I have had Occaſion already to explain [*] in a former Book: All therefore I ſhall here take Notice of, is, the Cenſures of the Church paſſed upon all that were guilty of what they reckoned cruel and criminal in it. The Council of Eliberis not only orders the Clergy to be degraded, who were found guilty of taking Uſury, but threatens [c] Excommunication to every Layman, that after Admonition perſiſted in the Practice of it. And the firſt Council of [d] Carthage gives this Reaſon why Clergymen ſhould not practiſe it, Becauſe it was a Thing that was culpable in Laymen, And the Reaſon why it was ſo generally condemned by the Ancients even in Laymen, was, becauſe it was generally a great Oppreſſion of the Poor, to whom the Charity of lending without Uſury was due; and many times it was attended with Extortion, as in the Centeſimal Intereſt, which was Twelve in the Hundred; and what they called Hemiolia, which was receiving half as much more as the Principal by way of Intereſt, both which were condemned by the Laws of the State as illegal Exactions, and downright Extortion. Upon which Bottom all the Arguments and Invectives of the Ancients are founded. So that Uſury in this Senſe was reckoned a plain Robbery of the Poor, and a cruel Oppreſſion of thoſe, to whom Mercy and Charity ought to be ſhewed upon all Occaſions. And to this we may join all Extortion made by Force or Fear, which the Civil Law condemns and annuls [e] though a Covenant or Promiſe had been obtained of the injured Party.

SECT. 14. Of Forgery.

THE laſt Sort of Robbery, was that which was committed by Fraud and Deceit, which the Law calls Dolus malus, & Stellionatus, from Stellio, that little Animal with ſhining Spots like Stars, the Lizard, or Tarantula, of which Naturaliſts [f] obſerve, That there is no Animal which more fraudulently envies Man than this: For changing his Skin every Year, which was reckoned a ſovereign Remedy againſt the Falling-ſickneſs, he devours it himſelf, leſt Men ſhould have the Benefit of it: Whence the Lawyers call all Impoſture and Fraud, which which has no ſpecial Title in Law, by the Name of Stellionatus [g] as Ulpian explains it: Thus if a Man Mortgage or Pawn that which is already ingaged, fraudulently diſſembling the former Obligation; or paſs it away in Exchange, or pretend to pay Debts with it, when it is under a Pre-ingagement; all ſuch Frauds are called Stellionatus. So if a Man change the Wares which he has ſold, or corrupt them, or direct them to another Uſe after he has pawn'd them; or if he uſed any Colluſion or Impoſture to compaſs the Death of any Man, this was reckoned a Fraud of the ſame Nature. If in giving a Pawn, he ſubſtituted Braſs in the Room of Gold; if he ſold a Freeman under the Notion of a Slave; if he received a Sum of Money as a Debt, that was really paid him before; he was liable to be puniſhed upon an Action of Fraud upon the ſame [h] Title; and for his Crime, if he was a Plebeian, he might be condemned to the Mines; if a Perſon of Quality, he might be ſent into Baniſhment, or be degraded. The Inſtances of ſuch Frauds and Colluſions are too many and intricate, to be here particularly recounted, but the chief of them may be ſummed up under theſe Five Titles, Forgery, Calumny, Flattery, Deceitfulneſs in Truſt, and Deceitfulneſs in Traffick.

FORGERY may be committed either in Counterfeiting Coin, to impoſe upon the Unskilful and Unwary; or elſe in Counterfeiting Deeds and Inſtruments, to lay Claim to other Mens Eſtates, as is done by thoſe who make a Title upon falſe Wills or Bonds, or conceal or corrupt the true ones. The Counterfeiting of the Coin, was not only an Injury to private Men in Commerce, but alſo an Act of Treaſon againſt the Supreme Powers: And therefore puniſhed as a Capital Offence with Confiſcation, Baniſhment, or Death, and that ſometimes of the cruelleſt Sort, burning alive, as appears from ſeveral Laws in the Theodoſian Code [i] made upon this Occaſion. Particularly Conſtantine [k] in one of his Laws, orders ſuch to be put to the Sword, or burnt alive, or to be puniſhed with ſome ſuch violent Death, whether they were guilty of clipping the Coin, and diminiſhing its Quantity, or adulterating its Quality, and vending it as good by manifeſt Fraud and Impoſture. And what the Law puniſhed thus ſeverely in the State, there is no Queſtion but that it was with equal Severity in the ſpiritual Way cenſured, and condemned as a Fraud and Robbery by the Church. The Counterfeiting of falſe Deeds, and eſpecially falſe Wills, was eſteemed an heinous Crime even by the old Roman Laws, of which there is a whole Title [l] in the Pandects; one of which, related by the famous Lawyer Julius Paulus ſays, [m], Whoever conceals a Will, or conveys it away, or deſtroys it, or puts another in its Room, or cancels it; or whoever writes, or ſigns, or fraudulently produces a falſe Will, is liable to be puniſhed upon an Action of Forgery by the Cornelian Law. And that Puniſhment is either Baniſhment, or [n] Confiſcation, or Death, or according to the Quality of the Offender. And by the Laws of Conſtantine [o] the ſame Puniſhments of Baniſhment and Death were awarded to this Sort of Forgery. And though the Eccleſiaſtical Laws do not particularly ſpecify the Puniſhment of this Crime, yet they muſt be ſuppoſed to comprehend it under the general Title of Theft and Robbery, which made Men liable to Eccleſiaſtical Cenſure.

SECT. 15. Of Calumny with Regard to Mens Eſtates and Fortunes; and its Reverſe, the Fraud of Flattery.

ANOTHER Sort of Fraud that might be committed againſt Men, in order to rob them of their Eſtates and Fortunes, was Impeaching them of feigned Crimes by falſe Accuſation and Calumny. This ſometimes affected Mens Lives, and then it was a Species of Murder, and puniſhed under that Denomination, as has been ſhewed before. Sometimes it affected their Fame and Reputation, and as ſuch it will be conſidered hereafter. In this Place we take it only as affecting Eſtates and Fortunes, and as an Intention by Fraud to rob them of their Property and Poſſeſſions. In which Senſe the Law ſometimes takes Calumny and falſe Accuſation, as a Species of Theft and Robbery, and proſcribes it under that Title. As appears from that Law of Valentinian and Gratian in the Theodoſian Code, which joyns theſe three Sorts of Calumny together [p], viz. againſt Mens Fame and Reputation, againſt their Fortunes, and againſt their Lives; Ordering, That whoever impleaded impleaded another upon any of these three Heads, should undergo the same Penalty as he intended to bring upon the Party he impeached, if he proved to be a false Accuser, and did not fairly make out his Action. Against such Calumniators, fraudulent Informers, and false Accusers, (whose chief Aim was in a plausible Way, and under Pretence of legal Process, to come at other Mens Estates) there are two [q] or three whole Titles more in the Theodosian Code, where such Accusers and Impeachers are called the Bane of human Life, and the common Pest of Mankind: And they are ordered to be prosecuted to the last Degree with Confiscation and Death. The Ecclesiastical Law also enjoins them a severe Penance. By a Canon of the Council of Eliberis [r], "He "that bears false Witness against another to "the Loss of his Life or Liberty, is not "to be received to Communion even at his "last Hour." And if it was in a lighter Cause, as in a pecuniary Matter or the like, he was to do Penance for Five Years, before he was reconciled and perfectly restored to the Peace of the Church. St. Austin [s] also reckons this Sort of Calumny among the Species of Robbery and Oppression. And the Author of the Constitutions [t], giving Directions to the Bishop what Sort of Persons he should reject from the Communion, among others mentions Soldiers who are false Accusers, and not content with their Wages, but oppress the Poor.

ADULATION and Flattery is the reverse of Calumny, and yet by this means some made a Shift by fraudulent Arts to get themselves made Heirs to dying Persons, to the Prejudice of those who had a more just and real Title. To prevent which Sort of Fraud, Valentinian made a Law [u], That no Ecclesiastical Person or Ascetick (for the Fraud was chiefly committed by them) should clancularly resort to the Houses of dying Widows or Orphans, to get their Estates or any Legacies to be settled upon them: Which if they did, they were liable to be prosecuted at Law by the deceased Party's next Relations: They were to enjoy nothing that they had so fraudulently obtained, under Pretence of Religion, from any such Persons, either by Way of Donation and Gift, or last Will and Testament; but the legal Heirs might make their Claim, and set aside all such Legacies; or otherwise they were to be confiscated to the Publick. There are two Laws of Theodosius [x] also much to the same Purpose. And the Fathers are so far from complaining of the seeming Hardship of these Laws, that they rather complain of the Fraud and Avarice, and Rapaciousness of those who gave Occasion to these Pious Emperors to make such Laws against them. St. Ambrose [y] says, Such Men were guilty of Violence, and Invasion of the Rights of others: They made a greater Prey of Widows by their Blandishments and Flatteries, than others did by Torments: But it was all one before GOD, whether a Man seized the Substance of others by Force, or by Circumvention, so long as he detained what of Right belonged to other Men. In like manner St. Jerom: I am ashamed [z] to say, that the Idol-Priests and Stage-Players and Horse-Racers and Harlots may be left Heirs, whilst Clerks and Monks only are prohibited by this Law; and that not by persecuting Tyrants, but Christian Princes. Neither do I complain of the Law, but it grieves me to think we should deserve such a Law. The Caution of the Law is provident and severe, and yet our Covetousness is not restrained thereby. We evade the Laws by Feoffements in Trust: And as if the Edicts of Emperors were greater than those of CHRIST, we are afraid of their Laws, whilst we contemn the Gospels. It is evident by these Complaints made by these holy Fathers, that this fraudulent Way of catching at the Estates of Widows by fawning Arts and Assentation (whence these flattering Hypocrites were commonly called Hæredipetæ, and Captatores) was esteemed no less a Theft, than that which was committed by open Violence and Oppression. This was a scandalous Sort of Theft even among the Heathens; Juvenal [a] often spends his satyrical Wit upon it: And so does Martial, and Seneca, and Pliny, and Lucian [b] and many others. Which makes it less Wonder, that the the Chriſtian Laws ſhould proſcribe it, and the Fathers ſo ſharply inveigh againſt it, even when it looked like a Means of augmenting the Revenues of the Church. But that ſhews the Purity of the ancient Diſcipline, that they would not ſpare a Crime that could appear with ſo fine an Aſpect; being utter Enemies to all ſcandalous and diſreputable Ways of increaſing the Clerical Maintenance, as I have had Occaſion to ſhew in ſeveral Inſtances, in ſpeaking more particularly of the Revenues of the Church.

SECT. 16. Of Deceitfulneſs in Truſt.

ANOTHER Sort of Fraud is committed in Matters of Truſt, as when a Steward or Servant embezels his Maſter's Goods, or makes fraudulent and injurious Bargains for him; or when a Guardian or Tutor, who is entruſted with the Execution of a Dead Man's Will, acts an unfaithful Part, and enriches himſelf out of what was deſigned for the Maintenance of others; or when a Man denies or conceals or refuſes to reſtore any Thing that was depoſited with him, and committed to his Truſt. The Ancients were extremely conſcientious in this laſt Inſtance of Things committed to their Truſt; in ſo much as that Pliny himſelf can inform us, That it was one Part of their ſolemn Buſineſs every Lord's-Day, to bind themſelves with a Sacrament, or an Oath, not to commit any Wickedneſs, Theft [c], Robbery, Adultery; not to falſify their Word; not to deny any Thing wherewith they were intruſted, when they were required to deliver it up again. And therefore we may reaſonably conclude, That no one was thought qualified for Communion in ſuch a Society, who was guilty of Breach of Faith in any ſuch Truſt, which was both againſt the Laws of common Juſtice, and his own ſolemn Engagement. Some Truſts were of a more ſacred Nature, being deſigned for the Service of GOD and the Poor: And Unfaithfulneſs in ſuch Truſts was therefore reckoned a double and a triple Crime, becauſe it added, as it were, Murder and Sacrilege to the Injuſtice. Upon this Account the Fourth Council of Carthage [d] calls thoſe who endeavour to defraud the Church of ſuch Legacies or Oblations as were left her by the Dead, Murderers of the Poor; becauſe their robbing the Church of that which was given for the Maintenance of the Poor, was in effect to ſtarve and famiſh the Poor: And for ſuch Fraud and Cruelty they are ſubjected to the Cenſure of Excommunication. Among the Epiſtles of Cyprian there is a Letter of Cornelius Biſhop of Rome [e] to Cyprian giving him an Account of one Nicoſtratus a Deacon, whom he charges with this Sort of Fraud: For he had not only cheated his temporal Patroneſs, whoſe Affairs he managed, but had carried away a great Part of the Revenues of the Church, which was intruſted with him as Archdeacon for the Maintenance of poor Widows and Orphans; for which Crime he was forced to fly from Rome, for Fear of being called to give an Account of his Rapine and Sacrilege. And Cyprian himſelf in another Epiſtle [f] giving an Account to Cornelius of the Wickedneſs of Novatius, ſays, he had defrauded the Widows and Orphans, and denied the Church's Revenues, which were intruſted with him; for which and many other Crimes, as ſtarving his own Father, and cauſing his Wife by a ſudden Blow to miſcarry, he had certainly been removed not only from his Seat in the Preſbytery, but from all Communion in the Church, had not the Approach of a fierce Perſecution put a Stop to his Tryal and Condemnation. By which it appears, That there was no Crime more heinouſly reſented than this of Unfaithfulneſs in Truſt, nor any more ſeverely purſued and puniſhed by the Cenſures of the Church.

SECT. 17. Of Deceitfulneſs in Traffick.

THE laſt Sort of Fraud is that which is committed in Traffick and Commerce between Buyer and Seller. The Buyer may be guilty either in taking Advantage of the Ignorance of the Seller, when he knows not the true value of his own Goods; taking Advantage of his Neceſſity, when his Poverty compells him to ſell at an Under-rate; or in paying him in falſe and corrupt Coin, which is the ſame Thing as defrauding him in the Original Contract. This laſt Sort of Fraud was ſeverely puniſhed by the Roman Laws both Heathen and Chriſtian. For the Vender, as well as the Forger of falſe Coin is condemned in all the Penalties of Fraud recounted in the Pandects [g]. And Conſtantine made it a Capital Crime [h] not only for any one to adulterate, or clip, or diminiſh the Coin, but alſo to paſs any ſuch away knowingly in Payment to others, to put a wilful Cheat upon them. And though this be not expreſsly and particularly ſpecified in the Eccleſiaſtical Law, yet being a principal Fraud, it muſt be comprehended under the general Title of Frauds, which came under the Cognizance of the Spiritual Jurisdiction. For Fraud was always reckoned a Crime of the first Magnitude; St. Austin [i] puts it in the same Class with Murder, Adultery, Fornication, Theft, and Sacrilege: And Tertullian joyns it [k] with the great Sins of Blasphemy, Idolatry, Apostasie, Murder and Adultery, which defile the Temple of GOD, and unqualify Men for Christian Communion. As to the Buyer's Over-reaching the Seller by taking Advantage of his Ignorance or Unskilfulness in the just Value of his Commodity, this being a Thing not easy to be discovered or proved, it may be supposed to be a Fraud rather left to his own Conscience, than ordinarily brought under publick Discipline. Yet certain it is, a conscientious Man will not load his Soul even with this Guilt. St. Austin [l] gives a rare Instance of singular Justice in this Case. He says, He knew a Man, who having a Book offered him to be sold at an Under-rate, by one who understood not the true Value of it, gave him the just Price of it; surprizing him by an uncommon Generosity and Equity, which allows no Man to take Advantage of another's Ignorance; though it be against the general Maxim of the World, which loves to buy Cheap, and sell Dear (as the Mimick said, when he undertook to divine and tell all Men their Wishes) whatever evil Consequences may attend it.

ON the other hand, Fraud may be committed also by the Seller, and that several Ways; either by Over-rating the Commodity to the ignorant and necessitous Buyer, which is also Extortion and Oppression; or by vending corrupt Wares, which are not really and truly what they are said or appear to be, which is a Fraud in the Quality; or by using false Weights and Measures, which is a Fraud in the Quantity of the Thing contracted for, and which is commonly branded with this Note in Scripture, That it is an Abomination to the LORD. The old Roman [m] Laws were exceeding careful about this Matter of just Weights and Measures. The Ediles were obliged to examine them; the Standards of both were religiously kept in the Capitol: And thence afterward in Christian Times, they were removed and placed under the Custody of Bishops in the Churches, as appears from Justinian's [n] Pragmatick Sanction, and one of his Novels [o] to this Purpose. Every City, and Mansion, or Place of Custom, had likewise their publick Standards, as well to prevent the Frauds of the Exactors of Tribute, as those of others in private Contracts one with another. To which Purpose there are several Laws of Theodosius [p], and Honorius [q], and Valentinian III, [r], and Majorian [s] in the Theodosian Code. And very severe and capital Punishments are there appointed for all such as were found guilty of Fraud in altering or corrupting the publick Standard. The Church has not many particular Laws about this in her Discipline: But it being a flagrant Crime in the Eye of the State, we may presume she punished Offenders in this Kind by the general Laws against Fraud, without specifying all particular Cases. The Author of the Constitutions [t] gives a general Rule about this Matter, when he orders the Bishop to reject the Oblations of all such as were noted by the common Name of ῥαδιεργοὶ, fraudulent Dealers: And he more particularly marks the δολομέλεσι, those that used Fraud in Measures, and the ζυγοκρέσαι, that is, such as though they did not use false Weights, and Balances of Deceit; yet used a more sly Art and Fraud, in giving a Turn to the Scale with their Fingers, to gain that by Artifice and Sleight of Hand in Weighing, which they durst not venture to do by false Weights. Constantine also takes Notice [u] of this Fraud in one of his Laws, where he forbids the Receivers of Tribute to use any Art with their Fingers to press down the Scale, but to be exact in Poysing and Libration, that no one might complain of any Injustice done him. And it is observable, That Julian [x] to prevent such Frauds in Weighing, appointed a standing Officer in every City (whom he calls by a Greek Name, Zygostates, that is, the Publick Weigher, or Supervisor of the Scale) who was to determine all Controversies arising about Weight between Buyer and Seller, and put an End to them by examining what was suspected, by the Publick Standard. And the Care of an Heathen Emperor to correct Frauds and Abuses of this Nature, made it more reasonable for the Church to look into them, and bring Delinquents of this Kind under Penance by Power of Ecclesiastical Censure.

THE Author of the Constitutions likewise takes Notice of the other Sort of Fraud, which may be committed in Traffick by dissembling the ill Qualities of Things, and Vending corrupt Wares under the Notion and Appearance of that which is perfect and good. As when a Man puts off Brass for Gold, or a Mixture of Water

Water or other Liquor for pure Wine. Therefore in his Directions to the Biſhop, whoſe Oblations he ſhall receive, and whoſe refuſe at the Altar, he ſays, In the firſt Place he ſhall reject thoſe whom the Greeks call, Κάπηλοι; and the Latins, Caupones; by which he does not mean Victuallers ſtrictly, or Merchants or Tradeſmen in general, though the Words be ſometimes ſo taken; but fraudulent Huckſters, who corrupt and adulterate their Wares, to make the greater Gain and Advantage of them. As appears from that Paſſage, which, according to the Septuagint, he quotes out of Iſaiah, i.22. Οἱ Κάπηλοι σου μίσγουσι τὸν οἶνον πῶ ὕδατι, Thy Huckſters mingle Wine with Water. Lactantius [y] argues this Point acutely againſt Carneades the Heathen Philoſopher, who taught, That if a Man had a fugitive Slave, or an infected and peſtilential Houſe, which he ſets to Sale, he is bound in Prudence not to diſcover their Faults; becauſe if he does, he ſhall either ſell them for little, or not at all. Which he calls poyſonous Doctrine, and ſhews it at large to be both againſt the Rules of Chriſtian Juſtice, and Prudence alſo. For nothing can be more valuable to a Man than keeping Innocence and a good Conſcience. Upon this account St. Hilary [z] ſays, whoever either deſigns, or commits Fornication, or Murder, or Theft, or Fraud, or Rapine, makes his Body a Den of Thieves. Some of the Ancients indeed [a] are a little more ſevere againſt negotiating in any Trade, except a Manual Art, for Gain, becauſe of the Danger of Fraud, that ſticks ſo cloſe between Buying and Selling: But Pope Leo [b] more favourably diſtinguiſhes between honeſt and filthy Gain, and ſays, The Quality of the Gain either excuſes or condemns the Tradeſman. So that it was not all Trade and Merchandize that they condemned as ſimply unlawful in it ſelf, but only when it was accompanied with ſuch fraudulent Practices, as made it an unconſcionable Gain, and no better than a plauſible Theft, and more artificial Way of Robbery.

THE laſt Sort of Fraud in the Seller is committed by Over-rating his Commodity; which is done either by Monopolizers, when a ſingle Man, or a Body of Men, get the ſole Power and Propriety of any Commodity into their own Hands, and ſet what arbitrary Price they pleaſe upon it; or when the Seller takes the Advantage of the Ignorance or Neceſſity of the Buyer to inhance his Price, and make a Gain of his Weakneſs, his Poverty, or his Indiſcretion. Againſt the Fraud of Monopolizers, there is a famous Law of the Emperor Zeno [c] in the Juſtinian Code, where he firſt forbids any ſingle Man to monopolize any Wares under the Penalty of Confiſcation of all his Goods, and perpetual Baniſhment of his Perſon: And then proceeds to inhibit any Body of Men to combine in any unlawful Contract not to ſell their Goods but at a certain Rate, under the Penalty of forfeiting Forty Pounds of Gold: He likewiſe prohibits all Artificers and Workmen from Combining among themſelves, That if any one undertook a Work for another Man, and left it unfiniſhed, no one of the ſame Occupation ſhould meddle with it to finiſh it without the Conſent of the firſt Undertaker: Which was an Art of raiſing their Labour to what arbitrary Price they were pleaſed to ſet upon it. To obviate which Fraud, and the Difficulty which honeſt Men thereby lay under, he diſſolved all ſuch unlawful Contracts and Combinations, and left Men at perfect Liberty, when they were deſerted by one Workman, to employ another, without any Fear or Moleſtation ariſing from the Pretence of any Pre-ingagement.

THE other Way of enhancing the Price, by the Seller's taking Advantage of the Buyer's Ignorance or Indiſcretion, is what no Laws could well provide againſt in all Caſes: And therefore it was rather left to the Equity and Conſcience of Men, to be examined and judged by the Divine Law, than brought under any certain Rules of human Judgment. However, being a Species of Fraud, and Extortion, and Oppreſſion, it is probable the Governors of the Church took Occaſion in many notorious Caſes to condemn it under the general Title of ῥαδιυργία, that baſe Craft, and Gain that is gotten by Impoſture in any Kind, for which the Biſhop in the Conſtitutions [d] is required to debar Men from making their Oblations at the Altar.

AND to this Head may be reduced the Selling of that to which the Seller himſelf has no juſt Title; as the Selling of Fugitive Slaves belonging to another Maſter, which the Law forbids [e], both becauſe it is a Sort of Plagiary in the Seller, and an Impoſition upon the Buyer, and an Encouragement to the Slaves to rob and pillage, and deſert their proper Maſters. Such is alſo the Selling Things of no real Worth, but a mere Fraud and Impoſture; as, the taking Money for Calculating Nativities, and Telling of Fortunes, and Divining for Things loſt, and many the like vain Practices, which the Canons condemn, not only as curious and ſuperſtitious Arts, but as fraudulent [f] and cheating Tricks, impoſing upon Men by Cozenage and Impoſture. All which, and a Thouſand other Ways

Ways of Pillaging, Oppreſſing and Defrauding, the Church in her Diſcipline cenſured as direct Methods of committing Theft and Robbery.

BUT beſides the direct Ways of committing this Sin, there were ſeveral other baſe and diſallowable Practices, which virtually and by juſt Conſtruction might be interpreted Theft: As the harbouring, abetting, and concealing Robbers; buying of ſtolen Goods; Leading an idle Life without any lawful Vocation; Spending in Prodigality or unlawful Gaming that which was deſigned for the Maintenance of others. All which either the Laws of Church or State cenſured as ſo many indirect Ways of encouraging or committing Robbery. The Laws of the State laid a ſevere Penalty upon any that ſheltered any Criminals in any Kind whatſoever. Valentinian in one Law condemns them as Aſſociates [g] with the Criminals, and makes them liable to the ſame Puniſhment. In another [h] Law he particularly condemns ſuch as harbour Robbers and skreen them from publick Juſtice; making them liable either to corporal Puniſhment, or Confiſcation of all their Goods, according to the Quality of their Perſons. And if any Agent or Steward ſheltered them without his Lord's Knowledge, he was to be burnt alive. There is another Law of Marcian to the ſame Effect in the Juſtinian [i] Code, ſhewing how Men are to be treated who entertain Robbers, and uſe Force to protect and defend them.

THEY who bought ſtolen Goods, knowing them to be ſuch, were alſo deemed guilty of partaking in the Theft, becauſe this was an Encouragement to Robbers, and a Sort of Approbation of them. St. Chryſoſtom [k] and St. Auſtin [l] make this Remark upon thoſe Words of the Pſalmiſt, When thou ſaweſt a Thief, thou conſentedſt unto him, That to ſhew a Liking to the Thief, is the ſame Thing as committing the Robbery. And certainly none can ſhew a greater Liking to him, than he who for a little filthy Lucre gives Encouragement to him by trafficking and negotiating with him, as ſome Criticks obſerve the Arabick Tranſlation literally renders the Phraſe of the Pſalmiſt. There is but one Caſe in which the Caſuiſts allow Men to buy of a known Thief, and that is when he can do it for a ſmall Matter with an Intent to reſtore what is ſtolen to the true Owner. For in that Caſe he intends not the Encouragement of the Thief, but the Intereſt and Advantage of the juſt Proprietor. And for this they alledge [*] the known Rules of the Civil Law. But in all other Caſes to negociate with Thieves is to partake in their Sin, and to encourage and ſtrengthen them in their ſubſequent Villanies. Therefore this and all other Ways of Partaking and Co-operating with Thieves (of which there are various Methods noted and ſummed up by the Doctors [m] in the Schools [n]) were anciently computed in the general Account of Theft and Fraud, and accordingly puniſhed with Eccleſiaſtical Cenſure.

SECT. 19. Idleneſs cenſured as the Mother of Robbery.

NEITHER was it only the aſſociating and partaking with Robbers which they thus condemned, but all ſuch unlawful Vocations, or rather want of Vocation, as put Men in a manner upon the Neceſſity of Stealing, and having Recourſe to Fraud and Violence, as the only Support of a diſſolute Life. Idleneſs they eſteemed the Mother and Nurſe of Theft, and a Life without Imployment as no better than that of a common Robber: Becauſe Men of that Character were only, Fruges conſumere nati, born to devour that which of Right belonged to others. Therefore the Laws both of Church and State are very ſevere againſt all ſuch. There is a Law of Valentinian Junior in the Theodoſian Code [o] againſt young, ſtout, luſty Beggars, who being Slaves or Freedmen able to work, yet fled from their Maſters to Rome to skulk in Corners, and live as Drones upon falſe Charity: Whom he orders to be examined, and if they were found able to work, they ſhould either become the Poſſeſſion of the Informer who diſcovered them, or be returned to their Original Maſters, who had a good Action in Law againſt any who either harboured ſuch Fugitives, or by their Counſels inſtigated them to Deſertion. Juſtinian inſerted this Law into his Code [p] likewiſe, and ſet forth a new Edict of his own to the ſame Purpoſe. The Church alſo was very careful in this Matter, not to ſuffer ſtout idle wandring Beggars to devour the Revenue of thoſe that were really Infirm and Poor. Upon this account ſhe forbad any of her Clergy to rove about the World, or wander from one Dioceſe to another without Letters Dimiſſory, as ſome did under the ſcandalous Name of Βαναύσοι, Men out of Buſineſs, as I have had Occaſion to ſhew [*] more fully in another Place. Men of the Aſcetick Life to live upon their own Labour. Inſomuch that a Monk who did not work, was looked upon as a Thief and a Defrauder, as Socrates [q] tells us the Egyptian Fathers were uſed to expreſs themſelves concerning ſuch as eat other Mens Bread for nought. St. Auſtin [r] wrote a whole Book to prove this to be the proper Duty of a Monk, to live upon his own Labour, where he anſwers all Objections that can be made to the contrary. And there are innumerable Paſſages in other ancient Writers upon the ſame Topick, to which I have referred the Reader in diſcourſing upon the Rules of the Monaſtick Life [*] in a former Book. Here I ſhall only add one noted Paſſage of St. Ambroſe, where he gives Rules and Directions for diſpenſing Charity with Prudence only to ſuch as really want it. There ought to be, ſays he [s] a due Meaſure obſerved in Liberality, that our Charity be not uſeleſs: And this Moderation is chiefly to be regarded by Biſhops and Prieſts, that they do not diſpenſe (the Church's Treaſure) to importunate Beggars, but as the Juſtice and Neceſſity of the Caſe requires: For none are commonly more greedy in their Petitions than ſuch as thoſe. Many come a Begging, who are luſty and ſtrong; many come, who have no other Reaſon but an idle vagrant Humour; who would evacuate the Subſidies of the Poor, or empty their Cheſts, and conſume what is laid up for their Maintenance: Neither are they content with a little, but require great Largeſſes; they appear as Gentlemen in their Dreſs, and make that a Means to promote their Petition, and pretending to be Men of good Birth, they make Uſe of that as an Argument to gain a greater Contribution. If any one is too eaſy in giving Credit to ſuch as theſe, he will quickly defeat thoſe uſeful Methods which are taken for the Maintenance of the Poor. Therefore a Moderation is to be obſerved in Giving; that neither ſuch may be ſent away Empty, if really in Want; nor the Livelihood of the Poor be turned into another Channel, to become a Spoil and Prey to the Frauds of the Crafty. 'Tis plain from ſuch Accounts as theſe, that they looked upon an idle Life as no better than living upon the Spoils of the Poor, and a Robbery of the worſt Sort; becauſe it often joyned Fraud and Cruelty to the Theft, making uſe of falſe Pretences to divert the Current of Mens Charity from the Widow and the Fatherleſs, and turn it to themſelves; who had no Neceſſity but what they volutarily made to themſelves, either by their Idleneſs, or luxurious and prodigal Way of Living: The ſupporting of which was an arrant Theft and Robbing of the Poor, which is the Height and Extremity of Cruelty and Oppreſſion. And therefore as the Laws of the State made Idleneſs in Vagrants an Actionable Crime, ἀργίας δίκη the Law itſelf terms it: So the Rules of the Church brand it with an infamous Way of Living, and worthy of Eccleſiaſtical Cenſures.

SECT. 20. And Gaming, as an Occaſion of Fraud, and Ruin of many poor Families, who by this Means were reduced to the greateſt Exigence.

To this they added Gaming, as another Way of Cheating and Defrauding; and that in a double Reſpect, becauſe Men thereby were inclined to Cozenage and Deceit, and often ruined their Families, who by this Means were reduced to the greateſt Poverty and Want by the Diſſoluteneſs and Folly of a wicked Parent. There might be many other Reaſons for Declaiming againſt this Vice, as that it is a reproachful Way of diſſolute Living, and ſpending Mens Time in Luxury, condemned by many wiſe and ſober Heathens; that the old Roman Laws puniſhed Gameſters with Baniſhment, and many other ſevere [t] Penalties: That Gaming inclines Men to many great and horrible Vices, as Covetouſneſs, Perjury, Lying, Curſing and Swearing, Anger and Paſſion, Quarrelling and Murder, and Rioting and Intemperance of all Sorts: But I conſider it here only as attended with the evil Effects of Fraud and Conſumption of Mens Eſtates, which involves many poor Families in Ruin, in which Notion it is a downright Theft and Robbery. And as ſuch it was anciently prohibited by the Rules of the Church, not only to the Clergy, but the Laity alſo. "If any Biſhop, Presbyter, or Deacon, "ſays one of the Apoſtolical Canons [u], ſpend "his Time at Dice or in Drinking, let him ei-"ther refrain, or be depoſed." And the next Canon adds, If any Subdeacon, Reader, or "Singer do the like, let him be excommuni-"cated, and Laymen alſo." And ſo the Council of Eliberis ſeparates all Gameſters in general from the Communion. "If any Chri-"ſtian [x] play at Dice or Tables, let him "be reſtrained from Communicating: But if "he leaves off and amends, after a Year's "Penance he may be reconciled." Albaſpinæus thinks the Reaſon of the Prohibition was [y], becauſe the Dice had the Images of the Heathen Gods, as Venus, &c. imprinted on them inſtead of Numbers, and that Men in their Play called upon them for good Fortune: But if ſo, I conceive, a greater Penalty would have been impoſed upon them as upon Idolaters, by this Council. Therefore it is more reaſonable to ſuppoſe, That the Council conſidered Gaming as a miſpending of Mens uſeful Time, Conſumer of their Fortunes, and Deſtruction of

of their Families, and an Inlet to Fraud and Covetouſneſs, and all the forementioned Vices; and under that Notion, condemned ſuch as made a Trade and Buſineſs of it, and not a Diverſion. Upon this account St. Ambroſe pronounces [z] the Gain that is got by Dice and Gaming to be no better than Theft, or unmerciful and griping Uſury, and that the Man who gives himſelf to it, leads the Life of a ſavage wild Beaſt. And Juſtinian made a Law [a], That no one ſhould be obliged to pay what he loſt at Dice; or if he had paid it, he or his Heirs might recover it at Law of the Winner or his Heirs for Thirty Years after and longer. Or if he did not reclaim it, any one elſe might do it, or the Chief Magiſtrate of the City, the Defenſor might exact it, and lay it out upon ſome publick Work or Building for the Uſe of the City. And in ſuch Games as were [b] permitted, he allowed the Richeſt to play for no more than one Shilling, and others only in Proportion to their Subſtance. And this was a very wiſe Law, conſidering the Complaint which St. Jerom makes, That whilſt Men play for vaſt Sums, and ſtake [c] their whole Eſtates at once, the Poor ſtand naked and hungry before their Doors, and CHRIST periſhes and is ſtarved to Death in his poor Members for Want of their Relief. Nay, many Times their own Fleſh and Blood, their Families and Relations are ruined by their Folly in one Night. And what Character or Puniſhment could be thought too bad for ſuch? He that provides not for his own, and eſpecially thoſe of his own Houſe, has denied the Faith, and is worſe than an Infidel. And for this Reaſon both the Civil and Eccleſiaſtical Laws were ſo ſevere againſt Dice and Gaming, becauſe of ſuch evil Conſequencs ſo commonly attending them, when they are undertaken for undue Ends, and purſued by falſe Meaſures, only to ſerve Mens Fraud and filthy Lucre. Otherwiſe, to play παιγνιικῶς, as old Men uſed to play, for Diverſion, and not for Lucre, is what wiſe and good Men have always innocently done [e] without any Reproach or Cenſure. And ſo I have done with the ſeveral Sorts of Theft and Robbery, which are great Tranſgreſſions of the Eighth Commandment; by which we may judge of the Miſtake of thoſe who confine the Diſcipline of the Church to the Puniſhment of three Capital Crimes, Idolatry, Adultery and Murder: For it will be hard to bring Theft under any of thoſe Denominations, unleſs we ſay all Theft is Covetouſneſs, and Covetouſneſs is Idolatry. But in that large Senſe of Idolatry, which is ſerving our own Affections more than GOD, not only Covetouſneſs, but Adultery and Murder will be Idolatry alſo. And then all Crimes might be reſolved into one, and the Church had nothing to do but to puniſh one Crime under different Species of Idolatry: Which does by no Means rightly explain her Diſcipline, which makes Idolatry a diſtinct Crime againſt a Command in the firſt Table of the Decalogue, as Diſobedience to Parents, Adultery, Murder, and Theft are againſt the ſecond Table; and according to this Order I have hitherto conſidered them in this Diſcourſe.

CHAP. XIII.

SECT. 1. Of Falſe Witneſs.

THE Intent of the Ninth Commandment is, to ſecure our Neighbour's Credit from Injury by ſpreading falſe Reports concerning him to the Prejudice of his Good Name and Reputation. This is ſometimes done in a publick Manner, by bearing falſe Witneſs againſt him: And then it is adding Perjury to the Calumny, and ſometimes Theft and Murder alſo: For it may affect not only his Credit but his Fortune, and his Life too, as it did in the Caſe of Naboth, who was ſtoned to Death upon a falſe Accuſation, Naboth did blaſpheme GOD and the King. And ſo our SAVIOUR and many of his Diſciples after Him, ſuffered by the malicious and falſe Imputations of their Enemies, the Jews and Heathens. The Greatneſs of the Crime in theſe Reſpects has been already ſhewed under the ſeveral Titles of Perjury, Theft, and Murder: Here I only conſider it as an Injury to Mens Reputation, which being a Thing dear and valuable to all Men, the Laws were very careful to ſecure Men in the quiet Enjoyment ment of it, and punish all base Attempts to ruin and destroy it. Aulus Gellius [a] tells us, The Punishment of False-Witness among the old Romans, by the Law of the Twelve Tables, was to cast the Criminal Headlong from the Top of the Tarpeian Rock: And he thinks, if this Punishment had continued, it might have been of great Service to the Roman Common-wealth, in deterring Men from the Commission of this Crime by its just Severity. Afterward by a Law, called, the Lex Remmia [b], False-Witnesses were burnt in the Face, and stigmatized with the Letter K, denoting them to be Calumniators or False-Accusers. In Opposition to whom the Law [c] calls Honest Men, Homines integræ Frontis, Men without any such Mark set upon them. This Law and Punishment is often mentioned by the Roman Writers, Tully [d], Pliny [e], and others [f]. And though the Christian Law abolished it, as it did that of the Cross, and some others, yet still false Accusation and Calumny were corrected with suitable Punishments, such as Infamy, Banishment, and suffering the same Evil, by the Law of Retaliation, which the false Accuser intended to draw upon others; as appears from several Laws [g] in the Imperial Codes, and particularly those which bind the accusing Party to undergo the same Punishment, which his false Accusation tended to bring upon the supposed Criminal, if he did not make good his Charge against him. We have already [*] seen a Law of Valentinian and Gratian, ordering, That whoever impleaded another either in regard to his Fame and Reputation, or his Fortune, or his Life, should undergo the same Penalty he intended to bring upon the Party so impeached, if he proved a Calumniator, and did not fairly make out his Action. And every Accuser was tyed in Bonds, which the Law [h] calls, Vinculum Inscriptionis, to suffer a Retaliation, or Similitude of Punishment, upon Failure of evincing his Charge against another. Such Care was taken by the Secular Laws to discourage Delators or false Informers, and preserve the Fame and Reputation of innocent Men against the vile Attempts of such dangerous Aggressors. Nor were the Ecclesiastical Laws less severe in their Way against such Transgressors. The false Witness in any Case was to do Penance Five Years for his Crime by a Canon of the Council [i] of Eliberis. And this, provided it was not in the Case of Death. For in that Case, being the Crime of Murder, the Criminal was to be debarred from Communion to the very last, as has been shewed before [*] in speaking of Murder. The Councils of Agde [k] and Vannes impose a general Penance upon such Offenders, without naming the Term or Duration of their Penance, which was left to the Discretion of the Bishop, who was to judge of the Sincerity of their Repentance. But the first Council of Arles [l] obliges them to do Penance all their Lives: And the second [m] only moderates their Punishment so far as to leave it to the Bishop to determine of their Repentance and Satisfaction.

SECT. 2. Of Libelling.

ANOTHER Way of injuring Mens Credit and Reputation was, by spreading false Reports in a covert and clandestine manner, which the Law calls Libelling. This was done, when a Man was accused by a Bill of Indictment, to which the Author was afraid to set his Name. And such Accusations were of no Force in Law, but were appointed to be torn in pieces or burnt; and no Man might read, or retain, or divulge them, without being reputed the infamous Author of them. The Christian Emperors were extremely careful in discouraging all such base Attempts upon Mens Credit and Reputation, as may be seen in the Laws of Constantine, Constantius, Valentinian and Valens, Theodosius and Arcadius, in the Theodosian Code, under the Title, De famosis Libellis. It will be sufficient to repeat one of them made by Valentinian [n] in this Tenour: "The very Name of scandalous Libels is infamous. Therefore whoever collects, or "reads them, and does not immediately commit them to the Flames, shall be liable to "be condemned to a Capital Punishment." By which it is easy to judge how infamous the Authors of such Libels were, since none were allowed ſo much as to read and retain them with Impunity, but were in Danger of being proceeded againſt as the ſuſpected Authors of them. The Eccleſiaſtical Law made the Authors and Publiſhers of all ſuch Paſquils, when detected, liable to Excommunication. For ſo the Council of Eliberis words it [o] in one of her Canons. "If any are found to have ſcat-"tered or diſperſed infamous Libels in the "Church, let them be anathematized."

SECT. 3. Of Detraction, Whiſpering, and Backbiting.

ANOTHER Sort of ſecret Defamation was, that which was committed by the Detraction of the lurking Whiſperer and Backbiter: Againſt whoſe venomous Tongues St. Auſtin is ſaid to have endeavoured to guard his own Family and Converſation, by cauſing theſe two Verſes to be written upon his Table.

Quiſquis amat dictis abſentum rodere vitam
Hanc menſam indignam noverit eſſe ſibi.

He that takes Delight in leſſening the Characters of the Abſent, is no welcome or worthy Gueſt at this Table. This he did, to admoniſh every one that came there, to abſtain from defamatory Diſcourſe and Detraction. And Poſſidius [p] ſays, He was ſo ſtrict and punctual in the Obſervation of this Rule, that he would ſometimes ſharply reprove his moſt familiar Acquaintance and Fellow-Biſhops for forgetting and tranſgreſſing it; telling them, That either thoſe Verſes muſt be eraſed from his Table, or he muſt withdraw and retire to his private Apartment. This was a Sort of private Diſcipline (like that of St. Auſtin's Mother denying him the Privilege of ſitting at her own Table whilſt he was a Manichee) and it was a very proper Way of diſcouraging all Evil-ſpeaking and Detraction; but I do not find that this Crime was brought under publick Diſcipline by any general Rule of the Church. And the Reaſon might be, what St. Jerom obſerves, That the Sin was too general and epidemical to be publickly corrected. For there [q] are very Few that have wholly renounced this Vice; and it is a rare Thing to find any ſo careful to make their own Life unblameable, not to be willing to find fault with others. Yea, ſo great a Propenſity is there in Mens Minds toward this Evil, that they who are far removed from other Vices, fall into this as the laſt Snare of the Devil.

SECT. 4. Of Railing and Reviling, or ſcurrilous and abuſive Language: And of revealing Secrets.

BUT when this Detraction broke out into open Slander and Calumny, and eſpecially when it was attended with contumelious, bitter and reproachful Words, with Railing and Reviling, and ſcurrilous and abuſive Language; then, as it was Matter of publick Scandal, ſo it became the Subject of a publick Cenſure. For St. Paul puts Railers and Revilers into the Number of thoſe, who are neither fit for the Society of Men, nor the Kingdom of GOD. 1 Cor. v. 11. I have written unto you not to keep Company, if any Man that is called a Brother, be a Fornicator, or Covetous, or an Idolater, or a Railer, or a Drunkard, or an Extortioner, with ſuch an one, no not to eat. And again, 1 Cor. vi. 9, 10. Be not deceived: Neither Fornicators, nor Idolaters, nor Adulterers, nor Effeminate, nor Abuſers of themſelves with Mankind, nor Thieves, nor Covetous, nor Drunkards, nor Revilers, nor Extortioners, ſhall inherit the Kingdom of GOD. And therefore the Church, following this Rule, reckoned ſlanderous Railing and Scurrility among the Crimes that deſerved Eccleſiaſtical Cenſure. In ſo much that a Clergyman, who was noted for ſcurrilous and ſcoffing Language, is ordered by the Council of Agde [r] to be degraded. And the ſame Canon occurs in the Fourth Council of Carthage [s], with ſome others of the like Nature: As if he be given to Railing [t] or revealing of Secrets to the Infamy and Diſgrace of others. Upon this latter Caſe, of defaming Men by Divulging unneceſſarily their ſecret Crimes, St. Auſtin [u] has a whole Diſcourſe, where he particularly ſays, That he that rebukes a Man publickly before all, when his Crime is known to none but himſelf alone, is not a Reprover, but a Betrayer. He reminds ſuch of the Example of Joſeph, who finding the holy Virgin to be with Child, and ſuſpecting her to be guilty of Fornication, yet being a juſt and good Man, he was minded to put her away privily, and not make her a publick Example. And he adds, That Biſhops were wont thus [x] to proceed with private Criminals in the Church. A Biſhop knows a Man to be guilty of Murder, and the Thing is known to none beſides himſelf. If in this Caſe I ſhould reprove him publickly, ſome other would take the Law upon him.

him. Therefore I neither betray him, nor neglect him: I reprove him in ſecret, I ſet before his Eyes the Judgment of GOD, I terrify his guilty Conſcience, I perſuade him to Repentance. So again, ſays he, there are ſome Men that are Adulterers in their own Houſes, they ſin ſometimes in private, and they are diſcovered to us by their own Wives, ſometimes in Zeal and Fury, ſometimes in Mercy, deſiring the Salvation of their Souls. Now in this Caſe we do not betray them openly, but rebuke them in ſecret. Where the Evil is committed, there it dies: Yet we do not neglect that Wound, but before all Things ſhew the Man that has committed ſuch a Sin, and wounded his Conſcience thereby, that his Wound is mortal. By this Diſcourſe of St. Auſtin, it ſeems clear, that the Church brought no private Crimes under publick Penance, except when the guilty Perſon conſented to it and required it: And to do otherwiſe was an high Crime in the Miniſter, who was charged, for any ſuch Attempt, as a Divulger of Secrets, and Betrayer of his Truſt, and one that brought an unneceſſary Defamation and Scandal upon his Brethren.

THUS far the Diſcipline of the Church proceeded againſt all defamatory and pernicious Lying. But there are ſome other Sorts of Lyes, as the Ludicrous Lye, and the Officious Lye, which though culpable and ſinful in themſelves, were not ſo ſeverely purſued by Eccleſiaſtical Cenſures. Tertullian [y] reckoning up thoſe leſſer Sins which were not publickly puniſhed by Penance in the Church, puts Lying out of Modeſty, or Neceſſity, among them. And Origen [z] makes Lying one of thoſe Sins which were incident to thoſe who had made the greateſt Proficiency in the Church. Some indeed pleaded for Officious Lyes, as not only innocent and lawful, but in ſome Caſes uſeful and neceſſary: As if it were to ſave the Life of an innocent Perſon, a Man ought in that Caſe, rather to tell a Lye, than to betray him to Death. But St. Auſtin diſputes againſt this Sort of Officious Lyes alſo, and ſhews them to be culpable and ſinful; arguing, That a Man ought neither to betray an innocent Perſon, nor tell a Lye to ſave him, but to venture his own Life, by profeſſing roundly, That he will neither Lye for him, nor diſcover him. And he gives a rare Inſtance of this Sort of Fortitude in one Firmus Biſhop of Tagaſta, who according to what the Greeks called Pheronymy, Φερωνυμία, carried Firmneſs in his Name [a], and Firmneſs in his Reſolution. For when one of the Heathen Emperors had ſent his Apparitors to ſearch for a certain Perſon whom he had hidden, he told them plainly, He could neither tell a Lye, nor betray the Man; and tho' they put him to the Rack, and tortured him to make him confeſs, yet he perſiſted in his Reſolution not to diſcover the Man that was fled to him for Safety and Protection. Whereupon he was carried before the Emperor himſelf, where he gave ſuch admirable and freſh Proofs of his Firmneſs, that the Emperor without any great Difficulty was prevailed upon to pardon the Man, whom he kept in private under his Protection. This was a ſingular Inſtance of Heroick Gallantry, rather to run the Hazard of his own Life, than tell a Lye to ſave another from Deſtruction. But the Diſcipline of the Church did not run thus high, to oblige all Men to come up to this Degree of Veracity under Pain of Excommunication. It was ſufficient to encourage Truth and Ingenuity in all Caſes, and puniſh Falſeneſs and Perfidiouſneſs in all notorious Inſtances of miſchievous Evil: But in other Caſes it was no Blemiſh to the Diſcipline of the Church to ſuffer ſome Sort of more pardonable Lying to paſs without the Animadverſion of the higheſt Cenſure, ſo long as they gave no Encouragement to it, but condemned it univerſally as a leſſer Inſtance of Tranſgreſſion. To this Purpoſe St. Auſtin ſays in another Place [b], There are two Sorts of Lyes in which there is no great Fault, and yet they are not wholly without Fault, that is, when we lye in Jeſt, and when we lye for the Advantage of our Neighbour. In this latter Caſe, he thinks, a Man may honeſtly conceal the Truth by Silence, but he muſt not upon any Account ſpeak Falſe, or tell a Lye. For that will not conſiſt with the Perfection of a Chriſtian. Therefore if he would not betray a Man to Death, he muſt prepare himſelf to conceal the Truth, but not to ſpeak [c] Falſe; ſo as that he may neither betray the Man, nor tell a Lye; leſt he deſtroy his own Soul to preſerve the Life of another. As this ſhews the Perfection of the Chriſtian Morals, ſo it equally declares the Abatement that was made in the Diſcipline of the Church, in reference to ſuch Officious Lyes as were extorted from Men upon ſome extraordinary Charity; which though it did not wholly excuſe the Sin, yet it made it ſo far more tolerable, as not to incur the Severity of publick Diſcipline, but come within the Number of thoſe leſſer Sins, which did not ordinarily fall under the greater Cenſures of the Church.

IN all other Caſes, where Lying was attended with miſchievous and pernicious Effects, it was puniſhed according to the Proportion of thoſe Crimes that accompanied it. As we have already ſeen in the Caſe of Falſe Witneſs, Libelling, Slandering, Railing and Reviling. And when it implied any Fraud, or Equivocation, or Double-dealing in Matters of Religion, it was puniſhed as Apoſtacy or Perjury, as we have ſeen in the Caſe of the Libellatici [*], who either denied their Religion in Writing, or purchaſed Libels of Security from the Magiſtrate, to excuſe them from Sacrificing; and thoſe who feigned themſelves Mad to avoid Proſecution: Both which Sorts of Men the Church condemned as Idolaters, and as guilty by their Diſſimulation and Cowardiſe of betraying their holy Religion. The Priſcillianiſts were likewiſe infamous for this Character and abominable Practice of Equivocation. For they taught their Diſciples this baſe Art of Diſſembling, and concealing their vile Practices [d] by Lyes and Perjury; giving them this Direction, as one of their Rules and Inſtructions in Caſes of Danger: Swear, and Forſwear, and never diſcover your Secrets. How much more laudable and commendable is the Rule given in this Caſe even by the Heathen [e] Satyriſt, which deſerves to be written in Letters of Gold: If ever you are called to be a Witneſs in a doubtful Matter, though Phalaris himſelf ſhould command you to ſpeak falſe, and threaten to burn you in his Brazen Bull, unleſs you will forſwear yourſelf; in that Caſe reckon it the greateſt Villany to prefer Life before Truth and Honeſty, and for the Sake of Living to forego thoſe Things which are the only true Reaſons of Living, that is, Probity, Integrity, and a good Conſcience, for which End Men are born and ſent into the World by the Providence of GOD. This Rule is often inculcated by the Heathen Moraliſts, arcus Antoninus, Epicletus, Seneca and Plutarch: Which made it the more reaſonable for the Chriſtians to inſiſt upon it, and puniſh the Crimes of Perjury and Falſeneſs with the ſevereſt Eccleſiaſtical Cenſures, whenever they could plainly convict any one of being guilty of them: And when they could not, the Providence of GOD commonly interpoſed, and diſcovered and puniſhed them by ſome remarkable Divine Judgment. Of which, beſide the Caſe of Ananias and Saphira in Scripture, we have a memorable Inſtance in Euſebius [f] of Three Men who combined together in a falſe Accuſation of Narciſſus Biſhop of Jeruſalem, imprecating upon themſelves very direful Judgments, which the Providence of GOD juſtly brought upon them; of which becauſe I have given a full Relation [*] before, I need ſay no more in this Place.

CHAP. XIV.

Of great Tranſgreſſions againſt the Tenth Commandment, Envy, Covetouſneſs, &c.

SECT. 1. Whether Envy brought Men under the Diſcipline of the Church.

THERE is but little to be obſerved in the Ancient Diſcipline of the Church concerning the Tranſgreſſions againſt this Commandment: Becauſe though ſome of them were great Crimes, yet they were ſuch as chiefly conſiſted in the internal Corruptions of the Mind; and the Church could take no Notice of them, till they firſt diſcovered themſelves in ſome outward Actions. Envy was a Crime of that Nature: It was always reckoned a diabolical Sin, and one of the firſt Magnitude: But yet before it could bring a Man under Publick Diſcipline, the inward Rancour of the Heart muſt betray itſelf in ſome outward, apparent, and viſible Action. In this Senſe we are to underſtand St. Chryſoſtom [a], when he ſays, The envious Man ought to be caſt out of the Church as well as the Fornicator, to preſerve others from the Contagion and Poyſon of his Example. That is, when Envy ſhews itſelf in any of thoſe miſchievous Effects, which naturally ariſe from it, and turn to the apparent Detriment of Men or Religion. For as Cyprian obſerves [b], Envy is a very prolifick Vice, multiplying itſelf into various Shapes and Figures: It is the Root of all Evils, the Fountain of Deſtruction, the Seminary of Sins, and the Matter of all Offences. Hence proceeds Hatred, hence Animoſity ariſes. Envy inflames Covetouſneſs, making a Man

Man not to be content with his own, whilſt he ſees another Richer than himſelf. Envy excites Ambition, whilſt a Man ſees another in greater Honour than himſelf: Envy blinds our Senſes, and reduces the interior Faculties of the Soul under its Power and Dominion. Then the Fear of GOD is ſlighted, the Precepts of CHRIST are neglected, the Day of Judgment is not thought of. It puffs us up with Pride, it embitters us with Cruelty, makes us prevaricate with Perfidiouſneſs, ſhocks us with Impatience, inrages us with Diſcord, inflames us with Anger; and a Man cannot contain or govern himſelf, who is now under the Power of another. By this Means the Bond of Divine Peace is broken, brotherly Charity is violated, Truth adulterated, Unity divided, and Hereſies and Schiſms take their Original; whilſt Men diſparage the Prieſts, and envy the Biſhops, and every one complains that he himſelf was not ordained, or takes it in Dudgeon that another was preferred before him. When Envy was attended with any ſuch Effects as theſe, then it fell under the Cognizance of Publick Diſcipline; not as it was an inward Corruption of the Mind, but as it diſcovered itſelf in ſome outward and vicious Action, as open Diſſenſion, or Hereſy, or Schiſm, or the Breach of Unity and Peace, Eccleſiaſtical or Civil: Which Crimes being the Subject of Church-Cenſure, ſo far as Envy was concerned in any of them, ſo far it might be ſaid to be puniſhed by the Publick Diſcipline of the Church, but no otherwiſe, for want of ſufficient Ground to proceed in a legal Way of Evidence againſt it. But yet this bitter Root gave but too many Occaſions to the Church to puniſh it in other Species; being one of thoſe Sins that could not contain itſelf or long lie hid, having a Train of other Vices commonly attending it, according to the Obſervation made by Cyprian, and long before by St. James; For where Envying and Strife is, there is Confuſion and every evil Work.

SECT. 2. Of Pride, Ambition, and Vain-glory.

THE like is to be obſerved of Pride, Ambition and Vain-glory. Theſe were great Sins in their own Nature: But being internal and ſpiritual Sins in their Kind, the Diſcipline of the Church could take no Notice of them, till they diſcovered themſelves in ſome enormous, outward vicious Actions. As when Pride drew Men into Blaſphemy againſt GOD, or Oppreſſion of Men; when Ambition or Vain-glory made Men factious and turbulent in the Church, and puſhed them forward into open Hereſy or Schiſm: Then was the proper Time for the Church to take her ſpiritual Sword into her Hand, and make uſe of her Cenſure for their Correction. Thus we have ſeen the Pride of Andronicus corrected by Syneſius Biſhop of Ptolemais [c], when it brake forth into open Blaſphemy againſt CHRIST: And thus all along Hereticks and Schiſmaticks found their Puniſhment, when their Ambition and reſtleſs Spirit proceeded ſo far, as to make ſome open Breach upon the Faith or Unity of the Church. But in theſe Caſes, Pride was rather puniſhed in other Species of Sin, Blaſphemy, Hereſy or Schiſm; for the Cenſure of which the Reader muſt look back into the former Parts of this Book.

SECT. 3. Of Covetouſneſs.

THE ſame Obſervation is to be carried farther, and made upon Covetouſneſs, which is another of thoſe Three great Luſts that reign in the World, the Luſt of the Heart, the Luſt of the Eye, and the Pride of Life. Covetouſneſs, which is the Luſt of the Eye, is always a very great Sin before GOD; being, as the Apoſtle terms it, Idolatry, and the Root of all Evil; and even when it is only conceived in the Mind, it makes a Man odious to his Maker. But becauſe GOD ſees not, as Man ſees: For GOD looks upon the Heart: Therefore before Covetouſneſs can render a Man a proper Object of the Church's Diſcipline, it muſt diſcover itſelf in ſome viſible Act of Injuſtice, as Theft, Oppreſſion or Fraud, under which Appearances, but not otherwiſe, it was liable to the Church's Judgment and Cenſure. And this is what Gregory Nyſſen [d] obſerves, That among all the Species of Covetouſneſs none were expiated by ſolemn Penance, but ſuch as Theft and Violation of Graves, that is, ſuch Inſtances of Covetouſneſs as manifeſted themſelves in ſome outward and apparent evil Action.

SECT. 4. Of Carnal Luſts.

AND the like is to be ſaid of the Luſt of the Heart, or carnal Luſts, and Sins of Uncleanneſs. Though the evil Thoughts and Intentions of the Heart are ſinful before GOD in general; For if I regard Iniquity in my Heart, the LORD will not hear me: And though in particular, He that looks on a Woman to luſt after her, hath committed Adultery with her already in his Heart; yet this was not puniſhable in the Diſcipline of the Church: Becauſe the Church is no Judge of the ſecret Intentions, but only the outward and viſible Actions, that carry Scandal as well as Sin in them. Therefore we have obſerved before [*] out of the Council of Neocæſarea [e], That no one was to be excommunicated for Sins only in Deſign and Intention. If a Man purpoſe in his Heart to commit Fornication with a Woman, but his Luſt proceed not into Action, it is apparent he is delivered by Grace, ſays the the Canon. And therefore though he was culpable before GOD, yet the Church inflicted not the Cenſure of Excommunication on him, becauſe her Diſcipline extended not to Mens private Thoughts, but only to their outward Actions. And this was the Caſe of all Tranſgreſſions that were purely againſt this Command: They might be puniſhed under other Species of Sin, but not as they were only Sins of the Heart, becauſe, as ſuch, human Judicature could take no Cognizance of them.

WE have now gone through the ſeveral Branches of Duty and Tranſgreſſion, and therein taken a full View of the Extent of the Diſcipline of the Church: Whereby it appears that the Objects of Eccleſiaſtical Diſcipline were not only the Three great Sins of Idolatry, Adultery, and Murder, but all other Crimes that come under the Denomination of ſcandalous and great Tranſgreſſions. And thus far the Diſcipline of the Church related to all Perſons in general, but there were ſome Puniſhments peculiar to Delinquent Clergymen, which becauſe they are Matter of particular Enquiry, I ſhall make them the Subject of the following Book.

The End of the Sixteenth BOOK.

BOOK XVII.

Of the Exercise of DISCIPLINE among the CLERGY in the Ancient CHURCH.

CHAP. I.

Of the Difference between Ecclesiastical Censures inflicted on Clergymen and Laymen.

SECT. 1. The peculiar Notion of Communio Ecclesiastica, and Excommunicatio Ecclesiastica, as applied to the Clergy.

WE have hitherto taken a general View of the Discipline of the Church, as it respected all the Members of the Community falling into the several Crimes deserving Excommunication. But to have a compleat Notion and full Comprehension of the Church's Discipline, we are to consider, there were some Punishments peculiar to the Clergy, and some Censures so particularly respecting their Office and Function, that they could only be inflicted on them, and not upon Laymen. In regard to which, Clerical-Communion and Lay-Communion, were always considered as distinct Things; and a Man might be deprived of the former, whilst he was allowed to enjoy the Benefit and Privilege of the latter; and even that which was many times a very great Punishment in a Clergyman, or Ecclesiastical Person, was no Punishment at all in a Secular Person or Layman. For there was no Suspension from Office or Benefit, no Degradation or Deposition, no Reduction to Lay-Communion, that could affect a Layman, as they were Punishments: But all these were great Punishments as inflicted on the Clergy, because they deprived them of those special Honours and advantagious Privileges, that were peculiar to their Function. In reference to which Things we sometimes find the Terms Communio Ecclesiastica, and Excommunicatio Ecclesiastica, Ecclesiastical Communion, and Ecclesiastical Excommunication, used in a peculiar and restrained Sense, not for Communion or Excommunication in general, but for Admission to, or Expulsion from these particular Honours and Advantages, which were peculiarly appropriated to Ecclesiastical Persons, or such as were of the Clerical Order and Function. Therefore though some Canons take Suspension from Ecclesiastical Communion [a] for Suspension of Laymen from the Communion of the Eucharist or the Prayers of the Church; yet yet other Canons ſpeaking of the Clergy and their Puniſhment, take Eccleſiaſtical Communion in a more reſtrained Senſe, for communicating in the Offices of the Clerical Function. So that a Clergyman was ſaid to be excommunicated, when he was deprived of the Power of exerciſing the Offices of his Function; and ſuch an Excommunication does not always imply that he was wholly caſt out of all Communion with the Church, but only Communion as ſpecified with this Limitation and Reſtriction. This Diſtinction is noted by Balſamon [b], and Zonaras [c], and many other Learned Men [d] after them: And it is neceſſary to be obſerved, for the right underſtanding of many ancient Canons [e], where the Words ἀκοινώνησία, ἀφορισμὸς, ἐκκηρύττεσθαι, which ſignify Excommunication, can have no other Meaning, as applied to the Clergy, but only to denote their Degradation or Suſpenſion.

SECT. 2. The Clergy uſually puniſhed by a Removal from their Office, but not always ſubjected to publick Penance, as Men wholly caſt out of the Communion of the Church.

THIS may be confirmed from an Obſervation that has been made once before in a former Book [*], That ſome ancient Canons expreſsly forbid the Clergy to be puniſhed by the ordinary Way of Excommunication, which implies a total Removal from the Communion of the Church; but thought it ſufficient to puniſh them by a Removal from their Office; and that, becauſe it was not proper to puniſh Men doubly for the ſame Offence. If a Biſhop, Presbyter or Deacon, ſays one of the Apoſtolical Canons [f] be taken in Fornication, Perjury, or Theft, he ſhall be depoſed, but not excommunicated: For the Scripture ſays, Thou ſhalt not puniſh twice for the ſame Crime. And the like Rule is preſcribed in the Canons of Peter [g] Biſhop of Alexandria, and thoſe of St. Baſil [h].

SECT. 3. Yet in ſome ſpecial Caſes both Penalties inflicted.

YET for ſome more flagrant Crimes both Penalties were inflicted, as appears from the ſame Apoſtolical [i] Canons, which order, That if any Clergyman was found guilty of Simony, or any ſuch heinous Offence, he ſhould not only be depoſed from his Office, but caſt out of the Church. And a great many Learned Men [k] are of Opinion, that this was the conſtant Practice of the Church even in the Three firſt Ages, when the Apoſtolical Canons were moſt in Force. It is certain it was ſo in the Time of Cyprian. For he ſpeaking of Novatus, who was guilty of Murder in cauſing his own Wife by a Blow to miſcarry, ſays, That for this Crime he was not only to be degraded, or expelled the Presbytery, but to be deprived [l] of the Communion of the Church alſo. And in the following Ages there are innumerable Examples of this Practice, as the Learned Reader may ſatisfy himſelf by conſulting the Paſſages [m] referred to in the Margin.

SECT. 4. Of Suſpenſion from their Revenues.

NOW that which we are concerned at preſent to enquire after, are thoſe Puniſhments which particularly affected the Clergy: And theſe were of Three Sorts; ſuch as reſpected their Maintenance, ſuch as reſpected their Office, and ſuch as reſpected their Perſons in corporal Chaſtiſement and Correction. Sometimes they were puniſhed in their Maintenance, by withdrawing the uſual Portion of the Church's Revenues, which was allotted to them out of the publick Stock for their Maintenance and Subſiſtance. The Revenues of the Church, as has been obſerved in a former Book [*], were uſually divided among the Clergy once a Month, whence it had the Name of Diviſio Menſurna, the Monthly Diviſion: And when there was Occaſion to puniſh a Delinquent Clergyman for ſome leſs Offence, it was done by withdrawing this uſual Portion of the Monthly Diviſion from him. As appears from that of Cyprian [n], who ſpeaking of ſome of the inferior Clergy that had offended, ſays, "They ſhould be with-held or ſuſpended "from their Monthly Diviſion, but not be "deprived of their Miniſterial Office in the "Church."

SECT. 5. Of Suspension from their Office.

SOMETIMES they were suspended not only from their Revenues, but from their Office and Function. And this was either temporary and limited, or perpetual and without Restriction. The temporary Suspension was only a depriving them of the Execution of their Office for a certain Term; and when that Term was over, they had Liberty to resume their Place, and return to the Execution of their Office in all the Parts and Duties of their Function: But the perpetual Suspension was a total Deprivation of them from all Power and Dignity belonging to the Clerical Office, and a Reduction of them to the State and Condition of Laymen, without any ordinary Hopes or Prospect of ever recovering their ancient Station. The former of these is commonly called by the Ancients Abstention and Suspension from Communion, meaning Clerical Communion only; and the latter vulgarly known by the Name of Degradation, De-ordination, or Deposition from the Office and Order of the Clerical Function. Thus Cyprian writing to Rogatian, an African Bishop, concerning a contumacious Deacon who rebelled against him, bids him to depose him from his Office, or at least suspend [o] him. The Penalty of Suspension was for less Crimes, as in the Instance given in the Council of Epone [p], If a Bishop, Presbyter, or Deacon be detected to keep Dogs for Hunting, or Hawks for Fowling, the Bishop is to be suspended for three Months, the Presbyter for two, and the Deacon for one. So by a Canon of the Council of Lerida [q], If any Clergyman in a Siege bore Arms, and killed a Man, though it were one of the Enemies, he was to be suspended from his Office two Years, and be rendered uncapable of any farther Promotion; because the Canons in all Cases whatsoever peremptorily forbad a Clergyman to be concerned in Blood.

SECT. 6. Of Deposition or Degradation.

THE other Sort of Suspension, commonly called, Καθαίρεσις, Deposition or Degradation, was a total and perpetual Suspension of the Power and Authority committed to a Clergyman in his Ordination. For as the Church had Power to grant this Authority and Commission at first, so she had Power to resume and withdraw it again upon great Misdemeanours and just Provocation. And then a Clergyman, whatever Character he sustained before, was totally divested both of the Name and Dignity, and Power and Authority belonging to his former Order and Function. By some Canons [r] therefore he is said to be degraded, deprived, and turned out of Office; by others [s] to be totally deposed, παντελῶς καθαιρεῖσθαι; totally to fall from his Order or Degree [t], παντελῶς ἀποπίπτειν τοῦ βαθμοῦ; to be de-ordained [u], or un-ordained; to be removed out of the Order [x] of the Clergy; to cease to be of the Number of the [y] Clergy; and to be reduced to Lay-Communion, that is, to the State and Quality and Condition of Laymen. All these Expressions, except the last, are commonly well understood by Modern Writers: But some to serve a peculiar Hypothesis have invented very odd and strange Notions of it. Therefore to set the Matter in a right Light, and give a just Account of the Discipline of the Church, it will not be amiss to be a little more particular upon this Point, and shew distinctly what the Ancients meant by this Part of their Discipline, which they call reducing a Clergyman to the State and Communion of Laymen, which I shall make the Subject of the following Chapter.

CHAP. II.

Of reducing the Clergy to the State and Communion of Laymen, as a Punishment for great Offences.

SECT. 1. Lay-Communion not the same as Communion in one Kind only.

LAY-Communion in a Layman was no Punishment, but a Privilege, and one of the greatest Privileges that belonged to him as a Christian: For it was intitling him to all the Benefits and Advantages of Christian Communion. But in a Clergyman it was one of the greatest of Punishments, reducing him from the highest Dignity and Station in the Church to the Level and Standard of every ordinary Christian. But now the Question is, Wherein the Nature of this Punishment consisted. Bellarmin [a] and some other Writers of the Romish Church, taking the Word in a new and modern Sense, expound it of Communion in one Kind, and bring it as an Argument to prove that the Primitive Church denied the People the Use of the Cup in the Lord's-Supper, and administred the Communion to them only in one Kind, because the Word Lay-Communion bears that Signification in the present Church of Rome. But this is only begging a Principle, and supposing a Practice, of which there is not the least Footstep to be met with in the ancient Church, as I have fully demonstrated in a former [*] Book. And it is such a Piece of Ignorance and Misrepresentation of the ancient Discipline, as other Learned Men in the Romish Church are commonly ashamed of. The Notion is entirely rejected and confuted by Lindanus [b], Albaspinæus [c], Peter de Marca [d], Rigaltius [e], Durantus [f] and Cardinal Bona [g], who tacitly reflects upon Bellarmin and his Followers for their Childish Explication of this ancient Term to make it comply with the modern Practice. They no sooner hear, says he, of the Name, Lay-Communion, but overlooking the ancient Notion, they presently take it only in the Sense which it now bears, and interpret it Communion in one Kind; the Falseness of which we may learn from hence, That we often read of Clergymen being thrust down to Lay-Communion at that Time, when Laymen communicated in both Kinds.

SECT. 2. Neither does it signify Communicating among Laymen without the Rails of the Chancel.

LINDANUS had long before used the very same Argument, and advanced a more probable Explication, That Lay-Communion might denote a Clergyman's being thrust down to communicate among Laymen without the Rails of the Chancel: Which has so much of Plausibility in it, that the Learned Dr. Forbes [h] and Vossius [i] give in to this Opinion. But though this has something of Truth in it, yet it does not express the full Meaning of Lay-Communion. For a Man might be admitted to Lay-Communion not only in the Church, but in a private House, or upon his Death-bed, where there could be no such Distinction.

SECT. 3. But a total Degradation or Deprivation of Orders, and Reduction to the State and Condition of Laymen.

THEREFORE the full import of the Phrase, and the adequate Notion of reducing a Clergyman to Lay-Communion, is totally degrading and depriving him of his Orders, that is, the Power and Authority of his Clerical Office and Function, and reducing him to the State and Quality and simple Condition of a Layman. Thus Chamier [k] rightly explains it against Bellarmin, when he observes, That it was called Lay-Communion neither from the Place of Communion, nor from communicating in one Species, nor from the Time and Order of communicating the Laity after the Clergy, but from the Condition and Quality of the Person communicating; namely, because he that was before a Clergyman, or in the Roll and Nomenclatura of the Clergy, is now become a Layman, and reckoned as one in the Order of Laymen only. This supposes a Power in the Church, not only of conferring Clerical Orders at first to Men, and promoting them from Laymen on be Bishops or Presbyters or Deacons; but also a Power of recalling these Offices, and divesting them of all Power and Authority belonging to them, by degrading Clergymen upon just juſt Reaſons, and reducing them to the State and Quality of Laymen again. This is undoubtedly the true Meaning of all thoſe ancient Canons and Writers, which ſpeak ſo often of degrading Clergymen for their Offences, and allowing them only to communicate in the Quality of Laymen. Hereby they were depriv'd of their Order and Office, Power and Authority, and even the Name and Title of Clergymen; and reputed and treated as private Chriſtians, wholly diveſted of all their former Dignity, and Clerical Powers and Privileges, and reduced intirely to the State and Condition of Laymen. Of which, becauſe I have had Occaſion to diſcourſe at large in another Work [*], I ſhall not need to ſay much in this Place, but only add a few Teſtimonies that were then omitted. In the third Council of Orleans there is a Canon [l], which orders, That if a Clergyman either by his own Confeſſion or Conviction was proved guilty of Adultery, he ſhould be depoſed from his Office, and be confined to Lay-Communion in a Monaſtery all his Days. And another Canon [m] appoints, That if any Clergyman was convicted of Theft or Fraud, becauſe thoſe were Capital Crimes, he ſhould be degraded from his Order, and only be allowed Lay-Communion. So in the Collection of Martin Bracarenſis [n] made out of the Greek Canons for the Uſe of the Spaniſh Church, it is ordered, That if any one is ſurreptitiouſly ordained, who after Baptiſm has been guilty of Murder, either by immediate Commiſſion of the Fact, or by Command, or Counſel, or Defence, he ſhall be depoſed, and only be admitted to Lay-Communion all his Days. Gelaſius [o] has a like Decree, made in the Caſe of a Presbyter, who in a Quarrel ſtruck out the Eye of another: He orders him to be depoſed from his Office, and to be cloyſtered in a Monaſtery, there to repent of the Fact, and only to have Lay-Communion for his whole Life. And Gratian [p] cites an Order of the Council of Lerida, to the ſame Purpoſe, That if Clergymen, who are once corrected for their Offence, ſhall relapſe, and return to their Vomit again, they ſhall not only be deprived of the Dignity of their Office, but continue all their Lives uncapable of receiving the Communion even as Laymen, which ſhall only be granted them at their laſt Hour.

SECT. 4. Clergymen thus reduced, ſeldom allowed to recover their ancient Station.

THE plain Reſult of this Diſcourſe is, That reducing a Clergyman to the Communion of Laymen was a total Deprivation and diveſting him of his Office and Orders. So that if he now pretended to act as a Miniſter, his Actions were reputed null and void, and as no other than the Actions of a Layman. The Learned Dr. Forbes has rightly obſerved this [q] in the ancient Diſcipline, and I cannot better expreſs it than in his Words: He that is depoſed "with a plenary and perfect Depoſition, cannot now validly exerciſe the Offices that belong to his Order, becauſe he wants his Order and the Power of his Order. He is now "nothing but but a mere Layman, and in ſo "much a worſe Condition than other Laymen, "becauſe the Reſtitution of ſuch an one to his "Office is a much more difficult Thing than "the Promotion of other Laymen." Indeed there are very few Inſtances of recalling ſuch to the Clerical Office again, which was never done but upon ſome great Neceſſity or very preſſing Reaſon; as in the Caſe of Maximus the Confeſſor, when he returned from the Novatian Schiſm, and brought over a great Multitude of the People with him; Cornelius, Biſhop of Rome, in regard to him as a Confeſſor, and as one that had done good Service to the Church by the Influence of his Example, diſpenſed with the general Rule for his Sake, and received him [r] to his Place in the Presbytery again; and the Council of Nice allowed the ſame Favour to the Novatians, and the African Fathers to the Donatiſts, with a charitable View, to put an End to thoſe great and inveterate Schiſms. But theſe were only Exceptions to the common Rule, and Diſpenſations with the general Orders and ſtanding Diſcipline of the Church.

SECT. 5. Notwithſtanding the Pretence of the indelible Character of Ordination.

IT may perhaps be ſaid, there was ſtill an inherent Power and Authority in ſuch depoſed Clerks, and that their Depoſition did not totally annul their Ordinations: For they ſtill retained the indelible Character of their reſpective Orders: And therefore they might be Miniſters ſtill, and their Miniſterial Actions ſtand ſtand good and authentick, notwithſtanding any Power and Authority in the Church to depoſe and degrade them. But as this is next to a Contradiction in itſelf, that a Man ſhould be depoſed from his Order, and yet retain his Order ſtill, with all the Spiritual Power belonging to it: So it implies ſuch a Notion of that which is commonly called, The indelible Character of Ordination, as no ancient Writer ever thought of. For the Notion that the Ancients had of the indelible Character of Ordination, was no more than they had of the indelible Character of Baptiſm; that as the outward Form of Baptiſm, Waſhing or Immerſion in Water, though but a tranſient Act, ſerved for ever to diſtinguiſh a Chriſtian from a mere Heathen or Jew; ſo as that, though he apoſtatized from the Chriſtian Faith into Judaiſm or Gentiliſm, he ſhould ſtill retain ſo much of the Chriſtian Character, as upon his Converſion and Return to the Faith not to need a ſecond Baptiſm: In like manner the outward Form of Ordination, which is Impoſition of Hands deſigning a Man to any Clerical Office, though it be but a tranſient Act, was ſufficient to diſtinguiſh ſuch an one from a mere Layman, who never had any ſuch Ceremony of Ordination; ſo that by this Mark or Character of his Office once received, though he ſhould afterward forfeit his Office and all the Power aud Honour belonging to it, he would always remain diſtinguiſhed in ſome Meaſure from thoſe who never had ſuch an Office; and though he ſhould be wholly diveſted of his Office and Power, and reduced to the ſimple Capacity and Condition of a Layman, yet ſo much of the Marks and Footſteps of his former Office would remain upon him, as that if he ſhould be recalled again to his Office, though he might need a new Commiſſion, he would not need this outward Character or Ceremony of a new Ordination. There is no one has explained or illuſtrated the Senſe of the Ancients upon this Point with more Accuracy than the Learned Dr. Forbes: And therefore, for farther Confirmation, I ſhall here tranſcribe his Words: "There remains [s] ſays he, ſome diſtinguiſhing Character in a Man that is depoſed, by "which he is diſtinguiſhed from other Laymen: "But to make this Diſtinction, it is not neceſſary there ſhould be any Form impreſſed, but "a tranſient Act that is long ago paſt is ſufficient, viz. that he was once a Perſon ordained. The Character that remains in a "depoſed Perſon, is not the Character of any "preſent Office or Power, but only ſome Footſtep or Mark of an Honour that is paſt, and "a Power that he once had; by which Footſtep he is diſtinguiſhed from other Laymen, "who never were ordained; and may, after a "ſufficient Penance performed, if he be "found fit, and the Advantage of the Church "ſo require, be reſtored again without a new "Ordination." As if a Prince ſhould imprint upon his Nobles the Marks and Characters of the Offices which they bare under him; making the Impreſs or Figure of a Key upon the Arm of his Chamberlain with an hot Iron, and the Image of a Horſe upon the Arm of the Maſter of his Horſe, and the Image of a Cup upon the Arm of his Butler: And after this it ſhould happen, that the Prince being juſtly offended at them, ſhould depoſe them from their Offices, and put others in their Room, ſigning them with the Characters of their Offices likewiſe. Thoſe Marks, which in the Officers who were not depoſed, were Characters of their preſent Power, would in thoſe that were depoſed be only Footſteps of their by-paſt Power: And whatever Thing they who were depoſed ſhould do relating to thoſe Offices, would have no more Validity, than if it was done by any private Man, who never bare any ſuch Office. Yet in this there would be a Difference, that if the Prince pleaſed to reſtore thoſe whom he had depoſed, there would be no need to ſet a new Mark upon them; but that Footſtep or Remains of their ancient Power would now become again the Character of their preſent Power. By this Illuſtration, which juſtly repreſents the Senſe of the Ancients, it is eaſy for any one to apprehend, how far the Diſcipline of the Church in depoſing Clergymen extended: Namely, That it not only ſuſpended them from the Execution of their Office, but deprived them of their Office, and took away their Orders from them; that they were thenceforth no more than Laymen, only with this Diſtinction, that they had the external Character of a by-paſt Office, which other Laymen wanted; that now they had neither the Office of Clergymen, nor the Power of it; nor were their Actions of any other account in the Church than as the Actions of private Men and Laymen. Thus far the Church proceeded in her Cenſures of Clergymen that ſubmitted to her Diſcipline, and were not refractory and contumacious: She allowed them the Benefit of Lay-Communion, which was a Moderation of their Puniſhment in regard to their ſubmitting quietly to her Diſcipline and Cenſures.

SECT. 6. But ſometimes excommunicated, as well as depoſed, and denied the Communion of Laymen.

BUT if they continued contumacious and ſtubborn, oppoſing her firſt Cenſures, and acting as Clergymen in Contempt of them; ſhe then proceeded one Degree farther with them, adding to their Depoſition a formal Excommunication, and denying them even the Communion of Laymen. Thus Arius, and many other firſt Founders of Hereſies, were anathematized and excommunicated, as well as degraded. And there are Abundance of Inſtances of the like Proceeding in Cyprian [t], and the Apoſtolical Canons [u], and the Council of Sardica [x], and the Council of Colen [y], and the Council of Eliberis [z], and the Council of Rome [a] under Felix III. All which becauſe I have produced at large upon another [*] Occaſion, I think it needleſs to repeat them in this Place.

SECT. 7. Sometimes removed and corrected by the Aſſiſtance and Authority of the Secular Power.

WE are likewiſe to obſerve, That in Caſe of contumacious Contempt of her Cenſures, the Church ſometimes had recourſe to the Secular Powers; craving their Aid and Aſſiſtance, either to remove a ſtubborn Clerk from his Station and honourable Poſt in the Church, which he obſtinately detained after Depoſition, or elſe to inflict ſome other Puniſhment upon him for his Chaſtiſement and Correction. We have ſeen ſeveral Inſtances of this before in the general Account of the Exerciſe of Diſcipline [†] upon all Church-Members, related from Euſebius and the Council of Antioch, and the third Council of Carthage, and the African Code, where Addreſſes are made, or appointed to be made to the Secular Powers, ſome Heathen, and ſome Chriſtian, imploring their Aſſiſtance to remove ſome obſtinate and contumacious Biſhops and Presbyters from their Places, when they would not obey the Decrees of the Church, but retain their Offices and Preferments in ſpite of her Cenſures. And of theſe I need not be more particular in this Place: As neither of thoſe other various temporal Penalties which the Wiſdom of the State thought fit to inflict upon Hereticks in general, Laymen as well as Clergymen, to diſcountenance Heterodoxy, and give more effectual Force and Vigor to the Cenſures of the Church: For of theſe I have given a ſufficient Account in diſcourſing of the Puniſhments of Hereſy in the former Book.

SECT. 8. What meant by the Puniſhment called Curiæ Tradi, or Delivering up to the Secular Court.

BUT there was one particular Civil Puniſhment peculiar to delinquent Clergymen, which muſt be taken Notice of in this Place. The ancient Law comprizes it under the Name of Curiæ Tradi, Delivering up to the Secular Court: Which, as Gothofred obſerves [b], has a different Meaning in the ancient Law from that which the modern Uſe and Practice has put upon it. For among the modern Canoniſts it ſignifies delivering a Clergyman up to the Secular Judge after Degradation, to be puniſhed for ſome great Crime with Death, or ſuch Capital puniſhment as the Church had no Power to inflict upon him: But in the old Law the Curia has a larger Senſe, not only to denote a Judge's Court, but the Corporation of any City, the Members of which were commonly called Decuriones & Curiales. In this there were ſome honourable, and ſome ſervile Offices. And therefore when a Clergyman was degraded for any Offence, and reduced to the Quality of a Layman; then, beſides that he loſt all the Privileges and Exemptions that by Law and Imperial Favour belonged to the Clergy, he was obliged to ſerve the Curia, or Secular Corporation of his City, and that many times only in ſome mean Office and ſervile Condition, by Way of additional Civil Puniſhment for having tranſgreſſed the Laws of the Church, and the Rules of his ſacred Profeſſion and venerable Function. And this was a certain Way of precluding him from all Hopes ever after of regaining his Clerical Dignity again. For as the Laws abſolutely prohibited [*] any of the Curiales to be ordained at firſt, becauſe they were tied to certain municipal and civil Offices inconſiſtent with the ſpiritual; ſo if any of the Clegy were once degraded and taken into the Power of the ſecular Curia or Corporation, there was no Poſſibility of their returning to the Eccleſiaſtical State again. And therefore Honorius made this a Law, that the Curia ſhould immediately lay hold of ſuch Delinquents, to render their Puniſhment irreverſible and perpetual. If a Biſhop, ſays the Law [c], ſhall condemn any Clergyman as unworthy of his Office, and ſeparate him from the Miniſtry of the Church; or if any one voluntarily deſert his ſacred Profeſſion, let the Curia immediately lay claim to him, that he may no longer be at liberty to return to the Church again; and according to the Quality of the Man, or the Quantity of his Eſtate, let him either be taken into into the Curia, or ſome collegiate Company of the City, and be obliged to undergo thoſe publick Burdens or Neceſſities which he ſhall be found qualified for, and this without any Colluſion, under the Penalty of a Forfeiture of a conſiderable Sum of Gold, to be levied upon the Decemprimi, the Ten principal Men of the Curia, if they connived at any ſuch Colluſion: And the offending Clerk ſo degraded is farther tied up by a negative Puniſhment, never to hold any Office or Place under any of the Secular Judges. Juſtinian renewed and confirmed this Law in one of his Novels [d], and by another impoſed a like Puniſhment upon any Monk that ſhould deſert his Monaſtery, to betake himſelf to any ſecular Employment: Such an one to ſerve [e] all his Life in ſome mean and ſervile Office under the Judge of the Province; and only have this Fruit of his Change, that for deſpiſing his ſacred Miniſtry he ſhould be tied to the ſlaviſh Attendance upon an earthly Tribunal.

BUT beſides this there was another Way of Delivering over delinquent Clergymen to the Secular Courts and Civil Judges; which was, when they committed ſuch Crimes as were properly of Civil Cognizance, and might be heard and puniſhed as Crimes againſt the State and Common-wealth. For Clergymen were conſidered in a double Capacity, as Miniſters of the Church, and as Members of the Common-wealth. Whatever Crimes they committed in the firſt Capacity, they were indeed liable primarily to be judged by the Biſhops of the Church, as the proper Judges of Eccleſiaſtical Cauſes: Yet if their Crimes were very flagrant, ſuch as Hereſy, or Simony, though theſe were properly Eccleſiaſtical Cauſes, yet the Criminals might be turned over to the Secular Judges, after the Eccleſiaſtical Sentence was paſſed upon them: For ſuch Crimes were puniſhed both by Church and State with their reſpective Cenſures. If their Crimes were ſuch as more nearly and directly affected the Peace and Tranquillity of the Common-wealth; ſuch as Treaſon, and Sedition, and Murder, and Robbery, and the Practice of Magical and pernicious Arts; in that Caſe Biſhops not only might, but were obliged, ex officio, to turn over a degraded Clerk to the Secular Court, and a competent Judge, to be puniſhed according to the Quality of his Offences. There is a famous Inſtance relating to this Matter in the Hiſtory of the Acts of the Council of Chalcedon, reported out of the Acts of the Council of Tyre, where Ibas Biſhop of Edeſſa was accuſed for intending to promote one Abraamius a Deacon to a Biſhoprick, when he had confeſſed himſelf guilty of magical Practices before the Biſhop and all the Clergy: And it is added by Way of Aggravation of the Biſhop's Fault [f] that he kept the Paper of his magical Inchantments by him, when he ought to have preſented the execrable Criminal to the Judge of the Province, according as the Laws directed. By which one Inſtance it is eaſy to apprehend, that there were ſome Crimes both of Eccleſiaſtical and Civil Cognizance: And when any ſuch Clergyman was depoſed in an Eccleſiaſtical Court, the Biſhop was obliged to remit him to a Secular Judge, to be puniſhed with Civil Puniſhments as a Layman according to the Nature and Quality of his Offences. And in this Caſe I conceive they treated him as an excommunicate Perſon, not barely reduced to Lay-Communion, but one Degree lower, being thruſt down to the loweſt Rank of notorious Criminals, and denied the common Benefit and Privilege of thoſe who were allowed to partake of the Communion of Laymen. Of which Kind of Cenſure there are ſeveral Inſtances in the Apoſtolical Canons, and the Councils of Eliberis, Colen, and Sardica; which becauſe I have produced them at large upon another Occaſion [*], I forbear to relate them in this Place, and proceed to another Enquiry concerning the Puniſhment which was commonly called Communio Peregrina, or reducing Clergymen to the Communion of Strangers.

CHAP. III.

Of the Puniſhment called Peregrina Communio, or reducing Clergymen to the Communion of Strangers.

SECT. 1. The ſeveral Canons wherein this Puniſhment is mentioned.

THERE is no one Queſtion in all the ancient Diſcipline that has more exerciſed the Pens of Learned Men than this about the Puniſhment called, Peregrina Communio, The Communion of Strangers. It plainly appears from all the Canons wherein any mention is made of it, that ſome Puniſhment is intended to be peculiarly inflicted on the Clergy for ſome ſpecial Offences; but it is not eaſy to diſcover what Sort of Puniſhment it was. I will firſt ſet down the Canons that mention it, and then the different Sentiments of Learned Men concerning concerning it, pointing out that which ſeems to be the moſt rational Account of it, with ſome Confirmation out of ancient Hiſtory. The firſt Council that mentions it is the Council of Riez [a], An. 439. where it is determined in the Caſe of a Schiſmatical Biſhop returning to the Catholick Church, that he ſhould only be allowed to be a Chorepiſcopus in ſome Country Church under another Biſhop, or elſe be content with the Communion of Strangers. The next Council that mentions it, is the Council of Agde [b], An. 506. where in one Canon it is determined, That if any Clergyman be found guilty of robbing the Church, he ſhall be reduced to the Communion of Strangers. And in another [c], If any contumacious Clerk deſpiſes the Communion, or neglects to frequent the Church, or fulfil his Office, he ſhall be reduced to the Communion of Strangers, ſo as that when he repents and reforms, he may have his Name written again in the Matricula, or Roll of the Clergy, and obtain his Degree and Dignity as before among them. After this in the Council of Lerida, An. 539. we find a like Decree [d], That in Caſe any Clergyman upon the Death of the Biſhop pillage his Houſe, or ſuppreſs any Thing by Fraud to the Detriment of his Succeſſor, he ſhall be reputed guilty of Sacrilege, and condemned with the greater Excommunication, and at the utmoſt only be allowed the Communion of Strangers. Theſe are the Canons wherein this Puniſhment, or Moderation of Puniſhment (call it which you pleaſe) is mentioned: But ſo little Light can be had from the Canons themſelves, as to the Nature of the Puniſhment, that it is no great Wonder that Learned Men have run into various Opinions about it.

SECT. 2. The Communion of Strangers not the ſame as Lay-Communion.

SOME confound it altogether with Lay-Communion, as Binius in his Notes upon the Council of Lerida [e], and Hoſpinian [f] and the old Gloſs upon Gratian [g]. But it is no ways probable, that the ancient Church would uſe two ſuch different Names for the ſame Thing, when Lay-Communion was a Word ſo commonly known among them. Beſides that, theſe two Things were evidently different from one another: For Clergymen reduced to Lay-Communion were totally and perpetually degraded from their Orders, and could not ordinarily be reſtored to their Office again, but ever after continued in the State of Laymen, as has been evidently demonſtrated in the foregoing Chapter: Whereas Clergymen reduced to the Communion of Strangers, were ſtill capable of being reſtored to their Office again after the Performance of a certain Penance, as is expreſsly ſaid in the forementioned Canon of the Council of Agde, Can. 2.

SECT. 3. Nor Communion in one Kind.

BELLARMIN [b] and others not only take it for Lay-Communion; but boldly aſſert, That that Lay-Communion was Communion only in one Kind: So that when a Clergyman is ſaid to be reduced to Lay-Communion, it is the ſame Thing, according to them, as being put down to receive the Communion among Laymen only in one Kind. But this is only multiplying of Obſcurities, and confounding a Reader by adding one Error to another. For as the Ancients ſpeak of Lay-Communion and the Communion of Strangers as different Things; ſo they had no ſuch Notion of Lay-Communion, as theſe Writers pretend: For all publick Communion both of Clergy and Laity in the Primitive Church was in both Kinds, as has been evidently demonſtrated in a former Book [*], and is now ingenuouſly confeſſed by the moſt Learned and Accurate Writers in the Romiſh Church. So that this Opinion, which confounds the Communion of Strangers with Communion in one Kind, is without all Shadow of Truth, and has not the leaſt Foundation in Antiquity to ſupport it.

SECT. 4. Nor Communion at the Hour of Death.

THE Author of the Gloſs upon Gratian has another pleaſant Interpretation: For he fancies it may ſignify Communion at the Hour of Death, when a Man leaves this World, and departs out of this Life to take a Pilgrimage into the next Life and World to come [i]. But this is only fit to make an intelligent Reader ſmile. For it is very improper to call Death a Pilgrimage, which more ſtrictly ſpeaking, according to Scripture Language, is rather a Tranſlating of Men to their native Country, their Heaven and their Home. Men are ſaid to be Strangers and Pilgrims upon Earth, becauſe they are abſent from Heaven, the City and Country to which they belong: Therefore leaving this World cannot be ſaid to be entring upon a Pilgrimage, but in Propriety priety rather ending and finiſhing a Pilgrimage, to go to their everlaſting Home. Therefore if the Ancients ſpake properly, as no doubt they did, they could not mean by the Communion of Strangers, the Communion of dying Perſons, or ſuch as were taking a Pilgrimage out of this World. Beſides that, the very Canon of the Council of Agde, which the Gloſſer pretends to explain, makes the Communion of Strangers not to be the Communion of dying Perſons, but ſuch as are living, and in a Capacity to return to officiate as Clergymen (after a ſufficient Correction) in their former Station.

SECT. 5. Nor the Communion of ſuch as were injoined to go in Pilgrimage on Earth by way of Penance, a Piece of Diſcipline unknown to the Ancients.

CARDINAL Bona mentions [k] and expoſes another more fanciful Opinion of one Gabriel Henao, who he ſays, wrote a long Diſſertation upon this Subject [l], wherein he at laſt concludes, That the Communion of Strangers was that which was given to ſuch Clergymen as were injoined to go on Pilgrimage, either temporary or perpetual, by way of Penance for their Offences. But he no ways explains what Kind of Communion this was; and as Bona obſerves, he ought to have demonſtrated, that when the Canons about the Communion of Strangers were made, there was any ſuch Puniſhment as Pilgrimages injoined the Clergy for the Expiation of their Offences. For there is a profound Silence in Antiquity as to what concerns any ſuch Injunction.

SECT. 6. Nor any private and peculiar Oblation for Strangers.

CASSANDER [m] and Voſſius [n], after ſome of the Schoolmen and Canoniſts, think the Communion of Strangers means the Oblation of the Euchariſt made after ſome peculiar Rite and on ſome particular Days for the Uſe of Strangers; and that it was put upon Delinquent Clergymen as a Puniſhment to communicate with theſe. But there was no ſuch Cuſtom as this of making any particular Oblation of the Euchariſt for Strangers in the ancient Church: For all Travellers and Strangers, when they came to a foreign Church, if they brought Communicatory or Commendatory Letters with them, were admitted to communicate with the Church wherever they happened to ſojourn: And if they did not bring Communicatory Letters, they were denied Communion till they ſhould procure them. Mean while they were allowed to communicate in external good Things, or partake of the Charity of the Church, if they were in Neceſſity, tho' they were debarred from all religious Communion as ſuſpected Perſons. And by this Diſtinction we ſhall be able to come at the true Meaning of the Communion of Strangers.

SECT. 7. But Communicating only as Strangers travelling without Commendatory Letters, who might partake of the Churches Charity, but not of the Communion of the Altar.

FOR we are to obſerve, That Communion in the Ancient Church ſignifies not only partaking of the Euchariſt, or Communion of the Altar; but alſo partaking of the Charity of the Church. And ſuch Travellers as came to any foreign Church without Communicatory Letters to teſtify their Orthodoxy and pious Converſation, were preſumed to be under ſome Cenſure, and not in actual Communion with their own Church: Till therefore they could clear themſelves of this Suſpicion, by the Rules of Catholick Unity and Communion of all Churches mutually with one another, they were to be refuſed Communion in a foreign Church, and only to be allowed common Charity as Strangers. And according to theſe Meaſures, Clergymen who were Delinquents were for ſome time treated much after the ſame manner, and thereupon ſaid to be reduced to the Communion of Strangers; that is, they might neither officiate as Clergymen in celebrating the Euchariſt, nor any other Part of their Office; nor in ſome Caſes participate of the Euchariſt for ſome time, till they had made Satisfaction; but only be allowed a charitable Subſiſtence out of the Revenues of the Church, without any Legal Claim to a full Proportion, till by a juſt Penance they could regain their former Office and Station. This is the moſt probable Account that can be given of a difficult and doubtful Matter, and Learned Men now generally concur in the Subſtance of this Explication, as the Reader that is curious may ſee in the Writings of Albaſpinæus [o] and Bona [p], Schelſtrate [q], Priorius [r], Petavius [s], Dominicy [t], and Sirmond [u]; not to mention the Hints and Strictures occaſionally made about it by Lindanus [x], Baronius [y] and Peter de Marca [z], all Writers of the Romiſh Communion; whom I the rather name upon this Account, to expoſe more fully the Vanity of Bellarmin and his Adherents, who with a grat deal of Confidence would perſuade the World, that they had diſcovered the Lay-Communion of their Church under one Species, as they call it, in this ancient Communion of Strangers, when yet they differ as much almoſt as any two Things from one another. Among Proteſtant Writers the true Notion is well expreſſed preſſed by Dr. Sherlock [a], when he obſerves, "That the ancient Diſcipline was very ſevere "in admitting Strangers, who were unknown "to them, to the Communion; leſt they ſhould "admit Hereticks, or Schiſmaticks, or Excom- "municated Perſons: And therefore if any "ſuch came, who could not produce their Re- "commendatory Letters, but pretended to "have loſt them by the Way, they were nei- "ther admitted to Communion, nor wholly "refuſed: but, if Occaſion were, maintained "by the Church, till ſuch Letters could be pro- "cured from the Church from whence they "came, which was called the Communio Pe- "regrina."

THIS Notion ſeems the more agreeable, becauſe it comes recommended and confirmed by ſeveral Facts in ancient Hiſtory. Syneſius writing to Theophilus Biſhop of Alexandria concerning one Alexander Biſhop of Baſinopolis in Bithynia, who lay under ſome Suſpicion at Ptolemais, tells him, he neither received him in the Church, nor communicated [b] with him at the Holy Table, but in his own Houſe he treated him as an innocent Perſon. And thus the Hiſtorians tell us [c], Chryſoſtom treated the Ægyptian Monks, who being proſecuted by Theophilus Biſhop of Alexandria, fled to Conſtantinople, to have a fair Hearing of their Cauſe before the Emperor: He entertained them hoſpitably, and allowed them to join in the common Prayers with the Church, but would not admit them to participate of the Euchariſt whilſt their Cauſe was depending and undetermined. From which it is evident, that Strangers travelling without Recommendatory Letters might be allowed ſome common Offices of Chriſtian Charity, but could not be admitted to Chriſtian Communion. And ſo it was determined expreſsly in the Apoſtolical Canons [d], That if any ſtrange Biſhops, Presbyters, or Deacons, travelled without Commendatory Letters, they ſhould neither be allowed to preach, nor be received to Communion, but only have τὰ πρὸς τὰς χρείας, what was neceſſary to anſwer their preſent Wants, that is, a charitable Subſiſtence. In the firſt Council of Carthage likewiſe a Rule was made [e] That neither Clergyman nor Layman ſhould communicate in a ſtrange Church without the Letters of their Biſhop, for Fear of ſurreptitious Communion. And in every Council almoſt there is a Canon to the ſame Purpoſe. So that according to the Treatment of Strangers, whether Clergymen or Laymen, in a ſtrange Church; ſuch was the Diſcipline exerciſed upon Delinquent Clergymen in their own Church: They were ſuſpended from their Office and Communion, but allowed a neceſſary Subſiſtence, which was properly the Communio Peregrina, or reducing them to the Communion of Strangers.

SECT. 6. What Sort of Penance was neceſſary to reſtore ſuch Delinquent Clergymen to their Office and Station again.

THERE remains but one Difficulty now to be accounted for in this Matter; which is, What Sort of Penance that was which the Church required of ſuch Delinquent Clergymen, in order to reſtore them to their Office and Station again. That they might be reſtored by Penance, is evident from the forementioned Canon of the Council of Agde [f], which allows it; and in this the Communion of Strangers chiefly differed from the Communion of Laymen, that the one allowed a Delinquent Clergyman to be reſtored to his Office, and the other ordinarily did not: But then there ariſes a Difficulty from other Canons, which both forbid [g] any one to be ordained who had done publick Penance whilſt he was a Layman; and alſo prohibit Clergymen, who were reduced to publick Penance, ever to recover their ancient [h] Dignity and Station again. Concerning both which Points of Diſcipline, beſides the Canons, St. Auſtin is an irrefragable Witneſs in reference to Practice: For he teſtifies [i], that this was the Order of the Church, That no one who had done Penance for any Crime ſhould be admitted to any Clerical Degree, or return to it after Correction, or continue in it: Which was done, not to make any one deſpair of Pardon, but only to comply with the ſtrict Diſcipline of the Church. How then can it be ſaid, that the Communion of Strangers allowed Clergymen to recover their Office and Dignity, by doing Penance, when theſe Canons for doing Penance ſo plainly took it from them? To this it is eaſily anſwered by diſtinguiſhing between publick and private Penance: The Canons which forbid Clergymen to be reſtored to their Office after having done Penance, ſpeak of publick Penance done ſolemnly in the Church; but the other Canons, which allow them to be reſtored, ſpeak of private Penance only. And that this is no arbitrary Diſtinction, but of the Church's own making, is evident from the Canons themſelves. For the Council of Girone allows [k] ſuch as have done private Penance in Time of Sickneſs, and received Abſolution upon it, afterwards to be ordained, provided they never were brought to do publick Penance in the Church, and there was no other Objection of Immorality to be made againſt them. In like manner Gennadius recounting the ſeveral Things that hindered a Man from being ordained, reckons his having done publick Penance [l] a ſufficient Objection againſt him: But as for private Penance, he takes no Notice of it. Therefore by this Rule we are to interpret all the Canons which forbid Penitents to be ordained at firſt, or deny Clergymen after Penance the Liberty of regaining their ancient Station: They are to be underſtood of publick Penance, and not of private. And ſo this ſeeming Difficulty and Contradiction of the Canons is eaſily adjuſted, whilſt the Council of Agde, which allows Clergymen, reduced to the Communion of Strangers, Liberty of reſuming their Office again after Penance, muſt neceſſarily be interpreted of private Penance, and not of publick. And this makes it evident, that this reducing of Clergymen to the Communion of Strangers was only a temporary Suſpenſion of them from their Office, and not a total Degradation, or Reduction of them to the State and Quality of Laymen.

CHAP. IV.

Of ſome other ſpecial and peculiar Ways of inflicting Puniſhment on the Clergy.

SECT. 1. Sometimes the Clergy perpetually ſuſpended from their Office; yet allowed to retain their Title and Dignity.

BESIDES theſe more general and uſual Ways of puniſhing the offending Clergy, there were alſo ſome leſs noted and uncommon Ways of Cenſuring them, which it will not be amiſs to obſerve, whilſt we are upon this Subject. Among theſe we may reckon that Sort of Suſpenſion which deprived them entirely of the Exerciſe of their Office, and yet allowed them to retain their Title and Dignity. This was a Sort of middle way between a temporary Suſpenſion and a perpetual Degradation: For they were ſtill allowed to communicate among the Clergy, and not entirely reduced to the Communion of Laymen. Thus in the Council of Ancyra [a], thoſe Presbyters who had ſacrificed to Idols, but afterwards returned, and became Confeſſors, were allowed to keep their Dignity and Title of Presbyters, and ſit among the reſt in the Presbytery; but not to preach or offer the Euchariſt, or perform any other Office of the ſacred Function. The ſame is decreed [b] concerning Deacons lapſing into Idolatry, that they might retain their Honour, but ceaſe from all Adminiſtration of the ſacred Office, neither diſtribute the Bread nor the Cup, nor miniſter as the common Præco's or Cryers of the Church, unleſs the Biſhop in Conſideration of their great Pains, Humility, or Meekneſs, thought fit to allow them more or leſs of their Office, which was left entirely to his Diſcretion. The Council of Nice made a like Decree [c] concerning the Novatian Biſhops, whom they degraded to the Order of Presbyters, but yet permitted them to retain the Title of Biſhops, if the Biſhop of the Place thought fit to allow it. And the ſame was determined in the Caſe of Meletius by the ſame Synod [d], that he might retain the bare Name and Honour of a Biſhop, but never after officiate in his own Church, or any other. So in the Canons of St. Baſil [e] a delinquent Presbyter is allowed to ſit among the reſt, but obliged to abſtain from all Offices belonging to his Order. And an offending Deacon [f] is ſuſpended from his Miniſtry, but yet allowed to partake of the Holy Elements among the other Deacons. The Council of Agde [g] has a like Decree about Preſbyters and Deacons, who were Digamiſts, or had married the Relict of ſome other Man; that tho' ſome former Rules of the Fathers had ordered them to be more ſeverely handled, yet ſuch Reſpect and Tenderneſs ſhould be ſhewed thoſe who were already ordained, that they might retain the Name of Presbyters and Deacons; but the Presbyters ſhould neither preſume to conſecrate, nor the Deacons to miniſter in the Church. A like Determination was was made by the general Council of Epheſus [b] in the Caſe of one Euſtathius Metropolitan of Pamphylia, who for the Love of a private Life, and ſome Troubles that he met with in his Office, voluntarily relinquiſhed and deſerted his Biſhoprick againſt Canon, but afterward petitioned the Council, that he might enjoy the Name and Honour of a Biſhop ſtill: In which Requeſt the Council gratified him, out of regard to his Age, and quiet Temper; allowing him both to have the Name, and Honour, and Communion of a Biſhop, but with this Condition, that he ſhould neither ordain, nor take any Church to officiate in as a Prieſt by his own Authority, unleſs he was admitted as a Co-adjutor, or expreſsly allowed by the Biſhop of the Place.

IT appears from one of the forementioned Canons [i], that there was ſuch a Puniſhment alſo as a partial Degradation; which was when the Clergy were not totally deprived of all Clerical Degree and Office, but only thruſt down from an higher Order to a lower by Way of Diſcipline and Correction. Thus the Council of Nice treated the Novatian Schiſmaticks, admitting thoſe who had paſſed for Biſhops among them, to officiate only as Presbyters in the Catholick Church, unleſs any Biſhops would promote them to the Office of a Chorepiſcopus under their Juriſdiction. And ſo the Council of Neocæſarea [k] orders Deacons that ſin to be thruſt down and degraded to the Order of Subdeacons. And by this Rule it was, as Valeſius [l] obſerves out of St. Jerom's Chronicon, that Cyril of Jeruſalem degraded Heraclius from the Order of a Biſhop to that of Presbyter. But the Council of Chalcedon ſeems not to have approved of this Rule: For in one of her Canons it is ſaid to be Sacrilege [m] to bring down a Biſhop to the Degree of a Presbyter: And that therefore if there be any juſt Cauſe to remove a Biſhop from the Exerciſe of his Epiſcopal Function, he ought not to hold the Place of a Preſbyter neither. By which we may conclude, that this Point of Diſcipline varied according to the different Apprehenſions and Sentiments of Men in different Ages.

SECT. 3. Sometimes deprived of a Part of their Office, but allowed to exerciſe the reſt.

SOMETIMES again they were deprived of their Office as to ſome particular Act of it, but allowed to exerciſe the reſt. Thus the Council of Neocæſarea orders, That if any Presbyter confeſſed that he had been guilty of any corporal Uncleanneſs before his Ordination, he ſhould not [n] conſecrate the Euchariſt, but might continue in the Exerciſe of all other Parts of his Office, if he was a Man diligent in his Function. And in the Fourth Council of Carthage it was decreed, That if a Biſhop ordained [o] any one wittingly who had done publick Penance, (the Ordination of which was prohibited by the Canons) he ſhould for his Tranſgreſſion be deprived of his Epiſcopal Power, as to what concerned the particular Act of ordaining only: Which implies, that he was ſtill allowed to exerciſe all other Parts of his Office and Function.

SECT. 4. Sometimes deprived of their Power over a Part of their Flock, but allowed it over the reſt.

IN Africk we ſometimes find Biſhops for their Male-adminiſtration and indiſcreet Government deprived of their Power over ſome Part of their Flock, and yet allowed ſtill to govern the reſt. This may be collected from St. Auſtin's Account of their Proceeding with one Antonius a young Biſhop, who had oppreſſed ſome of his People at Fuſſala by unreaſonable Exactions; for which it was thought fit to puniſh him with this gentle Correction, That he ſhould no longer rule over [p] that Part of his People whom he had ſo oppreſſed, leſt their Grief and Impatience ſhould break out into ſome violent Attempts that might be dangerous to both Parties. Antonius indeed complained of this as an Infringement of his juſt Rights and Powers: For he pleaded, That a Biſhop ought either to be depoſed, or to be left in the full Exerciſe of his Juriſdiction and Power. But St. Auſtin ſhews, that this was no new Thing in Africk, nor unreaſonable in itſelf: For a Biſhop may be guilty of many Miſdemeanors, for which it will neither be proper to let him go wholly unpuniſhed, nor yet to uſe ſuch Severity as to deprive him univerſally of his Epiſcopal Honour and Power. In ſuch Caſes the middle Way proves the moſt uſeful Correction; neither to uſe too great Severity above the Nature of the Offence, nor too much Lenity and Mildneſs, to let it paſs entirely without any Cenſure or Correction. And he ſhews, that this was a Method often taken in Africk for leſs Faults in other Inſtances of Puniſhment.

SECT. 5. Bishops in Africk punished by depriving them of their Seniority and Right of succeeding to the Primacy or Metropolitical Power.

PARTICULARLY in Africk (where the Primacy of Metropolitans always went by Seniority of Ordination, so that the oldest Bishop always succeeded to the Primacy of Course, whatever Diocese he was possessed of) it was customary to punish an offending Bishop with the Loss of his Seniority and Right to the Primacy, by rendring him uncapable of ever attaining it. This we learn from St. Austin in the same Epistle [q], where he gives an Instance in one Priscus of the Province of Mauritania Cæsariensis, who was thus censured: And if Antonius's Argument had been good, Priscus might have pleaded the same, that he ought either to have been allowed his Right of succeeding to the Primacy, or to have been deprived of his Bishoprick: But the African Discipline took the middle Way, for certain Crimes neither to deprive Bishops of their Episcopal Power, nor to let them go wholly unpunished.

SECT. 6. Also by confining them to the Communion of their own Church.

ANOTHER Instance of this Discipline was to confine an offending Bishop to the Communion of his own Church, and prohibit all other Bishops from admitting him to Communion in any of their Churches. St. Austin mentions one Victor [r] who was thus censured; and he might have pleaded after the same manner: Either I ought to communicate in all Churches, or not communicate in my own. But this was thought a reasonable Way of discountenancing an offending Bishop for some smaller Faults, when they did not think them worthy of the highest Censure: As in Case a Bishop neglected to come to the Provincial Synod at the Primate's Call, or ordained another Man's Clerk without his Licence or Approbation; which are some of the Offences specified in the African Synods [*], for which a Bishop might incur this Censure.

SECT. 7. Or removing them from a greater Diocese to a less.

ST. Austin gives a third Instance of this Discipline in the African Church: Which was the removing of a negligent Bishop from a greater Diocese to a less; which was a Kind of tacit Reproach and Dishonour to him, and the Disgrace was his Punishment. For as it was an Honour for a Bishop to be translated from a less Diocese to a greater by the Approbation and Judgment of a venerable Synod (without which they might not move) so it was a Dishonour and Reproach to him to be thrust down by a Synodical Decree, though not to a lower Order, yet to a lower Station. The one was an Argument of Merit and great Worth, and the other an Argument of some Demerit and Misdemeanor; and therefore the one was used by Way of Reward, to promote a Bishop for his Abilities and good Service; and the other by Way of Punishment, to give a negligent Bishop a little gentle Admonition and moderate Correction. And thus St. Austin tells us, one Laurentius a Bishop was punished by the Discipline [s] of the African Church.

SECT. 8. The Clergy in general punished by a Loss of their Seniority among those of the same Order.

IT was a moderate Punishment much of the same Nature which the Council of Trullo [t] mentions as common to all Orders of the Clergy in general: Which was to deprive them of their Seniority, and sink them down to the lowest Seat or Degree among those of the same Order. This was commonly the Punishment of Persons of an ambitious and assuming Temper. The Council instances in such Deacons, as because they had some more honourable Ecclesiastical Office, would presume to take place of the Presbyters, and sit before them; against whom they alledge the Parable of our Saviour, When thou art bidden to a Wedding, sit not down in the most honourable Place, &c. for he that exalteth himself, shall be abased; and he that humbleth himself, shall be exalted. The Author of the Apostolical Constitutions takes notice of the same Punishment, as used in his Time, even among the Laity also. For if an honourable Person came into the Assembly, being a Stranger, and any one refused upon the Deacon's Admonition to give him Place to sit down; he that so refused was to be removed by Compulsion [u] beneath the lowest Rank of Hearers in the Church. Cotelerius notes the same Order to be observed among the Monks in the Rules of Pachomius and St. Benedict for smaller Offences. And in the Second Council of Nice a like Rule was made for the Correction of the Clergy, That if any one through Haughtiness insulted another, he should for his Offence [x] be thrust down to the lowest Degree of his own Order, to teach him Humility and Submission in his Station.

SECT. 9. And rendring them uncapable of being promoted to any higher Order.

THEY had also a negative Punishment of the same Nature for all the Inferior Orders of the Clergy, which was, to deny them all farther Promotion, and incapacitate them from attaining to any higher Order in the Church. The first Council of Toledo has several Canons to this Purpose. The first Canon orders [y], That Deacons who lived incontinently with their Wives, should never arrive to the Honour of Presbytery, nor Presbyters to Episcopacy. This was one of the first Steps made toward settling the Celibacy of the Clergy, which at first was introduced, not by disannulling the Orders of the married Clergy, but by debarring them from being advanced to any higher Order. Another Canon [z] appoints, That if a Reader marries a Widow, he shall never be promoted to any higher Degree, but always continue a Reader, or at most a Subdeacon. And a third Canon of the same Council [a] decrees, That if any one after Baptism had followed the Soldier's Life, though he had never happened to shed Blood, if he were ordained to any of the Inferior Orders, he should never arrive to the Dignity of a Deacon in the Church. A like Decree was made in the Council of Lerida, That if any Clergyman, who ministred at the Altar, shed human Blood, though it were the Blood of an Enemy in the Straitness of a Siege, he should not only be suspended from his Office and Communion for Two Years, but, after he was restored to his Office and Communion again [b], should remain uncapable of being advanced to any higher Office in the Church. And there is another Canon in the same Council, which orders such Clergymen as fall by the Frailty of the Flesh, after Penance, to be received again; yet so as not to expect any [c] farther Promotion in the Church. The first Council of Orange and Council of Turin [d] have Canons to the same Purpose: And Pope Leo delivers it as a Rule, founded upon the general Practice of the Church, in the Case of Heretical Clergymen returning to the Unity of the Faith, that they were to take it as a Favour, if they were allowed to continue in the Order they were in before, deprived of all [e] Hopes of farther Advancement. Among the Greeks St. Basil [f] has a like Rule concerning Readers, who were guilty of Ante-nuptial Fornication, That every such Delinquent should be suspended a Year from his Office, μένων ἀπόκοπος, remaining moreover for ever uncapable of attaining to any higher Station or Preferment in the Church. And Justinian in one of his Novels [g] made a parallel Decree concerning Readers, That if any of them married a second Wife, or a Widow, or one divorced from a former Husband, or otherwise forbidden by the Laws or Sacred Canons; that he should never be advanced to any Ecclesiastical Order: Or if by any Means he happened to be unwarily so advanced, he should be put down again, and reduced to his former Order. This was one of those Negative Punishments, which may be proper to discourage and correct Offences of a lesser Kind; and so far as it was serviceable to that End, it may be reckoned an useful Part of the Discipline of the Church.

SECT. 10. The Clergy sometimes punished by Denying them the publick Exercise of their Office, whilst they were allowed to officiate in private.

ST. Basil mentions [h] another Piece of Discipline, which was pretty peculiar; for I remember no other Writer at present that mentions it beside himself: That was to deny an offending Clergyman the Liberty of exercising his Office in publick, whilst he was allowed to officiate in private. This was a Rule made by St. Basil in the Case of Bianor and some other Presbyters of Antioch in Pisidia, who upon some Injury done them, had rashly sworn they would never execute the Office of Presbyters any more: But afterward repenting of their rash Oath, were willing to be admitted to the Exercise of their Office again. St. Basil being consulted in the Case, determined, that they ought to be restrained from the publick Exercise of their Function, because of the Scandal and Offence that might be given to many thereby; but still they might be allowed to officiate in private, where no such Offence could be taken. These are the Specialities of those Punishments, which the Discipline of the Church commonly inflicted on Clergymen for lesser Offences; which I have the rather mentioned, because they are seldom to be met with in the Account of Church Discipline given by Modern Writers.

SECT. 11. Of Intruſion of Offenders into a Monaſtery to do Penance in private.

To all theſe we may add, That in the Fourth and Fifth Ages, when Monaſteries began to be ſettled in the World, nothing was more common than to confine an offending Clerk into ſome Monaſtery, either for a certain Term, or during his whole Life, as the Nature of his temporary Suſpenſion or his perpetual Deprivation required, there to exerciſe himſelf in Acts of private Repentance for his Offences. This was a Convenience rather than a Puniſhment, giving them an Opportunity of qualifying themſelves the better, either for a Reſtoration to their Office, or for their Reception into Lay-Communion: And therefore it was indifferently uſed both in Caſes of Deprivation and Suſpenſion. Many who were only ſuſpended from the Exerciſe of their Office for a certain Time, were yet confined to a Monaſtery during that Term; as appears from one of Juſtinian's Novels, where it is ordered, That if a Presbyter or a Deacon was convicted of giving falſe Evidence in a pecuniary Cauſe, they ſhould be ſuſpended from their Miniſtry for Three Years, and be confined [i] to a Monaſtery during the Time of their Suſpenſion. And this was in lieu of Scourging, which was inflicted for this Crime upon other Offenders. The Second Council of Sevil decrees the ſame [k] in the Caſe of a Clergyman, who deſerts his own Church without his Biſhop's Leave, and makes his Reſidence in any other: He is to loſe the Badge of his Honour and Ordination for ſome Time, and be bound to a Monaſtery, till it be proper to recall him to the Miniſtry of his Eccleſiaſtical Order again. But in Caſe the Puniſhment amounted to a total and perpetual Deprivation, then they were frequently ſent to a Monaſtery for their whole Lives, and there they ſpent the Remainder of their Days only in Lay-Communion. Of which the Canons of Agde and Epone [l] are full Proof, to which I refer the Learned Reader in the Margin.

SECT. 12. Of corporal Puniſhment. How far uſed as a Piece of Diſcipline upon the inferior Clergy.

We may obſerve farther, That in the ſame Ages, when it was the Cuſtom to ſhut Delinquents up in a Monaſtery, ſome corporal Puniſhment and Confinement in Priſon alſo was uſed, as a Piece of Church-Diſcipline, to correct the inferior Orders. I have had Occaſion to ſhew before [*], That the larger Churches had commonly their Decanica, or Priſons, for this Purpoſe; which were not any one diſtinct Building, but ſome of the Catechumenia, or Diaconica, or Secretaria belonging to the Church, and made uſe of for this End, to put offending Clerks to a more decent Confinement in them. It has alſo been noted [†] in another Place, That all Monaſteries had the Diſcipline of the Whip or Scourge among them, to puniſh the junior Monks and unruly Offenders. And it is as certain it was alſo uſed for the Correction of the inferior Orders among the Clergy. The Council of Agde mentions it twice; firſt as the Puniſhment [m] of thoſe who wandered about from one Church to another without the Recommendatory Letters of their Biſhop; whom the Canon orders firſt to be corrected by Words, and then by Stripes, if they remained incorrigible upon Admonition. Another Canon appoints [n] the ſame Diſcipline for Drunkenneſs: A Clerk, who is convicted of being drunken, is either to be ſuſpended Thirty Days from Communion, or elſe to be chaſtized by corporal Puniſhment. The Council of Epone [o] expreſsly diſtinguiſhes between the ſuperior and inferior Clergy in the Caſe: If one of the ſuperior Clergy feaſt with an Heretick, he is to be ſuſpended for a Year; but one of the inferior for the ſame Crime is to be beaten. The firſt Council of Maſcon [p] orders, That if a Clergyman be found wearing an indecent Habit, or carrying Arms, he ſhall be impriſoned Thirty Days, and fed only with Bread and Water. This Impriſonment was the Puniſhment of the ſuperior Clergy: For in another Canon the Diſtinction is expreſsly made [q] in the Caſe of one Clergyman accuſing another another before a ſecular Magiſtrate: If he was one of the ſuperior Clergy, he was to be impriſoned Thirty Days; if one of the inferior, to receive Forty Stripes ſave one. And this was done in Conformity to the Rule in the Law of Moſes, that they ſhould not exceed Forty Stripes, only in Caſe the Crime was great, they might repeat them after ſome Days; which is obſerved out of the Life of Cæſarius Arelatenſis by the late French Author of the Hiſtoria Flagellantium [r], who cites many other Writers, which need not here be mentioned. I only add that of St. Auſtin [s] who ſays, This Way of Coercion was uſed in Biſhops Courts in his Time; but whether he means towards the Clergy, or the Laity, is not abſolutely certain. It might be towards both perhaps in leſſer Criminal Cauſes, that were of an Eccleſiaſtical Nature: For as to thoſe Criminal Cauſes which were of a Civil Nature, Biſhops had no Power, eſpecially in Caſes of Blood; in which Sort of Judgments a Biſhop could not be concerned, without incurring himſelf the higheſt Cenſures of the Church: But they might have Liberty to chaſtiſe the inferior Clergy with corporal Correction. The Law indeed in many Caſes exempted the ſuperior Clergy from corporal Puniſhment: As if a Presbyter or a Deacon gave falſe Teſtimony in a pecuniary Cauſe, they might be ſuſpended, and ſent to a Monaſtery for a Time, but not be corporally puniſhed as other Men. In criminal Cauſes it was otherwiſe: Falſe Teſtimony in ſuch a Caſe deprived them of their Orders, and reducing them to the State of Laymen; and then, as other Laymen, they were liable to corporal Puniſhment, according as the Law required. But whether it were a pecuniary Cauſe, or a criminal Cauſe, if one of the inferior Orders gave falſe Teſtimony, in either Caſe he was liable to ſuffer corporal Puniſhment: And in this conſiſted the Difference between the ſuperior and inferior Clergy in this Part of Diſcipline, as is noted in one of Juſtinians's Novels [t], which helps to explain the Practice of the Church. And this is what I had to obſerve concerning thoſe Puniſhments, which by the Rules of the ancient Diſcipline were peculiarly inflicted on the Clergy for the Correction of their Offences.

CHAP. V.

A particular Account of the Crimes for which Clergymen were liable to be puniſhed with any of the forementioned Kinds of Cenſure.

SECT. 1. All Crimes that were puniſhed with Excommunication in a Layman, puniſhed with Suſpenſion or Depoſition in the Clergy.

IT remains that we now give a particular Account of thoſe Crimes for which Clergymen might be puniſhed. And here we muſt obſerve, That their Crimes were of two Sorts, ſuch as were common to them with Laymen, and ſuch as they might be guilty of in tranſgreſſing the Rules particularly relating to their Office and Function. Of the former Sort I need not diſcourſe particularly here, becauſe I have done it largely in the laſt Book, where I examined the Nature of the ſeveral great Crimes for which a Layman might incur the Cenſure of Excommunication: There being only this general Difference to be obſerved between the Crimes of a Laick and an Eccleſiaſtick, that what was commonly puniſhed with Excommunication in a Layman, was ordinarily puniſhed with Suſpenſion or Depoſition in a Clergyman; or, if the Crime was very ſcandalous and flagrant, with Excommunication alſo. For this Reaſon I here paſs over the great Crimes of Idolatry, Divination, Magick, Sorcery and Inchantment, Apoſtaſie, Hereſy, Schiſm, Sacrilege and Simony; which are Crimes againſt the firſt and ſecond Commandment in the Decalogue: As alſo Blaſphemy, profane Swearing, Perjury and Breach of Vows, againſt the third Commandment: All Violations of the Law injoyning the religious Obſervation of the Lord's-Day, againſt the fourth Commandment: All Diſobedience and Diſreſpect to Parents, and Treaſon and Rebellion againſt Princes, and general Contempt of the Laws of the Church, infringing the Obligations of the fifth Commandment: All the Species of Murder againſt the ſixth Commandment; and all Species of Uncleanneſs and Intemperance againſt the Seventh: All Kinds of Theft, Fraud, Oppreſſion and Injuſtice againſt the Eighth: And all Kinds of falſe Teſtimony, Libelling, Informing, Calumny and Slander, againſt the ninth Commandment; becauſe I have already ſpoken of all theſe in particular, and ſhewed, that as they were puniſhed with Excommunication in the Laity, ſo they were commonly puniſhed with Suſpenſion or Deprivation, and ſometimes with Excommunication in the Clergy alſo. But beſide theſe Crimes, common both to Laity and Clergy, there were many Tranſgreſſions and Offences that might be commit-committed by the Clergy againſt the particular Rules of their Function and Profeſſion: And of theſe we are here to make a more ſpecial Enquiry. Some of theſe reſpected their Entrance upon their Office; others, their Behaviour in it. We will now ſpeak particularly, but briefly and ſuccinctly of both.

SECT. 2. Some Crimes rendred an Ordination originally void, and for ſuch the Clergy were immediately liable to be degraded from their very firſt Ordination. As firſt for Ignorance or Heterodoxy in Religion.

SOME Qualifications were originally required in the Clergy as neceſſary at their Entrance upon the Clerical Life and Function: And therefore certain Rules were preſcribed for a due Examination and Enquiry into theſe before their Ordination; and a Defect in any of theſe Qualifications, or a Tranſgreſſion againſt any of theſe Rules, was enough to render an Ordination null and void ab origine; ſo that the Clergy thus ordained, were liable to be degraded or depoſed immediately from their very firſt Ordination. Of theſe Qualifications (as I have had occaſion to ſhew more at large in a former Book [*]) ſome reſpected their Faith and Knowledge, others their former Life and Morals, and others their outward Quality and Condition in the World: And a Defect in any of theſe Qualifications, or a Tranſgreſſion of any of the Rules preſcribed, was in the common Courſe of the Diſcipline of the Church a ſufficient Reaſon to depoſe a Clergyman as ſoon as he was ordained. The firſt and principal Qualification ſo neceſſarily required, was an Orthodox Faith, and a competent Knowledge in the Scriptures and all Things relating to the Exerciſe of his Function: And if either a Biſhop was ordained without ſuch an Examination, or without ſuch Qualifications, both the Ordainer and the Ordained were immediately to be depoſed. The Words of Juſtinian's Law [a] are very expreſs in this Buſineſs: If any Biſhop is ordained contrary to the forementioned Obſervation, we command, that both he who is ſo ordained, be depoſed, and alſo the Biſhop who ſo illegally ordained him.

SECT. 3. Secondly, for Immorality and tranſgreſſing any of the known Rules of Ordination.

ANOTHER ſtrict Enquiry was to be made into Mens Morals; and if in any notorious Inſtance they had formerly been culpable and ſcandalous, their Ordination was forbidden; or if by Ignorance or Surreption they were ordained, they were immediately upon Diſcovery and Conviction to be ſuſpended, if not depoſed. Thus in the Council of Neocæſarea [b] we find a Rule, That if a Preſbyter confeſſed, that before his Ordination he had been guilty of corporal Uncleanneſs, he was no longer to be allowed to offer the Sacrifice of the Altar. This Sin always made a Man irregular, though ſome were of Opinion, as the Canon intimates, that other Sins were done away by Ordination. The Canons farther required, That a Man ſhould be no Digamiſt, or twice married, nor married to a Widow, nor to any that had been divorced from another Man: And if any ſuch were ordained, by the ſame Rule of Juſtinian they were immediately liable to be depoſed. It was forbidden likewiſe to ordain any Man ἀπολελυμβύως, that is, without fixing him to ſome particular Dioceſe or Church: And the Ordination of any one contrary to this Rule, is by Pope Leo [c] pronounced vain; and by the great Council of Chalcedon [d], null and void. It was another Rule of this Kind, for the Preſervation of good Order in the Church, that no Biſhop ſhould ordain another Man's Clerk without his Conſent: And if any one did ſo, the great Council of Nice [e], and the Council of Sardica [f], and the Second of Arles [g] peremptorily pronounce all ſuch Ordinations null and void. It was required in the Election and Ordination of a Biſhop, that there ſhould be the general Conſent of theſe four Parties, the Clergy, the People, the Provincial Biſhops, and the Metropolitan: And Ordinations performed in Derogation to any Part of this Rule, are by Abundance of Canons declared abſolutely void, and Biſhops ſo promoted are appointed to be depoſed. The Council of Antioch is expreſs in requiring the Preſence, or Conſent of the Provincial Biſhops [h] and Metropolitan; decreeing, that an Ordination performed contrary to this Rule, ſhall be of no Force, μηδὲν ἰσχύειν. The Council of Riez [i] for this Reaſon actually degraded Armentarius Biſhop of Ambrun, becauſe he had neither the general Conſent of the Provincial Biſhops, nor the Metropolitan, but was clancularly ordained by two Biſhops without the Knowledge of the other Parties chiefly concerned. The Canons, in the Latin Church eſpecially, are altogether as peremptory and plain in diſannulling all Ordinations of Biſhops to any Place againſt the general Conſent of the People. Let no Biſhop, ſays one of the Councils of Orleans [k] be impoſed upon a People againſt their Wills. Nor let the Clergy and People

People be conſtrained to give their Conſent by the Oppreſſion of any potent Perſons. If any ſuch Thing is done, the Biſhop who is ſo ordained rather by Violence, than any legal Decree, ſhall be depoſed for ever from the Honour of his Prieſthood. In like manner the Council of Chalons [l], A Biſhop ſhall not be choſen to any City any other Way, but by the Conſent of the Provincial Biſhops, the Clergy and the People: If otherwiſe, the Ordination ſhall be null and void. To this agrees the Reſolution of Pope Leo, in anſwer to the Queries of a French Biſhop, That Reaſon [m] will not allow thoſe to be received as Biſhops, who were neither choſen by the Clergy, nor deſired by the People, nor conſecrated by the Provincial Biſhops with the Judgment of the Metropolitan. And that Reſcript of Honorius concerning the Election of the Biſhop of Rome [n], That if two Biſhops were ordained by two contending Parties, neither of them ſhould be Biſhop, but one who was choſen out of the Clergy by the Judgment of the Provincial Biſhops and the Conſent of all the People. So that if any Biſhop was ordained againſt theſe Rules, his Ordination was void, and he was liable to be depoſed, as ſoon as he was ordained. So if any Biſhop was ordained, who was before under the Sentence of Depoſition, his Ordination was null, as was declared in the Caſe of Timotheus Ælurus by ſeveral Provincial Councils related in the Acts of the Council of Chalcedon [o]. If a Biſhop was ordained into a full See, where another was regularly ordained before him, his Ordination was of no effect: He was to be reputed as no Biſhop, but to be rejected as an Adulterer, an Intruder, an Invader of other Mens Rights, and a Wolf only in Sheep's Clothing: Which was the Anſwer that Cyprian [p] gave in the Caſe of Novatian; and the Council of Sardica [q] in Hilary's Collection; and the Oriental Biſhops and Synods [r] in the forementioned Caſe of Timotheus Ælurus, mentioned both by Liberatus, and their own Acts in the End of the Council of Chalcedon. In like manner it was a Rule in the Church, That no Energumen, or Perſon poſſeſſed with an evil Spirit, ſhould be ordained: Or if any ſuch by any Chance or Miſtake were ordained, he was immediately to be depoſed. This is very expreſsly decreed in the firſt Council [s] of Orange: Energumens are not only not to be taken into any Order of the Clergy, but thoſe who are already ordained, ſhall be removed from their Office alſo. There is a Neceſſity of removing ſuch Demoniacks, ſays Gelaſius [t], leſt ſuch Miniſters ſhould ſcandalize the Weak, for whom CHRIST died. It was another Rule of the Church, That no one who had voluntarily disfigured or diſmembered his own Body, ſhould ever be admitted to any Sacred [u] Order; And therefore if any ſuch were actually ordained, by the Order of the great Council of Nice [x] they were to ceaſe from officiating; to be ſecluded from the Clerical Function, as ſoon as diſcovered, according to the Decree of Gelaſius [y]; or, as the Roman Council under Hilary [z] words it, if any ſuch crept into Orders, the Biſhop who conſecrated them, was obliged to nullify and diſſolve his own Act, as ſoon as the Fraud was diſcovered. Another Rule was, That no Perſon who was unbaptized, or irregularly baptized without the due Form of Baptiſm, ſhould be admitted to Holy Orders: And for this Reaſon the Council of Nice [†] ordered all ſuch as were ordained by the Paulianiſts, to be both rebaptized and reordained, if they were otherwiſe found qualified for their Function. A like Order was made concerning all ſuch as were baptized among Hereticks, or rebaptized by them; that no ſuch ſhould be ordained; and if any of either Kind were ſurreptitiouſly admitted to Orders, they were to be depoſed, under Penalty of Depoſition to the Biſhop himſelf, who ſhould preſume [a] either to ordain any ſuch, or not remove them when fraudulently ordained by others. If any one made uſe of the Secular Powers to gain a Promotion in the Church, by a Rule [b] of the Apoſtolical Canons he was to be depoſed; and all that communicated with him, were to be ſuſpended from Chriſtian Communion. If a Biſhop ordained any of his unworthy Kindred for mere Favour, by a Rule of the ſame Apoſtolical Canons [c] the Ordination was null, and the Biſhop himſelf was to be ſuſpended. And to this agrees the Order made in the Tenth Council of Toledo [d] to the ſame Purpoſe. If a Biſhop ordained his own Succeſſor, by a Rule of the Council of Antioch [e] his Ordination was null, becauſe it was clandeſtinely done without the Conſent of a Provincial Synod. Or if a Biſhop was ordained only by two Biſhops, for the ſame Reaſon he was liable to be depoſed, becauſe it was done againſt the Rule which required the Concurrence of the Metropolitan and the Provincial Synod. Therefore the Firſt Council of Orange [f] ordered in ſuch a Caſe, That if two Biſhops preſumed to ordain a Biſhop by themſelves, both the ordaining Biſhops were to be depoſed; and if the Biſhop was ordained againſt his Will, he ſhould be put into the Place of one of the depoſed Biſhops; but if he was ordained by his own Conſent, then he alſo was to be depoſed, that the Rule preſcribed by the ancient Canons might be more cautiouſly obſerved. And the Council of Riez [g] actually depoſed Armentarius, Biſhop of Ambrun, for this very Reaſon, becauſe he had not three Biſhops to ordain him. All theſe were Tranſgreſſions againſt the known Rules of Ordination, and imputed to Men as Immoralities, becauſe they were Violations of thoſe good Rules and Orders, which were made with great Wiſdom for the regular Government and Benefit of the Church. And therefore, if in any of theſe Caſes a Crime was committed, the Ordination was liable to be declared void originally by the Diſcipline of the Church; and the Clergy ſo ordained, might be depoſed, as ſoon as they were ordained, for the Offences committed in their Ordination. 'Tis true indeed, the Church did not always actually depoſe ſuch; but then ſhe diſpenſed with her own Rules, and ſuch Diſpenſations were only Matters of Favour and Indulgence, in ſome ſpecial Caſes, when the Church for prudential Reaſons thought fit to relax her Diſcipline, and grant Men ſuch Allowances, as in ſtrictneſs of Law they could not challenge: The general Rules of Diſcipline were ſtill in Force, though the Church did not always think it proper to put them ſtrictly in Execution.

NEITHER was it any Remedy in this Caſe, that Men made a ſolemn Atonement for their Crimes before the Church, doing publick Penance for them. For this was ſo far from opening their Way to a regular Ordination, that it was one of thoſe Things that rendered them uncapable of it; or if by any ſecret Methods they had attained it, this was thought a ſufficient Reaſon to withdraw their Orders, and degrade them. No one that has done publick Penance, ſays the Fourth Council of Carthage [h], ſhall be ordained a Clerk, though he be otherwiſe a good Man: Or if by Concealment from the Biſhop's Knowledge this happen to be done, the Clerk ſhall be depoſed, becauſe he confeſſed not at the Time of his Ordination, that he had done Penance in the Church. After the ſame manner the Roman Council under Pope Hilarius makes the doing of Publick Penance [i] as much a Bar to a Man's Ordination, as the profoundeſt Ignorance, or mangling his own Body; and declares, That whatever Biſhop conſecrates any ſuch, he ſhall be obliged to reverſe and cancel his own Act; that is, immediately deprive them of their Orders, and degrade them. The like was determined by Pope Innocent in the Caſe of Modeſtus, who after he had done Penance for many Crimes, not only was ordained a Clergyman, which was againſt Law, but alſo aimed at a Biſhoprick. His Determination upon the Point is this: That he ought not only to be defeated in his Expectation [k] of a Biſhoprick, but according to the Canons of Nice [l] be removed from all Office among the Clergy. The Third Council of Orleans enacted the ſame: No one ſhall be promoted to Holy Orders, who has either been married to two Wives, or married a Widow, or done publick Penance, &c. And if any Biſhop wittingly act againſt theſe Rules, he that is ordained ſhall be deprived of his Office, and the Biſhop himſelf [m] for ſix Months ſequeſtred or ſuſpended from his Miniſtration. The Council of Agde [n] a little moderates the Puniſhment, allowing ſuch Presbyters and Deacons, who had done Penance, to retain the Name and Honour of their Orders, but forbidding Deacons to miniſter the Cup, or Preſbyters to conſecrate the Oblation of the Altar. And

And the First Council of Toledo [o] degrades them, not totally, but allows Deacons, thus ordained out of Penitents, to take place among the Subdeacons, that is, in the next inferior Order. Thus one way or other, every Clergyman who had done Penance whilst he was a Layman, was corrected and punished, for not declaring, when he was ordained, that he was in such a State as by the Rules of the Church was made a just Impediment to his Ordination: And it was always thought scandalous and offensive, to allow any Man to officiate as a publick Minister, who had before been a publick Penitent in the Church. The Church could admit them to Pardon and Reconciliation after Penance, but would not allow them to aspire to any Dignity, or continue them in any Sacred Office of the Clerical Function.

SECT. 5. Some Impediments of Ordination arising from Mens outward State and Condition in the World, made sometimes Occasion of their Deprivation.

THERE was another Sort of Impediments of Ordination, which as I observed, arose not from any Criminal Action in Men, but barely from their outward State and Condition in the World; because it happened to be incompatible and inconsistent with the Duties of the Sacred Order: And therefore many strict Rules were made to prohibit the Ordination of Men in such a Capacity, and to remove them back again from the Clerical to a Secular State, if they happened to be unwarily ordained against any such Prohibitions. Thus to instance in a few Particulars: The Military Calling (under which, as I have shewed in another Place [*], were comprehended, not only the armed Soldiery of the Camp, but also all Officers of the Emperor's Palace, and all Apparitors and Officials of Judges or Governours of Provinces) I say, the Military Calling in this comprehensive Sense was reckoned inconsistent with the Duties of the Clerical Life; because the Men of this Vocation were tied by the Laws to the Service of the Empire; and therefore the Laws both of Church and State forbad the Admission of them into any Order of the Church; and if they were admitted by any Fraud or Mistake, they were liable to be deposed, and returned back to their ancient Service. The Church had another Reason also for refusing the Soldiers of the Camp, because probably they had embrewed their Hands in Blood, and no such were capable of Ordination. Therefore when some such were got into Orders in the Spanish Churches, Pope Innocent wrote a sharp Letter to the Synod of Toledo, telling them, that by reason of the Numbers of those who had been so ordained, it was proper to suffer them to continue, for fear of giving Disturbance to the Church, and to leave them to the Judgment of GOD; but for the future, if any such were ordained, both the Ordainers [p] and the Ordained should be deposed. And the Council of Toledo [q] so far complied with his Admonition, as to decree, That if any Soldiers had been admitted to any of the inferior Orders, they should never rise higher to the Dignity of Deacons in the Church. The Ordination of Slaves and Vassals was prohibited upon the same account, because they were tied by the Law to the Service of their Temporal Masters: So likewise all Members of any Civil Company, or Society of Tradesmen, because they were tied to the Service of the Commonwealth: And all those who went by the Name of Curiales, or Decuriones, in the Roman Government; being Members of the Curia, that is, the Court or Common-Council of any City, to whose Service they were tied by Virtue of their Estates and Possessions. The Ordination of all these Sorts of Men was generally forbidden both by the Laws of Church and State; and if any such were irregularly ordained, Masters had Liberty to reclaim their Slaves; and the State her Soldiers; and any Corporation or Curia, their deserting Members: And the Church, except in some special Cases, was bound to depose them, and readily consented to restore them to their ancient secular Station and Employment again. Of all which I have given a large Account [†] in a former Book, and here only hint them to explain the Discipline of the Church.

SECT. 6. What Crimes might occasion the Deprivation of the Clergy, or other Censures, in the Performance of their Office. 1. Clergymen to be censured for Contempt of the Canons.

WE have hitherto considered the Causes and Occasions of Mens Deprivation, arising from some Irregularities committed in their Entrance upon the Clerical Office: We are next to view what Crimes might occasion their Deprivation, or make them liable to other Censures, in the Performance of it. And here in the first Place it may be noted in general, that a Clergyman was ever liable to be censured for any Contempt of the Canons. Concerning which there are Directions given in the first Council of Carthage [r], and Turin, and Braga, and several others: But as these equally affect both Clergy and Laity, I need not be more particular in relating them at length, having done it once before in the general Account of Discipline [*] in the former Book.

SECT. 7. 2. For Negligence in their Duty.

2. THEY were more especially liable to Censure for Negligence in their Office, or any great Irregularity committed in the Execution of it. If a Bishop or a Presbyter be negligent toward the other Clergy or People, not instructing them in the Ways of Godliness, he shall be suspended, say the Apostolical Canons [s]; and if he continues in his Neglect and Slothfulness, he shall be deposed. This Neglect is termed Sacrilege in the Civil Law [t], and accordingly to be punished under that Denomination.

SECT. 8. 3. For neglecting to use the publick Liturgy, Lord's-Prayer, Hymns, &c.

3. IF the Clergy neglected to use the publick Liturgy, or any Part of it, the Lord's-Prayer, the stated and received Hymns, &c. they were liable to Censure and Condemnation. The Fourth Council of Toledo has several Canons to this Purpose. If any Priest or inferior Clerk, says one Canon [u], neglect to use the Lord's-Prayer daily, either in publick or in private, let him be condemned for his Pride, and be deprived of the Honour of his Order. Another [w] establishes the use of the Common-Prayers, and the Doxology, Glory be to the Father, &c. and the Hymns of St. Hilary and St. Ambrose, composed in Honour of the Apostles and Martyrs, under the Penalty of Excommunication to any Priest in Spain or Gallicia, that should presume to reject them. Another confirms the Use of the Hymn of the Three Children, under the same [x] Penalty. A Fourth Canon [y] orders after what Manner and Form the Gloria Patri shall be sung by all Ecclesiasticks: And a Fifth [z] appoints the Reading of the Apocalyps at a certain Season of the Year, between Easter and Pentecost, denouncing the same Sentence and Punishment of Excommunication to any who should either reject the Book as uncanonical, or neglect to use it in Divine-Service according to Appointment.

SECT. 9. 4. For making any Alteration in the Form of Baptism.

4. IF a Minister made any material Alteration in the Manner of administring the Sacraments, he was liable to be deposed for his Presumption; as if he either changed the general Form of Words used in Baptism, or the Trine Immersion received by universal Custom in all Churches. If any Bishop or Presbyter, says one of the Apostolical Canons [a], baptize not according to the Commandment of the LORD, in the Name of the FATHER, SON, and HOLY GHOST; but in Three unoriginated Beings, τρεῖς Ἀνάρχους, or Three Sons, or Three Paracletes, let him be deposed. And the next Canon says, If a Bishop or Presbyter use not Three Immersions in the Mystery of Baptism, but only One Immersion into the Death of CHRIST, let him be deposed. For the LORD said not, Baptize into my Death; but, Go teach all Nations, baptizing them in the Name of the Father, and of the Son, and of the Holy Ghost.

SECT. 10. 5. For not frequenting Divine-Service daily.

5. IF any Clergyman neglected to frequent the Church and Divine-Service daily, even when he did not officiate or celebrate himself, he was liable to be deposed, if after Admonition he persisted obstinately in his Contempt. To this purpose it is decreed by the first Council of Toledo [b], That if any Presbyter, Deacon, or Subdeacon, or other Clerk deputed to the Service of the Church, being in any City or Place where there is a Church, or Castle, or Village, or Hamlet, shall neglect to come to Church and the daily Sacrifice, he shall be no longer accounted a Clerk, unless upon Admonition from the Bishop he make Satisfaction, and obtain Pardon for his Offences. The Council of Agde reduces [c] such to the Communion of Strangers, that is, suspends them from their Office: And the Law of Justinian [d] orders them to be degraded, because of the Scandal they give to the Laity by such Neglect or Contempts of Divine-Service.

SECT. 11. 6. For meddling with Secular Offices.

6. IF any Clergyman entangled and embarassed himself in Secular Offices, because this was an unnecessary Avocation from his own Employment, and Hindrance to the proper Business of his Calling, he was liable to be deposed. No Bishop or Presbyter, says one of the Apostolical Canons [e], shall thrust himself εἰς δημοσίας διοικήσεις, into any publick Administrations or Employments, but keep himself always in a Readiness for the Service of the Church. Let him therefore either incline his Mind not to do this, or let let him be depoſed. For no Man can ſerve two Maſters, according to what the LORD appointed. And another Canon [f] ſays, A Biſhop, Presbyter or Deacon, that employs himſelf in a Military Life, and would retain both a Roman Office and an Eccleſiaſtical Function together, ſhall be depoſed. For we muſt render to Cæſar the Things that are Cæſar's, and to GOD the Things that are GOD's. The firſt Council of Carthage [g] forbids Clergymen to take upon them the Adminiſtration or Stewardſhip of any Houſes, becauſe the Apoſtle ſays, No Man that warreth in GOD's Service, entangleth himſelf in the Affairs of this Life. Therefore Clergymen muſt either quit their Stewardſhips, or Stewards their Clerical Office. But becauſe Neceſſity or Charity might ſeem to require Clergymen to engage a little in Secular Affairs in ſome ſpecial Caſes, the Council of Chalcedon [h] delivers the Rule with ſome Diſtinction. Whereas we are informed, that ſome of the Clergy for filthy Lucre's Sake, hire other Mens Poſſeſſions, and exerciſe themſelves in worldly Affairs, neglecting the Service of GOD, living in the Houſes of Secular Men, and taking upon them the Management of their Eſtates out of Covetouſneſs and the Love of Money: The holy Synod decrees, That henceforth no Biſhop, Clergyman or Monk, ſhall either hire any Poſſeſſions, or put himſelf into any Secular Adminiſtrations, unleſs by the Law he be called to the unavoidable Care or Guardianſhip of Orphans, or the Biſhop of the Place permit him to be the Procurator of the Church Revenues, or to take the Care of Widows and Orphans and ſuch other helpleſs Perſons as need the Aſſiſtance of the Church, which may be done in the Fear of the LORD. If any one henceforward tranſgreſs theſe Rules, he ſhall be liable to Eccleſiaſtical Cenſure. There are many other Laws forbidding them to be Sureties, or Pleaders at the Bar for themſelves or others in any Civil Conteſt, or to follow any ſecular Trade or Merchandize; but theſe with ſome Limitations and Exceptions: Of all which becauſe I have had occaſion to diſcourſe more fully in a former [*] Book, I need ſay no more in this Place.

7. For deſerting their own Church without Licence to go to another.

7. IT was another Crime of the like Nature, for a Clergyman to deſert and relinquiſh his own Church, to which he was originally fixed and appointed by his Ordination, without Licence from the Biſhop to whoſe Juriſdiction he belonged. For though this was not properly an abſolute and univerſal Renunciation and Deſertion of the Churches Service; yet it was a manifeſt Breach of good Order, and a Tranſgreſſion of an uſeful Rule eſtabliſhed by often repeated Injunctions over the Church univerſal, That no Clerk ſhould leave his own Biſhop's Church or Dioceſe without his Conſent, nor find Reception in any other, to the Prejudice of the Biſhop who firſt ordained him. If any Presbyter, Deacon, or other Clerk, ſay the Apoſtolical Canons [i], forſake his own Dioceſe to go to another, and there continue without the Conſent of his own Biſhop; we decree, that ſuch an one ſhall no longer continue to miniſter as a Clerk, (eſpecially if after Admonition he refuſe to return) but only be admitted to communicate as a Layman. And if the Biſhop, to whom they repair, ſhall entertain them in the Quality of Clergymen, he ſhall be excommunicated, as a Maſter of Diſorder. The ſame Rule is frequently repeated in the ancient Canons, to which I have referred the Reader [†] in another Place.

8. For officiating after the Condemnation of a Synod.

8. IF any Clergyman pretended to officiate after he was cenſured and condemned by a Synod, before he was abſolved by that or another Synod, he was to be depoſed for his Contempt, without Hopes of Reſtitution. This was firſt decreed in the Apoſtolical Canons: If any Biſhop [k], Presbyter, or Deacon, who is juſtly depoſed for his Crimes, preſume to meddle with the Service belonging to his Order, let him be wholly cut off from the Communion of the Church. The Council of Antioch [l] repeats this Rule a little more explicitly: If any Biſhop, who is depoſed by a Synod, or Preſbyter or Deacon, who is depoſed by his own Biſhop, preſume to officiate in their Miniſtry, they ſhall have no Hopes of being reſtored even by another Synod, nor any room left for Satisfaction: And all that communicate with them, ſhall be caſt out of the Church, eſpecially if they do it after they are apprized of the Sentence pronounced againſt them. This Canon is repeated and confirmed by the great Council of Chalcedon [m], as a ſtanding Rule then inſerted into the Code of the univerſal Church.

9. For appealing from the Cenſure of a Provincial Synod to foreign Churches.

9. IN this Caſe the Church allowed of Appeals, that if any one was injured or oppreſſed by any raſh or violent Proceeding, he might have Juſtice done him in a Provincial Synod. But then this Liberty of Appeals was limited to the Place or Province where the Party lived, and he might not fly to another Country under Pretence of more impartial Juſtice. The Biſhops of Rome indeed ſometimes times laid claim to a peculiar Prerogative in this Matter, as if they had Power to receive Appellants from other Churches, and hear and determine the Cauſes ariſing in foreign Countries at the greateſt Diſtance and under different Juriſdictions: But St. Auſtin and the African Fathers ſtoutly oppoſed theſe Encroachments, and withall made a Decree, That if any African Clerk appealed from the Sentence of his own Biſhop, or a Synod of ſelect Judges, he ſhould appeal to none but African Synods, or the Primates of the Provinces. And if any preſumed to appeal beyond Seas, meaning to Rome, he ſhould be excluded from all Communion in the African Churches. This Decree was firſt made in the Council of Milevis [m], and afterward confirmed by ſeveral Acts of their general Synods, made upon the famous Caſe and Appeal of Apiarius an African Preſbyter, whom Pope Zoſimus pretended to reſtore to Communion after he had been depoſed by an African Council. What Oppoſition the African Fathers made to this Preſumption, during the Lives of three Popes ſucceſſively, Zoſimus, Boniface, and Celeſtin, and what Arguments they went upon, I have formerly [*] ſhewed out of the Canons of the African [n] Code; and I only note it here with all Brevity, to explain the ancient Diſcipline in this Point from the current Tenour and Practice of the Church.

SECT. 15. 10. For the refuſing to end Controverſies before Biſhops, and flying to a Secular Tribunal.

10. ANOTHER Thing which ſubjected Clergymen to Eccleſiaſtical Cenſure, was refuſing to end their Controverſies before Biſhops, and chuſing rather to fly to the ſecular Tribunals. The Laws of the State permitted, and the Laws of the Church obliged them to bring all their Diſputes with one another under the Cognizance of an Eccleſiaſtical Tribunal. I have had occaſion once before [*] to ſpeak of this as a Privilege and Immunity granted to the Clergy by the Imperial Laws, and all I ſhall remark farther concerning it here, is only what relates to the Diſcipline of the Church: In reference to which the Council of Chalcedon [o] decreed, That if any Clergyman had a Controverſy with another, he ſhould not leave his own Biſhop, and betake himſelf to a Secular Court; but firſt have an Hearing before his own Biſhop, or ſuch Arbitrators as the Parties ſhould chuſe, with the Biſhop's Approbation. Otherwiſe he ſhould be liable to Canonical Cenſure: Which Cenſure in the African Church was the Loſs of his Place, whether he were Biſhop, Presbyter, or Deacon, or any other inferior Clerk, that declined the Sentence of an Eccleſiaſtical Court, in a Criminal Cauſe, and betook himſelf to a Secular Court for Juſtice: Or if it was a Civil Cauſe, he muſt loſe whatever Advantage he gained by the Action, as the Third Council of Carthage determined [p] in the Caſe, becauſe he deſpiſed the whole Church, in that he could not confide in any Eccleſiaſtical Perſons to be his Judges. The Council of Milevis added to this [q], That no Clergyman ſhould ſo much as petition the Emperor to aſſign him ſecular Judges in any Caſe, but only Eccleſiaſtical, under Pain of Deprivation. And this ſeems to be the true Meaning of theſe two famous Canons of the Council of Antioch, which have been ſo generally miſtaken by modern Authors, as if they had been made only by a Cabal of Arians againſt the Perſon of Athanaſius, when indeed they contain nothing but an ancient Rule of Diſcipline univerſally obſerved throughout the Church. The Words of the Canons are theſe: If any Biſhop, or Presbyter, or any one [r] within the Canon, or Roll of the Clergy belonging to the Church, ſhall preſume to addreſs the Emperor without the Conſent and Letters of the Provincial Biſhops, and eſpecially of the Metropolitan, he ſhall be rejected and expelled, not only from Communion, but from whatever Honour and Dignity he enjoys, as one that fills the Prince's Ears with troubleſome Complaints, againſt the Law of the Church. But if any neceſſary Cauſe call him to addreſs the Prince, he ſhall do it by the Advice and Conſent of the Metropolitan and the reſt of the Provincial Biſhops, who in that Caſe ſhall aſſiſt him with their recommendatory Letters alſo. The other Canon [s] ſays, If any Presbyter or Deacon is depoſed by his Biſhop, or any Biſhop by a Synod, he ſhall not preſume to trouble the Emperor with Complaints, but have Recourſe to a greater Synod of Biſhops, and lay the Juſtice of his Cauſe before them, and wait for their Diſcuſſion and Determination. But if in Contempt of this Method, he trouble the Prince, he ſhall have no Pardon, nor room for Defence, nor any Hopes of Reſtitution. The Generality of Modern Writers, following the Cenſure paſſed upon this Canon by the famous Antonius Auguſtinus [t], and Baronius [u], commonly reckon it a Canon made by the Arian Faction againſt Athanaſius; and ſay, it is the ſame Canon that was alledged againſt Chryſoſtom by his Adverſaries, and rejected by him him and his Advocates, as an Arian Canon, in the following Ages. But the learned Schelſtrate, who has particularly vindicated the Authority of the Council of Antioch [w], ſhews this to be a vulgar Error; demonſtrating, that the Arian Canon was very different from this, and that this Canon of Antioch was conformable to the received Diſcipline of the ancient Church. For as ſuch, it was inſerted into the Code of the univerſal Church, and acknowledged by the Council of Chalcedon, and all the Collectors of the Canons, Ferrandus Diaconus, Martin Bracarenſis, and the Capitulars of Charles the Great. Beſides that the Council of Vannes [x] has a Canon to the ſame Purpoſe: If a Clerk ſuſpects the Judgment of his own Biſhop, or has any Controverſy with him concerning any Property, he ſhall require an Hearing before other Biſhops, and not before the Secular Powers: Otherwiſe he ſhall be caſt out of Communion. From all which it is plain, nothing more was intended by the Council of Antioch, but only to oblige Clergymen to end all their Controverſies before a Synod of Biſhops, which is agreeable to the general Rule and Diſcipline of the Church.

SECT. 16. 11. For being rebaptized or reordained.

11. THE Laws of the Church were farther ſevere againſt all Reordinations in the Clergy, and againſt all Rebaptizations both in Clergymen and Laymen: And therefore any Clergyman who ſubmitted either actively or paſſively to either of theſe, rendered himſelf obnoxious to the higheſt Cenſure. If any Biſhop, Presbyter, or Deacon, ſay the Apoſtolical Canons [y], receive a ſecond Ordination, both the Ordainer and the Ordained ſhall be depoſed; except it appear that his firſt Ordination was given him by Hereticks: For they that are baptized or ordained by Hereticks, are neither to be accounted Clergymen nor faithful Laymen. Optatus [z] ſays, that among other Reaſons why Donatus was condemned and depoſed by the Council of Rome under Melchiades, this was one, That he he had given Impoſition of Hands to ſuch Biſhops as had lapſed in Time of Perſecution, which was contrary to the Cuſtom of the Catholick Church. If Impoſition of Hands there ſignify Ordination, then his Crime was, that he had reordained them: But if, as Albaſpinæus thinks both in his Notes and Obſervations, it only means Impoſition of Hands in Penance, then we are to lay no Streſs upon it, becauſe it relates to a different Subject. As to Rebaptization, the Caſe was the ſame: The Apoſtolical Canons [a] appointed, That if any Biſhop or Presbyter preſumed to give a ſecond Baptiſm after a true one once received, he ſhould be degraded. And the Council of Rome under Felix III. decreed, That if a Biſhop, Preſbyter or Deacon ſuffered himſelf to be ſo rebaptized [b], he ſhould be degraded, and do Penance all his Life, without being ſuffered to communicate either in the Prayers of the Faithful, or the Prayers of the Catechumens, and only be admitted to Lay-Communion at the Hour of Death; becauſe ſuch had not only denied their Orders, but their Chriſtianity, and openly profeſſed themſelves Pagans, by being rebaptized. The Civil Law confirmed theſe Cenſures of the Church, and added ſome temporal Penalties, to give them greater Force; of which the Reader may find a more particular Account in a former [*] Book.

SECT. 17. 12. For denying themſelves to be Clergymen.

12. IT was a Crime of the like Nature for any Clergyman to deny his Order in Words, or diſſemble his Profeſſion before a Jew or an Heathen; becauſe this was but one Degree below the Renunciation of his Religion. If any Clergyman, ſays one of the Apoſtolical Canons [c], through human Fear of a Jew, or an Heathen, or an Heretick, deny the Name of CHRIST, let him be caſt out of the Church: If he deny the Name of a Clergyman, let him be depoſed; but upon his Repentance let him be received as a Layman.

SECT. 18. 13. For publiſhing Apocryphal Books.

13. IF any Clergyman was convict of publiſhing any Apocryphal Books, or Books written by impious Men under falſe Titles, as ſacred and pious Writings, to the Corruption and Seducement both of Laity and Clergy; by another of the Apoſtolical Canons [d] he was to be depoſed. Tertullian gives an Inſtance of the Exerciſe of Diſcipline in this Caſe [e] upon an Aſiatick Presbyter, who wrote the Book called, The Acts of Paul and Thecla, under the feigned Name of the Apoſtle. He pleaded in his own Behalf, that he did it out of Love to St. Paul; but this would not ſatisfy the Church: For upon Conviction and Confeſſion of the Fact, ſhe obliged the Man to quit his Office for his Tranſgreſſion.

14. CLERGYMEN were likewiſe liable to be depoſed for any ſuperſtitious Abſtinence from Fleſh, Wine, Marriage, or any the like innocent and lawful Things; when they refrained from them, not for Exerciſe Sake, but out of a falſe and heretical Opinion, that they were polluted and unclean. There was always a grand Diſpute about Meats

Meats and Marriage between the Church and ſeveral Sects, that oppoſed her continually upon this Point. Many Hereticks, ſuch as the Manichees, Priſcillianiſts, and others, pretended to be more ſpiritual and refined, becauſe they abſtained from Wine and Fleſh as Things unlawful and unclean; and upon this Score cenſured the Church as impure and carnal, for allowing Men in the juſt and moderate Uſe of them. If any Clergymen therefore ſo far complied with Hereticks, as either in their Judgment to approve their Errors, or in their Practice by an univerſal Abſtinence to give Suſpicion of their ſiding with them; they made themſelves obnoxious to the higheſt Cenſures. The Apoſtolical Canons order, That if any Biſhop, Presbyter, or Deacon [f], or any other Clerk, abſtain from Marriage, Fleſh, or Wine, not for Exerciſe but Abhorrence; forgetting, that GOD made all Things very good, and created Man Male and Female, and ſpeaking Evil of the Workmanſhip of GOD: Unleſs he correct his Error, he ſhall be depoſed, and caſt out of the Church. Another Canon [g] gives the Reaſon of this Cenſure, becauſe ſuch an one has a ſeared Conſcience, and is the Cauſe of Scandal to the People. The Council of Ancyra [h] condemns the ſame Error; and inflicts the like Penalty of Degradation upon any Clergymen that ſhould be found guilty of it. And in the firſt Council of Braga an Order was made, That all Clergymen who abſtained from Fleſh, ſhould ſometimes eat Herbs boiled with Fleſh, to avoid the Suſpicion of the Priſcillian Hereſy: And if they refuſed to do this, they ſhould be excommunicated, and removed [i] from their Office, according to the Direction of the ancient Canons, as Men ſuſpected of that Hereſy, which then reigned in the Spaniſh Churches.

SECT. 20. 15. For eating of Blood.

15. BUT on the other hand, becauſe it was the Cuſtom of the Catholick Church, almoſt till the Time of St. Auſtin, to abſtain from eating of Blood, in Compliance with the Rule given by the Apoſtles to the Gentile Converts; therefore by the moſt ancient Laws of the Church all Clergymen were obliged to abſtain from it under Pain of Degradation. This is evident from the Apoſtolical Canons [k], and thoſe of Gangra [l], and the Second Council of Orleans [m], and the Council of Trullo [n]. But as this was looked upon by ſome only as a temporary Injunction, ſo it appears from St. Auſtin [o], that in his Time it was of no Force in the African Church. For he ſays, in his Time few Men thought themſelves under any Obligation to obſerve it, or made any Scruple of eating Blood. So that this Rule of Diſcipline is to be taken with this Limitation and Reſtriction, as to what concerns the Practice of the ancient Church. He that would ſee more about it, may conſult Curcellæus [p], who has written a large Diſſertation upon the Subject.

SECT. 21. 16. For contemning the Faſts and Feſtivals of the Church.

16. THE Cuſtom of the ancient Church was with a great deal of Strictneſs to obſerve many ſtated Faſts and Feſtivals: As the annual Faſt of Lent, and the weekly Faſts of the Stationary Days, that is, Wedneſday and Friday in every Week, and the anniverſary Returns or Commemorations of the great Actions of our SAVIOUR's Life, and his Apoſtles and Martyrs: And therefore ſome Canons lay great Penalties eſpecially upon Clergymen, who ſhewed any Diſreſpect to theſe by a wilful Contempt or Neglect of them. If any Biſhop, or Presbyter, or Deacon, or Reader, or Singer (ſays one of the Apoſtolical Canons [q]) obſerve not the Lent Faſt, or the Faſt of the fourth and ſixth Days of the Week, he ſhall be depoſed, unleſs he be hindered by bodily Weakneſs and Infirmity. The Council of Gangra [r] goes a little farther, and denounces Anathema to all the Aſceticks of the Church, who without any Plea of bodily Neceſſity, but mere Pride and Haughtineſs, neglect and deſpiſe the Faſts commonly received in the Church, and obſerved by ancient Tradition. Another Canon [s] denounces Anathema likewiſe againſt all, who accuſe the Aſſemblies made at the Monuments of the Martyrs, or abhor the Service that is performed there, or deſpiſe the Memorials or annual Commemorations that were made in Honour of them. A like Canon was made in the Firſt Council of Carthage [t], That if any one reproachfully ſaid or did any Thing to the Diſhonour of the Martyrs; if he was a Layman, he ſhould be put under Penance; but if he was a Clergyman, after Admonition and Conviction he ſhould be deprived of his Honour and Dignity. And ſome other Canons were made by the Council of Laodicea [u] to the ſame purpoſe.

SECT. 22. 17. For not obſerving the Rule about Eaſter.

17. SOME Canons alſo make it a great Tranſgreſſion, not to obſerve the Rule that was ſettled by the Church in the Council of Nice, for fixing the Time of keeping the Paſchal Feſtival. For though a great Liberty was allowed before in this Matter, by reaſon of the Diſputes that were between the Roman and Aſiatick Churches about it; yet when once the great Council of Nice had interpoſed interposed her Authority to end the Controversy, it was no longer esteemed a Matter of Indifferency; but all Churches were obliged to comply with her Determination. Therefore the Council of Antioch not long after made a very peremptory Decree [w], that whoever pertinaciously opposed the Rule agreed upon in the Nicene Council, should be excommunicated and expelled the Church, if he were a Layman. And if either Bishop, Presbyter or Deacon should subvert the People, and disturb the Church by keeping Easter, in a different manner, with the Jews, they should be removed from their Ministry, and be cast out of the Church; and whoever communicated with them after such Censure, should be liable to the same Condemnation. There was also another way of celebrating Easter with the Jews, by a false Calculation making it to fall before the vernal Equinox, and so many times bringing two Easters into the same Year. Which Practice is condemned as Judaical by the Author of the Constitutions [x], and any Clergyman complying with it, by the Apostolical Canons [y] is made liable to Deprivation also.

SECT. 23. 18. For wearing an indecent Habit.

18. IF any Clergyman wore an indecent Habit, unbecoming his Order and Station in the Church, he made himself liable to canonical Censure. The first Council of Mascon [z] forbids Clergymen to wear Arms, or a Soldier's Coat, or any Garments or Shoes not becoming their Profession, after the manner of Seculars or Laymen. And whoever offended in this Kind, was to be confined for Thirty Days in Prison, and fed only with Bread and Water, for his Transgression. But this was a Rule only for common and ordinary Cases, not for Cases of great Exigency, or Times of Persecution. Therefore when the famous Eusebius of Samosata went about the World in a Soldier's Habit [a], as the Historians relate, to ordain Presbyters and Deacons in the Heat of the Arian Persecution; though this was against the Letter of another Law, which forbad any Bishop to ordain in another Man's Diocese; yet he was never accused by any good Catholick for transgressing either Law, because the Necessity of the Thing justified the Fact; and these Rules, made for common Order and Decency, were in this Case superseded by a Rule of superior Obligation. For the Preservation of the Faith and Ministry was of much more weight and concern to the Church at such a Juncture, than the wearing of an Habit; and it was no Fault in him to wear a Soldier's Coat in such an Exigency, to preserve the Church, and pass undiscerned, tho' it would have been a great Violation of the Rules of Order and Decency in other Cases. But this only by the way: I now pass on to the remaining Laws of Discipline, which concerned the Clergy.

SECT. 24. 19. For keeping Hawks and Hounds, and following any unlawful Diversions.

19. THE same Rules of the Church, which obliged Clergymen to avoid Secular Employments, may with good reason be construed also a Prohibition of Secular Diversions, such as Hunting, and Hawking, and Horse-racing, and gaming at Dice, and acting of Plays and Farces, and frequenting the Games and Sights of the Cirque and Theatre. All these may be comprehended in the general Prohibition of Secular Things; but there are some Canons which more expressly forbid them to the Clergy under Pain of Canonical Censure. Bishops, Presbyters, or Deacons shall not keep Dogs or Hawks for Hunting, says the Council of Agde [b]. And if any one is detected in this Intention, if he be a Bishop, he shall be suspended three Months from Communion; if a Presbyter, two Months; if a Deacon, he shall wholly cease from his Office and Communion. The Council of Eliberis has a general Canon [c] forbidding Laymen to play at Dice or Tables, under the Penalty of Suspension from Communion for a whole Year. And that must be supposed with greater Force to affect the Clergy. Other Canons [d] under Charles the Great expressly name the Clergy, and refer to the ancient Rule of the Church for the Prohibition. And the Council of Trullo [e] forbids Dice both to the Clergy and Laity, under the Penalty of Deprivation to the one, and Excommunication to the other. The same Council [f] forbids Clergymen to act Farces, as Mimicks in the Theatre, or to bait or hunt wild Beasts with Dogs, or to dance upon the Stage, under the like Penalty of Deprivation. The Council of Laodicea [g] forbids them to be present as Spectators at any Stage-plays. And the Council of Carthage gives a good Reason [h], why neither they nor their Children ought either to exhibit, or frequent such Plays; because becauſe they were prohibited to Laymen for the Blaſphemy of thoſe wicked Wretches that were concerned in them. They thought it intolerable, that any of the Clergy ſhould encourage thoſe Things by their Preſence, which a Layman could not ſee with Innocence, nor be a Spectator without a Cenſure.

20. THE moſt ancient Laws of the Church did not abſolutely impoſe Celibacy upon the Clergy, nor univerſally reſtrain them from the conjugal State and married Life, as has been ſhewed more at large in a former [*] Book. But there were two Things in the Converſation of the Clergy, reſpecting Women, which they very much diſallowed and cenſured. One was the ſuſpicious and ſcandalous Cohabitation of ſome vain and indiſcreet Men with ſtrange Women, who were none of their Kindred. The Freedom which theſe uſed, obliged the Church not only to forbid the Clergy to cohabit with ſuch, as they then termed Foreigners and Strangers, Συνείσακτοι, in oppoſition to a Mother, a Siſter, or an Aunt, of whom for the Nearneſs of Blood there could be no reaſonable Suſpicion; but alſo induced her to inforce this Rule with the utmoſt Severity of Diſcipline upon Delinquents. Cyprian [i] commends Pomponius for excommunicating a Deacon, who had been found guilty in this Kind. And among other Reaſons alledged by the Council of Antioch for depoſing Paulus Samoſatenſis from his Biſhoprick, this is one, That he had always ſome of theſe Συνείσακτοι, or ſtrange Women, to attend him, and allowed his Presbyters and Deacons to have the like [k], that they might not accuſe him. The Second Council of Arles [l] excommunicates every Clergyman above the Order of Deacons, that retains any Woman as a Companion, except it be a Grandmother, or Mother, or Siſter, or Daughter, or Niece, or a Wife after her Converſion. And the Council of Lerida [m] orders them to be ſuſpended from their Office till they amend their Fault after a firſt or ſecond Admonition.

SECT. 26. 21. For marrying after Ordination.

21. THE other Thing that was generally diſliked, was the Clergy's marrying a Second Time, after Ordination. They did not, as I ſaid, reject married Men from Orders, nor oblige them to live ſeparate from their Wives after Ordination: Nay if a Deacon proteſted before Ordination, that he could not continue in an unmarried State, he might marry afterwards [n], and not forfeit his Office, by a Decree of the Council of Ancyra. But other Canons forbid Presbyters and Biſhops to marry after Ordination, whether they were married or unmarried before, and this under Pain of Deprivation. If a Presbyter marries a Wife (that is, after he is ordained Presbyter, for it regards not his being married before) let him be removed from his Order, ſays the Council of [o] Neocæſarea. The Council of Eliberis [p] and ſome others in the Latin Church were more rigorous toward the married Clergy, and began not only to forbid them to marry after Ordination, but to oblige them to relinquiſh thoſe Wives they had married before. But as this was an Encroachment upon the Primitive Rule, and never received in the Greek Church, it is not to be reckoned among the ſtanding Rules of Diſcipline that concerned the whole Church.

SECT. 27. 22. For retaining an adulterous Wife.

22. YET there was one Caſe, in which the Clergy were obliged to put away their Wives, which was the Caſe of Adultery. If the Wife of a Layman, ſays the Council of Neocæſarea [q], is convicted of Adultery, ſuch an one ſhall never attain to the Miniſtry of the Clergy. If ſhe commits Adultery after his Ordination, he muſt put her away, or quit his Miniſtry, if he retains her. The Council of Eliberis [r] goes a little farther, and ſays, If a Clergyman's Wife commits Adultery, and the Husband knows it, and does not immediately put her away, he ſhall not be admitted to Communion even at his laſt Hour; leſt they who ſhould be an Example of good Converſation, ſhould ſeem to teach others the way to Sin.

SECT. 28. 23. For Non-reſidence.

23. THERE were ſome Laws alſo relating to the Reſidence of the Clergy, which was ſtrictly injoined, with a Denunciation of Canonical Cenſure to the Tranſgreſſors. The ſeveral Laws requiring Reſidence have been noted in another [†] Place: Here I ſhall only mention ſuch of them, as ſpecify the Puniſhments that were to be inflicted on Offenders in this Kind. Among theſe that Canon of the Council of Agde [s] is moſt remarkable, which decrees, That a Presbyter or Deacon, who was abſent from his Church three Weeks, ſhould be three Years ſuſpended from the Communion. And by the Laws of Juſtinian [t] ſtinian [t] every Biſhop, abſenting from his Church beyond a certain Term, and that upon very weighty Affairs, and great Neceſſity, or the Will of his Prince, is ordered to be removed from the College of Biſhops, as a Man unworthy of his Station. And the better to guard againſt this Offence, as no Clergyman was allowed to travel without the Licence and commendatory Letters of his Biſhop; ſo neither might any Biſhop travel or appear at Court without the Licence and Approbation of his Metropolitan. This was expreſsly provided by the ſame Laws [u] of Juſtinian, and before him by the third Council of Carthage, which orders, That no Biſhop ſhall go [w] beyond Sea without conſulting his Primate, or chief Biſhop of the Province, and taking his Formatæ, or Letters of Commendation. And before this the Council of Antioch [x] made an Order, That no Biſhop or Presbyter, or any other belonging to the Church, ſhould go to Court upon any occaſion to addreſs the Prince, without the Conſent and Letters of the Provincial Biſhops, and eſpecially the Metropolitan, under the Penalty of being caſt out of Communion, and loſing his Honour and Dignity in the Church. And to this agree the Rules and Decrees of Pope Hilary [y] and Gregory the Great [z], made in Conformity to the ancient Rules of Diſcipline in the Church.

SECT. 29. 24. For attempting to hold Preferment in two Dioceſes.

24. THE Clergy were farther obliged to confine themſelves to one Church: that is, as I have formerly had occaſion to explain it, one Dioceſe or Dioceſan Church, under the Juriſdiction of one Biſhop; and not to ſeek, or attempt to hold Preferment under two Biſhops in two ſuch diſtinct Churches, or different Juriſdictions. In this Senſe Pluralities were forbidden under the Penalty of Deprivation. The Council of Chalcedon [a] is very expreſs to this Purpoſe: It ſhall not be lawful for any Clergyman to have his Name in the Church-Roll or Catalogue of two Cities at the ſame time; that is, in the Church where he was firſt ordained, and any other to which he flies out of Ambition as to a greater Church; but all ſuch ſhall be returned to their own Church, where they were firſt ordained, and only miniſter there. But if any is regularly removed from one Church to another, he ſhall not partake of the Revenues of the former Church, or of any Oratory, Hoſpital or Almſ-houſe belonging to it. And ſuch as ſhall preſume, after this Definition of this great and œcumenical Council, to tranſgreſs in this Matter, are condemned to be degraded by the holy Synod.

SECT. 30. 25. For needleſs frequenting of publick Inns and Taverns.

25. THE Canons had alſo a great Reſpect to the external and publick Behaviour of the Clergy; obliging them to walk circumſpectly, and abſtain from Things of ill Fame, though otherwiſe innocent and indifferent in themſelves; that they might cut off all Occaſions of Obloquy, by avoiding all ſuſpicious Actions and all Appearances of Evil. In regard to which they not only cenſured them for Rioting and Drunkenneſs (which were Vices not to be tolerated even in Laymen) but forbad them ſo much as to eat or appear in a publick Inn or Tavern, except they were upon a Journey, or ſome ſuch neceſſary Occaſion required them to do it, under Pain of Eccleſiaſtical Cenſure. The Council of Laodicea [b] and the third Council of Carthage [c] forbid it univerſally to all Orders of the Clergy; and the Apoſtolical Canons [d] more expreſsly, with a Denunciation of Cenſure, viz. an Ἀφορισμὸς, Excommunication or Suſpenſion from their Office, to any that ſhould be found in a Tavern, except they were upon a Journey, and the Neceſſity of their Affairs required it.

SECT. 31. 26. For converſing familiarly with Jews, Hereticks or Gentile Philoſophers.

26. FOR the ſame Reaſon the Canons prohibited them converſing familiarly with Jews, Hereticks and Heathens, eſpecially the Gentile Philoſophers, becauſe of the Scandal attending ſuch Communication. The Laws forbidding all Communication with Jews and Hereticks have been mentioned upon another Occaſion [*]: I ſhall here only add that remarkable Story which Sozomen [e] tells of Theodotus Biſhop of Laodicea in Syria, how he excommunicated the two Apollinarii, Father and Son, becauſe they went to hear Epiphanius the Sophiſt ſpeak his Hymn in the Praiſe of Bacchus; which was a Thing ſo diſagreeable to their Character, the one being a Presbyter, the other a Deacon in the Chriſtian Church.

27. AS Clergymen were obliged to ſhew a juſt Severity to impenitent Sinners, by putting the Laws of Diſcipline duly in Execution againſt them: So on the other hand an over rigorous Severity and Stiffneſs in refuſing to receive and reconcile penitent Lapſers, after they had made canonical Satisfaction, was a great Offence, and ſuch a manifeſt Abuſe of the miniſterial Power, as the Church thought fit to correct with ſome Sharpneſs in her Clergy. If any Biſhop, Presbyter, or Deacon, ſay the Apoſtolical Canons [f], receives not one that turns from Sin, but caſts him out, let him be depoſed: Becauſe he grieves CHRIST, who ſaid, There is Joy in Heaven over one Sinner that repenteth. This was not the true Exerciſe of Diſcipline, but Imperiouſneſs and Humour, and a mere domineering over GOD's Heritage by an exorbitant Stretch of the the miniſterial Power. It was the very thing which the Novatian Hereticks contended for, and what the Church always oppoſed and condemned in them: And therefore when any of her own Clergy aſſumed to themſelves this extravagant Power, ſhe juſtly eſteemed them infected with this Novatian Principle of Cruelty, and as ſuch made them liable to the Sentence of Deprivation.

SECT. 33. 28. For Want of Charity to indigent Clerks.

28. THERE was another Sort of Cruelty, which the Church alſo much reſented in any of her Clergy; which was Want of Charity to any that were indigent and diſtreſſed in their own Order. As Charity obliges Men to do good to all, as they have Opportunity, but more eſpecially to thoſe who are of the Houſhold of Faith: So Clergymen were more eſpecially obliged to aſſiſt thoſe, who were joined with them in the ſame Miniſtry, and united more cloſely by a ſtricter Bond of Fraternity in the ſame Occupation and Employment. Therefore the Apoſtolical [g] Canons cenſure this as a great Tranſgreſſion in theſe very ſharp Terms: If any Biſhop or Presbyter refuſe to give Neceſſaries to any Clergyman that is in want, let him be caſt out of Communion: And if he perſiſt, let him be depoſed, as a Murderer of his Brother.

SECT. 34. 29. For judging in Caſes of Blood.

29. IT was thought alſo ſome Sort of Cruelty, at leaſt a very improper and unbecoming thing for any Clergyman to be concerned in judging or giving Sentence in Caſes of Blood. The Laws allowed them to be choſen Arbitrators of Mens Differences in Civil Cauſes: But they had no Power at all in Criminal Cauſes, except ſuch as were purely Eccleſiaſtical; and leaſt of all in ſuch Criminal Cauſes where Life and Death was concerned. Therefore there are many Canons forbidding this under the Penalty of the higheſt Cenſure of Deprivation. The Council of Tarragone univerſally forbids the Clergy to ſit Judges [h] in any Civil Criminal Cauſes. The Council of Auxerre [i] more particularly injoins Presbyters not to ſit in Judgment, when any Man is to be condemned to die. And in another Canon [k] forbids both Presbyters and Deacons to ſtand at the Trepalium, where Criminals were put to the Rack and examined by Torture. The Fourth Council of Toledo [l] allows not Prieſts to ſit Judges in Caſes of Treaſon, even at the Command of the Prince, except the Prince promiſed before-hand upon Oath, that he would pardon the Offence, and remit the Puniſhment. If they did otherwiſe, they were to be held guilty of Bloodſhed before CHRIST, and to loſe their Order and Degree in the Church. The Eleventh Council of Toledo goes a little farther [m], not only excluding ſuch from the Honour of their Order and Station, but from all Communion during their whole Lives, which they are only to be allowed at the Point of Death.

SECT. 35. Biſhops might be ſuſpended or degraded for giving Ordinations contrary to the Canons.

THESE were the Chief of thoſe Rules of ancient Diſcipline which concerned the Clergy in general: Beſide which there were ſome which had a more peculiar Reſpect to the Perſons of each particular Order. Biſhops might be ſuſpended or degraded for ſeveral Offences committed againſt the Rules of their Office and Duty peculiar to their Function. As firſt for wilful Tranſgreſſion of the known Laws of Ordination. If any Biſhops pretended to ordain a Man into a full See, where another was regularly ordained before him; or if two or three Biſhops ordained a Biſhop clancularly without the Conſent of the reſt of the Provincial Biſhops and the Metropolitan; not only the Biſhop ſo ordained, was to be depoſed, but the Biſhops who preſumed to give him ſuch an Ordination [*]: Which was the Caſe of Trophimus and thoſe two other obſcure Biſhops who ordained Novatian; for which Offence, as Cyprian and Cornelius often tell us, they were degraded and reduced to Lay-Communion. If any Biſhop ordained thoſe that were baptized by Hereticks, or re-baptized by them, he was liable to be depoſed [n] for his Tranſgreſſion. If a Biſhop for Favour ordained any of his own unworthy Kindred, by a Rule of the Apoſtolical Canons [o], he was liable to be ſuſpended. If a Biſhop ordained any in another Man's Dioceſe, by a Rule of the ſame Apoſtolical Canons, he was liable [p] to be depoſed, as well as the Perſons ſo ordained by him. All theſe Things have been more fully ſhewed in the third Section of this Chapter, to which the Reader may have recourſe. To which I only add, that if a Biſhop ordained a Man who had done publick Penance in the Church, he himſelf was to be deprived [q] of the Power of Ordination.

2. IF Biſhops neglected to put the Laws of Diſcipline in Execution, which was a peculiar Act belonging to their Office, they were liable to be depoſed for ſuch Neglect and Contempt of Diſcipline, as well as thoſe whom they ought to have puniſhed with Eccleſiaſtical Cenſure. This is evident evident from the Caſe put by Pope Felix [r] of ſome who had been baptized or re-baptized by Hereticks, and were afterward irregularly ordained in the Church: Not only they who ordained them, were liable to be depoſed, but alſo thoſe Biſhops who knew them to be ſo ordained, and did not remove them from their Office, by putting the Laws of Diſcipline in Execution againſt them. So again if a Preſbyter or Deacon aſſumed to themſelves any Office without the Authority of the Biſhop not belonging to them, and the Biſhop connived at their Uſurpation, he himſelf was liable [*] to Canonical Cenſure for his Tameneſs in not correcting them for their Preſumption.

SECT. 37. For dividing their Dioceſe, and erecting new Biſhopricks without Leave: Or extending their claim to other Mens Rights beyond their own Limits and Juriſdictions.

3. BISHOPS rendered themſelves obnoxious to Canonical Cenſure, if they made any Attempts to alter the Boundaries or Diſtricts of the Church, ſettled by ancient Law and Cuſtom, without the Advice and Conſent of a Provincial Synod. Dioceſes might be divided upon juſt Reaſons, and new ones be erected out of them; either when they were too large for one Biſhop's Care; which made St. Auſtin divide the Dioceſe of Hippo, and take the new Biſhoprick of Fuſſala out of it: Or elſe when the Prince thought fit to advance ſome eminent Town or Village into a City; then that City might be made a new Biſhoprick by the Conſent of a Provincial Council. But if any one ambitiouſly got himſelf ordained Biſhop of a Village, where there never had been any Biſhop before; or as ambitiouſly ſollicited the Prince to turn a Village into a City, that he might be made the Biſhop of it: In ſuch Caſes the Church thought fit to correct the lofty Thoughts of aſpiring Men, and defeat their Attempts, by denying them thoſe Honours they had taken ſuch indirect Methods to obtain, and putting them under the Cenſure of a Deprivation. There are many Canons and Rules of Diſcipline, which forbid this Practice: But the Rule made in one of the Councils of Toledo is moſt remarkable, being an Inference made upon a ſpecial Caſe from all the ancient Canons (forbidding Biſhops to be ordained in Villages) which are there recited. King Wamba by an imperious Mandate had injoined ſome Biſhops to ordain other Biſhops in ſeveral Villages and Monaſteries, lying in the Suburbs of Toledo and other Places: Againſt which innovating Attempt and Uſurpation the Council firſt cites the ancient Canons, and then concludes with a new Decree in theſe Words: If any one ſhall offer [s] to go againſt the Preſcription of theſe Canons, in procuring himſelf to be made a Biſhop in thoſe Places, where there never was any Biſhop before, let him be Anathema in the Sight of GOD ALMIGHTY. And let moreover both the Ordainer and the Ordained loſe the Degree of their Order, becauſe they attempt not only to infringe the Decrees of the ancient Fathers, but the Inſtitutions of the Apoſtles. The Council of Chalcedon made a like Decree [t] againſt any that ſhould preſume to addreſs the higher Powers to get a Province divided into two, in order to erect a new Metropolis in it. This, they ſay, was againſt the Rule of the Church, and therefore they denounce Deprivation againſt any one that ſhould attempt it.

SECT. 38. For not attending Provincial Councils:

4. BISHOPS were obliged to attend Provincial Councils; and if they refuſed or neglected to do this without a reaſonable Cauſe, they were liable to Suſpenſion. To this purpoſe there is a Decree in the Second Council of Arles: If any one neglects [u] to be preſent, or leaves the Aſſembly of his Brethren, before the Council be ended, he ſhall be excluded from the Communion of his Brethren, and not be received again, till he is abſolved by the following Synod. The ſame Decree is repeated by the Council of Tarragone [x], and ſaid to be conformable to the Rules of the Fathers, that if any Biſhop contemptuouſly omit to come to Synod, when he is called by his Metropolitan, unleſs he be under ſome great bodily Infirmity, he ſhall be deprived of the Communion of all the Biſhops to the ſitting of the next Council; which the African Synods [*] call, being content with the Communion of his own Church only.

SECT. 39. For oppreſſing the People with unjuſt Exactions.

5. IF any Biſhop oppreſſed his People, or any Part of them, with hard Uſage, unjuſt Demands, or unreaſonable Exactions; it was peculiarly provided in this Caſe by the Laws of the African Church, that he ſhould be amerced or puniſhed with the Loſs of that Part of his Dioceſe or People, who had Reaſon to complain of ſuch Oppreſſion. I have already noted this in the laſt Chapter, n. 4. out of one of St. Auſtin's Epiſtles [†], where he neatly defends this Way of proceeding with Biſhops, when their Offences were neither ſo great, as to deſerve Deprivation; nor ſo ſmall, as to be perfectly over-looked, or let wholly paſs without a Cenſure.

SECT. 40. For harbouring such as fled from another Dioceſe without Leave.

6. FINALLY whereas it was provided by the Canons, that no Biſhop ſhould harbour or encourage any Clerk flying from his own Dioceſe, nor any Monk deſerting his own Monaſtery: Some Councils took care to prevent this Abuſe, not only by degrading the deſerting Clerk, but by inflicting Canonical Puniſhment upon the Biſhop that ſo countenanced or received him. The Council of Antioch [y] leaves it in general to the Synod, to puniſh ſuch an offending Biſhop. The Apoſtolical [z] Canons are more particular, that he ſhall be ſuſpended from his Office, as a Maſter of Diſorder. But in Africk they had a more peculiar Sort of Puniſhment for ſuch a Biſhop, which was, that he ſhould communicate with no other Biſhop of the Province, but be content with the Communion of his own [a] Church: Which, as has been obſerved, was a moderate Puniſhment for Offences of a lower Rate, which neither deſerved to be puniſhed with Deprivation, nor yet eſcape wholly unpuniſhed as no Offences.

SECT. 41. Chorepiſcopi might be cenſured for acting beyond their Commiſſion.

NEXT to the Biſhop there were a Sort of Eccleſiaſtical Perſons, whom the ancient Church called Chorepiſcopi, or Country-Biſhops, becauſe they officiated in certain Epiſcopal Duties under the City-Biſhop in Country Diſtricts. Theſe acted by a limited and dependent Power, but many times were inclined to aſſume a Power to themſelves beyond their Commiſſion. Therefore the Church was obliged to make certain Laws and Rules to reſtrain and correct their Uſurpations. Theſe might ordain the inferior Clergy, Subdeacons, Readers and Exorciſts by a general Commiſſion, but not Presbyters or Deacons without a ſpecial Licence: Yet ſometimes they would take upon them to do that alſo without conſulting the City-Biſhop; for which Offence they were liable by the Canons [b] to loſe their Office and be degraded.

SECT. 42. And Presbyters for uſurping upon the Epiſcopal Office.

THE like may be obſerved of Presbyters, who were Aſſiſtants to Biſhops in performing their Office, but with certain Limitations, that they ſhould not meddle with ſuch Parts of it, as they reſerved abſolutely to themſelves; ſuch as Ordination, and Conſecration of Chriſm, for the Uſe of Confirming, and the Conſecration of Churches and Altars. And if Presbyters at any Time exceeded the Limits of their Commiſſion and Order, by aſſuming the Exerciſe and Power of theſe Things to themſelves, by the Laws of the Church they were liable to be diveſted of their Ordinary Power, which otherwiſe they might have enjoyed, and made ſubject to the Penalty of a Total Deprivation. Thus when Eutychianus and Muſæus, who were no Biſhops, had ordained ſeveral Clerks, the Council of Sardica ordered [c], that for this Preſumption they ſhould be deprived of their Orders, and entirely reduced to the Communion of Laymen. And in the firſt Council of Braga [d] a Decree was made, prohibiting Presbyters either to conſecrate the Chriſm, or Churches, or Altars, under Pain of Depoſition from their Office: Becauſe the ancient Canons always forbid it.

DEACONS likewiſe were confined to certain Offices and Stations appropriated to their Order; above which if they preſumed ambitiouſly to aſpire, and thruſt themſelves into the Presbyters Duty, or any ways inſult them, they alſo incurred the higheſt Cenſures. The Council of Nice [e] takes notice of ſome ſuch Uſurpations and Abuſes committed by Deacons; that in ſome Places the Deacons took upon them to diſtribute the Sacrament to Presbyters; and to receive it before Biſhops themſelves; and to ſit in the midſt of the Presbyters: Which being contrary both to Rule and Cuſtom, it is ordered that ſuch aſſuming Deacons ſhould be ſuſpended, or ceaſe from their Miniſtry, as the Words μεταιδέω τῆς διακονίας ſeem rather to ſignify. The Second Council of Arles [f] has a Canon to the ſame Purpoſe, that Deacons ſhall not ſit in the Secretarium or Veſtry among the Presbyters; nor preſume to deliver the Body of CHRIST, when a Presbyter is preſent. If they do, they ſhall ceaſe to officiate any longer as Deacons.

THUS every Order among the Clergy had their particular Offices aſſigned them; and not only Neglects and Omiſſions of their Duty, but intermeddling with Offices that did not belong to them, and aſſuming Powers that were foreign to their Order, was a ſufficient Cauſe of Suſpenſion or Deprivation. And ſo I have done with what relates more peculiarly to the Diſcipline of the Clergy.

THE ANTIQUITIES OF THE CHRISTIAN CHURCH.

BOOK XVIII.

Of the ſeveral Orders of PENITENTS, and the Method of doing Publick Penance in the CHURCH by going through the ſeveral Stages of REPENTANCE.

CHAP. I.

Of the ſeveral Orders of Penitents in the Church.

SECT. 1. Penitents divided into Four Orders or Claſſes.

WE have hitherto conſidered the Diſcipline of the Church, as exerciſed upon obſtinate and notorious Criminals, in order to bring them to Repentance: We are now to examine it again in its Progreſs, as exerciſed upon Penitents, who ſubmitted to the Rules of Diſcipline, and ſee how they were treated in the Performance of their Penance, from the Time of their Excommunication to the Time of their Admiſſion into the Church again. The Performance of Penance anciently was a Matter of conſiderable Length and Time, to examine Mens Behaviour and Sincerity, and make them give juſt Teſtimony and Evidence of real Sorrow and hearty Abhorrence of their Sins, to ſatisfy the Church that they were ſincere Converts, by ſubmitting to go through a long Courſe of Penance, according as the Wiſdom of the Church thought fit to impoſe it upon them. And upon this account the Church was uſed to divide her Penitents into four diſtinct Ranks or Claſſes of different Degrees, called by the Greeks, Πεσοκλαίονλες, Ἀκροώμενοι, Ὑποπίπτονλες, and Συνισάμενοι; and by the Latins, Flentes, Audientes, Subſtrati, and Conſiſtentes; that is, the Mourners or Weepers, Weepers, the Hearers, the Subſtrators, and the Co-ſtanders; the meaning of which Names and Diſtinctions ſhall be explained by and by. Some add to theſe a Fifth Order, but without any juſt Ground or Reaſon for it. Bellarmine [a] ſays, there was a Fifth Place, of ſuch Penitents as had fully completed their Penance, and only waited for the Time of Reconciliation. And the Place of theſe Penitents, he ſays, was called Μέσωσις, or the Completion. Our Learned Dr. Cave alſo [b] ſlides unwarily into the ſame Miſtake, making Five Orders of Penitents, whereof the Fifth and Laſt, he ſays, were called Communicantes, and were admitted to the Participation of the Holy Sacrament. But it is moſt certain, there never was any ſuch Order of Penitents, under the Name of Communicants, or Partakers of the Holy Sacrament, acknowledged in the Church. For Communicants, abſolutely ſo called, as denoting Partakers of the Euchariſt, are every where diſtinguiſhed from the Penitents, and go by other Names, Πιστοὶ, Τέλειοι, &c. the Faithful, and Perfect: that is, Perſons not under Diſcipline and publick Penance, which is an imperfect State of Communion, but in the perfect peaceable, and full Communion of the Church: None of which ever go by the Name of Penitents, in any ancient Writer. Some Penitents indeed are ſaid to communicate imperfectly with the Church in ſome one particular Thing; as the Fourth Order of Penitents, called Co-ſtanders, are ſaid often to communicate in Prayers, without the Oblation or Euchariſt: But theſe, as they did not partake of the Euchariſt, ſo neither were they ever reputed perfect Communicants in the Church, till they were reſtored to the τὸ τέλειον, the complete Communion of the Faithful at the Altar. So that there is no manner of Ground for this Fifth Order of Penitents, the Invention of which is entirely owing to a Miſtake, and implies a Contradiction.

SECT. 2. The firſt Original of this Diſtinction.

As to the other Four Orders of Penitents, it is generally agreed among learned Men, that the Church obſerved ſuch a Diſtinction; but how early, is not indiſputably certain. Cardinal Bona thinks [c], the Diſtinction of penitential Claſſes was firſt made about the Time of the Novatian Schiſm, that is, about the Middle of the Third Century. And Suicerus [d] ſpeaking of the Order of Penitents, called Hearers, ſays, there is no mention made of it before the Time of Novatus; though otherwiſe a Place for hearing the Scriptures and Sermon was allowed in the Church for Heathens, Jews, Hereticks, Schiſmaticks, and the Second Rank of the Catechumens, who upon that Account were commonly termed Hearers, long before the Name was given to any Sort of Penitents as a diſtinct Order.

SECT. 3. Of the Flentes or Mourners.

BUT in the Third and Fourth Century we commonly find the Penitents diſtinguiſhed into Four Orders; the firſt of which were the Flentes or Mourners, who were rather Candidates of Penance, than Penitents ſtrictly ſpeaking. Their Station was in the Church-porch, where they lay proſtrate, begging the Prayers of the Faithful as they went in, and deſiring to be admitted to do publick Penance in the Church. This is what Tertullian means, when he ſays [e], they were uſed to fall down at the Preſbyters Feet, and kneel to the Friends of GOD, and intreat all the Brethren to recommend their Petition, and intercede with Heaven for them. And ſo the Hiſtorian repreſents the Practice [f] of Ecebolius the Sophiſt, who having apoſtatized under Julian, deſired to make his Recantation, and do Penance under Jovian: The firſt Step toward which was, that he caſt himſelf proſtrate to the Earth before the Gate of the Church, crying out, Calcate me inſipidum ſalem, Tread me under Foot as Salt without ſavour. Some Canons [g] paſs over this Act as only a Preliminary to Repentance: But Gregory Thaumaturgus and St. Baſil expreſsly mention it in their Canons. Gregory [h] ſays, the Place of the Mourners is without the Gate of the Church, where the Sinner muſt ſtand, and beg the Prayers of the Faithful, as they enter in. And St. Baſil thus deſcribes the Four Stations of Penitents: The firſt Year, [i] they are to weep before the Gate of the Church; the ſecond Year, to be admitted to Hearing; the third Year, to Genuflexion, or Repentance properly ſo called; and the fourth Year, to ſtand with the Faithful at Prayers without partaking of the Oblation. And in this Senſe we may underſtand that Paſſage in St. Ambroſe [k], where ſpeaking to one that had corrupted a Virgin, he tells him, his only Method now was to implore the Help of the Saints (meaning, not Saints in Heaven, but Saints on Earth in the Church) and to caſt himſelf at the Feet of the Elect: Which ſeems plainly to allude to this Cuſtom. Return to the Church from the Theodotian Hereticks (who had allured him by great Rewards to become Biſhop of their Party) ſays, he came in Sackcloth and Aſhes, and with Tears caſt himſelf at the Feet of Zephyrinus then Biſhop of Rome; and not only laid himſelf under the Feet of the Clergy, but the Laity alſo; endeavouring to move the merciful Church of the merciful CHRIST to compaſſion with his Tears, and by ſhewing them the Marks of the Stripes which he had endured for the Confeſſion of CHRIST. Where falling at the Feet of the Laity, as well as the Clergy, can hardly refer to any Thing elſe beſide this preparatory Introduction to Penance, which the Mourners uſed in the Church-porch, when they caſt themſelves before the People, to beg their Prayers and obtain Admiſſion into the firſt Apartment of the Church.

SECT. 4. Of the Audientes or Hearers.

WHEN their Petition was thus accepted, they were ſaid to be admitted to Penance, that is, to have Liberty to paſs through the ſeveral Stages of Diſcipline, which the Church appointed for the Probation and Tryal of ſuch as pretended real Sorrow for any notorious Offence, and the Scandal given to the Church by the Commiſſion of it. This is the true Meaning of thoſe common Phraſes, which ſo often occur in the Writings of the Ancients, Pœnitentiam dare, and Pœnitentiam accipere, giving and receiving Penance, that is, granting or accepting the Conditions of publick Penance in the Church. Now when Men were admitted to this State, they were termed Audientes, or Hearers, which were the Second Order of Penitents; or, if we pleaſe, the firſt of thoſe that had any Privilege to enter the Church. Theſe were allowed to ſtay and hear the Scriptures read, and the Sermon preached; but were obliged to depart before any of the common Prayers began, with the reſt of thoſe, Catechumens and others, who went by the general Name of Hearers only. There is frequent mention made of theſe in the ancient Canons [m], preſcribing how long Penitents were to continue in this Station, a Year, or two, or three, according as their Offence required. Gregory Thaumaturgus particularly aſſigns them their Station in the Narthex [n], or loweſt Part of the Church, where they ſtood to hear with the Catechumens of the Firſt or Second Order, called Hearers, and were diſmiſſed with them as ſoon as the Sermon was ended, before any Prayers begun. St. Baſil [o] ſays expreſsly, they were Hearers only, and not allowed to be preſent at any Prayers whatſoever. Which agrees exactly with the Order in the Conſtitutions [p], where the Deacon is appointed to make Proclamation, as ſoon as the Sermon was ended, Ne quis Audientium, ne quis Infidelium: Let none of the Hearers, let none of the Unbelievers be preſent.

SECT. 5. Of the Kneelers or Proſtrators.

AND in this they were diſtinguiſhed from the Penitents of the Third Order, who were called Γονυκλίνοντες and Ὑποπίπτοντες by the Greeks, and Genuflectentes or Subſtrati by the Latins; that is, Kneelers or Proſtrators, becauſe they were allowed to ſtay and joyn in certain Prayers particularly made for them, whilſt they were kneeling upon their Knees. Bellarmin commits a ſtrange Miſtake, and betrays a great deal of Ignorance in the Greek Tongue, whilſt he explains the Name ὑποπτώσεις to be the Station of thoſe [q] who were occupied in the Contemplation of Heavenly Things; taking the Word to come from ὄπτομαι, video, to ſee or contemplate; whereas every one knows it comes from ὑποπίπτω, to kneel, or fall down and lie proſtrate on the Ground, whence they were properly denominated Kneelers or Proſtrators. Theſe were allowed to ſtay in the Church after the Hearers were diſmiſſed, and hear the Prayers that were offered up particularly for them by all the People, and receive Impoſition of Hands from the Biſhop, who alſo made a particular Prayer for them, which was ſtyled, the Impoſition of Hands upon the Penitents, and the Biſhop's Benediction. The Council of Laodicea [r] ſpeaks of theſe Prayers under this very Title, calling them the Prayers of thoſe that were under Penance and Impoſition of Hands. St. Chryſoſtom alſo mentions them more than once [s], ſtyling them the Prayers for the Penitents, and the Prayers full of Mercy, becauſe in them Interceſſion was made to GOD for the Penitents by the common Voice both of the Miniſter and People. The Author of the Conſtitutions [t] has the Forms of theſe Prayers, which I omit here, becauſe they have been recited at length in a more proper Place [*], where we give an Account of the ancient Liturgy or Service of the Church. The Station of this Sort of Penitents was within the Nave or Body of the Church [u], near unto the Ambon, or Reading-Desk, where they received the Biſhop's Impoſition of Hands and Benediction. Some Canons [w] ſtyle this Order ſimply the Penitents, by way of Emphaſis, without any other Diſtinction; becauſe they were the moſt noted, and the greateſt Part of penitential Acts belonged longed to them whilſt they were in this Station, of which I ſhall give a more particular Account in the following Chapters.

SECT. 6. Of the Conſiſtentes, or Co-ſtanders.

THE laſt Order of Penitents were the Συνιστάμενοι, Conſiſtentes, or Co-ſtanders, ſo called from their having Liberty (after the other Penitents, Energumens and Catechumens were diſmiſſed) to ſtand with the Faithful at the Altar, and join in the common Prayers, and ſee the Oblation offered; but yet they might neither make their own Oblations, nor partake of the Euchariſt with them. This the Council of Nice [x] calls communicating with the People in Prayers only without the Oblation; which for the Crime of Idolatry was to laſt for Two Years, after they had been Three Years Hearers, and Seven Years Proſtrators before. The Council of Ancyra [y] often uſes the ſame Phraſe of communicating in Prayers only, and communicating without the Oblation: And in one Canon [z] expreſsly ſtyles this Order of Penitents the Συνιστάμενοι, Co-ſtanders; by which Name they are alſo diſtinguiſhed in the Canons of Gregory Thaumaturgus [a], and frequently in the Canons of St. Baſil [b]. In all which we may obſerve, that the Word Communicating does not always ſignify partaking of the Euchariſt, but communicating in Prayers only without the Oblation; which was but an imperfect Sort of Communion; in oppoſition to which, when they were admitted again to the Euchariſt, they were ſaid ἐλθεῖν ἐπὶ τὸ τέλειον [c], to attain to Perfection; The Participation of the Euchariſt being the higheſt State, or Conſummation and Perfection of a Chriſtian. This is the ſhort Account of theſe ſeveral Orders of Penitents, and their Stations in the Church: But to have a compleat View of the ancient Manner of performing Penance, it will be neceſſary to conſider both the Ceremony of Admiſſion to this State, and the ſeveral Acts of Penance which they performed during their Progreſs or Paſſage through the ſeveral Stages of it; as alſo the Length of Time, or the Duration and Continuance of this Exerciſe; which was often for a Courſe of many Years, and ſometimes to the Hour of Death, without any Remiſſion or Relaxation. The conſidering all which will give us an exact and clear Idea of the ancient Diſcipline, and ſhew us at once both the Severity, and Prudence, and Purity of the Church, in proceeding with Sharpneſs againſt great Delinquents, as well to examine the Sincerity of their Repentance, as to take off the Scandal caſt upon Religion, and prevent their Backſliding and Relapſes for the future. Of theſe Things therefore in the following Chapters.

CHAP. II.

Of the Ceremonies uſed in admitting Penitents to do publick Penance, and the Manner of performing it in the Church.

SECT. 1. Penitents firſt admitted to Penance by Impoſition of Hands.

WHEN a Penitent deſired to be admitted to do publick Penance, and his Petition was accepted, the firſt Ceremony that was uſed was to grant him Penance, as the Phraſe was, by Impoſition of Hands. For this was a Ceremony uſed almoſt in all Religious Actions, when any Perſon was ſolemnly to be recommended to GOD in Prayer. There were many other Impoſitions of Hands given them daily, when they came to the Third Order of Penitents; but this was previous to their Admiſſion, or rather the Form and Ceremony of it, when they were firſt taken in to be Hearers in the Church. For this we have the plain Teſtimony of the Council of Agde [a], which orders, that Penitents at the Time when they deſire to be admitted to do Penance, ſhall receive Impoſition of Hands from the Biſhop, and Sackcloth to cover their Heads.

SECT. 2. And obliged to appear in Sackcloth and Aſhes upon their Head.

IN which Canon we may obſerve another Rite and Cuſtom of common Uſe in this Matter: Which was, that Penitents were obliged to appear in Sackcloth, as an Indication and Token of their great Sorrow and Indignation againſt themſelves. Other Writers join Sackcloth and Aſhes together: For ſo Euſebius deſcribing deſcribing the penitential Mien of Natalis the Confeſſor, upon his Return from the Theodoſian Hereticks to the Church, ſays [b], he came clothed in Sackcloth and ſprinkled with Aſhes. And St. Ambroſe writing to a Virgin that had lapſed, plainly alludes to both Cuſtoms, when he tells her [c] ſhe muſt macerate her whole Body, ſprinkling it with Aſhes, and covering it with Sackcloth. In like manner Tertullian [d] diſcourſing of publick Penance, ſays, it obliges the Sinner to change both his Diet and his Habit, to deſile his Body, and lie in Sackcloth and Aſhes. Neither were the greateſt Perſonages exempted from this Ceremony. For St. Jerom [e] deſcribing the Penance of Fabiola, one of the greateſt Ladies in Rome, ſays, ſhe ſtood in Sackcloth in the Order of Penitents in the Lateran Church, to make publick Confeſſion of her Fault in the Sight of all the People of Rome: And they continued the Uſe of it during their Paſſage through all the Stages of Repentance. For even at laſt they appeared in Sackcloth, when the Courſe of their whole Penance was ended, and in this Garb (as the Council of Toledo [f] words it) were abſolved, and reconciled to the Altar of GOD. And this is always the Meaning of thoſe Expreſſions, which ſpeak of Penitents changing their Garb, and taking the mournful Habit of Repentance. Some think this was always done preciſely on Aſh-Wedneſday, or the Beginning of Lent, which from thence was called Dies Cinerum, the Day of ſprinkling Aſhes, and Caput Jejunii, the Head or Beginning of the Faſt. But this, for ought I can find, is founded upon very uncertain Tradition, and the Authority of Modern Authors; there being a perfect Silence in the more ancient Writers about it. Bellarmin cites the Authority of the Council of Agde [g] for it: But this is only to be found in Gratian [h], for there is no ſuch Canon in the Tomes of the Councils. And the Roman Correctors of Gratian own as much, referring us to the Roman Pœnitentiale, and Pontifical, and the Ordo Romanus for the Subſtance of it. And ſo Baluzius [i] ſays, Burchardus has it out of the Roman Pœnitentiale, which is of a much later Date: Neither does the Canon, as cited by Gratian, prove the Thing in Queſtion, but only deſcribes the Ceremony that was uſed toward Penitents in the Beginning of Lent, whether they were then firſt admitted to Penance, or had been admitted before: Which very Thing ſuppoſes, that Penance might be impoſed at other Times, as well as the firſt Day of Lent, as the old Gloſs upon Gratian rightly obſerves. The Ceremony, as it is deſcribed by Gratian, ſeems only to be an Account of the Diſcipline uſed towards Penitents in Lent, different from their Treatment at other Seaſons of the Year. For in Capite Quadrageſimæ, on Aſh-Wedneſday, or the firſt Day of Lent, all Penitents, who either then were admitted to Penance, or had been admitted before, were preſented to the Biſhop before the Doors of the Church, cloathed in Sackcloth, bare-footed, and with Countenances dejected to the Earth, confeſſing themſelves guilty both by their Habit and their Looks. They were to be attended by the Deans or Arch-Presbyters of the Pariſhes, and the penitential Presbyters, whoſe Office was to inſpect their Converſation, and injoin them Penance according to the Meaſure of their Faults by the Degrees of Penance that were appointed. After this they bring them into the Church, and then the Biſhop with all the Clergy falling proſtrate on the Ground, ſing the ſeven penitential Pſalms with Tears for their Abſolution. After this the Biſhop riſing from Prayer, gives them Impoſition of Hands, ſprinkles them with holy Water, puts Aſhes upon their Heads, and then covers their Heads with Sackcloth, declaring with Sighs and Groans, that as Adam was caſt out of Paradiſe, ſo they for their Sins are caſt out of the Church: Then he commands the inferior Miniſters to expel them out of the Doors of the Church; and the Clergy follow them, uſing this Reſponſory, In the Sweat of thy Face ſhalt thou eat thy Bread: For Duſt thou art, and unto Duſt thou ſhalt return. In the End of Lent, on the Thurſday before Eaſter called Cœna Domini, the Deans and the Presbyters are to preſent them before the Gates of the Church again. Thus far Gratian's Account, which is manifeſtly not a determining the Time of impoſing Penance to be the firſt Day of Lent, but a Deſcription of the Manner of treating all Penitents in Lent, whatever Time their Penance was impoſed upon them. And as there are ſome Things in it conformable to the ancient Diſcipline, ſo there are many Things in it that plainly diſcover it to have a Relation to a more Modern Practice. For there was no Uſe of holy Water in the ancient Diſcipline; nor ſeven penitential Pſalms in the Service, but only one penitential Pſalm, that is the fifty firſt, commonly diſtinguiſhed by the Name of Pſalmus Exomologeſeos, the penitential Pſalm, or Pſalm of Confeſſion. Neither was Aſh-Wedneſday anciently the firſt Day of Lent, till Gregory the

the Great firſt added it to Lent, to make the Number of Faſting-Days completely Forty, which before were but Thirty-ſix. Neither does it appear, that anciently the Time of impoſing Penance was confined to the Beginning of Lent, but Penance was granted at all Times, whenever the Biſhop thought the Sinner qualified for it: As St. Ambroſe admitted Theodoſius to Penance at Chriſtmas; and there are many Examples of the like Nature. The Circumſtance therefore of Time muſt be paſſed over as unlimited and uncertain. Only whenever Penance was impoſed, the Sinner was obliged to change his Habit, and appear in a mournful Dreſs, agreeable to a State of Repentance: Which is all that can be concluded from any of the ancient Canons, which ſpeak of the Circumſtances of Repentance.

SECT. 3. And to cut off their Hair, or go veiled as another Token of Sorrow and Mourning.

AT the ſame Time that they changed their Habit, ſome Canons obliged Penitents to cut off their Hair, or ſhave their Heads, if they were Men, as another Indication of Sorrow and Mourning. And Women were injoined to wear a penitential Veil, and either to cut off their Hair, or appear with it diſhevelled, and hanging looſe about their Shoulders; which was another Token of deep Sorrow and Affliction. The Council of Agde [k] made a peremptory Order, that if any who deſired to be admitted to Penance, refuſed to cut off their Hair, they ſhould be rejected. And the Third Council of Toledo [l] has a like Order, that when any one deſires Penance of the Biſhop, he ſhall firſt poll him, and make him change his Habit for Sackcloth and Aſhes, and ſo admit him to do Penance. Optatus alludes to this Cuſtom, when ſpeaking of the Rudeneſs of the Donatiſts in bringing ſome Catholick Biſhops to do Penance [m], that contrary to all Rules they had ſhaved the Heads of the Prieſts: They who ought to prepare Ears to hear their Inſtructions, had prepared Razors to ſin againſt them; that is, they had made them do publick Penance in order to retain their Clerical Office, which ought not to be done: For if a Clergyman was to do publick Penance, he ought firſt to be degraded for his Offence, and do Penance only as a Layman. As to Women, the Cuſtom was to put them on a penitential Veil, which is expreſsly required by the Third Council of Toledo [n], appointing, that no Woman ſhould be admitted to do Penance, except ſhe was firſt veiled, and had changed her Habit. Whence Optatus calls ſuch Veils, the Veils of Repentance; objecting [o] it to the Donatiſts, that they had forced the Catholick Virgins, who were innocent, to ſubmit their Impoſition of Hands, and wear upon their Heads the Veils of Repentance. St. Ambroſe ſeems to intimate, that they alſo had their Heads ſometimes ſhorn or ſhaven. For writing to a Virgin who had committed Fornication, he bids her cut off [p] her Hair, which through vain Glory had given her occaſion to ſin. But this was no general Cuſtom: For St. Jerom [q] deſcribing the Penance of Fabiola, ſays, ſhe did it ſparſo Crine, with her Hair diſhevelled, the Biſhop and Presbyters and all the People weeping with her. Whence we may obſerve alſo, with what Seriouſneſs, Gravity, and Concern this whole Matter was tranſacted. For not only the Party under Penance took Shame to himſelf, and by theſe Ceremonies expreſſed his Sorrow with Tears; but the whole Church with a compaſſionate Fellow-feeling, took Share in his Grief, ſuffering with a ſuffering Member, and weeping and mourning together with him. After this manner Socrates [r] repreſents the Practice of the Roman Church in this Exerciſe, telling us, that not only the Penitents proſtrated themſelves upon the Ground with Lamentation and Wailing, but that the Biſhop meeting them in their proper Station, fell to the Earth likewiſe with Tears, whilſt all the Congregation wept with them. Then the Biſhop roſe up, and raiſed the Penitents likewiſe, and made the uſual Prayers for them before the myſtical Service began, and ſo diſmiſſed them from the Church. This was a very ſolemn Way of performing Penance, that made a juſt Impreſſion upon the whole Church, whilſt every Man was touched with a Senſe of his Brethrens Folly, and made their Sins not Matter of Sport or Ridicule, but an Occaſion of expreſſing his Pity and Compaſſion toward them, as Members of the ſame Body; weeping with thoſe that wept, and joining his Prayers and Tears with theirs, to beſiege Heaven with united Force, and obtain of GOD Mercy and Pardon for them.

SECT. 4. Penitents to abſtain from Bathing, and other innocent Diverſions of Life, as Faſting, &c.

SOCRATES takes notice in the ſame Place, that Penitents were uſed to abſtain from Bathing and other innocent Diverſions of Life. For he ſays, they exerciſed themſelves willingly in private, ἢ νεσείαις, ἢ ἀλυσίαις, ἢ ἐδεσμάτων ἀποχῇ, with Faſtings, and Neglect of Bathing, and Abſtinence from Meats, as long as the Biſhop thought fit to injoin them. Which is alſo intimated by Pacian, when he brings in the Penitent [s] declaring, that if any one called him to the Bath, he refuſed ſuch Delights; if any one called him to a Feaſt, his Anſwer was: Thoſe Things belong to the Happy; but as for me, I have ſinned againſt the LORD, and am in danger of Eternal Deſtruction.

SECT. 5. To obſerve all the publick Faſts of the Church.

AND as they thus exerciſed themſelves in private Abſtinence, Mortification, and Faſting; ſo they were more eſpecially obliged to obſerve all the publick Faſts of the Church. There might be ſome Reaſons to excuſe others, and diſpenſe with the Rigour and Severity of this Exerciſe in ſome Caſes and Circumſtances, requiring a little Abatement in the Laws of Faſting: But Penitents were tied up to the ſtricteſt Obſervance of them. And therefore the Fourth Council of Carthage [t] made a Decree, That Penitents ſhould preſent themſelves at Church on all Times of Faſting, and receive Impoſition of Hands from the Prieſts.

SECT. 6. To reſtrain themſelves in the Uſe of the Conjugal State.

SOME Directions are alſo given, at leaſt by private Writers, that Penitents ſhould abſtain from the Uſe of the Marriage-Bed, during their Continuance in the State of publick Penance. This is a Rule laid down by St. Jerome [u], That in the Time of Faſting the Bridegroom and the Bride ſhould ſequeſter themſelves from one another. For he that ſays, he does Penance by Abſtinence from Meat, and Faſting, and Alms, in vain uſes this Speech, except he go out of his Chamber, and make his Faſt holy and pure by adding Continence to his Repentance. And ſo St. Ambroſe reckons this a neceſſary part of Self-denial upon ſuch an Occaſion. Does any one [w] think that to be Repentance, where a Man is engaged in an ambitious Purſuit of Honour, and indulges himſelf in the Uſe of Wine and the Marriage-Bed? Men muſt renounce the World, abridge themſelves of Sleep which Nature requires, intreat the Favour of GOD with Sighing and Mourning and earneſt Prayers, and live ſo as to die to the Uſe of this Life, and deny themſelves, and become wholly new Men.

SECT. 7. For which reaſon no married Perſons were admitted to Penance, but by Conſent of both Parties.

I cannot be poſitive, and therefore will not venture to affirm it abſolutely, that this was impoſed by any publick Rule of the Church, becauſe I remember no Canon at preſent that preciſely enjoins it. The only Thing that may incline a Man to think there was ſuch a Rule, is, that there is another Rule of near relation to it, and which ſeems to be grounded upon the Preſumption of ſuch a Practice: That is an Order we find in the Second Council of Arles [x], that Penance ſhould not be granted to any married People, Man or Woman, without the Deſire and Conſent of both Parties. This ſeems to be grounded upon a Suppoſition, that Penitents were under Obligation to contain during the Time of their Penance; and if the innocent Party would not conſent, no Force or Compulſion could be laid upon them. For the Laws of Matrimony are prior to any Rules that could be made about the Exerciſe of publick Diſcipline by the Church.

SECT. 8. Penitents not allowed to marry in the Time of their Penance.

IT is another Rule of the ſame Council, proceeding upon the like Reaſon and Suppoſition of perfect Continency in publick Penitents, That no Penitent, Man or Woman, ſhould have Liberty to marry, whilſt they were doing Penance [y]: And if they did, they ſhould be rejected, and debarred even from entering under the Roof of the Church. Or if they held any ſuſpicious Converſation, or unlawful Familiarity with Strangers in this State, they were liable to the ſame Cenſure. For all this this was thought improper in their Circumſtances, and inconſiſtent with the Profeſſion of a ſolemn and deep Repentance.

SECT. 9. Penitents obliged to pray kneeling on all Feſtivals and Days of Relaxation.

AND whereas all others might pray ſtanding on all Feſtivals, on the Lord's-Day, and the Commemorations of Martyrs, and the whole Fifty Days between Eaſter and Pentecoſt; which were called Days of Relaxation, and the ſtanding Poſture was appointed to be uſed on them by the Laws of the Church: Penitents are particularly excepted from this Privilege, and obliged to pray kneeling at theſe Times as well as any other. For this Poſture was moſt agreeable to their State, whoſe Devotions conſiſted only in the Expreſſion of a deep Humility and Sorrow for Sin, for which Kneeling was thought the moſt decent Poſture. Therefore as others were obliged to pray kneeling on their Stationary Days, and Days of Faſting, becauſe thoſe were Times of more ſolemn Humiliation: So the Penitents were obliged [z] to kneel every Day, even on the Days of Remiſſion, becauſe every Day was a Day of Humiliation to them, and their Buſineſs in the Church was only to ſue for Mercy, and to proſtrate themſelves to receive the ſolemn Impoſition of Hands and Benediction.

SECT. 10. Penitents obliged to ſhew their Liberality to the Poor.

AND becauſe Mercy and Liberality to the Poor was a great Argument and Evidence of Repentance, this was always in an eminent Degree exacted of them. Cyprian [a] put this among the other Indications of Repentance. "Can "we think, ſays he, that that Man laments "with his whole Heart, and deprecates the "LORD with Faſting, Weeping and Mourning, who from the very Moment of his ſinning daily frequents the Baths, who feeds "himſelf with luxurious Feaſting, and fills his "Belly to an extraordinary pitch, only to "belch forth his Crudities the Day after; "who imparts not his Meats and Drinks to "the Neceſſities of the Poor? How does "he bewail his own Death, who walks about "with a merry and chearful Countenance? "Who trims his Beard and attires his Face? "Does he think to pleaſe Men, who diſ"pleaſes GOD? Does that Woman lament "and mourn, who is at leiſure to put on "her coſtly Clothing, and never thinks of "the Garment of CHRIST, which ſhe has "loſt?". In ſuch a Caſe he thinks Charity to the Poor, would be a more becoming Ornament, than all their Silks and Jewels and Gold: Therefore he adviſes them to put on the Ornament of CHRIST, that they might not appear naked before him.

SECT. 11. Penitents obliged to miniſter and ſerve the Church in burying the Dead.

FINALLY, in ſome Churches the Penitents were obliged to take upon them the Office and Care of burying the Dead: And this by way of Diſcipline, and Exerciſe of Humility and Charity, which were ſo becoming their Station. In many Churches, eſpecially thoſe of great Note, this Buſineſs devolved upon a certain Order of Men, called Parabolani, whoſe Office was particularly to attend the Sick, and take care [*] to bury the Dead: But probably there was no ſuch ſtanding Office in many Churches, and therefore this Employment was put upon the Penitents, as a proper Exerciſe for Men in their Condition. It is certain it was ſo in the African Churches: For the Fourth Council of Carthage [b] gives a particular Direction in the Caſe, That the Penitents ſhould bear out the Dead to the Church, and take care of their Burial. Theſe were ſome of thoſe wholſome and ſalutary Exerciſes, with which the ancient Church diſciplined her Penitents, eſpecially thoſe of the Third Order, who were more emphatically called Penitents, as being in the State of Proſtrators, which was the moſt noted Order of Penitents in the Church. But there is one eminent Act of Penance, belonging to this Order, yet behind; that is, the Exomologeſis, or Confeſſion: Which, becauſe it has been turned into a new Thing by the Church of Rome, and occaſioned ſome great Diſputes, I have purpoſely reſerved for a diſtinct Handling, and ſhall make it the Subject of a particular Diſſertation in the following Chapter.

CHAP. III.

A particular Account of the Exomologesis, or Confession used in the Discipline of the ancient Church; shewing it to be a different Thing from the private or auricular Confession introduced by the Church of Rome.

SECT. 1. The gross Mistake of those who make the Exomologesis of the ancient Church to signify auricular Confession.

THERE is nothing more common among the polemical Writers of the Romish Church, than wherever they meet with the Word Exomologesis in any of the ancient Writers, to interpret it private or auricular Confession, such as is now practised in the Communion of that Church, and imposed upon Men as absolutely necessary to Salvation. But they who with greater Judgment and Ingenuity among themselves have more narrowly considered the Matter, make no Scruple to confess, that the Exomologesis of the Ancients signifies a quite different Thing, viz. the whole Exercise of publick Penance, of which publick Confession was a noted Part. The learned Albaspinæus very strenuously sets himself to refute this Error in the Writers of his own Party. Cardinal Bellarmin, says he [a], and Baronius, and Maldonat in his Controversies, and Pamelius in his Commentaries upon Tertullian and Cyprian, lay it down as a certain Truth, that the Fathers generally take the Word Exomologesis for private and auricular Confession: But having long and accurately considered all the Places where it is mentioned, I cannot come in to their Opinion. The Fathers, adds he, always use this Word, when they would describe the External Rites of Penance, viz. Weeping, and Mourning, and Self-accusation, and other the like Things, which Penitents usually practised in the Course of publick Penance. For no one can be ignorant, that in those first Ages Penitents performed a long and laborious Penance, wherein they mortified themselves with continual Weeping, and stood before the Gates of the Church to give publick Testimony of their Sorrow for the Sin they had committed: Moreover, that they cast themselves on the Ground at the Bishop's Feet, and fell down at the Knees of the Martyrs, and besought all the rest of the Faithful, that they would become Intercessors to GOD for them, being cloathed in Sackcloth, and covered with Filthiness and Horror: And that when they had gone thus far in their Penance, the Bishop was used to bring them from the Doors into the Church, and set them before the Presbyters, the Deacons, the Widows, and all the People; where again they were used to prostrate themselves on the Ground, detesting their Sins, and commending themselves to the Prayers of all, and solemnly protesting that they would never relapse or return to their former Condition again. And upon this Account, says he, we often find this last Rite called Exomologesis by the Fathers, because it contained many Acts in it expressing Sorrow for the Crimes they had committed, in like manner as the whole Action and Tenor of a Penitent's Life, whilst he is doing Penance, is sometimes called Exomologesis by the Fathers. This he proves and confirms from many irrefragable Testimonies out of Tertullian, Cyprian, and other ancient Writers, which I shall not here relate, but only alledge one Passage of Tertullian, which comes home to the present Purpose. The Exomologesis, says he [b], is the Discipline of a Man's prostrating and humbling himself, injoining him a Conversation that moves GOD to Mercy and Compassion. It obliges a Man to change his Habit and his Diet, to lie in Sackcloth and Ashes, to defile his Body by a Neglect of Dress and Ornament, to afflict his Soul with Sorrow, and to change his former sinful Conversation by a quite contrary Practice: To use Meat and Drink, not to please his Appetite, but only for Preservation of Life; to quicken his Prayers and Devotions by frequent Fastings; to groan and weep, and cry unto the LORD GOD both Day and Night; to prostrate himself before the Presbyters of the Church, to kneel before the Friends of GOD, and to beg of all the Brethren that they would become Intercessors for his Pardon: All this the Exomologesis requires to recommend a true Repentance: Here is not a Syllable of private or auricular Confession, but all relates to the publick Confession before the Church; and that not so much in Words, as in Actions, expressing their Repentance in publick Demonstrations of their Sorrow, and the uniform Tenor of a penitent Behaviour; which was of far greater Moment to signify ſignify and evidence their Converſion, than the moſt pathetical Words of any mere verbal or private Confeſſion.

AND this is one Argument to prove that the Doctrine of the Neceſſity of auricular Confeſſion was wholly unknown to the ancient Church. For when publick Diſcipline was in general Uſe, and all Men were diſpoſed to ſubmit to it, there could be little Occaſion for private Confeſſion, the Reaſon and Ground of which was much better anſwered by the publick. But beſides this, there is moſt plain and direct Evidence from the Teſtimonies of the Ancients, that no Neceſſity was laid upon any Man to make private Confeſſion of all or any of his ſecret Sins to a Prieſt, as a Matter of indiſpenſable Obligation, either to qualify him for the Reception of the Euchariſt, or to give him a Title to the Communion of the Church and Eternal Life. I have already ſhewed this, with a particular Reſpect to the Reception of the Euchariſt, out of ſome very plain Paſſages of Chryſoſtom, Gennadius, Laurentius Novarienſis [*] and other ancient Writers; to which I ſhall here add ſuch other Teſtimonies, as evidently ſhew they required no private Confeſſion to be made to Man, except in ſome very particular Caſes. St. Chryſoſtom [c] exhorting Men to Repentance, ſays, "I bid thee not to bring thyſelf upon the "Stage, nor to accuſe thyſelf unto others: "But I adviſe thee to obſerve the Prophet's "Direction, reveal thy Way unto the LORD, "confeſs thy Sins before GOD, confeſs them "before the Judge; praying, if not with thy "Tongue, yet at leaſt with thy Memory; "and ſo look to obtain Mercy. It is better "to be tormented with the Memory of thy "Sins now, than with the Torment that "ſhall be hereafter. If you remember them "now, and continually offer them to GOD, "and pray for them, you ſhall quickly blot "them out: But if you forget them now, "you will remember them againſt your Will, "when they ſhall be brought forth before "the whole World, and be publickly expoſed upon the Stage before all, Friends, "Enemies, and Angels". In another Place, "[d], It is not neceſſary that thou ſhouldſt "confeſs in the Preſence of Witneſſes; let "the Enquiry after thy Sins be made in thy "own Thoughts; let this Judgment be without any Witneſs; let GOD only ſee thee "confeſſing". Again [e], "I beſeech you "make your Confeſſion continually to GOD. "For I do not bring thee into the Theatre "of thy Fellow-Servants, neither do I conſtrain thee by any Neceſſity to diſcover "thy Sins unto Men: unfold thy Conſcience "before GOD, and ſhew him thy Wounds, "and ask the Cure of him. Shew them to "him, who will not reproach thee, but only "heal thee. For although thou confeſs not, "he knows all. Confeſs therefore, that thou "mayeſt be a Gainer. Confeſs, that thou "mayeſt put off thy Sins in this World, and "go pure into the next, and avoid that intolerable Publication that will otherwiſe be "made hereafter. Why art thou aſhamed "and bluſheſt, ſays he, in another Place [f], "to confeſs thy Sins? Doſt thou diſcover "them to a Man, that he ſhould reproach "thee? Doſt thou confeſs them to thy Fellow-Servant, that he ſhould bring thee "upon the open Stage? Thou only ſheweſt "thy Wound to him, who is thy Lord, thy "Curator, thy Phyſician, and thy Friend. "And he ſays to thee, I do not compel "thee to go into the publick Theatre, and "take many Witneſſes. Confeſs thy Sin in "private to me alone, that I may heal thy "Wound, and deliver thee from thy Grief". There are almoſt Twenty Paſſages [g] in the ſame Author, very full and pregnant to the ſame Purpoſe, which the learned Reader may conſult in their proper Places, or view them at once collected together by Mr. Daillé in his excellent Book [h] of auricular Confeſſion, where he not only vindicates theſe Paſſages of St. Chryſoſtom from the ſophiſtical Gloſſes and Evaſions of the Romaniſts, but alſo has unanſwerably proved by no leſs than Thirty Arguments, and a Cloud of other ancient Witneſſes, that there could be no ſuch thing as private, auricular, ſacramental Confeſſion injoined, as of Neceſſity to Pardon of Sin, in the Primitive Church. Chryſoſtom is not the only Perſon that maintains this Aſſertion. St. Baſil ſays the ſame thing before him: "I "do not make Confeſſion with my Lips [i], "to appear to the World; but inwardly in "my Heart, where no Eye ſees; I declare "my Groanings unto thee alone, who ſeeſt "in ſecret, I roar within myſelf: For I need "not many Words to make Confeſſion: The "Groanings of my Heart are ſufficient for "Confeſſion, and the Lamentations which "are ſent up to thee, my GOD, from the "Bottom of my Soul". In like manner St.

St. Hilary [k] makes Confeſſion neceſſary to be made to GOD only: For commenting on the Fifty ſecond Pſalm, he tells us David teaches us that Confeſſion is neceſſary to be made to none but GOD, who hath made the Olive fruitful with the Hope of Mercy for ever and ever. And St. Ambroſe as plainly ſays [l], that Tears poured out before GOD are ſufficient to obtain Pardon of Sin, without Confeſſion made to Man. His Words are, "Tears waſh away Sin, which Men are "aſhamed to confeſs with their Voice. Weep-"ing provides at once both for Pardon and "Baſhfulneſs: Tears ſpeak our Faults with-"out Horror; Tears confeſs our Crimes "without any Offence to Modeſty or Shame-"facedneſs". So again [m] ſpeaking of St. Peter's Tears, he ſays, "I find not what Pe-"ter ſaid, but I find that he wept: I read "of his Tears, but I read not of his Satiſ-"faction;" meaning, that verbal Confeſſion was not ſimply neceſſary to obtain Pardon. And in this Senſe St. Auſtin expounding thoſe Words of the Pſalmiſt, I ſaid I will pronounce or declare my own Wickedneſs againſt myſelf unto the LORD, and ſo thou forgaveſt the Iniquity of my Heart, ſays, he had not yet pronounced [n] it, but only promiſed that he would pronounce it, and yet GOD forgave him. He had not yet pronounced it, but only in his Heart; his Confeſſion was not yet come to his Mouth, yet GOD heard the Voice of his Heart: His Voice was not yet in his Mouth, but the Ear of GOD was in his Heart; which implies, that GOD accepts and pardons the penitent and contrite Heart, even before any formal Declaration is made by vocal Confeſſion either to GOD or Man. In another place [o] he ſpeaks of Confeſſion as no ways neceſſary to be made to Man. What have I to do with Men, that they ſhould hear my Confeſſions, as though they could heal all my Diſeaſes? He alſo frequently tells [*] us, with all the reſt of the ancient Writers, that a great many of thoſe which the Romaniſts now call mortal Sins, were daily pardoned upon no other Confeſſion but the fervent and devout Uſe of the Lord's-Prayer, Forgive us our Treſpaſſes, as we forgive them that treſpaſs againſt us. Which evidently ſhews, that he did not believe Auricular Confeſſion neceſſary for expiating all manner of mortal Sins. Maximus Taurinenſis [p] delivers his Opinion almoſt in the ſame Words as St. Ambroſe does: "Tears "waſh away Sin, which the Voice is aſhamed "to confeſs. Therefore Tears provide at "once both for Mens Modeſty and Salva-"tion; they neither make Men bluſh in "their Petitions, nor diſappoint them of Par-"don in asking." He adds, "That Tears "are a Sort of ſilent Prayers: They ask not "Pardon in Words, and yet deſerve it, (that "is, in his Style, procure it) they declare not "the Cauſe, and yet obtain Mercy. Nay the "Prayers of Tears are many times of more "advantage, than thoſe of Words; becauſe "Words often prove deceitful in Prayer, but "Tears never deceive. For Words ſometimes "declare but half the Buſineſs; but Tears "always expreſs the whole Affection." Proſper, who was St. Auſtin's Scholar, follows his Doctrine: For ſpeaking of private Sins committed by the Clergy, he ſays, "They ſhall "more eaſily appeaſe GOD [q], who being "not convict by human Judgment, do of "their own accord acknowledge their Of-"fence; who either do diſcover it by their "own Confeſſions, or elſe others not know-"ing what they are in ſecret, do voluntarily "inflict the Cenſure of Excommunication "upon themſelves; and being ſeparated (not "in Mind but in Office) from the Altar, to "which they did miniſter, do lament their "Life as dead; aſſuring themſelves, that GOD "being reconciled unto them by the Fruits "of effectual Repentance, they ſhall not only "receive what they have loſt, but alſo be-"ing made Citizens of that City which is "above, they ſhall come to everlaſting Joys." Caſſian alſo aſſures us, that this was the Doctrine of the Ægyptian Fathers. For he ſays, Pinuphius the Ægyptian Abbot gave this Advice to the Monks that were under him: "Who is "it that cannot humbly ſay? I made my Sin "known unto thee, and my Iniquity have I not hid; "that by this Confeſſion he may confidently "adjoin that which follows: And ſo thou for-"gaveſt the Impiety of my Heart. But if Shame-"facedneſs [r] ſo draw thee back, that thou "bluſheſt to reveal them before Men; ceaſe "not Theſe are plain Teſtimonies evidently ſhewing, that the Ancients did not believe the Neceſſity of Auricular Confeſſion, or urge it as a Thing abſolutely neceſſary to Abſolution and Salvation.

SECT. 3. This proved farther from the Practice of the Ancients in denying all manner of Abſolution to ſome relapſing Sinners, without excluding them from the Mercy and Pardon of God upon Confeſſion to him alone.

BUT beſides this, the Practice of the Ancients in one particular Caſe does moſt irrefragably ſhew, that they did not believe the Neceſſity of auricular Confeſſion. For they allowed no ſecond publick Penance to many relapſing Sinners, nor ever gave them any manner of ſacerdotal Abſolution to their Lives End: Which ſhall be evidently demonſtrated in the next Chapter. Now the plain Conſequence of this is, that no penitential Confeſſion, either publick or private was taken from ſuch, as made to Man, in order to obtain ſacerdotal Abſolution: Yet ſtill they exhorted them to repent in private, and make private Confeſſion of their Sins to GOD, in hopes of obtaining Mercy and Pardon in the great Day of Retribution. 'Tis confeſſed on all Hands, that ſuch Relapſers never had the Privilege to make their publick Confeſſion in the Church, in order to obtain publick Abſolution: And it is as certain they were not admitted to compound by any private ſacerdotal Confeſſion, to obtain private ſacerdotal Abſolution. For though Cardinal Perron had a ſtrong Fancy to ſolve the Difficulty of this Argument, by feigning a Sort of private Confeſſion for them, when they were denied the publick; yet Petavius [s] himſelf refutes this Pretence as a mere Dream without any Foundation in ancient Hiſtory, and gives a ſolid Reaſon to the contrary. For as he argues, if private Confeſſion had been allowed to ſuch Relapſers, their Condition had been happier, and their Penance eaſier, than thoſe who fell but once: Which is a Thing that will hardly enter into any Man's Imagination, that conſiders Things with any manner of Judgment and Reaſon. Suppoſing then the Truth of this Fact, that the Ancients allowed ſuch Relapſers neither the Benefit of publick nor private Abſolution upon any Confeſſion whatſoever: It evidently follows that they did not believe any abſolute Neceſſity of auricular Confeſſion, ſince they encouraged ſuch Sinners notwithſtanding to hope for Mercy and Pardon upon private Repentance and Confeſſion made to GOD only. For the Proof of which, one Paſſage of St. Auſtin will be ſufficient, where he ſpeaks the general Practice of the Church, and the Senſe of all his Brethren. The Iniquity of Men, ſays he, ſometimes proceeds ſo far, that after they have done publick Penance, after they have been reconciled to the Altar, they commit the ſame or greater Sins; and yet GOD makes his Sun to riſe upon every ſuch, and beſtows upon them no leſs than before the greateſt Gifts of Life and Salvation. And though there be no Place allowed [t] to ſuch in the Church, to perform that humble Sort of Penance again, yet GOD does not forget his Patience toward them. But if any of theſe ſhould ſay to us, either grant me the ſame Place of Repentance again, or elſe ſuffer me to go on deſperately, to live as I liſt, to do whatever my Riches will enable me to do, and no human Laws will forbid me, to live in Whoredom and all manner of Luxury, which though damnable before the LORD, is even laudable in the Eyes of many Men: Or if ye recall me from this Wickedneſs, tell me whether it will profit me any thing towards Eternal Life, if in this Life I contemn the Blandiſhments of enticing Pleaſure, if I bridle the Excitements of Luſt, if for the Chaſtiſement of my Body I deny myſelf many Things that are lawful and allowed, if I torment myſelf more vehemently in Repentance than I did before, if I groan more miſerably, and weep more abundantly, if I live better, if I more liberally ſuſtain the Poor, if I more ardently flame in Charity, which covers a Multitude of Sins: Which of us is ſo fooliſh, as to ſay to this Man, All this will profit thee nothing hereafter, go and enjoy the Pleaſures of this Life? GOD forbid we ſhould be guilty of ſo monſtrous and ſacrilegious Madneſs. Therefore though it be a cautious and ſalutary Rule and Proviſion in the Eccleſiaſtical Law, that this Place of the humbleſt Penance ſhall not be granted above once in the Church, leſt by making the Medicine too vile and cheap, it ſhould become leſs uſeful to thoſe that are ſick, being ſo much the more beneficial, by how much it is leſs contemptible: Yet who dares to ſay to GOD, why doſt thou ſpare this Man, who after his firſt Penance binds himſelf again in the Bonds of Iniquity? Who dares ſay, that GOD deals not with them according to that Saying of the Apoſtle, Knoweſt thou not that the Long-Suffering of GOD leadeth thee to Repentance? Or that they are excepted from that general Declaration? Bleſſed are all that they put their Truſt in in him? Or that it belongs not to them, when it is ſaid, Be ſtrong, and eſtabliſh your Heart all ye that put your Truſt in the LORD? If St. Auſtin here rightly repreſents the Practice of the Church, in this one Caſe, there was no Uſe made either of publick or private Confeſſion to Men, to obtain the Remiſſion of the greateſt Sins; but Men were directed to another Method, to ſeek Pardon from GOD by the Exerciſe of a private Repentance. Conſequently there could be no abſolute Neceſſity of auricular Confeſſion, which in this Caſe had been moſt likely to have been preſcribed in Want of the other, had any ſuch Neceſſity been taught or laid upon it, as is now by the imperious and dictating Authority of the Church of Rome.

SECT. 4. And from ſeveral other Conſiderations of the like Nature.

THE learned Mr. Daille has urged many other Conſiderations of great Weight, which I cannot here inſiſt upon, but only mention the Heads of them for the Sake of the unlearned Readers, or ſuch of the Learned as have not that excellent and elaborate Work of his by them. 1. He argues from the Practice [t] of all other Churches in the World beſide the Roman: The Doctrine of the Neceſſity of auricular Confeſſion, is taught by no other Denomination of Chriſtians, not the Æthiopians, nor the Indians of St. Thomas, nor the Babylonians or Chaldæans, nor the Armenians, nor the Jacobites, nor the Greeks in the manner of the Romans. 2. He ſhews, that whereas the Prieſts in the Roman Church are nicely inſtructed in the Buſineſs of auricular Confeſſion, and teach and miniſter it daily to the People, as the nobleſt Act of their Office; there is nothing of all this to be found in the genuine Writings of the ancient Chriſtians. 3. Whereas auricular Confeſſion is continually mentioned by the Roman Writers among the Religious Acts of all Sorts of Men, Clergy, Monks, Laity, Princes, private Men, Noblemen, Plebeians, Men, Women, &c. there is nothing of this among the ancient Chriſtians. 4. In the ancient Church Chriſtians were bound by no Law, as now they are in the Roman, to confeſs their Sins to a Prieſt before they came to the LORD's Table to receive the Euchariſt. Which he demonſtrates by Eight Reaſons, and the Teſtimony of Chryſoſtom, Pelagius, Auſtin, Dorotheus, the Council of Chalon and Hincmar. 5. In the Roman Church it is uſual for every one to make his auricular Confeſſion at the Point of Death; of which there are no Footſteps among the Ancients. 6. The Romiſh Writers are very full of auricular Confeſſion in deſcribing any of the Sickneſſes, or Calamities, or Wars, or Shipwrecks, or Journeys, or other hazardous Undertakings of their People: But there was no ſuch Practice among the Ancients. 7. The Ancients in deſcribing the Perſecutions of the Church, or the Conflicts and Trials and laſt Agonies of their Confeſſors and Martyrs, never mention Auricular Confeſſion, which yet abounds every where in the Romiſh Writers, when they make any ſuch Relations of the Lives or Deaths of their Martyrs. 8. The Ancients had no ſolemn Times appointed for Auricular Confeſſion, as Eaſter, Chriſtmas, Lent, the greater Feſtivals, and the Friday and Saturday Faſts, which are now every where ſpoken of in the Romiſh Writers, as ſolemn Times of Confeſſion. 9. The Ancients ſay nothing of Miracles done in or by Confeſſion, which the Romaniſts continually boaſted of. 10. The ancient Pagans never objected Auricular Confeſſion to the primitive Chriſtians, as the Modern Pagans do to thoſe of the Roman Communion. 11. The ancient Church knew nothing of Hereticks oppoſing Auricular Confeſſion, becauſe there was no ſuch Thing injoined; but ſince it was appointed by the Council of Lateran, An. 1215. many have been condemned as Hereticks for oppoſing it. 12. The primitive Biſhops often declare, that they were ignorant of the Sins of their People; particularly this is ſaid by Chryſoſtom, Auſtin, Innocent and Leo Biſhops of Rome: Which is an Argument, that they were not revealed to them by Sacramental Confeſſion. 13. The firſt Man that inſtituted any private Confeſſion was St. Anthony, who appointed his Monks to write down their Thoughts and communicate them one to another: But this was nothing to Sacerdotal Confeſſion; for theſe Monks were only Laymen. 14. The ancient Writers have none of thoſe intricate Queſtions and Diſputations about Auricular Confeſſion, which ſo much ſtuff the Books of the Modern Caſuiſts in the Church of Rome. 15. The Fathers never interpret thoſe Paſſages of Scripture, which the Romaniſts produce for Auricular Confeſſion, in their Senſe, but moſt of them to a contrary Meaning. 16. The Fathers in thoſe Books which they wrote profeſſedly of Repentance, never urge Auricular Confeſſion as a neceſſary Part of Repentance. 17. The Fathers acknowledge only Three Sorts of Repentance; the ante-baptiſmal, for all manner of Sins; the quotidian or daily Repentance, for leſſer Sins of daily Incurſion; and the publick Penance of Lapſers, falling into more heinous Sins; but Auricular Confeſſion appertains to none of theſe. 18. Gregory Nyſſen [n] ſays expreſsly there were ſome Sins, ſuch as Covetouſneſs, which the Fathers before him endeavoured to cure, not by any Canonical Puniſhments, but only by the publick Exhortations of the Word and Doctrine: Which will not conſiſt with the Doctrine of Auricular Confeſſion. 19. Nectarius wholly abrogated the Office of the penitentiary Prieſt. Which argues, that [*] Daill. de Confeſſ. Auricular. Lib. 4. cap. 1. &c.

that there was no Neceſſity of Auricular Confeſſion: But of this Office we muſt ſpeak a little more particularly hereafter. 20. His next Argument is drawn from thoſe Paſſages of Chryſoſtom, Hilary, Baſil, Ambroſe, Maximus Taurinenſis, and St. Auſtin (which have been already mentioned) aſſerting, that Remiſſion of Sins may be obtained of GOD by Contrition only, without any oral Confeſſion. 21. The Fathers allow Salvation to be attainable even by thoſe Relapſers, who fell again into Sin after their firſt publick Penance, though they had no Liberty either to make Confeſſion or receive Abſolution. Which Argument has been particularly explained already. His 22, 23, and 24 Arguments are drawn from the Teſtimonies of Caſſian, and Julianus Pomerius or Proſper, and Laurentius Novarienſis, which have been related before. 25. To theſe he adds two conſiderable Teſtimonies of Bede. 26. And the Conceſſions of Eraſmus, Beatus Rhenanus, and Rigaltius, who freely own, that the Romiſh Auricular Confeſſion was not in Uſe in the primitive Church. 27. He ſhews that there was a Change made of the ancient Diſcipline in the Ninth Age, when private Penance enjoined by the Prieſt began to be pretty Frequent and Common. 28. And yet this differed vaſtly in many Particulars from the Confeſſion eſtabliſhed afterwards in the Council of Lateran. For ſtill it was believed, that Confeſſion made to GOD was ſufficient to Salvation. 29. In the following Ages alſo Goffridus Vindocinenſis, Peter Lombard, and Gratian [x] ſay there were many who ſtill held that Confeſſion to GOD alone was ſufficient without confeſſing to the Prieſt. And Gratian particularly, having cited the Authorities on both Sides of the Queſtion, leaves it to the Judgment of the Reader to take which he pleaſes: Becauſe each Opinion had wiſe and religious Men to authorize and defend it. Which argues, that in Gratian's Time the Queſtion about the Neceſſity of Auricular Confeſſion was not ſo determined as it was afterwards in the Council of Lateran, and the Council of Trent. This is alſo acknowledged by Aquinas, Bonaventure, and Antonine, who ſay, that in the Time of Gratian and Lombard the Queſtion about the Neceſſity of ſuch Confeſſion was only problematical, and what might ſafely be diſputed both ways, and that it was no Hereſy to deny it: But after the Determination of the Church made under Innocent III. in the Lateran Council, it was to be reputed Hereſy for any Man to aſſert, that it was ſufficient to confeſs a Man's Sins to GOD, without making Confeſſion to a Prieſt alſo. 30. Thus the Doctrine of Auricular Confeſſion was eſtabliſhed in the Thirteenth Century, and not before: And even after that there wanted not Witneſſes, ſuch as Wickliff, and Huſs, and Semeca, and Michael of Bononia, and Petrus Oxonienſis, to bear Teſtimony againſt its Novelty, to the Time of the Reformation. This is the ſhort Account of thoſe Thirty Arguments, which the Learned Mr. Daille uſes to ſhew the Novelty of the Romiſh Doctrine concerning Auricular Confeſſion, which the Curious Reader, who deſires to ſee them more fully deduced and confirmed, may conſult in our Author's elaborate Work for his farther Satisfaction.

SECT. 5. Yet private Confeſſion allowed and encouraged in ſome Caſes. As, 1. For leſſer Sins, Men were adviſed to confeſs mutually to one another, to have their Prayers and Aſſiſtance.

BUT in all that is ſaid by this or that Proteſtant Writer, there is no Intent to deny, that private Confeſſion was allowed and encouraged by the Ancients in ſome Caſes and upon ſpecial Occaſions. For firſt they adviſed all Men, in Caſe of leſſer Sins, to make Confeſſion mutually to one another, that they might have each others Prayers and Aſſiſtance. This is the Advice of St. James, v. 16. Confeſs your Faults one to another, and pray one for another, that ye may be healed. The effectual fervent Prayer of a righteous Man availeth much. Which though it be a Place commonly produced by the Romaniſts for their Auricular Confeſſion to a Prieſt, yet it was anciently thought no more than a Direction to Chriſtians in general to confeſs their Sins mutually one to another. Thus, it is certain, St. Auſtin underſtood it: For writing upon thoſe Words of our SAVIOUR in St. John, If I your LORD and Maſter have waſhed your Feet, ye ought alſo to waſh one anothers Feet; he thus expounds them and the Words of St. James together: "Can we ſay "[y], that one Brother may cleanſe ano- "ther from the Contagion of Sin? Yes we "are taught to do it by the myſtical Mean- "ing of this Work of our LORD, that we "ſhould confeſs our Sins one to another, "and pray one for another, as CHRIST in- "tercedes for us. Let us hear St. James the "Apoſtle evidently commanding this very "Thing, and ſaying, Confeſs your Faults one to "another, and pray one for another, becauſe in "this our LORD hath ſet us an Example. For "if he, who neither has, nor ever had, nor "ever will have any Sin, prays for our Sins; "how much rather ought we to pray for the "Sins of one another? And if he forgive us, "who has nothing to be forgiven by us; "how much more ought we to forgive one "another, who cannot live here without Sin? "Let us therefore forgive one another, and "pray for each others Sins, that ſo we may "in ſome meaſure waſh one anothers Feet". In

In like manner Eradius, or St. Auſtin himſelf in another [z] Place ſays, "We are admoniſhed throughout the whole Scripture to confeſs our Sins continually and humbly, not only to GOD, but to holy Men and thoſe that fear GOD. For ſo the HOLY GHOST teaches us by St. James the Apoſtle, ſaying, Confeſs your Faults one to another, and pray one for another, that ye may be healed." Hincmar, a learned French Biſhop of the Ninth Age, gives the ſame Interpretation: "Our light and daily Sins, ſays he, according to the Exhortation of St. James [a], are daily to be confeſſed to thoſe that are our Equals: And ſuch Sins we may believe, will be cleanſed by their daily Prayers, and our own Acts of Piety, if with a charitable Mind we truly ſay in the Lord's-Prayer, Forgive us our Treſpaſſes, as we forgive them that treſpaſs againſt us." And Maldonat [b] ſays, this was the Senſe of all the Ancients, alledging not only St. Auſtin, but Heſychius and Gregory the Great, and Bede, and the Author of the Interlineary Gloſs. To which others [c] add Scotus, and Biel, and Dionyſius Carthuſianus, and Cajetan, and Gagnæus, and Godellus, a late Biſhop of the French Church; however Bellarmin came to fix upon this Paſſage of St. James, as a Proof of Auricular Confeſſion to a Prieſt, which in the Caſe mentioned, according to the Opinion of ſo many Ancients and Moderns, directs to no other Confeſſion, but what may be made to any pious Chriſtian.

2. In Caſe of Injuries done to private Perſons, Men were obliged to confeſs, and ask Pardon of the injured Party.

2. IN Caſe of private Injuries done to any private Perſon, there was no Queſtion ever made, but that the offending Party might make a private Confeſſion of his Fault to the offended Party, and give him private Satisfaction. For ſo CHRIST had appointed, Matth. v. 23. If thou bring thy Gift to the Altar, and there remembreſt that thy Brother hath ought againſt thee; Leave there thy Gift before the Altar, and go thy way, firſt be reconciled to thy Brother, and then come and offer thy Gift. Upon which St. Auſtin [d] ſays, "A Man may with an unfeigned Heart endeavour to pacify and appeaſe him, by asking him pardon, if he does this before GOD. Nay, it is his only Remedy in this Caſe, to ask pardon; which whoever does not, he is puffed up with the Spirit of Vain-glory."

SECT. 7.
3. When they were under any Troubles of Conſcience, they were adviſed to make private Confeſſion to a Miniſter, to have his Counſel and Direction.

3. WHEN Men were under any Perplexities of Mind, or Troubles of Conſcience, from the Preſſure and Load of Sin; that was another Caſe in which they were always directed to have Recourſe to ſome wiſe and prudent Paſtor, to take his Counſel and Advice, and his Aſſiſtance, and his Prayers, as a Sort of Mediator and Interceſſor under CHRIST for them. The Romiſh Writers are apt to alledge many Paſſages out of the Ancients, which upon Examination and ſtrict Enquiry amount to no more than this. Thus Clemens Romanus, or the Author under his Name, bids every one, into whoſe Heart either Envy or Infidelity, or any ſuch Crime, has ſlily crept, not be aſhamed (if he has any Care of his Soul) to confeſs his Sin to the Biſhop or Miniſter [e] preſiding over him, that by the Word of GOD and his ſaving Counſel he may be healed. And ſo Maldonat owns [f], this has no Relation to Sacramental Confeſſion. The ſame Advice is given by Origen, Gregory Nyſſen [g], and St. Baſil [h], upon the like Occaſion, to confeſs their Sins to the Prieſt, who by his Compaſſion and Skilfulneſs was able to help their Infirmities, and at once take care both of their Credit and Cure.

SECT. 8.
4. To take his Advice alſo, whether it was proper to do publick Penance for private Offences.

4. ORIGEN gives another Reaſon for confeſſing private Sins to the Prieſt, becauſe he was beſt able to judge, whether it were proper for ſuch Sins to admit Men to do publick Penance in the Church, which in thoſe Days was no uſual Practice. "Conſider, ſays he [i], what the Holy Scripture teaches us, that we ſhould not conceal our Sin within our own Breaſt. For perhaps as they who are inwardly oppreſſed with the Humour or Phlegm of indigeſted Meat, which lies heavy on the Stomach, if they vomit it up, are relieved; ſo they who have ſinned, if they hide and conceal their Sin within themſelves, are inwardly oppreſſed, and almoſt ſuffocated with the Phlegm and Humour of Sin: But if any one become his own Accuſer, and confeſs his Sin, in ſo doing he as it were vomits up his Sin and digeſts and removes the Cauſe of his Diſtemper. Only be circumſpect in the Choice

" Choice of him to whom it will be fit to " confeſs thy Sin. Try firſt the Phyſician to " whom thou art to reveal the Cauſe of thy " Diſtemper, and ſee that he be one who " knows how to be weak with him that is " weak, and to weep with him that weeps; " one who underſtands the Diſcipline of con- " doling and compaſſionating; that ſo at " length, if he ſhall ſay any thing, who hath " firſt ſhewed himſelf to be both a skilful and " a merciful Phyſician, and give thee any " Counſel, thou mayſt obſerve and follow it. " If he diſcerns and foreſees thy Diſtemper " to be ſuch, as will need to be declared and " cured in the full Aſſembly of the Church, " whereby others perhaps may be edified, " and thou thyſelf healed, this is to be done " with great Deliberation, and the prudent " Advice of ſuch a Phyſician." It is very plain that in this Caſe this Sort of private Confeſſion was made in order to take the Miniſter's Advice concerning doing publick Penance for any private Sin; and that Men had Recourſe to him in private, as to one who was beſt able to judge, whether their Sin were of ſuch a Nature, as would require a publick Humiliation and Repentance. For this, as I ſaid before, was no unuſual Thing in thoſe Days, for Men ſometimes to deſire to do publick Penance for private Offences; yea even for the very Intention and Deſign of ſome groſſer Sin, though they never proceeded ſo far as the outward Action. Cyprian ſpeaks of ſome ſuch Offenders, who reckoned themſelves guilty of Idolatry [k], not becauſe they had either actually ſacrificed to Idols, or procured any Libel to ſignify their ſo doing, but only becauſe they had deſigned in their Hearts to do it: Who therefore confeſſed their wicked Intention to the Prieſts, in order to do publick Penance for it (though it was but a ſmall Sin in Compariſon) as knowing that it was written, GOD is not mocked. Theſe private Sins after ſecret Confeſſion were ſometimes publickly declared and read out of a Libel in the Congregation: But all Biſhops [l] did not approve of this Practice: And therefore when Pope Leo underſtood, that ſeveral Biſhops in the Provinces of Campania, Samnium, and Picenum took this Method, he wrote a ſharp Letter to them, complaining of it as an unlawful Uſurpation and irregular Practice, to put thoſe who made ſecret Confeſſion to the Prieſts, upon a publick Rehearſal of their Crimes afterwards in the Face of the Congregation: Which Cuſtom ought by all means to be abrogated and laid aſide. For though it may ſeem a very laudable Plenitude of Faith, that for the Fear of GOD makes Men not afraid to take ſhame before Men; yet becauſe all Mens Sins, which come under Penance, are not ſuch as they are not afraid to have made publick, this unreaſonable Cuſtom ought to be altered, leſt many ſhould be driven from the Remedy of Repentance, whilſt either they are aſhamed or afraid to have their Actions laid open before their Enemies, who perhaps might take occaſion from thence to bring them into Danger of the Civil Laws, and the Penalties impoſed by them upon ſuch Offences. Which laſt Words of Leo ſuggeſt a farther Reaſon, why the Ancients in ſome Caſes allowed of private Confeſſion, even when the Penance itſelf in its Exerciſe was to be publick. For we may obſerve,

SECT. 9.
5. When there was any Danger of Death ariſing from the Laws of the State againſt certain Offences.

5. THAT when there was any apparent Danger to Mens Lives or otherwiſe, ariſing from the Penalties of the Civil Laws, inflicting Capital Puniſhments on certain Offences; in that Caſe the Church was content to take a private Confeſſion of Sinners, and excuſe them from a dangerous Publication. 'Tis of this Caſe St. Auſtin ſpeaks, when he ſays [m], we ought to correct ſecret Sins in ſecret, leſt if we publickly reprove them, we betray the Man. We would reprove and correct him: But what if an Enemy lies upon the Catch, to hear ſomething for which he may puniſh him? A Biſhop, put the Caſe, perhaps knows a Man to be a Murderer, and beſides him no one elſe knows it: I would publickly rebuke the Man, but then you would ſeek to take the Law upon him. In this Caſe I neither betray a Man nor neglect him: I reprove him in ſecret; I ſet before his Eyes the Judgment of GOD; I terrify his bloody Conſcience, and perſuade him to Repentance. It happened alſo that ſometimes Perſons confeſſed ſuch ſecret Sins, as though they would not endanger their Lives by a regular Courſe of Law, yet might provoke an injured Party, if he knew them, in a ſudden Fit of Zeal and Paſſion to deſtroy them. In this Caſe it was thought more proper to let the Confeſſion and Penance be both in private, leſt any ſuch Inconvenience might follow upon the Publication. St. Baſil

Basil [n] instances in the Case of a Woman that confesses herself guilty of Adultery: The Law allowed not the Husband to kill her, except he found her in the very Act: But it might happen, that in his Zeal and Fury he might be tempted even against Law to kill her, if by any means he came to understand that she had been guilty of such a Transgression: Therefore to avoid the Occasion of any such Temptation, it was ordered, That no Minister should δημοσιεύειν, publish the Crime of Women under Penance of Adultery upon their own Confession, lest it should occasion their Death; that is, to expose them to the Fury of their Husbands, who might be inclined in the Height of Passion to exceed all Bounds, and do what by Law they could not answer.

SECT. 10. 6. Private Confession required in Case of private Admonition for Offences.

6. I remember but one Case more in which any Thing like private Confession was required; and that was, when any Man was rebuked for his Crime by his Spiritual Guide, of which he was either notoriously guilty, or violently suspected: In that Case it was his Duty to give Glory to GOD, and take shame to himself, by an ingenuous Confession and Acknowledgment of his Fault, to answer the true End of private Admonition. 'Tis of this Sort of Confession St. Ambrose [o] speaks in the Person of David, when he says, that being rebuked by a private Man for his great Offence, he did not fret and fume with Indignation, but ingenuously confessed his Fault, and mourned with Sorrow for it.

SECT. 11. The Office of the penitentiary Priest set up in many Churches to receive and regulate such private Confessions.

ALL these Sorts of private Confession were anciently allowed of, as consistent with the Standing and Ordinary Discipline of publick Confession and Penance in the Church. And the better to regulate them, and direct Men what to do in such Cases, there was a particular Officer appointed in many Churches under the Name of the Penitentiary Priest: Whose Office was not to receive private Confessions in prejudice to the publick Discipline; much less to grant Absolution privately upon bare Confession before any Penance was performed; which was a Practice altogether unknown to the ancient Church, as we shall see more hereafter: But it was to facilitate and promote the Exercise of publick Discipline, by acquainting Men what Sins the Laws of the Church required to be expiated by publick Penance, and how they were to behave themselves in the Performance of it; and only to appoint private Penance for such private Crimes as were not proper to be brought upon the publick Stage, either for fear of doing Harm to the Penitent himself, or giving Scandal to the Church.

SECT. 12. This Office afterwards abrogated, and Men were entirely left to their Liberty, as to what concerned private Confession.

THE whole History of the first Original and Institution of this Office in the Time of the Decian Persecution, and the Abrogation of it by Nectarius Bishop of Constantinople in the Time of Theodosius, is entirely owing to the Relation of Socrates and Sozomen, two Historians, who lived in the same Age that the Office was abolished; and therefore it will be proper to relate it in their Words first, and then make a few Remarks upon it. Socrates [p], speaking of the Reign of Theodosius, says, "About this Time "it was thought proper to remove the Penitentiary Presbyters, τὸν ἐπὶ τὴ μετανοίας πρεσβύτερον, out of the Churches upon this Occasion. From the Time that the Novatians "made their Separation from the Church, refusing to communicate with those that lapsed in the Decian Persecution, the Bishops "added to the Ecclesiastical Roll (τῷ ἐκκλησιῶν κανόνι) a Penitential Presbyter; that they "who fell into any Sins after Baptism, might make Confession of them before the Presbyter thereto appointed. And this Order continues still among other Sects; only they "who receive the Consubstantial Doctrine, "and the Novatians who agree with them in "the same Faith, are equally now agreed to "reject the Penitential Presbyter. The Novatians indeed never admitted this Additional Office from the Beginning; and the "present Governours of the Church, though "they allowed it for a long Time, yet now "under Nectarius laid it aside, upon a certain "Accident that happened in the Church. For "a certain Gentlewoman coming to the Penitentiary Presbyter, made particular Confession of her Sins that she had commited after Baptism. And the Presbyter injoined "her to fast and pray continually, that together with her Confession she might shew "forth Works worthy of Repentance. But "the Woman proceeding in the Course of her "Penance, accused herself of another Sin: "For she confessed, that one of the Deacons "of the Church had defiled her. Which occasioned the Deacon to be cast out of the "Church; and there was no small stir among "the People, who were incensed not barely "for the Fact, but because it brought great "Scandal and Reproach upon the Church. "And the Clergy being chiefly reviled upon "this Occasion, one Eudæmon a Presbyter of "the

" the Church, born at Alexandria, gave Coun-
" ſel to Nectarius to take away the Peniten" tiary Presbyter, and leave it to every Man's " Liberty to partake of the Holy Myſteries
" according to the Direction of his own Con-
" ſcience: For this was the only Way to free
" the Church from Reproach ". This, he ſays, he the more confidently inſerted into his Hiſtory, becauſe he had it from the Mouth of Eudæmon himſelf; though he told Eudæmon, he doubted whether his Counſel was for the Advantage of the Church, ſince it would occaſion the Neglect of mutual Reproof, and the Tranſgreſſion of that Rule of the Apoſtle, Have no Fellowſhip with the unfruitful Works of Darkneſs, but rather reprove them. Sozomen [q] in relating the ſame Story, obſerves, that the chief Offices of this Penitentiary Presbyter were, partly to direct ſuch as had need of publick Penance, how to go about it, and perform it, and partly to impoſe private Exerciſes of Repentance upon thoſe that needed not to undergo the publick: And therefore that he was to be both a prudent Man, to direct the one; and Ἐχέμυθον, a Man that could keep Secrets without diſcloſing them, for the Sake of the other. He obſerves farther, that when Nectarius had aboliſhed this Office at Conſtantinople, his Example was followed by almoſt all the Biſhops of the Eaſt; but that it continued in Uſe in the Weſtern Churches, and chiefly at Rome, to prepare Men for the publick Penance of the Church, which he there takes occaſion to deſcribe in the whole Courſe and Proceſs of it.

Now from hence it is obvious to obſerve, 1. That this Office was not ſet up to encourage Auricular Confeſſion in prejudice to the publick Diſcipline, but chiefly to promote the Exerciſe of publick Penance in the Church. 2. That it was not of Divine, but only Eccleſiaſtical Inſtitution. And therefore, 3. As it was inſtituted by the Wiſdom of the Church for good Ends; ſo when thoſe Ends could not be ſerved, and perhaps better might, it was at the Church's Liberty by the ſame Wiſdom to aboliſh it, and put it down again, as Nectarius did in the Eaſt. 4. That the aboliſhing of it did not neceſſarily imply the aboliſhing of publick Diſcipline; which ſtill continued in Force in the Eaſtern Church, notwithſtanding the Abrogation of this Office; though perhaps ſomething weakned in reſpect of private Offenders; partly becauſe they were not ſo much inclined to confeſs; and partly becauſe the Buſineſs of Diſcipline now devolving wholly upon the Biſhops, as it was before, they had not Leiſure to attend it. 5. It is very plain from hence, that there was no Neceſſity laid upon Men to confeſs all their ſecret mortal Sins before they came to the Communion; but it was enough, as Valeſius ingenuouſly confeſſes [r], for Men to ſearch their own Conſciences, whereby they thought they ſatisfied that Precept of the Apoſtle, Let a Man examine himſelf, and ſo let him eat of that Bread, and drink of that Cup. And ſo we have taken a full View of Confeſſion, both publick and private, ſo far as it was in Uſe and Practice in the ancient Church, beyond which it is none of my Province to extend the Enquiry, and ſearch after the Deviations and Corruptions of Modern Ages, which the Reader may find in any of our Polemical Writers againſt the Church of Rome, or diſcern them by the Account that has here been given, reducing every Thing to the primitive Standard.

CHAP. IV.

Of the great Rigour, Strictneſs, and Severity of the Diſcipline and Penance of the ancient Church.

SECT. 1. Publick Penance ordinarily allowed but once to any Sort of Sinners.

THERE remains now but one Thing more to be conſidered in the Exerciſe of the ancient publick Penance, and that is, the great Strictneſs, Rigour, and Severity of it, expreſſed againſt all Sins that fell under publick Diſcipline, and more eſpecially thoſe that were of a more heinous and malignant Nature. One Inſtance of the Severity of their Penitential Rules was, that they ordinarily admitted Men but once to the Privilege of publick Penance, and allowed no Second Penance to be performed in the Church by any Sort of Relapſers. I have already hinted this in the laſt Chapter, and ſhall here give more evident Proof of it, ſo far as concerns the general Practice of the Church in the Four Firſt Ages; ſhewing withal what Exceptions it admitted of, by the Power that was lodged in every Biſhop's Hands to moderate the Exerciſe of Diſcipline, as Occaſion might require, quire, according to his own Judgment and Diſcretion. We do not indeed find any general Rule or Canon for this peremptory Denial of a Second Penance to Relapſers; but if we conſider the Practice of the Church, we ſhall find it almoſt univerſal. Hermes Paſtor, who wrote in the Beginning of the Second Century, plainly aſſerts this [a], That the Servants of GOD allowed but of once doing Penance. And therefore he adviſes the Huſband, who has an adulterous Wife, to receive her once upon her Repentance, but not oftner. Clemens Alexandrinus [b] treads in the ſame Steps, allowing but one Repentance after Baptiſm, and citing the Authority of Hermes Paſtor for it. Tertullian, whilſt he was a Catholick, allowed with the Catholicks one Penance after Baptiſm, which he calls the ſecond, making the Repentance of Baptiſm to be the firſt, and this the laſt. "GOD, ſays he, "[c] has placed in the Porch, or Entrance "to the Church, a ſecond Repentance, which "opens to thoſe that knock: But now only "once, becauſe now a ſecond Time; never "more, becauſe the laſt was vain and to no "purpoſe." Then deſcribing the whole Courſe of this publick Penance, he ſays again [d], "It is a ſecond Penance, and but "one; which requires ſo much the more laborious Exerciſe and Trial, becauſe it is a "Thing allowed us in our greateſt Exigency "and Diſtreſs." In like manner Origen [e] ſpeaking of the Difference between greater and leſſer Sins, ſays, "The former had no "Place of Repentance allowed them but only once, or very ſeldom; whereas thoſe "common Sins we fall into almoſt every Day, "always admit of Repentance, and are redeemed immediately without Intermiſſion." There are ſeveral Canons in the Council of Eliberis to the ſame Purpoſe, That Relapſers ſhould not be admitted to Communion by the Benefit of a ſecond Repentance. One Canon [f] ſays, That if any Men commit Adultery after they have done Penance for Idolatry, they ſhall no more be admitted to Communion, that they may not ſeem to make a Jeſt of the LORD's Communion. Another [g] orders, that if any of the Faithful, who is under Penance for Adultery, commit Fornication in the Time of his Penance, he ſhall not have the Communion even at his laſt Hour. And a Third Canon [h] orders, That if a Man who has been under Penance for Adultery, and is admitted to Communion in Sickneſs, or Danger of imminent Death, ſhall after his Recovery commit Adultery again, he ſhall no more make a Jeſt of the Communion of Peace: That is, not have the Privilege of a ſecond Penance, to obtain a ſecond Reconciliation or Abſolution.

[q] Sozomen. Lib. 7. cap. 16.

NEITHER was this only the Diſcipline of the Three firſt Ages, but it continued to be the Practice for an Age or two after: For St. Ambroſe and St. Auſtin ſpeak of it as ſtill in Uſe in their Time. "They who think of "doing Penance often, ſays St. Ambroſe [i], "are deſervedly reproved, becauſe they grow "wanton againſt CHRIST: For if they did "Penance truly, they would not think it was "to be repeated; becauſe as there is but "one Baptiſm, ſo there is but one Penance, "that is performed in publick. There is indeed a daily Repentance for Sin, but that "is for leſſer Sins, and the other for greater." In like manner St. Auſtin [k] ſays, "It was "wiſely and uſefully ordered, that there ſhould "be no room for that publick and humbleſt "Sort of Penance in the Church; leſt it "ſhould make the Remedy of Sin contemptible, and ſo leſs uſeful to the Sinner." This was the Practice of the Roman Church alſo in the Time of Siricius; and Innocent and Leo, who commonly follow his Preſcriptions. The Decree of Siricius about this Matter runs in theſe Terms: "Foraſmuch as that they who after "Penance return like Dogs to their Vomit, "or Swine to their wallowing in the Mire, "cannot have [l] the Benefit of a ſecond "Penance, we decree, that they ſhall communicate

Yet for as much "as they fall by the Frailty of the Fleſh, we "would have them to be allowed their Viati-"cum at the laſt, and be aſſiſted with the "Grace of Communion, when they are go-"ing to the LORD." It appears alſo from the Canons of ſeveral Councils in the ſame Age, that ſuch Relapſers were either wholly caſt out of the Church, or at leaſt kept back from the Communion all their Days, without being admitted to the Benefit of any formal Penance to reſtore them: As may be ſeen in the Second Council of Arles [m], the Council of Vennes [n], the Firſt of Tours, [o], and the Firſt of Orleans [p], but more eſpecially the Third of Toledo, where notice is taken of the contrary Cuſtom beginning to creep into ſome of the Spaniſh Churches, and a ſtrict Order is made to correct it by reviving the ancient Diſcipline of the Church. "We "hear, ſay they [q], that in ſome of the "Spaniſh Churches Penance is not done ac-"cording to Canon, but after a very baſe "Faſhion, that as often as Men are pleaſed "to ſin, ſo often they require of the Preſ-"byters to be reconciled or abſolved: To "reſtrain which execrable Preſumption, the "holy Synod appoints, that Penance ſhall "be granted only according to the Form of "the ancient Canons: And if any, either "during the Time of their Penance, or af-"ter their Reconciliation, relapſe into their "old Vices, they ſhall be condemned ac-"cording to the Severity of former Canons." That is, they ſhall not have Liberty of repeating publick Penance toties quoties in the Church. They did not deny Men private Penance, either for leſſer Sins of daily Incurſion, or for Relapſes into greater Sins; but exhorted Men to repent in both Caſes, in hopes of obtaining Mercy and Pardon from GOD by a ſincere Contrition and the diligent Exerciſe of a private Repentance. No Confeſſion was taken by the Prieſt in either of theſe Caſes: For the firſt did not need it, and the ſecond was not allowed it; only at their laſt Hour Relapſers were admitted to the Communion and Peace of the Church, if they had exerciſed themſelves diligently in all the proper Acts of private Repentance.

SECT. 2. Some Sinners held under a ſtrict Penance all their Lives to the very Hour of Death.

2. AND this leads us to conſider another Inſtance of the great Strictneſs and Severity of the ancient Diſcipline, which was, that for ſome certain Sins Men were kept under the Exerciſe of publick Penance all their Lives, and only abſolved and reconciled at the Point of Death. The ordinary Courſe of Penance often held Men for Ten, Fifteen, or Twenty Years in going through the ſeveral Stages of Repentance: But for ſome more heinous and enormous Crimes no certain Term of Years was limited, but their Lives; and perfect Reconciliation and Abſolution was only granted them at their laſt Hour, when imminent Danger of Death was upon them. Thus the Council of Eliberis [r] orders, That if any one took upon him the Office of a Flamen, or Gentile Prieſt, though he did not offer Sacrifice, but only exhibit the uſual Games or Shews to the People, he ſhould do a ſevere and canonical Penance all his Life, and only be admitted to Communion at the point of Death. The like Order is given [s] about conſecrated Virgins, that if any of them committed Fornication, they ſhould do Penance all the Time of their Life, and only have the Communion at the Hour of Death. The Council of Neocæſarea [t] appoints the ſame for a Woman that marries two Brothers, that ſhe ſhall be caſt out of Communion unto Death; but at her laſt Hour, to ſhew Clemency toward her, if ſhe promiſe upon her Recovery to diſſolve the Marriage, ſhe ſhall have the Benefit of Repentance. The firſt Council of Arles [u] inflicts the ſame Puniſhment upon thoſe that falſely falsely accuse their Brethren, that they shall not communicate to the Hour of Death. The Council of Ancyra [w] decrees the like for such married Men as are guilty of Bestiality after they are Fifty Years old, that they shall not be received into Communion till the End of their Life. The Council of Valence [x] in France laid the same Penalty upon some that fell into Idolatry, That they should do Penance to the Hour of Death, yet not without Hopes of Remission, which they were to expect more fully from GOD, who was the Donor of it. The Council of Lerida [y] allows the inferior Clergy to do Penance for a first Offence, and regain their Office upon it: But if they return like Dogs to their Vomit, and as Swine to their wallowing in the Mire, they are not only to be deprived of their Office, but of the Communion to their last Hour. And so Felix the Third [z], Bishop of Rome, determined in the Case of those African Bishops, Presbyters and Deacons, who suffered themselves to be rebaptized by the Arians in the Vandalick Persecution: That they continue under Penance to the Day of their Death; and neither be present at the Prayers of the Faithful, nor the Catechumens, and only be admitted to Lay-Communion at the point of Death.

SECT. 3. Such as were absolved upon a Death-bed, were obliged to perform their ordinary Penance, if they recovered.

3. ANOTHER Instance of the Strictness and Severity of the ancient Discipline is visible in the Treatment of such Penitents as were reconciled upon a Death-bed. Though they were admitted to the Peace and Communion of the Church, when they were in extreme Necessity, and imminent Danger of Death, that they might have their Viaticum when they were about to leave the World: Yet if they chanced to recover, they were obliged to perform the whole Penance, more or less, whatever it was which they should have done, had not such an Exigency procured them an Absolution. And this is the only Case, in which the ancient Church ever allowed any Absolution to be granted before the Penance was duly and regularly performed. Which being an extraordinary Case, it is nothing to those who think to justify the same Practice now in ordinary Cases: But of this more hereafter. As to the present Observation, that Penitents absolved upon a Death-Bed were, upon their Recovery, reduced to the same State of Penance, which they were to be under, had not the Necessity of Sickness required their Absolution, is evident from the plain Testimony of several Councils. The Council of Nice [a] orders such upon their Recovery to be placed among those that communicated in Prayers only: That is, in the Fourth Rank of Penitents, called, Costanders, where they might stay to hear the Prayers of the Faithful, but not partake of the Oblation. The Fourth Council of Carthage has two Canons relating to them. The first says [b], if such a Penitent recover, he shall be subjected to the ordinary Laws of Penance, as long as the Priest who admitted him to Penance, shall judge convenient. The other [c], that Penitents, who in Time of Sickness receive the Viaticum of the Eucharist, shall not think themselves absolved, unless they undergo Imposition of Hands, if they chance to recover. That is, the Imposition of Hands which was given to Penitents of the Third Order, called Prostrators, who were obliged to present themselves every Day at Church, and kneel down before the Bishop, to receive the solemn Imposition of Hands with the usual penitential Prayers and Benediction. The first Council of Orange [d] more particularly explains the whole Matter in this Form: They who are about to leave the Body, when they are doing Penance, may communicate without the reconciliatory Imposition of Hands, which Sort of Communion is sufficient for the Consolation of a dying Person, according to the Decrees of the Fathers, who call this Kind of Communion their Viaticum. But if they survive, they shall stand in the Order of Penitents, that they may first shew forth the necessary Fruits of Repentance, and then be received to Communion in the ordinary and regular Way, by the reconciliatory Imposition of Hands. The Council of Epone [e] speaks much after the same manner: That

[e] Conc. Epaunens. can. 36. Ne ullus sine remedio aut spe veniæ ab Ecclesiâ repellatur; neve ulli, si aut pœnituerit,

That no one ſhould be repelled from or by the Church without Remedy, or Hopes of Pardon, nor the Door of returning to Pardon be ſhut againſt one that repents and corrects his Errors: And if any one be in imminent Danger of Death, the Time preſcribed for his Condemnation or Penance ſhall be relaxed. But if it happens, that the ſick Man recovers after he has received his Viaticum, he muſt obſerve and fulfil the Time of Penance that was appointed him. Gregory Nyſſen's Canon [f] is much to the ſame Purpoſe: If any one be in imminent Danger of Death, who has not gone through the whole Time appointed for his Penance; the Clemency of the Fathers in that Caſe has decreed, that he ſhall not take his long Journey (out of the World) without his Viaticum or Proviſion for it, nor without partaking of the holy Myſteries. But if after Participation he recover from his Sickneſs, he muſt then continue the Time appointed in that Order or Station of Penitents, in which he was when this Neceſſity and Danger came upon him. To all theſe may be added the Decree of the Roman Council under Felix III. An. 487. which renews [g] the Determination of the Nicene Fathers, That if any of thoſe who had been admitted to Communion before the fixed Time of their Penance was compleated, becauſe their Life was deſpaired of by the Phyſicians, and evident Signs of Death were upon them, ſhould happen afterwards to recover, they ſhould at leaſt continue in the Fourth Rank of Penitents, among thoſe that communicated only in Prayers without the Oblation, till the full Term of their Penance was ended.

SECT. 4. Some Sinners denied Communion at their laſt Hour.

BUT ſome Sinners were yet more ſeverely handled: For they were denied Communion to the very laſt, and ſuffered to go out of the World without any manner of Reconciliation. This Diſcipline was generally uſed at firſt towards the Three great Sins of Idolatry, Adultery and Murder, which as learned Men agree [i] continued almoſt to the Time of Cyprian. Cyprian himſelf aſſures us [k], that many of his Predeceſſors abſolutely refuſed to admit Adulterers to Communion at their very laſt Hour. And though this Rigour was abated by general Agreement toward Penitents in his Time, yet they ſtill continued to deny Communion to the very laſt to ſuch Apoſtates, as perſiſted obſtinate and impenitent all their Lives, and only deſired Reconciliation when the Pangs of Death were upon them. They, ſays he, who do no Penance, nor ever teſtify any Sorrow for their Sin from their Heart by manifeſt Profeſſions of Lamentation, though they begin to deprecate and ſue for Pardon when Infirmity and Danger of Death is upon them, ſuch we think fit abſolutely to debar from all Hopes of Communion and Peace: Becauſe it is not Repentance for their Sins, but only the Apprehenſion and Terror of approaching Death that compels them to ask Pardon: And he is not worthy to receive Conſolation at his Death, who would not beforehand conſider that he muſt ſhortly die. We find this Rule concerning Apoſtates ſome Time after renewed by the Firſt Council of Arles, where a Decree was paſſed, that ſuch Apoſtates [m] as never preſented themſelves to the Church, nor ſought to do any manner of Penance, but at laſt when they were ſeized with an Infirmity, deſired to have the Communion, ſhould in that Caſe be debarred from it, unleſs they recovered, and brought forth Fruits worthy of Repentance. And Innocent Biſhop of Rome [n] plainly ſays, this was the primitive Cuſtom for the Three Firſt Ages of Perſecution: If any one after Baptiſm ſpent his whole Life in Intemperance and Pleaſure, and

and in the End of his Days desired Penance and the Reconciliation of Communion, they only admitted him to Penance, but absolutely denied him Communion. For in those Days Persecutions being very frequent, lest the Easiness of obtaining Communion should make Men secure of Reconciliation, and retard their returning from Sin, Communion was justly denied them, and only Penance allowed them, that they might not be deprived of the Whole: The Consideration of the Times made their Remission or Reconciliation more difficult to be obtained: But after the LORD had granted Peace to his Church, and the Terror of Persecution was over, then it seemed good to the Church to receive all such to Communion, when they were going out of the World, and for the Mercy of the LORD to grant it to them as their Viaticum or Provision for their Journey, lest we should seem to follow the Asperity and Hardness of Novatian the Heretick, who denied Men Pardon for greater Sins committed after Baptism. The Canons of the Council of Eliberis do abundantly confirm this Observation made by Pope Innocent upon the preceding Ages of Persecution. For there are at least Twenty Canons in that Council, which deny Communion to the very last to several Sorts of Sinners, whose Crimes were either doubled and tripled, or single Crimes of a more flagrant Scandal and heinous Provocation. Thus the first Canon determines [o] in the Case of voluntary Idolaters and Apostates, who without any Compulsion went of their own accord to the Temple, and offered Sacrifice: This being a more heinous and capital Offence, than bare sacrificing by the Violence and Force of Torture, it is ordered, that such Apostates shall not have the Communion even at their last Hour. The next Canon [p] inflicts the same Punishment upon such Idolaters as are guilty of a Complication of Crimes: As when a Christian takes upon him the Office of a Flamen, or Heathen High-Priest, and therein adds to his Idolatry either Adultery or Murder. So if a Man kills another by Sorcery; because there is Idolatry joined with Murder, he is not to have the Communion [q] even at the Hour of Death. If a Man whilst he is doing Penance for Idolatry or Adultery, relapses into the same [r], or any other great Crime, this Repetition of his Crime in such a Case debars him from Communion at his last Hour. Another Canon [s] orders the like Severity to be used towards Women, who without Cause forsake their own Husbands, and are married to other Men. And the same is determined in Case a Woman [t] is married to a Man, whom she knows to have unlawfully divorced himself from a former Wife: Both these Sorts are denied Communion to the very last. Another Canon [u] subjects all Panders and Promoters of Uncleanness to the same Penalty, whether it be a Father or Mother, or any other Christian that exercises this abominable Trade: Because they sell the Bodies of others, or rather their own, they are not to have Communion even at their last Hour. The same is determined [x] in the Case of a Virgin dedicated to GOD: If she commits Fornication, and continues in her Uncleanness without reflecting upon what she has done, there is no Absolution for her in her last Minutes. As neither for the Man [y] that marries his Daughter to any Idol-Priest. Nor for any Bishop, Presbyter, or Deacon, that commits Adultery [z] whilst he is actually in the Ministry, both because of the Scandal, and also the Wickedness and Prophaneness of the Crime itself. So if a Woman commits Adultery in her Husband's Absence, and murders her Infant [a], she is not to have Communion at the very last, because she doubles her Crime. In like manner a Woman is to be treated [b], that lives in Adultery all her Life with another Man. And also any Clergyman [c], that knows his Wife to be guilty of Adultery, and does not immediately put her away; lest they, who ought to be Examples of good Conversation to others, should ſhould ſeem to teach others the Way to ſin. The ſame Puniſhment [d] is awarded to any one that commits Inceſt by marrying his Wives Daughter by a former Husband. And to ſuch as are conſcious [e] and conſenting to their Wives Adultery. And to all that commit Sodomy [f] with Boys; and to Women who commit Adultery with any Man, and afterwards marry [g] another Husband and not the Man who defiled them. If any one turn Informer againſt his Brethren, ſo that they ſuffer [h] Baniſhment, Confiſcation, or Death by his Information, he is not to have Communion at his laſt Hour. If any one accuſe a Biſhop, Presbyter, or Deacon of falſe Crimes [i], and do not make out what he alledges againſt them, he alſo is to be denied Communion to the very laſt. I have repreſented theſe Things at large, both to evidence the Thing now aſſerted, and alſo to ſhew what Sort of heinous Crimes thoſe were, for which this great Severity of Diſcipline was uſed toward Men at their laſt Hour. Some learned Perſons are offended at this Council for its extreme Severity and Rigour. Auxilius [k] heretofore brought the Charge of Novatianiſm againſt Hoſius and the Council together. And Suicerus [l] aſſerts, that the Orthodox Church always taught, that Lapſers were to be received into Communion upon their Repentance. Which in Effect is to bring the Charge of Novatianiſm againſt this Council, and to make it no Part of the Orthodox Church. But then the Difficulty will be how to clear Cyprian and the Council of Arles from the ſame Charge of Novatianiſm. For it is plain they were in the ſame Sentiments as to what concerned Apoſtates, who neglected Penance to the Hour of Death: And not only they, but the great Council of Sardica, which reſtored Athanaſius, will be involved in the ſame Condemnation. For there is a Canon in that Council, which is as peremptory in this Matter as any in the Council of Eliberis. The Canon [m] orders, that if any Biſhop out of Ambition or Covetouſneſs procure himſelf to be removed from a leſſer City to a greater, without the Approbation of a Synod, he ſhall not be admitted even to Lay-Communion at his laſt Hour. So that if this was Novatianiſm, there is no Apology to be made for this Council, no more than for that of Eliberis; the Decrees of both Councils being the very ſame, and of equal Severity toward extraordinary Offenders. The Novatians indeed ſometimes laid hold of this Practice in the Church, as an Handle to juſtify their own unwarrantable Proceedings againſt all great Sins committed after Baptiſm: They ſaid, they only treated the Laity, as the Catholicks did the Clergy, whom for ſeveral Crimes they debarred from all Communion to the very laſt. For ſo Socrates [m] tells us, Aſclepiades the Novatian Biſhop argued with Atticus Biſhop of Conſtantinople: When Atticus acknowledged, that Communion might reaſonably be denied even at the Point of Death to ſuch as ſacrificed to Idols, and that he himſelf had ſometimes done ſo; Aſclepiades replied, there are many other Sins unto Death, as the Scripture calls them, beſides ſacrificing to Idols, for which ye ſhut the Clergy out of the Church, and we the Laity, remitting them over to GOD alone for their Pardon.

SECT. 5. How this may be vindicated and cleared from the Charge of Novatianiſm.

BUT this was only a ſophiſtical Argument and falſe Apology for the Novatian Schiſm; which though it has impoſed upon many Learned Men, and driven them to ſtrange Difficulties in explaining many of the ancient Canons, and obliged them to put a forced and unnatural Senſe upon plain Words, for fear they ſhould ſeem to encourage the ſame Error as Novatian held: Yet the Fallacy will eaſily be diſcerned by a right ſtating the Matter, and ſetting Things in a proper Light before the Reader. The Queſtion between the Church and the Novatians was not, whether Communion at the Hour of Death might be denied to ſome Sort of Sinners: For in this they both agreed, and the Practice of the Church in many Caſes was no leſs ſevere toward ſome great and flagrant Crimes, or a Complication of Crimes, than was that of the Novatians, as evidently appears from what has been already diſcourſed. But the Queſtion was about the Miniſterial Power of Abſolution, or admitting penitent Sinners to the Peace and Communion of the Church again, after they had lapſed or fallen into any great Sin after Baptiſm. The Novatians ſtifly maintained, that the Church had no ſuch Miniſterial Power of the Keys committed to her; but that all ſuch Sinners were for ever to be excluded and kept out of her Communion; and that if ſhe admitted any of them again, her Communion was polluted and prophaned by their Contagion: And upon this Principle they made a Separation from the Church, as infected by the Communion of Sinners. The Church on the other Hand aſſerted her own juſt Right and Power, that by the Commiſſion of the Keys from CHRIST, ſhe had Power to looſe as well as bind; to receive Penitents into the Church upon their Reformation, as well as caſt caſt out flagitious Men for their notorious Tranſgreſſions: And though in ſome extraordinary Caſes, either where the Crimes were very heinous and numerous, or where for Want of Time ſhe could not have ſufficient Evidence of Men's Repentance, when they continued in their Apoſtaſie and Impenitency till they were threatned by Death, ſhe ſometimes ſuffered ſuch Men to go out of the World without Reconciliation and Communion; yet ſhe did not this for Want of Power to receive Sinners into her Communion, but becauſe ſhe judged it more proper to let her Cenſures continue upon ſuch to the very laſt, to be an Example and Terror to others. So that though the Practice of the Church and the Novatians was in ſome Caſes the ſame, yet their Principles were very different, and vaſtly wide of one another. The Novatians wholly denied this Power to the Church, and made a Schiſm upon it: The Church maintained her own juſt Power, and uſed it with Diſcretion, ſometimes one way, and ſometimes another, as ſhe judged moſt expedient in her own Wiſdom for the Benefit and Edification of Sinners, without dividing Communion upon this Point among the Governors of the Church, whatever Way they thought fit to practiſe. This is what Cyprian obſerves chiefly againſt Novatian [o] in the Caſe of admitting, and not admitting Adulterers to Communion. Some of our Predeceſſors, ſays he, in this Province, were of Opinion, that Peace was not to be granted to Adulterers, and therefore they wholly ſhut the Door of Repentance againſt Adultery; yet they did not depart from the College of their Fellow-Biſhops upon this Account, or break the Unity of the Catholick Church by any obſtinate Stiffneſs in their Cenſure; ſo as that becauſe Peace was granted by others to Adulterers, therefore they who would not grant it, ſhould make a Separation from the Church. But the Bond of Concord remaining entire, and the myſtical Unity of the Catholick Church continuing undivided, every Biſhop managed and directed his own Acts of Diſcipline as he thought proper, being to give an Account of his Reſolutions and Management to the LORD. It appears from hence, that the Diſpute between the Church and the Novatians was not barely about Practice, but about Principles and the Power of the Church, in the Uſe and Management of the Keys of Diſcipline: And therefore though the Church ſometimes did the ſame Thing that the Novatians did, in refuſing Communion to ſome Sinners even at the Point of Death, yet ſhe was no ways chargeable with Novatianiſm, becauſe ſhe acted upon different Views and Principles, and only made uſe of her juſt Power in a diſcretionary Way, to extend or contract her Cenſures, as ſhe judged moſt expedient for the Benefit and Edification of the whole Community, or any particular Member of it. And thus, I find, many learned Men, ſuch as Albaſpinæus [p] Biſhop Beveridge [q], and the Cardinal Bona [r], have accounted for this ſeeming Difficulty of the Church's Practice, which has ſo tortured the Wits of other Men for Want of Underſtanding, wherein the true Nature of the Novatian Hereſy conſiſted: Some fancying, that the Fathers in and before the Council of Eliberis were downright Novatians; others, that they allowed Men Reconciliation, and Peace, and Abſolution, but only denied them the Communion of the Euchariſt at their laſt Hour: Whereas nothing can be plainer, than that they denied them not only the Communion, as it denotes the Euchariſt, but all manner of Miniſterial Reconciliation, Pardon, Abſolution, and Re-admiſſion into the Society of the Faithful.

SECT. 6. This Rigour abated in after Ages without any Reflexion on the preceding Practice.

THIS Rigour indeed was abated in the Practice of the following Ages, but without the leaſt Reflection on thoſe that went before them: Becauſe they were ſenſible, it was at the Church's Liberty to order this Part of Diſcipline according to her own Prudence, and act as the Circumſtances of Times and the State of Affairs required; judging the Times of Peace to be different from Times of Perſecution, and that ſome Abatement was to be made in this Matter, when all the World was become Chriſtian. The later Councils therefore are not ſo ſtiff in the requiring the Execution of the ancient Canons in this particular, but allow every Penitent Communion at their laſt Hour, though they would not undertake to aſſure them what Effect an Abſolution in ſuch Extremity ſhould have before GOD. The Canons are very numerous upon this Head: It will be ſufficient to mention one or two as a Specimen of all the reſt. The Council of Agde [s] ſpeaks in general Terms without Exception: No Penitents are to be denied their Viaticum, or Proviſion for their Journey, at the Point of Death. The firſt Council of Orange as univerſally, making no Diſtinction: Whoever Whoever [t] accept of Penance, when they depart from the Body, let them be received to Communion; but without the ſolemn Impoſition of Hands, which is only to be given them, if they recover, upon performing their juſt Penance in the Church. The Fourth Council of Carthage [u] orders, that they ſhall have both the ſolemn Impoſition of Hands, and the Euchariſt alſo, even though they had loſt their Senſes, or were ſtruck dumb with their Diſeaſe, if any about them could teſtify that they deſired Penance in their Sickneſs. And this was agreeable to the Rule made in the great Council of Nice [x], that no one at the Point of Death ſhould be deprived of his final and moſt neceſſary Viaticum, the Euchariſt or Oblation, as it is explained in the Cloſe of the Canon, where the Biſhop is made Judge of his Repentance. Upon this Ground Syneſius [y] ſays, he never let any one go out of the World bound with the Bonds of Anathema, if they deſired Abſolution: Only if they recovered, he reſerved them to the Diſpoſition of his Metropolitan of Alexandria. And this confirms the Remark made in general by Pope Innocent [z] upon the different Practices of the Church in Times of Perſecution and Times of Peace. The former Obſervation was more ſevere, the latter more indulgent. In ancient Times many Sinners were denied Communion at the Hour of Death: But in his Time they granted Penance to all, and admitted them to Communion upon a Death-bed Repentance. Only they did not think this ſo ſafe, as the Performance of a regular Penance in their Life-Time: And therefore they would not pronounce any Thing confidently of their Condition. There goes an ancient Homily under the Name of St. Auſtin, and it is alſo attributed to St. Ambroſe, where this Matter is thus delivered: If a Man repents at his laſt Hour, and is reconciled, and ſo dies, I am not [a] ſecure that this Man goes hence ſecurely: I can admit him to Penance, but I can give him no Security. Do I ſay, he ſhall be damned? I do not ſay it; but neither do I ſay he ſhall be ſaved. What then do I ſay? I know not, I preſume not, I promiſe not. For I know not the Will of GOD. Would you free yourſelf from all Doubt, and avoid that which is uncertain? Repent whilſt you are in Health, and you will be ſecure when your laſt Day finds you: Becauſe you repent in a Time when you had Power to ſin: But if you then only begin to repent, when you can ſin no longer, it is not ſo much you that forſake your Sins, as your Sins forſake you. By all this it plainly appears, that the Church uſed a Liberty of Diſcretion in treating Sinners of the firſt Rank, either with Severity or Tenderneſs, as ſhe judged expedient for the Ends of Diſcipline, or the Benefit and Edification of the Sinner.

SECT. 7. What Liberty was allowed to Biſhops in impoſing Penance, and exacting proper Satisfaction of Sinners. Some Sinners allowed to do Penance twice.

INDEED we may obſerve, that a great Latitude and Liberty was allowed to Biſhops, who were the prime Miniſters of Diſcipline, to render it more rigorous or eaſy, as they thought fit to regulate the Exerciſe of it in their own Diſcretion. For though it was neceſſary in general for Sinners to demonſtrate their Repentance to the Church, in order to give her Satisfaction, and gain themſelves Re-admiſſion; yet the Method of doing this was not ſo preciſely preſcribed, but that Biſhops had Power to add too, or abate ſomething in the Meaſures of it. Therefore though the general Cuſtom was to allow Sinners to do publick Penance but once in the Church, yet there are ſome Inſtances, in the moſt ſtrict and primitive Ages, of Sinners being admitted twice to this Privilege. For Irenæus [b] ſays, Cerdon the Heretick more than once made Confeſſion of his Hereſy. Which we are to underſtand of his doing Penance twice for his Errors by making a publick Recantation of them. Tertullian ſays the ſame of Valentinus and Marcion, that they were [c] once and again caſt out of the Church for their turbulent Curioſity in corrupting the Brethren, before they broke out into their laſt laſt Diſſenſion, when they ſcattered the Poiſon of their Doctrines among the People. And yet after that Marcion did Penance, and was to have been received into the Communion of the Church again, upon Condition that he ſhould bring back thoſe whom he had led into Perdition; which he intended to do, but Death prevented him. 'Tis noted alſo by Socrates [d] concerning St. Chryſoſtom, that though a Synod of Biſhops had decreed, that Lapſers ſhould only be admitted once to do publick Penance, yet in his Homilies he was uſed to tell Men, they ſhould do it a Thouſand Times, if Occaſion required, and be received to Communion. Which bold Doctrine diſpleaſed many of his Friends, and Siſinnius the Novatian Biſhop wrote a Book againſt it. After this a Council was held at Conſtantinople, An. 426 or 427, under another Siſinnius the Catholick Biſhop, one of St. Chryſoſtom's Succeſſors, againſt the Maſſalian Hereticks, wherein it was decreed, that becauſe they had often relapſed after doing Penance, they ſhould be admitted to do Penance no more, though they made never ſo many ſolemn Profeſſions of repenting. The Synodical Epiſtle is recorded in Photius [e], from whence we learn, that Relapſers at this Time were allowed to do Penance again, though the Council thought fit to deny the Maſſalian Hereticks the Priviledge any longer, becauſe they had ſo often abuſed it.

SECT. 8. Biſhops had alſo Power to moderate the Term of Penance upon juſt Occaſion.

ANOTHER Inſtance of the Power of Biſhops in this Matter, was the Liberty which the Canons themſelves granted them to moderate the Term of Penance, and ſhorten it, if they obſerved any extraordinary Degree of Zeal and Sedulity in any Penitents, that might deſerve their Indulgence and Commiſeration. The Council of Nice determining the Term of Penance for ſuch as fell into Idolatry [f], ſays, they ſhall be Three Years Hearers, and Ten Years Proſtrators, before they were admitted to communicate in Prayers with the People: But if any were more than ordinarily diligent in expreſſing their Concern and Tears, and bringing forth good Works, the true Fruits of Repentance, it ſhould be in the Biſhop's Power to deal more gently and mildly with them, ἀνθρωπότερόν τι περὶ αὐτῆς βεβουλευσάσθω, and bring them to communicate in Prayers ſooner. The like Order is given by the Council of Ancyra [g], that Biſhops ſhall have Power, upon Examination and Trial of the Penitents Manner of Behaviour and Converſion, either to ſhew them Favour by ſhortening the Time of Penance, or otherwiſe to add to it at his Diſcretion, ἢ φιλανθρωπεύεσθαι, ἢ πλείονα προσιθέναι χρόνον. So St. Baſil [h] ſays, he that has the Power of binding and looſing, may leſſen the Time of Penance to a Penitent that ſhews great Contrition. And Chryſoſtom in anſwer to ſome who complained of the length of Penance, that it continued a Year, or two, or three, ſays, I require not the Continuance of Time [i] but the Correction of the Soul. Demonſtrate your Contrition, demonſtrate your Reformation, and all is done. The Council of Lerida very expreſsly: Let it remain [k] in the Power of the Biſhop either to ſhorten the Suſpenſion of the truly contrite, or to ſegregate the negligent a longer Time from the Body of the Church. And the great Council of Chalcedon [l] leaves it entirely in the Hands of every Biſhop in his reſpective Church, to ſhew Favour to ſuch Penitents at his own Diſcretion.

SECT. 9. And this was the true ancient Notion of an Indulgence.

AND this is what ſome of the Ancients call an Indulgence; which was not heretofore any pretended Power of delivering Souls from the Pains of Purgatory, by Virtue of a Stock of Merits, or Works of Supererogation, which they of the Church of Rome call now the Church's Treaſure, of which the Pope is become the ſole Diſpenſer: But anciently an Indulgence was no more than this Power which every Biſhop had, of moderating the Canonical Puniſhments, which in a Courſe of Penance were inflicted upon Sinners, ſo that if the Biſhop ſaw any one to be a zealous and earneſt Penitent, he had Liberty to ſhorten the Time of his Penance, that is, grant him a Relaxation of ſome of his penitential Exerciſes, and admit him ſooner than others to Communion. This was the true ancient Notion of an Indulgence. And that it was ſo, we may learn from one of the Epiſtles of Pope Vigilius, who writing to a certain Biſhop concerning cerning ſome Perſons who were under Penance for ſuffering themſelves to be re-baptized by the Arians, he tells him [m], that it was left to his own Judgment, and the Judgment of other Biſhops in their reſpective Dioceſes, if they approved the Quality and Devotion of any Penitents, to grant them the Benefit of an Indulgence, that is, a Relaxation of their penitential Exerciſes, or a ſpeedier Admiſſion to Communion.

SECT. 10. Which was ſometimes granted at the Interceſſion of the Martyrs, or the Inſtance of the Civil Magiſtrate.

AND this was ſometimes granted at the Interceſſion of the Martyrs in Priſon, of which there are ſeveral Examples in Cyprian; and ſometimes at the Inſtance of the Civil Magiſtrate. For St. Auſtin tells us [n], that as Biſhops were uſed to intercede for Criminals in the Civil Courts, ſo the Magiſtrates ſometimes interceded for Penitents in the Eccleſiaſtical. And he uſes this as an Argument to a certain Magiſtrate to induce him to ſhew Mercy to an Offender. If you have Liberty to intercede with us for the Mitigation of an Eccleſiaſtical Cenſure, why may not the Biſhop intercede againſt your Sword, when our Sword is only drawn to make the Man live better, but yours that he may not live at all? This Sort of Indulgences therefore had no Reſpect to the Puniſhments of the next World, but only to the Mitigation of Eccleſiaſtical Puniſhment in this: Which is ingenuouſly acknowledged by Caſſander [o] and ſeveral other learned Romaniſts, ſome of which have undergone the Cenſures of the Roman Inquiſitors for their over liberal Conceſſions. Particularly Polydore Virgil is put into the Index Expurgatorius [p] for ſaying that the Uſe of Indulgences is no older than the Time of Gregory the Great: And Franciſcus Polygranus [q] for aſſerting, that every Biſhop of Divine Right has Power to grant Indulgences; with ſome Aſſertions of the like Nature; which agree very well with the true ancient Notion of an Indulgence, as it has been now explained; but will not comport with the Pope's ſole Claim and Pretence to this Power, or any other Innovations in the Modern Practice. But this only by the way: I now return to the ancient Church.

SECT. 11. Biſhops had alſo Power to alter the Nature of the Penalty in ſome meaſure, as well as the Term of it.

WHERE we may obſerve farther, that Biſhops had Power to grant Indulgence not only by contracting the Term of Penance, but alſo in ſome Meaſure by altering or leſſening the Nature and Quality of the Puniſhment itſelf. Of which we have a plain Evidence in the Council of Ancyra [r], where in the Caſe of Deacons who lapſed into Idolatry, and afterwards recovering ſtood firm in a Second Engagement, it is ordered, that they may retain the Honour of Deacons, but not any part of their Sacred Service, either in miniſtering the Bread or the Cup, or in performing the Office of the publick Directors in the Church: Yet the Biſhops ſhould have Power, if they found them very diligent, humble, and meek, to grant them more or leſs of their Office, as they judged convenient. Which ſhews, that a great deal in this whole Matter was left to the Biſhop's Diſcretion, to make the Exerciſe of Penance more or leſs ſevere, as well in the Degrees of Puniſhment, as in Point of Time, according to the Diſpoſition and Behaviour of the repenting Sinner.

SECT. 12. What the Ancients mean by the Term Legitima Pœnitentia.

AND this explains to us a Term or Phraſe, which often occurs in the Writings of the Ancients, eſpecially in Cyprian [s] and the Council of Eliberis [t], and where they require that Penitents ſhould perform Pœnitentiam legitimam, plenam, & juſtam, a legal, full, and juſt Penance. Some underſtand by this, that they ſhould fulfill the whole Term or Time of Penance preſcribed by the Canons; others, that they ſhould not only fulfill the Time, but regularly go through all the ſeveral Degrees of Penance, as Mourners, Hearers, Proſtrators, and Co-ſtanders, before they were received to Communion. But neither of theſe hit the true Meaning of this ancient Phraſe, which reſpects neither the Time of Penance, nor the Orders of Penitents, SECT. 13. What meant by the Phraſe inter Hyemantes orare.

THERE is one Phraſe more occurring in ſome of the ancient Canons, which may need a little Explication in this Place, becauſe it relates to the Severity of the ancient Diſcipline, which we are now conſidering. The Council of Ancyra ſpeaking of thoſe who commit Uncleanneſs with Beaſts [x], or draw others into the ſame Sin (being ſpiritual Lepers, and infecting others with their Contagion) ſays, they ſhall pray with the χειμαζόμενοι, or Hyemantes; which denotes ſome extraordinary Puniſhment, but of what Sort is not very eaſy to determine, becauſe learned Men are not well agreed, what the Word χειμαζόμενοι, properly means. The old Tranſlators of the Greek Canons commonly underſtand it of Energumens or Demoniacks, ſuch as were vexed with unclean Spirits, and as it were toſſed by them in a Tempeſt. Dionyſius Exiguus renders it, Qui Spiritu periclitantur immundo, vexed with an unclean Spirit: The other Tranſlation of Iſidorus Mercator has it, Qui Tempeſtate jactantur, qui à nobis Energumeni intelliguntur: Thoſe that are toſſed in a Tempeſt, by whom we underſtand Energumens. And Martin Bracarenſis in his Collection of the Greek Canons [y] renders it Dæmonioſos, Demoniacks. And that which gives ſome Probability to this Interpretation is, that the Word χειμαζόμενοι is ſo uſed and expounded by many Greek Writers. In the Prayer for the whole State of the Church, and all Orders in it, related by the Author of the Conſtitutions [z], there is one Petition, Ὑπὲρ τῶν χειμαζομένων ὑπὸ τῆς ἀλλοτρίας, for thoſe who are toſſed by the Enemy, that is, Energumens vexed with the evil Spirit. And ſo Cyril [a] of Alexandria uſes the ſame Phraſe for thoſe that were poſſeſſed with a wicked Spirit. As alſo the ancient Commentators, Maximus [b] upon Dionyſius, and Alexius Ariſtinus upon the Canons [c], and the Modern Greeks in their Euchologium [d] where there is a Prayer for the χειμαζόμενοι ὑπὸ πνευμάτων ἀκαθάρτων, for thoſe that are toſſed or tormented with unclean Spirits. Upon the Credit of which Authorities Biſhop Beveridge concludes [e], that praying among the χειμαζόμενοι or Hyemantes in the Council of Ancyra, denotes the Penitents praying among the Energumens, or thoſe that were vexed with unclean Spirits. And ſo Oſiander in his Notes upon the Council of Ancyra [f], and Mr. Dodwell [g], in his Obſervations upon Cyprian, who thinks the Word Clidomeni, in one of Cyprian's Epiſtles, is but a Corruption from Clydonizomeni, κλυδωνιζόμενοι, which is of the ſame Import and Signification with χειμαζόμενοι, denoting what the Latins call Maniaci and Lymphatici, Perſons poſſeſſed by an evil Spirit, as he ſhews out of ſome Paſſages of Amphilochius [h] and St. Chryſoſtom, which ſupport his Conjecture. Other Learned Men think the χειμαζόμενοι, or Hyemantes, were ſuch Penitents, as for the monſtrous Greatneſs of their Crimes were not only expelled out of the Communion of the Church, but caſt out of the very Atrium or Courts and Porch of the Church, and put to do Penance in the open Air, where they ſtood expoſed to the Inclemency of all Weathers whatſoever. This Opinion is embraced and defended by Albaſpinæus [i], Cardinal Bona [k], and Suicerus [l]. And there is a Paſſage in Tertullian, which makes this Explication look very natural. For ſpeaking of the ancient Diſcipline, and diſtinguiſhing the Degrees and Malignity of heinous Offences, he ſays, there were ſome impious [m] Furies of Luſt, ſo far tranſgreſſing all the Laws of Nature, both with reſpect to Bodies and Sex, that they did not only expel them from the Doors of the Church, but from any covered Place belonging to it, as being Monſters rather than common Vices.

Either of these Opinions, as having each their Reasons and Probability to support them, may be admitted. But the Opinion of Balzamon here is little worth, who makes the Hyemantes to be no more than the Second Class of Penitents called Hearers: This does by no means shew any special Severity against such enormous Sins, assigning them only a common Punishment with the rest. But if we suppose those who were guilty of them, either to be ranked among Demoniacks, or wholly to be kept out of the Church, we have some proper Idea of the Church's Severity against them; for which Reason I have purposely mentioned it in this Place, where we have been discoursing of the Strictness and Severity of the ancient Discipline, which is the last Thing considerable in the Exercise of it, whilst Men were under the Bonds and Fetters of Excommunication. The next Thing is to see how they were loosed from these Bonds, when their Penance was completed. And this brings us to the Business of Absolution, or the Method of re-admitting Penitents into the Communion of the Church again; which must be the Subject of the next Book.

THE ANTIQUITIES OF THE CHRISTIAN CHURCH.

BOOK XIX.

Of Abſolution, or the Manner of re-admitting PENITENTS into the Communion of the CHURCH again.

CHAP. I.

Of the Nature of Abſolution, and the ſeveral Sorts of it; more particularly of ſuch as relate to the Penitential Diſcipline of the Church.

SECT. 1. All Church-Abſolution only miniſterial, not abſolute.

HAVING hitherto ſeen the Exerciſe of Penitential Diſcipline in all the ſeveral Parts of it, as it related to Sinners under the Bonds of Excommunication, we are now to conſider it under another View, as it denotes their Abſolution from thoſe Bonds by the Power of the Keys, and the Method of reſtoring or re-admitting Penitens, when their Penance was compleated, to the Communion of the Church again. And here firſt of all we are to obſerve, that the Ancients challenged no Power in this Matter, but that which was purely miniſterial; leaving the abſolute, ſovereign, independent, and irreverſible Power only to GOD. Of which I need give no other Proof at preſent but only this, That they conſtantly made it an Argument for our SAVIOUR's Divinity, that he had the Sovereign Power of forgiving Sins: Which Argument could have ſignified nothing, had Men been equal Sharers in this Power with him. Thus Irenæus argues againſt ſome of the Hereticks in his own Time: "Our

"SAVIOUR,

"SAVIOUR, says [a] he, in forgiving Sins "both cured the Man, and manifestly declared who he himself was. For if none "can forgive Sins but GOD alone, and our "LORD did forgive them, and cure Men; "it is manifest, that he was the WORD of "GOD, made the Son of Man: And as "he was Man, he suffered with us and for "us; as he is GOD, he shews Mercy to us, "and forgives us our Debts, which we owe "to GOD our Maker." The same Argument is urged by Tertullian in his Books against Marcion [b]; and by Novatian [c] against the Ebionites; and Athanasius [d] against the Arians; St. Basil [e] also uses it, as one of his strongest Weapons against Eunomius; and the like is done by St. Hilary [f], and St. Chrysostom [g], and St. Jerom [h], and Victor of Antioch [i], and Cyril of Alexandria [k], who all argue for our SAVIOUR's Divinity from this Topick, That he had sovereign and absolute Power upon Earth to forgive Sins. And St. Ambrose uses the same Argument against the Macedonians [l], to prove the Divinity of the HOLY GHOST. I produce none of these Testimonies at large here, both because they all speak the same Thing, and are already produced in an excellent Book of Bishop Usher's [m], which is common in every Reader's Hands: Where he also shews farther the general Agreement of the Ancients in this Assertion, That none can forgive Sins but GOD only, that is, with an absolute and sovereign Power: And therefore the Power of Absolution in the Church is purely ministerial, and consists in the due Exercise and Application of those Means, in the ordinary Use of which GOD is pleased to remit Sins; using the Ministry of his Servants, as Stewards of his Mysteries, in the External Dispensation of them; but himself conferring the Internal Grace or Gift of Remission by the Operation of his Spirit only upon the worthy Receivers. These Mysteries or Means of Grace, in the External Dispensation of which the Church is concerned, and in the ordinary Use of them Remission of Sins is conveyed, are usually by the Ancients reckoned up under these Five Heads: 1. The Absolution or great Indulgence of Baptism. 2. The Absolution of the Eucharist. 3. The Absolution of the Word and Doctrine. 4. The Absolution of Imposition of Hands and Prayer. 5. The Absolution of Reconcilement to the Church and her Communion by a Relaxation of her Censures. The two first may be called sacramental Absolution; the third declaratory Absolution; the fourth precatory Absolution; the fifth judicial Absolution: And all of them authoritative, so far as they are done by the Ministerial Authority and Commission which CHRIST has given to his Church, to reconcile Men to GOD by the Exercise of such Acts and Means, as conduce to that End in a subordinate and ministerial Way according to his Appointment.

SECT. 2. Of the grand Absolution of Baptism. That this was of no Use in Penitential Discipline to Persons once baptized.

BUT then all these Sorts of Absolution were not reckoned of equal Concern in Penitential Discipline. For though Baptism was always esteemed the most universal Absolution, and grand Indulgence in the Ministry of the Church; as conveying a general Pardon of Sin to every true Member of CHRIST, when he first entred into his Mystical Body by the Laver of Regeneration; yet this had no place in the Exercise of Penitential Discipline. For no Penitent was ever reconciled to the Communion of the Church (after any Lapse, or Censure, or Penance done for it) by a Second Baptism. And yet the Stewards of CHRIST's Mysteries were always supposed to have the Ministerial Power of conveying Remission of Sins to Men, by the Administration of Baptism; and so far as they were entrusted with the Administration of it, so far they had Power to bind or loose; to admit the Worthy into the Church, or keep the Unworthy out of it; that is, in the Ministerial Way, to remit Mens Sins by admitting them to Baptism, or retain their Sins by keeping them from it, according to the Rules of CHRIST's Institution and Appointment. The Ancients upon this Account commonly give Baptism the Name of Indulgence, or Remission of Sins, or the Sacrament of Remission, as I have had occasion to shew out of the Council of Carthage [n] under Cyprian, and one of the Roman Councils mentioned by Cotelerius [o], and St. Austin [p], in a former Book [q], where we treat more expressly of Baptism. It is also observable, that the Ancients commonly deduce this Ministerial Power of of remitting Sins in Baptiſm from the ſame Text, upon which the Power of all other Abſolutions is founded, viz. Joh. xx. 23. Whoſeſoever Sins ye remit, they are remitted unto them; and whoſeſoever Sins ye retain, they are retained. They ſay, this Commiſſion is executed by the Miniſters of CHRIST, as well in conferring Baptiſm, as in reconciling of Penitents, or any other Way of Miniſterial Abſolution. Cyprian argues upon this Foot againſt the Baptiſm of Hereticks and Schiſmaticks, that Baptiſm given by them is of no Benefit to the Receiver, becauſe they are not of the Number of thoſe to whom CHRIST gave Commiſſion to remit Sins, as not being endued with the HOLY SPIRIT. "Seeing, ſays he [r], that Remiſſion of Sins is granted to every Man in "Baptiſm, the LORD in his Goſpel declares "and proves, that Sins can only be remitted "by them who have the HOLY SPIRIT. "For after his Reſurrection, when he ſent "forth his Diſciples, he ſaid unto them, As "my Father ſent me, ſo ſend I you. Whoſeſoever Sins ye re-"mit, they are remitted unto them; and whoſeſoever "Sins ye retain, they are retained. In which "Place he ſhews, that they only can baptize, "and grant Remiſſion of Sins, who have the "HOLY GHOST." So again in another Epiſtle [s]: "It is manifeſt both where and "by whom that Remiſſion of Sins is granted, "which is granted by Baptiſm. For the LORD "firſt gave that Power to Peter, that whatſo-"ever he looſed on Earth, ſhould be looſed "in Heaven. And after his Reſurrection, he "ſaid to his Diſciples, Whoſeſoever Sins ye remit, "they are remitted unto them; and whoſeſoever Sins "ye retain, they are retained. Whence we un-"derſtand, that no other have Power to bap-"tize, and grant Remiſſion of Sins, but they "who are made Rulers in the Church by the "Evangelical Law and Ordinance of the "LORD." Firmilian alſo follows Cyprian [t] in the ſame Argument, proving from the ſame Texts, that Hereticks have no Power to remit Sins in Baptiſm, becauſe they are not in the Church, nor of the Number of thoſe, to whom CHRIST gave that Commiſſion. Neither was it only Cyprian and Firmilian that thus aſſerted the Power of remitting Sins in Baptiſm to belong to the Miniſters of CHRIST, but generally all other Interpreters. Cyril of Alexandria [u] expounding thoſe Words of our SAVIOUR, Whoſeſoever Sins ye remit, &c. ſays, "Spiritual Men "remit or retain Sins, as I conceive, two ways. "For either they call thoſe to Baptiſm, who "are worthy of it upon the Account of a "good Life and approved Faith, or elſe they "forbid and repel thoſe from the Divine "Gift, who are unworthy of it. This is one "Way of remitting or retaining Sin. Ano-"ther Way is, when they puniſh and correct "the Children of the Church offending, and "pardon them again upon their Repentance: "As Paul delivered the Corinthian over to the "Deſtruction of the Fleſh, that the Spirit "might ſaved; and afterward received him, "that he might not be ſwallowed up of over-"much Sorrow." St. Ambroſe in like manner aſcribes the Power of remitting Sins to the Adminiſtration of Baptiſm, as well as Penance: And upon this Ground [w] he asks the Novatians, "Why do ye baptize, if Sins cannot "be remitted by the Miniſtry of Man? What "is the Difference, whether Prieſts aſſume this "Power as given to them in the Exerciſe of Pe-"nance, or the Adminiſtration of Baptiſm?" Gaudentius [x] ſays, "It is this Key of the Sa-"craments, that opens the Gate of the Kingdom "of Heaven." Conſequently he muſt mean alſo, that ſo far as Miniſters are inſtrumental in conferring the Sacrament of Baptiſm, ſo far they are inſtrumental in procuring Men that Remiſſion of Sins which attends it. And for this Reaſon Chryſoſtom magnifies the Sacerdotal Office upon a double Account, becauſe the Prieſts [y] have Power to remit Sins both when they regenerate us, and afterwards: That is, both by Baptiſm and Penance, when they firſt admit Men into the Church, and re-admit or reconcile them after any great Tranſgreſſion. But I mention this, not ſo much to explain the Penitential Diſcipline of the Church (in which Baptiſmal Abſolution has no Concern) as to remark a few other neceſſary Things. As firſt, that Sacerdotal Abſolution in general extends much farther than is commonly apprehended:

Cùm in baptiſmo unicuique peccata ſua remittuntur, probat & declarat in ſuo Evangelio Dominus, per eos ſolos poſſe peccata dimitti, qui habeant Spiritum Sanctum. Poſt reſurrectionem enim diſcipulos ſuos mittens, loquitur ad eos & dicit: Sicut miſit me Pater, & ego mitto vos. Hoc cùm dixiſſet, inſufflavit & ait illis: Accipite Spiritum Sanctum. apprehended: For it includes the whole Tranſaction of Baptiſm, whereby Remiſſion of Sins is miniſterially granted to every true Member of CHRIST, when he is firſt admitted into his Church. Whence it follows ſecondly, That ſacerdotal Abſolution does not neceſſarily require any particular or auricular Confeſſion of private Sins; foraſmuch as that the grand Abſolution of Baptiſm was commonly given without any particular Confeſſion. And therefore the Romaniſts vainly found the Neceſſity of Auricular Confeſſion upon thoſe Words of our SAVIOUR, Whoſeſoever Sins ye remit, they are remitted unto them: As if there could be no Abſolution without particular Confeſſion; when it is ſo plain, that the great Abſolution of Baptiſm (the Power of which is founded by the Ancients upon this very Place) required no ſuch particular Confeſſion. Thirdly, We may hence infer, That the Power of any ſacerdotal Abſolution is only miniſterial: Becauſe the Adminiſtration of Baptiſm (which is the moſt univerſal Abſolution) ſo far as Man is concerned in it, is no more than miniſterial. All the Office and Power of Man in it is only to miniſter the External Form, but the Internal Power and Grace of Remiſſion of Sins is properly GOD's: And ſo it is in all other Sorts of Abſolution. Therefore though baptiſmal Abſolution be no Part of Penitential Diſcipline, yet by obſerving theſe Things in it, we ſhall more eaſily diſcern the true Nature of thoſe other Abſolutions, which have ſome Relation to the Penitential Diſcipline of the Church.

SECT. 3. Of the Abſolution granted by the Euchariſt.

THE firſt of theſe (though we may call it the ſecond in the general Conſideration of Abſolutions) was the Abſolution that was given by the Miniſtry of the Euchariſt. This had ſome Relation to Penitential Diſcipline, but did not ſolely belong to it. For it was given to all baptized Perſons, who never fell under Penitential Diſcipline, as well as thoſe who lapſed, and were reſtored to Communion again. And in both Reſpects it was called the τὸ τέλειον, the Perfection or Conſummation of a Chriſtian; there being no higher Myſtery that an ordinary Chriſtian could partake of. To thoſe who never fell into ſuch great Sins as required a publick Penance, it was an Abſolution from leſſer Sins, which were called venial, and Sins of daily Incurſion: And to Penitents who had lapſed, it was an Abſolution from thoſe greater Sins, for which they were fallen under Cenſure. That it was eſteemed ſuch a general Abſolution in both Caſes, we learn from the Characters which the Ancients give of it both at large, and with a particular Reſpect to its looſing the Bonds of Excommunication. Cyprian [z] ſays in general, "That when we "drink the Blood of the LORD, and the Cup "of Salvation, we put off the Remembrance "of the old Man, and forget our former ſe- "cular Converſation; and our ſorrowful "and heavy Heart, which before was preſſed "with the Anguiſh of our Sins, is now ab- "ſolved or ſet at Liberty by the Joyfulneſs "of the Divine Indulgence or Pardon." And more particularly, that it was eſteemed an Abſolution, as it reſolved the Bonds of Excommunication, without any other Formality or Ceremony of receiving the Penitent into the Communion of the Church, we learn from that Order made in the firſt Council of Orange [a], That ſuch Penitents as are ready to leave the Body, ſhall have the Communion without the reconciliatory Impoſition of Hands: (which, as we ſhall ſee by and by, was the uſual and ordinary Ceremony in reconciling Penitents publickly at the Altar, and what theſe were to have afterwards, if they happened to ſurvive.) In the mean Time this Sort of Communion, the Euchariſt taken without Impoſition of Hands, was ſufficient for the Conſolation or Reconciliation of a dying Perſon, according to the Decrees of the Fathers, who congruouſly call this Sort of Communion their Viaticum, or Proviſion for their Journey. The Fourth Council of Carthage has Two Canons implying the ſame Thing. The Firſt ſays [b], If a Penitent is ſtruck dumb in his Sickneſs, and is thought to be at the Point of Death, he ſhall be reconciled both by Impoſition of Hands, and by the Euchariſt put into his Mouth. And the other [c] grants the Euchariſt as an Abſolution by itſelf to Penitents in Sickneſs, if they chance to die; only providing, that in Caſe they recover, they ſhall not hold themſelves abſolved without Impoſition of Hands alſo: Becauſe in Caſe they ſurvived, they were obliged to perform the Reſidue of their Penance, which they ſhould have done before, and then be reconciled by Impoſition of Hands publickly at the Altar; but if they died, the Euchariſt alone was a ſufficient Abſolution for them. And this is confirmed by that memorable Story related by Euſebius [d] out of an Epiſtle of Dionyſius Biſhop of Alexandria concerning one Serapion, an aged aged Man, who had led a virtuous Life, but happened at laſt to lapſe into Idolatry in Time of Perſecution. He had often ſued for Pardon, but no one would hearken to him, becauſe he had ſacrificed to Idols. Afterward falling ſick, he ſent for one of the Presbyters to come and abſolve him in the Night. The Presbyter himſelf was ſick, and could not go to him: But becauſe the Biſhop had given in Charge, that Abſolution ſhould be granted to all that were at the point of Death, if they deſired it, and eſpecially if they had earneſtly deſired it before, that they might have Hope and Conſolation in their laſt Minutes, when they were about to leave the World; the Presbyter ſent him a little Portion of the Euchariſt by the Boy that came for him, bidding him to dip it in Liquor, and put it into his Mouth. Which he did, and preſently the Man expired. Upon which Dionyſius himſelf makes this Remark: That it was apparent, that GOD preſerved him, and continued him ſo long in Life, till he might be abſolved, and have his Sins blotted out, and be owned by CHRIST for the many good Deeds he had done. I need make no other Reflection upon the Story, ſince Dionyſius tells us ſo plainly, that to miniſter the Euchariſt to Men was to grant them Abſolution, and Remiſſion of Sins, and Peace and Favour with CHRIST, when it was given in his Name to worthy Receivers. And thus it was that the Miniſters of CHRIST, as his Embaſſadors were always ſuppoſed to have the Miniſterial Power to remit Sins, and reconcile Penitents to CHRIST, by this Sacramental Abſolution.

THE Third Sort of Abſolution is that of the Word and Doctrine, which is partly declarative, and partly operative and effective; and is of Uſe both in Penitential Diſcipline, and out of it. For the Miniſters of CHRIST, as his Embaſſadors, have Commiſſion and Authority to make a general and publick Declaration of the Terms of Reconciliation and Salvation to Men. And this is alſo miniſterially operative in working Faith and Repentance in Mens Souls, which are the Terms of Salvation, whereby they obtain Remiſſion of Sins. For Faith comes by Hearing, and Hearing by the Word of GOD. They have alſo Power to declare to Men in particular, that they are in a ſalvable State, when upon the beſt human Judgment that they can make, they apprehend and diſcern in them the neceſſary Conditions of Salvation. This is that Key of Knowledge, whereby they open to Men the Gate of Heaven, and the Way to Eternal Life, procuring for them the Remiſſion of Sins, and all the Benefits of the Goſpel-Covenant. It is this that introduces Men at firſt into GOD's Favour, and aſcertains them of it; and when they are fallen from that State by wilful Sin, it is a Means, as a Part of the Church's Penitential Diſcipline, to reduce them back again to their forfeited Eſtate and primitive Condition. Upon which Account Hearing of the Word of GOD, as we have ſeen before, was always one Station of Penitents in the Church, and was an initiatory Sort of Reconcilement of them to GOD, introductory to the great and laſt Reconcilement at the Altar. And in this Senſe, the Ancients ſay, CHRIST gave his Diſciples Power to remit Sins. "Every Man, ſays St. Jerom [e], is "bound in the Cords of his own Sins: Which "Cords and Bonds the Apoſtles have Power "to looſe, imitating their Maſter, who ſaid "unto them: Whatſoever ye looſe upon Earth, ſhall "be looſed in Heaven. Now the Apoſtles looſe "them by the Word of GOD, and Teſtimo-"nies of Scripture, and Exhortation unto "Virtues." In like manner St. Ambroſe [f] ſays, Sins are remitted by the Word of GOD, whereof the Levite is the Interpreter, and a Sort of an Executor: And in this Reſpect the Levite is the Miniſter of Remiſſion. 'Tis this Key of the Word, ſays Maximus Taurinenſis [g], which opens the Conſcience to Confeſſion of Sins, and includes therein the Grace of the Myſtery of Salvation unto Eternity. Thus Miniſters are ſaid to be inſtrumental in reconciling Men to GOD, and procuring them Remiſſion of Sins, becauſe to them is committed the Word of Reconciliation.

SECT. 5. Of the precatory Abſolution given by Impoſition of Hands and Prayer.

THE Fourth Sort of Abſolution was that of Interceſſion and Prayer, which was uſed as a Concomitant of moſt other Abſolutions. For Baptiſm and the Euchariſt were either adminiſtred in a precatory Form, or at leaſt Prayers and Interceſſions for Pardon of Sins always attended them: And ſo they did alſo the great and ſolemn Reconciliation of Penitents at the Altar. And to Prayer they commonly joined Impoſition of Hands, a Rite and Ceremony of Benediction that was uſed in all Offices of Religion. By this Perſons were at firſt admitted to the State of Catechumens, Solvunt autem eos Apoſtoli ſermone Dei, & teſtimoniis ſcripturarum, & exhortatione virtutum.

and by this trained up in their Preparation for Baptiſm. By this Perſons were confirmed in the Cloſe of Baptiſm. By this Ordinations were given to the Clergy, and Benedictions to all the People. And Albaſpinæus [b] has obſerved, that in the Courſe of publick Penance this Ceremony was at leaſt Four Times uſed towards all that went through it, before they were completely reconciled and admitted to full Communion. 1. They were admitted to Penance by Impoſition of Hands. 2. They had frequent Impoſition of Hands whilſt they were Penitents in the Order of Kneelers or Proſtrators. 3. They were admitted to the lower Degree of Communion in Prayers only without the Oblation by the ſame Rite. 4. And laſtly, Impoſition of Hands was one of the ſolemn Rites of admitting them to the more perfect Degree of Reconciliation at the Altar. Now though Prayer and Impoſition of Hands was not eſteemed an Abſolution in all theſe Caſes, yet in many of them it certainly was. For Chryſoſtom ſpeaking of the ſeveral Powers of the Sacerdotal Office, and the Methods of expiating Sin, ſays, "The Prieſts do it not "only by their Doctrine and Admonition, "but alſo by the Aſſiſtance [i] of their Pray-"ers: They have Power of remitting Sins not "only when they regenerate us in Baptiſm, "but afterwards. For St. James ſays, Is any "ſick among you, let him call for the Elders of the "Church, and let them pray over him, anointing "him with Oil in the Name of the LORD: *And "the Prayer of Faith ſhall ſave the Sick, and the "*LORD ſhall raiſe him up; and if he have com-"mitted Sins, they ſhall be forgiven him." Pope Leo after the ſame manner makes Sacerdotal Abſolution to conſiſt in Prayer. "The Aſ-"ſiſtances of Divine Goodneſs, ſays he [k], "are ſo ordained, that the Divine Indulgence "is not to be obtained but by the Supplica-"tions of the Prieſts. And it is very uſeful "and neceſſary that the Guilt of Sin ſhould "be looſed by the Supplications of the Prieſts "before the laſt Day." Here Remiſſion of Sins is plainly aſcribed to the Efficacy of Interceſſion and Prayer. St. Auſtin [l] ſays, the Prayers of holy Men in the Church procure Remiſſion of Sins both in Baptiſm and Penance. For he argues thus: If the Prayers of holy Men in the Church procure Remiſſion of Sins for thoſe who are baptized not by the Dove, but by the Hawk, (that is, not by good, but wicked Men) if they come to that Sacrament in the Peace of Catholick Unity: Why ſhould not the Prayers of the ſame Men looſe the Sins of thoſe who return from Hereſy or Schiſm to Catholick Unity? He adds [m] a little after, that the Prayers of the Saints (that is, the Mournings of the Dove) grant Remiſſion of Sins to thoſe that are baptized in the Peace of the Church, whatever the Perſon be that adminiſters Baptiſm, whether he be a covetous Man or an Extortioner, becauſe he only acts in the Perſon of the Church, by whoſe Prayers Remiſſion of Sins is obtained. Therefore he exhorts the Donatiſts in another [n] place, to return to the Peace of the Church, where by the joint Prayers of two People united they might obtain Remiſſion of Sins. For the LORD had ſaid, If two of you ſhall agree on Earth as touching any thing that they ſhall ask, it ſhall be done for them of my Father which is in Heaven. If for two Men, how much more for two People? Therefore let us jointly fall down and ſupplicate the LORD: Do you partake with us in Unity, and let us partake with you in Sorrow, that Charity may cover the Multitude of Sins. Here again, we ſee, Remiſſion of Sins is aſcribed to Prayer. And ſo Cyprian underſtood it, when he thus addreſſed himſelf to thoſe that had lapſed into Idolatry [o]: "We pray "you to repent, that we may be able to pray "to GOD for you: We firſt turn our Pray-"ers to you, that we may turn the ſame to "GOD, and beſeech him to have compaſſion "on you." Euſebius [p] after Clemens Alexandrinus, notes this to have been the Method whereby St. John obtained Pardon of CHRIST for the young Man, who after a pious Education in the Church was become a moſt notorious Robber upon the Mountains: He interceded with CHRIST by frequent Prayers and Faſtings, and thereby reſtored him, a great Example of Repentance, to the Church. And thus Tertullian [q], whilſt he was a Catholick, repreſents CHRIST as joining his Interceſſion with the Tears of the Church, and thereby thereby obtaining Pardon for the penitent Sinner. The Firſt Council of Orange [r] appoints this to be the Way of reconciling Hereticks, who deſire to become Catholicks at the point of Death: If the Biſhop was not at hand, the Presbyters were to conſign them with Chriſm, and the Benediction: Which Benediction was the ſame as Impoſition of Hands and Prayer. For as Impoſition of Hands by a Figure always implies Prayer, with Impoſition of Hands, as an outward Sign or Ceremony accompanying Prayer: So both theſe together are what the Ancients always mean by a Benediction. So that when the Council bids thoſe who are baptized in Hereſy, to be reconciled to the Church, or abſolved by a Benediction, it is plain that Prayer is underſtood as the proper Means of their Abſolution. And it is the ſame Thing as is ordered in other Canons [s], that Hereticks ſo baptized ſhould be received into Communion by Chriſm and Impoſition of Hands, that is, Unction to conſign or confirm them with the SPIRIT (which was wanting in their Heretical Baptiſm); and Prayer with Impoſition of Hands, to give them the Peace and Communion of the Church. Of which Way of reconciling and abſolving penitent Hereticks, who were baptized out of the Church, we ſhall have occaſion to diſcourſe a little more diſtinctly hereafter. Here I only add farther the Teſtimony of St. Ambroſe [t], who ſays, the Prieſts execute that Commiſſion which is given by CHRIST, John xx. 23. for remitting of Sins, as Interceſſors by their Prayers. They make Requeſt, but GOD beſtows the Gift: The Service is human, but the Bounty (of Forgiveneſs) is from the Power above. So that if this be not the only Way, whereby the Miniſters of CHRIST are empowered to remit Sins, as ſome of the Schoolmen themſelves have determined; yet it was certainly one Way, and that of general Uſe in the Primitive Church, as is clearly evident from the preſent Allegations, and will be made more apparent in the Sequel of this Diſcourſe.

SECT. 6. Of the judicial Abſolution of Penitents by reſtoring them finally to the Peace and full Communion of the Church.

FOR Prayer had a conſiderable Share in the great and final Abſolution of Penitents, when after they had performed the Canonical Penance, they were ſolemnly reconciled and received to the Peace and perfect Communion of the Church at the Altar. This was that famous Way of remitting Sins, and abſolving Sinners, of which we read ſo much in the Monuments of the Fathers and Councils, where they ſpeak of Penitential Diſcipline and Abſolution of Sinners. This is what is generally meant by thoſe ancient Phraſes, granting them Peace, reſtoring them to Communion, reconciling them to the Church, looſing their Bonds, granting them Pardon and Indulgence, and remitting their Sins, which are but ſo many different Ways of expreſſing this one Thing, viz. the ſolemn Manner of abſolving publick Penitents and admitting them to full Communion, when their Canonical Penance was regularly performed. And this comprehended all the other Ways of Abſolution, except that of Baptiſmal Abſolution. For, as I noted before, no Penitent that had once been regularly baptized, was ever admitted to Communion by a ſecond Baptiſm: But they had the Abſolution of Prayer and Impoſition of Hands, and the Abſolution of the Euchariſt, and the declaratory Abſolution of the Word and Doctrine: For ſolemn Prayer was made to GOD for them, to procure their Abſolution from him; and the ſolemn Impoſition of Hands was given them, to ſignify their Reconciliation; and the Euchariſt was immediately given them, to reſtore them to the Communion of the Altar; and by the whole a Declaration was made, that they were now again in the Society and Peace of the Church, and in Favour with GOD, as far as Human Underſtanding could make any Judgment of them. And upon this Account ſome ancient Writers acknowledge no other Sorts of Abſolution but only two; the Baptiſmal Abſolution, which is antecedent to all Penitential Diſcipline; and this of reconciling publick Penitents to the Communion of the Altar; becauſe this latter comprehends all the other Ways of Abſolution in the ſeveral Acts and Ceremonies that were uſed in the conferring of it. Thus we have heard before Cyril of Alexandria [u] expounding thoſe Words of the Commiſſion, John xx. 23. Whoſeſoever Sins ye remit, they are remitted unto them. Spiritual Men remit or retain Sins two Ways: For either they call thoſe to Baptiſm, who are worthy of it upon the Account of a good Life and approved Faith; or elſe they forbid and repel thoſe from the Divine Gift, who are unworthy of it. This is one Way of remitting or retaining Sins: The other Way is, when they correct and puniſh the Children of the Church offending, and pardon them again upon their Repentance. Now becauſe the Miniſters of CHRIST are in a great Meaſure the proper Judges of Mens Qualifications both for Baptiſm and the Euchariſt, therefore a great great Power and Authority was allowed them in both these Cases to examine into Mens Behaviour and Faith, and to judge who were fit and who were not fit for the Reception of them; and accordingly to minister, or not minister to them those Mysteries, which were the Means of conveying Remission of Sins to the worthy Receiver; and so they were invested with a Sort of absolute judicial Authority in the External Administration of these Things with respect to the outward Communion of the Church, though not with an absolute Authority over the Conscience in respect to GOD, who alone can properly remit Sin, and absolve the Sinner. So they acted in a double Capacity in these Matters; as Judges in respect of Mens visible Qualifications for the Sacraments, and the proper Time and Season of admitting them to the Participation of them; having Power to shorten or prolong the Time, as they judged of the Negligence or Proficiency of the petitioning Parties: but they acted only as Intercessors to GOD for them, as to any Thing pertaining directly and properly to the Purification of the Conscience from Sin, which is not in Man's Power, but only in a Ministerial Way, to do those Things, which as Means of Grace may contribute towards obtaining a proper Absolution and Remission of Sins from GOD, in whose Power only is the absolute Power of forgiving Sins. This is the true State of the Matter, as to what concerns the several Sorts of Absolution in Use in the ancient Church, and particularly that Absolution which was given to publick Penitents upon their Restoration to Communion; the Manner and Ceremonies of which, with other incident Circumstances, I shall now go on a little farther to explain.

CHAP. II.

Of the Customs, Rites, and Circumstances anciently observed in the publick Absolution of Sinners.

SECT. 1. No Sinners anciently absolved, till they had performed their regular Penance, except in Case of imminent Death.

WHEN Sinners had performed their regular Penance, and carefully gone through the several Stages of Discipline appointed for the distinct Orders of Penitents in the Church, they were then admitted to complete and perfect Communion by the great and last reconciliatory Absolution. But this was anciently granted to none before they had orderly completed the full Term of their Penance, unless it was in Case of imminent Death, when their desperate Case made it reasonable to treat them a little more favourably, and grant them an Indulgence, which no Consideration but that extraordinary Exigence could procure them. Indulgences were not bought and sold, as they were most shamefully in After-Ages: Much less was bare Confession sufficient to gain a Man Absolution, before he had done a formal and serious Penance to the Satisfaction of the Church. The Audian Hereticks indeed were very faulty in this Matter, as Theodoret informs us [a]. For they not only assumed to themselves a despotick Authority like the Donatists, to pardon Sins by their own Power; but also hastily granted Remission upon a bare Confession, without staying for any Fruits of Repentance, or prescribing any Time for the publick Manifestation of them, as the Laws of the Church always required. And there were some Presbyters of the Church in Cyprian's Time, who for Favour or filthy Lucre, were much inclined to admit Lapsers, without any just Penance done, in a very hasty and preposterous Manner to Communion. And the Martyrs, by their Artifices and Frauds, were many times induced to intercede to the Bishops for such Sinners, and almost demand of them an immediate Re-admission of the Offenders. But Cyprian very sharply remonstrates against this Usurpation and Abuse in several Letters written both to the Clergy [b], and the Martyrs, and the People themselves, wherein he sets forth both the Irregularity and Danger of the Practice; telling the People particularly, that this indulgent Facility in the Clergy to grant them such a preposterous Peace, did not really give them Peace, but destroy it; nor grant them true Communion, but only hinder their Salvation. And St. Ambrose [c] makes a like Reflexion on the Vanity of those, who seek for such a sudden Restoration: Some Men, says he, desire to be admitted to Penance only for this Reason, that they may presently receive receive the Communion again. These Men do not so much desire to be absolved themselves, as to bind the Priest: For they retain their evil Conscience; and therefore the Priest sins greatly in admitting Men, who give no Signs of Repentance, to Communion against the Laws of the Church. There was one Case indeed in which Men might be reconciled privately, when they had not perfectly gone through their whole Course of Penance; which was, when they lay sick and were despaired of upon a Death-Bed: But that was an extraordinary Case, and the only Exception that the general Rule admitted of; and was only a private, and not a solemn and publick Reconciliation: And even in that Case, as I have shewed before [*], the Canons provided, that if the sick Man recovered, he should perform the Residue of his Penance in the regular Course appointed for publick Penitents, before he was solemnly reconciled at the Altar. So that the Custom of absolving Sinners in Health before any Penance is done, must be determined to be not only a Novelty, but a great Abuse and Corruption of the ancient Discipline, wholly owing to the Degeneracy of latter Ages.

AS to the Manner of the ancient Reconciliation, it was usually thus performed. When a Sinner had gone through the Course of his Penance, he was brought to the Altar in the same Habit that he had performed his Penance, that is, in Sackcloth, and there with solemn Prayers and Tears and Imposition of Hands received to full Communion. The Circumstance of Sackcloth is mentioned by the First Council of Toledo [d]; and the Place of Reconciliation said to be the Altar, not only by that Council, but by Optatus [e], who speaking to the Donatists, and of their Way of reconciling Penitents, (which was the same as was used in the Catholick Church) he tells them, that at the same Time that they laid Hands on Sinners, and remitted their Sins, they turned to the Altar, and said the Lord's-Prayer. And so St. Jerom [f] says, the Bishop injoins the People Common Prayer, when he reconciles any one, who had been delivered over unto Satan, to or at the Altar.

SECT. 3. Sometimes more publickly before the Apsis or Reading-Desk.

YET in some Cases, when the Crime was very publick, and more than ordinarily notorious and scandalous to all the People, the Criminal for Example's Sake received his Absolution in a more publick Place, before the Apsis or Reading-Desk, in the open Body of the Church, and in the View of all the People. This we learn from a Canon of the Third Council of Carthage [g] inserted into the African Code, which says, that if any Penitent's Crime be publick, or vulgarly known to all, so as to have given Scandal to the whole Church, he shall receive Imposition of Hands, that is, his Absolution, before the Apsis. Learned Men indeed are not exactly agreed about the Sense of this Canon: Du Fresne [h] after Balsamon and Zonaras, takes the Apsis for the Church-Porch; and Zonaras says, the Imposition of Hands means the first Imposition that admitted them to Penance: Albaspinæus [i] thinks the Apsis means the same as the Ambo or Reading-Desk; where the Penitents of the Third Class, called the Substrators, kneeled down daily to receive Imposition of Hands; and to this he thinks the Imposition of Hands mentioned in the foresaid Canon, chiefly relates, but with this Difference, that whereas ordinary Penitents received their Imposition of Hands a little more privately behind the Desk, these more notorious and scandalous Criminals, which the Canon speaks of, received it publickly before the Desk, in the Face and View of all the People. He also is of Opinion, that their final Absolution was given them in the same Place, and that I take to be the true Meaning of the Imposition of Hands in the Canon now before us.

SECT. 4. Absolution at the Altar always given in a supplicatory Form by Imposition of Hands and Prayer.

HOWEVER it is certain, whatever the Sense of that Canon be, that the great and final Absolution of publick Penitents was always performed in a supplicatory Form by Imposition of Hands and Prayer. This is evident from the foremention'd Testimonies of Optatus and St. Jerom. Cyprian speaks often of it, as used both in publick and private Reconciliation. In one Place he says, all Penitents [k] continued a just Time in the Exercise of Penance; they made made their Confeſſion, and their Life was examined, and then they were received to Communion by Impoſition of Hands given them by the Biſhop and Clergy; and there was no other Way of being reconciled but this. He repeats this again in other Places [l], and both there and elſewhere complains of ſome of his Presbyters [m] who tranſgreſſed this Rule, and admitted Penitents to the Euchariſt before this Ceremony of Admiſſion was regularly performed toward them. He alſo ſhews, that private Reconciliation of Penitents upon a Death-Bed was performed after the ſame Manner: They made their Confeſſion before a Presbyter or Deacon [n], and if they were in Danger of Death, Impoſition of Hands was given them, that they might depart hence in Peace unto the LORD. Which ſhews, that he ſpeaks not only of the intermediate Impoſition of Hands, which was given daily to the Third Order of Penitents called Proſtrators, whilſt they were doing their Penance, but alſo of the laſt Impoſition of Hands, which was given to Penitents at their final Reconciliation to the Communion of the Church. This ſome Canons therefore call the reconciliatory Impoſition of Hands, to diſtinguiſh it from all other Kinds, whether in Penance or out of Penance. The Cuſtom continued in Africk to give dying Penitents Reconciliation in this Manner by Impoſition of Hands in the Time of St. Auſtin and the Fourth Council of Carthage. For ſo that Council appointed: If a Man in Sickneſs deſires [o] Penance, let him receive it; and if the Signs of Death be upon him, let him be reconciled by Impoſition of Hands, and let the Euchariſt be put into his Mouth. But in other Places the Euchariſt alone was given to dying Penitents, as their Viaticum, when they had not performed their whole Penance in Health; and if they happened to recover, then they were to finiſh their Penance in the ordinary Courſe; and when they had given Evidence of a true Repentance by the proper Fruits of it, they were then to be received publickly to Communion by the reconciliatory Impoſition of Hands, as in this Caſe the Firſt Council of Orange [p] appointed. Now though there be no Mention made of Prayer in this Way of Reconciliation, yet it always is to be underſtood, according to that of St. Auſtin [q], who ſays, that Impoſition of Hands is nothing elſe but Prayer, that is, a Ceremony attending all Prayers of Benediction: Which therefore both he [r], and other Writers ſometimes more expreſsly call Orationem Manus Impoſitionis, the Prayer of Impoſition of Hands: Some Forms of which both for Penance and other Benedictions may be ſeen in the Author of the Apoſtolical [s] Conſtitutions; and particularly for reconciling of Penitents there is an Order, that the Biſhop [t] ſhall receive them to Communion with Impoſition of Hands, and the Prayer of the whole Church for them: The Form of this Prayer is in the End of St. James's Liturgy under the Title of Εὐχὴ τῆς ἱλασμοῦ, the Prayer of Propitiation, which is directed to CHRIST in theſe Words; "O Lord JESUS "CHRIST [u], Son of the Living GOD, thou "Shepherd and Lamb, that takeſt away the "Sins of the World, that forgaveſt the Debt "to the two Debtors, and grantedſt Remiſſion of Sins to the ſinful Woman, and "gaveſt to the Sick of the Palſy both a Cure "and Pardon of Sins; remit, blot out, and "pardon our Sins, both voluntary and involuntary, whatever we have done wittingly or unwittingly, by Tranſgreſſion and "Diſobedience, which thy SPIRIT knoweth better than we ourſelves. And whereinſoever thy Servants have erred from thy "Commandments in Word or Deed, as Men "carrying Fleſh about them, and living in "the World, or ſeduced by the Inſtigations of "Satan; or whatever Curſe or peculiar Anathema "they are fallen under, I pray, and beſeech "thy ineffable Goodneſs to abſolve them with "thy Word, and remit their Curſe and Anathema according to thy Mercy. O LORD "and Maſter, hear my Prayer for thy Servants; Thou that forgetteſt Injuries, overlook all their Failings, pardon their Offences both voluntary and involuntary, and "deliver them from Eternal Puniſhment. For "thou art he that haſt commanded us, ſaying, Whatſoever ye ſhall bind on Earth, ſhall be "bound in Heaven; and whatſoever ye ſhall looſe "on Earth, ſhall be looſed in Heaven: Becauſe "thou art our GOD, the GOD that canſt "have Mercy and ſave and forgive Sins; "and to Thee, with the Eternal FATHER, "and the Quickening SPIRIT, belongs "Glory now and for ever, World without "End. Amen."

THE like Forms of Abſolution by Prayer are ſtill in Uſe in the Greek Church, as may be ſeen in Goar's Euchologium [w] and Dr. Smith's Account of the preſent State [x] of that Church. Biſhop Uſher ſhews farther [y] out of Alcuin, and the old Ordo Romanus, and ſome of the Roman Ceremonials, and Pontificals, that the ſame Form was uſed for many Ages in the Latin Church alſo. And this is confirmed by the old Latin Miſſal publiſhed by Illyricus and Cardinal Bona [z], where the Abſolution, under the Title of Indulgentia, runs in this Form: "He that forgave the ſinful Woman all her "Sins for which ſhe ſhed Tears, and opened "the Gate of Paradiſe to the Thief upon a "ſingle Confeſſion, make you Partakers of his "Redemption, and abſolve you from all the "Bond of your Sins, and heal thoſe infirm "Members by the Medicine of his Mercy, "and reſtore them to the Body of his holy "Church by his Grace, and keep them whole "and ſound for ever."

OTHER Forms of Abſolution by Prayer might be added, but theſe are abundantly ſufficient to ſhew, that anciently the great and formal Abſolution of publick Penitents at the Altar was uſually performed by Impoſition of Hands and Prayer; the one as the Means procuring, and the other as the Rite declaring their Reconciliation to GOD and his Church.

SECT. 5. Abſolution in the indicative Form, Ego te abſolvo, not uſed till the Twelfth Century.

IF it be enquired, when the Uſe of the Indicative Form of Abſolution firſt began to be uſed in the Church, that is, the Form, I abſolve thee, inſtead of the deprecatory Form, CHRIST abſolve thee: Morinus [a] has fully proved, that there was no Uſe of it till the Twelfth or Thirteenth Century, not long before the Time of Thomas Aquinas, who was one of the Firſt that wrote in Defence of it. And our learned Biſhop Uſher [b] has clearly proved the Novelty of it from Aquinas himſelf. For he ſays [c], there was a learned Man in his own Time, who found Fault with the Indicative Form of Abſolution then uſed by the Prieſt: I abſolve thee from all thy Sins; and would have it to be delivered only by way of Deprecation; alledging, that this was not only the Opinion of Gulielmus Altiſſiodorenſis, Gulielmus Pariſienſis, and Hugo Cardinalis; but alſo that Thirty Years were ſcarce paſſed, ſince all did uſe this Form only: Abſolutionem & Remiſſionem tribuat tibi omnipotens Deus, Almighty GOD give thee Remiſſion and Forgiveneſs. This points out the Time of the Change ſo preciſely, that learned Men [d], who allow the Form in ſome Senſe proper to be uſed, make no Scruple to declare their Opinion of the Novelty of it upon the Strength of the foregoing Conſiderations.

SECT. 6. In what Senſe that Form may be allowed.

IF it be asked farther, in what Senſe the Indicative Form of Abſolution may be allowed? It is anſwered, that it may be allowed ſeveral Ways. 1. As an Act of Juriſdiction, by thoſe who are entruſted with the Power of receiving publick Penitents into Communion, and looſing the Bonds of Excommunication, wherewith they were judicially and formally tied by the Cenſure of the Church before. In this Senſe it is no Impropriety for him who has the Key of Juriſdiction, and Power of relaxing, as well as inflicting Church Cenſures, to uſe the Indicative Form, I abſolve thee. For this is only an External Act of Eccleſiaſtical Power, that reſpects only the outward and viſible Communion, but does not directly or immediately affect the Conſcience. Therefore ſome learned Perſons not only allow the Uſe of it in this Senſe, but think it was actually ſo uſed in the Primitive [e] Church. As by Zephyrinus Biſhop of Rome, whom Tertullian (after he was become a Montaniſt) upbraids [f], as ſaying, I forgive the Sins of Fornication and Adultery to thoſe that do Penance for them; meaning that he admitted them again to the Peace and Communion of the Church, which the Montaniſts and the Novatians after them would by no means allow of. 2. This Indicative Form, I abſolve thee, may be interpreted to mean no more than the Declaration of GOD's Will to a penitent Sinner, that upon the beſt Judgment the Prieſt can make of his Repentance, he eſteems him abſolved before GOD, and accordingly pronounces and declares him abſolved: As St. Jerom [g] obſerves, the Prieſts under the Old Law were ſaid to cleanſe a Leper or pollute him; not that they were the Authors of his Pollution, but that they declared him to be polluted, polluted, who before ſeemed to many to have been clean. And in another Place [b] he makes a more cloſe Remark concerning this Matter, whilſt he reflects upon ſome Biſhops and Presbyters in his own Time, who not underſtanding the true Meaning of the Commiſſion to remit Sins, aſſumed to themſelves ſomething of a Phariſaical Pride and Loftineſs, ſo as to imagine they had Power either to condemn the Innocent, or abſolve the Guilty: When yet before GOD it is not the Sentence of the Prieſts, but the Life of the Criminals that is enquired into. We read in Leviticus concerning the Lepers, where they are commanded to ſhew themſelves to the Prieſts, and if they had the Leproſy, they were then to be polluted or made unclean by the Prieſt: Not that the Prieſts made them leprous or unclean, but becauſe they had the Power of judging who were leprous or not leprous, and might diſcern who were clean or unclean. As therefore the Prieſt makes the Leper clean or unclean, ſo the Biſhop or Presbyter here binds or looſes, not properly making the Guilty or the Guiltleſs: But according to the Tenour of his Office, when he hears the Diſtinction of Sins, he knows who is to be bound, and who to be looſed. Upon this alſo the Maſter of the Sentences (following St. Jerom) obſerves that the Prieſts of the Goſpel have that Right and Office, which the legal [i] Prieſts had of old under the Law in curing the Lepers. Theſe therefore forgive Sins or retain them, whilſt they ſhew and declare, that they are forgiven or retained by GOD. For the Prieſts put the Name of the LORD upon the Children of Iſrael, but it was he himſelf that bleſſed them, as it is read in Numbers vi. 27. 3. The Indicative Form, I abſolve thee, may be uſed in the Performance of any External Act of the Miniſtry, which is uſed as a Means to obtain Remiſſion of Sins of GOD: As in the Adminiſtration of Baptiſm or the Euchariſt. The Prieſt may as well ſay, I abſolve thee, as I baptize thee: For Baptiſm is an Abſolution, as we have ſeen before: But then the Prieſt's Part in it is only to adminiſter the External Form; but it is GOD that gives the Internal Grace, and ſpiritually baptizes with Remiſſion of Sins. Yet foraſmuch as the Prieſt has Power to miniſter the External Form, he may ſay, I baptize thee, or I waſh thee with Water: Which Waſhing is the outward Means appointed by GOD to convey to us Remiſſion of Sins, and the Internal Waſhing of our Souls in the Blood of CHRIST by the Power of the HOLY GHOST. So likewiſe in the Adminiſtration of the Euchariſt, a Prieſt might ſay, I give thee the Body of CHRIST; or I abſolve thee by the Body of CHRIST; meaning, that he miniſtred unto him the outward Element of Bread, which is the Sacramental Body of CHRIST, appointed to be uſed as a Means to convey the real Body of CHRIST and all his Benefits, whereof Abſolution or Remiſſion of Sins is one, to the worthy Receiver. Our Church has not appointed the Indicative Form of Abſolution to be uſed in all theſe Senſes, but only once in the Office of the Sick, and that may reaſonably be interpreted (according to the Account given out of St. Jerom) a Declaration of the Sinner's Pardon, upon the apparent Evidences of a ſincere Repentance, and the beſt Judgment the Miniſter can make of his Condition; beyond which none can go but the Searcher of Hearts, to whom alone belongs the infallible and irreverſible Sentence of Abſolution. But of this only by the way; I now return to the Practice of the Primitive Church:

SECT. 7. Why Chriſm or Unction was ſometimes added to Impoſition of Hands in the Reconciliation of certain Hereticks and Schiſmaticks to the Church.

WHERE we may obſerve, that beſides the common Way of reconciling ordinary Penitents to the Church, there was ſomething often very peculiar in the Reconciliation of Hereticks and Schiſmaticks. For they were conſidered under a threefold Denomination or Diſtinction: Either they were ſuch as had been baptized in the Church, and afterward fell away from it: Or ſecondly, they were ſuch as were baptized in Hereſy or Schiſm, but with the uſual Form of Baptiſm: Or thirdly, they were ſuch as had been baptized by Hereticks or Schiſmaticks by ſuch a corrupted Form, as deſtroyed the true Nature and Eſſence of the Thing itſelf, and made it altogether a null and void Baptiſm. The firſt Sort were reconciled much after the ſame Manner as other Penitents, only making a Confeſſion and Abjuration of their Errors. But the ſecond Sort, becauſe they wanted the true Effect of Baptiſm, that is, the Grace or Unction of the HOLY SPIRIT, which they could not have out of the Church in Hereſy or Schiſm, were therefore reconciled not only with Impoſition of Hands, but with the holy Unction or Chriſm added to it, to give them Confirmation, firmation, and denote their Reception of the HOLY SPIRIT of Peace upon their returning to the Peace and Unity of the Church. And the third ſort, becauſe they wanted true Baptiſm, were received after the manner of Heathens, with a new Baptiſm, becauſe their firſt pretended Baptiſm was altogether null and void. This was the Diſtinction made between thoſe ſeveral ſorts of Hereticks, and the true Grounds and Reaſons of the different Obſervations in the Church's Diſcipline in their Reconciliation and Reception. The two latter ſorts of Hereticks were ſcarce looked upon as properly Penitents in the Church, but were rather received ſub imagine pœnitentiæ, under the Image and Reſemblance of the Penance that was uſually performed by thoſe who had once been Members of the Church, as Pope Innocent informs us in one of his Epiſtles; where ſpeaking of ſome who had been baptized by the Arians and other Sects, who retained the due Form of Baptiſm, he ſays [k], "They received them under the "Image of Penance with Impoſition of Hands "and Sanctification of the HOLY SPIRIT, "to perfect their Baptiſm, which though "given in the Name of the FATHER, "SON, and HOLY GHOST, yet wanted "the Grace of the HOLY SPIRIT, "which they could not have, but upon "their Return to the Peace and Unity of "the Catholick Church. Therefore then "they received them with Impoſition of "Hands, and the Unction of Chriſm, if "they had not been anointed before." This he repeats in ſeveral other [l] Places, and the ſame is confirmed by the Teſtimonies of Siricius [m], and Leo [n] and St. Jerom [o], and Gennadius [p], and the Author under the Name of Juſtin Martyr [q], and the Councils of Orange [r] and Epone [s]: All which, becauſe I have had occaſion more fully to repreſent them in another [*] Work, I only juſt mention in this Place, with this ſingle Remark, that the Council of Orange, and that of Epone, and the Author under the Name of Juſtin, expreſsly mention the Ceremony of Chriſm, or anointing with the holy Oil; which is alſo appointed by the Council of Laodicea [t], and the general Council of Conſtantinople [u], and the ſecond Council of Arles [w], and the Council of Trullo [x], to be uſed with Impoſition of Hands in the Reconciliation of ſuch Hereticks as had been baptized in any Hereſy or Schiſm with the true Form of Baptiſm, in the Name of the FATHER, SON, and HOLY GHOST: Such are required only to renounce their Errors, and learn the true Faith, and make Profeſſion of it; and then they were to be reconciled with Impoſition of Hands and Chriſm, which was peculiar to this ſort of Penitents, who had never before been united truly to the Catholick Church. They ſeem not to have gone through all the Stages of Penance, as other Penitents did in the Church; but to have been reconciled in a more compendious way, more ſuitable to their State and Condition, as Strangers and Foreigners now juſt entering within the Pale of the Church. For which reaſon Pope Innocent ſtyles their ſhort Penance only an Image, or faint Reſemblance of he Penance, which held other Penitents often very long under the Diſcipline of the Church.

SECT. 8. Why ſome Hereticks could be reconciled no other way, but by a new Baptiſm.

As to others, who had been baptized by ſuch Hereticks as had either wholly rejected, or greatly corrupted the true Form of Baptiſm, there was a very different way of receiving and reconciling them to the Communion of the Church. For they could be admitted no other way, but as Heathens, by the Door of Baptiſm; ſeeing their former pretended Baptiſm was not only defective in ſome remoter Circumſtances, but in the very Form and Eſſence of it, and therefore reputed abſolutely null and void, and neceſſary to be repeated, in order to make them Members of the Church. Upon this account the Council of Nice [y] ordered the Samoſatenians or Paulianiſts, upon their Return to the Catholick Church, to be baptized. The Council of Laodicea [z] made a like Order for the Reconciliation of the Montaniſts or Cataphrygians. The firſt Council of Conſtantinople [a] decreed the ſame for the Montaniſts, Eunomi- ans, and Sabellians. The ſecond Council of Arles [b] adds the Photinians; and the Council of Trullo [c] the Manichees, Valentinians, Marcionites, and all others of the like Nature: that is, all ſuch as had not been truly baptized with due Form of Baptiſm. There was no other way of reconciling ſuch to the Catholick Church, but by inſtructing and training them up to the Knowledge of the true Faith, firſt as Catechumens, and then giving them Abſolution of Baptiſm, which in this caſe was allowed to them, as having never received any true Baptiſm before. Theſe were the ſeveral ways of reconciling penitent Hereticks according to the Variety of their Circumſtances, and the different State and Condition they were in, when they deſired to be reunited to the Body of the Church.

SECT. 9. What Conditions were required in the Reconciliation of thoſe who fell from the Church into Hereſy or Schiſm.

As for thoſe who were baptized in the Church, and afterward fell away into any Hereſy or Schiſm, we find no other way of reconciling them, but the common and ordinary way of reconciling all other Penitents, by Impoſition of Hands and Prayer. For, as I have noted before, if the firſt Baptiſm was valid, a ſecond Baptiſm was never allowed to be given to any Penitent by way of Abſolution. Yet ſome greater Hardſhips and ſevere Conditions were often impoſed upon ſuch Apoſtates and Deſerters, before they could be admitted to the Peace of the Church again. If they were Ring-leaders and Broachers of the Hereſy, who drew others into their Error and Faction: It was commonly required, that they ſhould bring back the Multitude whom they had deceived, before they obtained a perfect Abſolution. Thus Tertullian [d] obſerves of Marcion, that he was promiſed to be abſolved only upon this Condition, that he ſhould reduce thoſe back again to the Church, whom he had led away by his Doctrine into Perdition: and he undertook to do this, but Death prevented him. Cyprian makes a like Remark in the Caſe of Trophimus, one of the three Biſhops that were concerned in giving Novatian an unlawful Ordination, whereby they ſet him up as Anti-Biſhop againſt Cornelius, and raiſed a flaming Schiſm in Rome: He ſays, his Supplication [e] for Readimiſſion was accepted, becauſe by his Humility and Satisfaction he brought back the People, whom he had drawn into the Schiſm; and it was not ſo much Trophimus that was admitted again into the Church, as a great Number of the Brethren, who had gone aſide with him, and would not have returned without their Leader. And yet he was not allowed to retain his Epiſcopal Office, but only to communicate in the Quality of a Layman. Sometimes it was required of them, as a Condition of their Abſolution, that they ſhould make Diſcovery of the Remainders of their Faction. St. Auſtin gives us an Inſtance of this in his own Treatment of one Victorinus a Subdeacon, who fled over to the Sect of the Manichees: When he returned again, and deſired to find a Place of Repentance, St. Auſtin refuſed to admit him, unleſs he would give Information of the reſt of his Party. Sometimes they were required to anathematize their Errors, and abjure them in Writing. The Council of Nice exacted this Condition [f] of the Novatians; and the ſecond Council of Gangra [g] of the Euſtathians; and the ſecond Council of Arles [h] of the Novatians; and the African Councils [i] of the Donatiſts. The Council of Laodicea [k] inſiſts upon the ſame from the Novatians, Photinians, and Quartadecimans. And the general Council [l] of Conſtantinople exacts it of the Macedonians, Sabbatians, Arians, Novatians, Quartadecimans. And ſometimes they were required not only to anathematize Error, and ſubſcribe the Truth, but to take an Oath for greater Confirmation: As Socrates [m] ſays, Conſtantine obliged Arius to do, though he did it fraudulently and like an Impoſtor. This was the Precaution which the Church uſed particularly in the Caſe of Heretical Apoſtates, to be aſcertained of their Sincerity in making Recantations, before ſhe would receive them into her Communion again, or grant them Abſolution.

SECT. 10. Of the Time of Abſolution.

THERE is one Circumſtance more to be noted under this Head, which is the ordinary Time of Abſolution: This ſeems to have been fixed, in the ordinary Courſe of Diſcipline, to the Day of our Saviour's Paſſion, or rather the Day on which he was betrayed. For ſo St. Ambroſe ſays expreſsly, prefly, that on the Day that our LORD gave himſelf [n] for us, it was uſual in the Church to relax Mens Penance, or grant them Abſolution. In the Roman Church, in the Time of Pope Innocent [o] the Cuſtom was the ſame, to abſolve Penitents only upon the Thurſday before Eaſter, except ſome Sickneſs intervened, and the Penitent's Life was deſpaired of: For then he might be reconciled at any time, when Neceſſity required, rather than leave the World without the Benefit of the Communion. It was at or about this time alſo, that the Emperors (perhaps in Imitation of this Cuſtom of the Church) were wont to ſend forth their civil Abſolutions or Indulgences, as they called them, whereby at the Paſchal Feſtival they granted Pardon to all Criminals, who lay bound in Priſon for their Faults, except ſome that were of a more malignant and unpardonable Nature. This Practice was firſt begun by Valentinian, and continued by Theodoſius and the ſucceeding Emperors; of which there is a whole Title in the Theodoſian [p] Code, to mention no other Writers at preſent that ſpeak of it. The Monks, who petitioned in behalf of Eutyches in the ſecond Council of Epheſus [q], plainly refer to both Cuſtoms, the ſacred and the civil. For upon this Day, ſay they, meaning the Paſchal Solemnity, the holy Fathers relax the Puniſhment of many Offenders: and the Emperors looſe the Bonds of thoſe that are in Chains for their Tranſgreſſions. So that this was the chief Time of diſcharging both Civil and Eccleſiaſtical Criminals, and in regard to each of them the Diſcharge was ſtyled (according to the Nature of the thing, either in a Civil, or Eccleſiaſtical Senſe) an Abſolution or Indulgence.

SECT. II. How the Church abſolved ſome Penitents, or received them into Communion after Death.

WE have hitherto conſidered the Manner and Circumſtances of Abſolution, as given to all Sorts of Penitents whilſt they were living. But beſides this we are to take notice of another Way of abſolving Penitents, and receiving Men into Communion even after Death. For it ſometimes happened, that true Penitents, and very good Men by Accident died under the Cenſure of Excommunication unrelaxed, and and ſo out of the external viſible Communion of the Church. Which might happen in two Caſes. 1. When Penitents chanced to die ſuddenly, whilſt they they were diligently performing their Penance; or were in a Journey, or at Sea, where they had no Miniſter to give them a formal Reconciliation or Abſolution. 2. When innocent Men were overborn by ſome great and prevalent Faction, and unjuſtly excommunicated, and never received into the external Communion of the Church, by reaſon of the Power that prevailed againſt them. For both theſe Caſes the Church provided a Remedy, by uſing ſome Ceremony to admit them into Communion, or rather to acknowledge them to be in Communion after Death. For Penitents who died ſuddenly, whilſt they were carefully doing their Penance, it was provided, that notwithſtanding this Accident they ſhould be treated as Perſons dying in the Communion of the Church, though they wanted a formal Reconciliation. To this Purpoſe the fourth Council of Carthage made a Decree [r], that if any Penitents, who were diligently obſerving the Rules of Penance, happened to die by any ſudden Accident, whilſt they were in a Journey or at Sea, where no Aſſiſtance could be given them, their Memorials notwithſtanding ſhould be recommended both in the Prayers and Oblations of the Church. And the ſecond Council of Vaiſon [s] has an Order of the ſame Nature, which is a little more particular: If any of thoſe who have ſubmitted to the laws of Penance, and in purſuance thereof lead a good Life in all ſatisfactory Compunction, ſhall happen to be prevented by ſudden Death in the Country or in a Journey, their Oblations ſhall be received, and their Funeral Obſequies and Memorials be performed after the Manner and Cuſtom of the Church: becauſe it were unreaſonable to exclude the Commemorations of thoſe out of the ſacred Service, to which Service, they were labouring with all Diligence and Fidelity to attain; and to whom the Biſhop (though they chanced to be intercepted from receiving the Viaticum of the Euchariſt) would perhaps not have thought it improper to have granted the most perfect Reconciliation. The Practice of the Roman Church indeed was otherwise in the Time of Pope Leo, as appears from some of his Epistles [t]: But their Practice was almost singular: For the general Current was against them, inclining to the more favourable Side in behalf of such Penitents as died suddenly without Reconciliation. Which is observed by the Fathers in the eleventh Council of Toledo, who thereupon determine [u] that though there were different Rules about this Matter, yet it was more proper to follow the Majority, which decreed on the favourable Side in behalf of such Penitents, that their Memorial should be recommended in the Church, and that the Presbyters should receive their Oblations. As to the other Sort of Persons, who were unjustly excommunicated by the Power of some prevailing Faction, the Way of restoring them to the external Communion of the Church after Death, was by inserting their Names into the Diptychs of the Church (as Theodoret [w] tells us it was done by Atticus in the Case of Chrysostom) which was enough to restore them after Death to the Communion and Fellowship of the Faithful. And so I have done with the Circumstances and Ceremonies observed in the ancient Manner of Absolution.

CHAP. III.

Of the Minister of Ecclesiastical Discipline, and particularly of the Minister of Absolution.

SECT. 1. All the Power of Discipline primarily lodged in the Hands of the Bishop.

THERE remains but one thing more to be examined in this Matter, relating to the Exercise of Discipline in the Practice of the Church; and that is, by what Hands it was managed? Who ordinarily had the Power of the spiritual Sword? And who particularly was the proper Minister of Absolution? That all the Power of Discipline was primarily lodged in the Hands of the Bishop, as all other Offices of the Church, is a Matter uncontested, and evident from the whole foregoing History and Account of the Practice of the Church. For the Canons always speak of the Bishop, at least in Conjunction with his ecclesiastical Senate, his Presbytery, as cutting off Offenders from the Church, and imposing Penance upon them; and then again examining their Proficiency, and either lengthening their Penance, or moderating it by his Indulgence; and finally admitting them to the Communion of the Church by Absolution.

SECT. 2. This in many Cases committed to Presbyters, either by a general or particular Commission.

AND this, so far as the Bishop could manage it, might be retained solely to himself, and exercised at his own Discretion. But because the Necessity of the Church required in many Cases, that Part of this Burden should devolve upon others, and the Bishop was not able personally to discharge the whole of it to all that needed; therefore Presbyters, as his proper Assistants, were taken in to be Sharers and Fellow-Labourers with him. They had a general Commission to grant the great Indulgence or Absolution of Baptism, and that of the Eucharist, and the Word and Doctrine to all that needed; And though they were more restrained in the Exercise of publick Discipline, and the final Reconciliation of publick Penitents by Imposition of Hands and Prayer; yet the intermediate Imposition of Hands upon the Penitents in their daily Exercise was often committed to them: And by the Bishop's Leave they might give the final Reconciliation to publick Penitents, either openly in the Church, or privately on a sick Bed, when Necessity and the Fear of imminent Death required a speedier Absolution. This is evident from the very Canons which restrain the Power of Presbyters in reconciling publick Penitents, and reserve it solely to the Bishop: They still admit of these Limitations and Exceptions. The second Council of Carthage has two Canons, which thus divide the Matter between them. The first [a] says, a Presbyter shall not reconcile any Penitent in the publick Service. But the other immediately adds [b], that if any one be in Danger of Death, and desires to be reconciled reconciled to the Altar, if the Biſhop be abſent, the Presbyter ſhall conſult the Biſhop, and ſo reconcile him at his Command. And ſo the third Council of Carthage determined [c], that a Presbyter ſhould not reconcile a Penitent without conſulting the Biſhop, unleſs the Biſhop was abſent, and Neceſſity compelled him. The Council of Orange made a like Decree [d], about reconciling ſuch Penitents as had been baptized by Hereticks, that in Caſe they were in Danger of Death, and deſired to be made Catholicks, if the Biſhop was abſent, a Presbyter ſhould conſign them with Chriſm and the Benediction. And the Council of Epone [e] has a like Order, that if any Hereticks, who lay deſperately ſick upon their Beds, deſired ſuddenly to be converted, in that Caſe, for the Salvation of their Souls, which was heartily deſired, a Presbyter ſhould be permitted to give them the Conſolation of Chriſm, that is, both Confirmation and Reconciliation, which thoſe that were in Health, were only to deſire of the Biſhop. And that this was the ancient Rule of the Church, appears from the Letters of Dionyſius Biſhop of Alexandria [f] in Euſebius, where he ſays he had given Orders to his Presbyters to grant Abſolution to all that were at the Point of Death, if they deſired it; and eſpecially if they had deſired it before, that they might have Hope and Conſolation in their laſt Minutes, when they were about to leave the World.

SECT. 3. And to Deacons alſo.

NEITHER was this Commiſſion and Licence granted only to Presbyters, but to Deacons alſo. For as they were allowed to give Men the Abſolution of Baptiſm, in Caſes of extreme Neceſſity, ſo they were authorized to grant Penitents the reconciliatory Abſolution in the ſame Circumſtances likewiſe. For ſo the Council of Eliberis [g] ſeems to determine, that though Presbyters ordinarily had not Power to admit any one to Penance, but only the Biſhop: Yet in Caſe of Infirmity, both Presbyters and Deacons ought to receive Penitents to Communion, having the Biſhop's Command to do it. This is more plainly delivered by Cyprian, who ſays [h] if Penitents were ſeized with any Calamity, and were in apparent Danger of Death, in the Abſence of the Biſhop, they might make their Confeſſion before any Presbyter that was preſent; or if a Presbyter could not be found, before a Deacon, and receive Impoſition of Hands, that they might go to the LORD in Peace. It is plain alſo, that the Clergy had ſome Share with the Biſhop in the more publick and ſolemn Abſolutions: Becauſe Cyprian [i] often complains of ſome forward Men, who were deſirous to have the Euchariſt granted them, before they had received the ſolemn Impoſition of Hands from the Biſhop and the Clergy to reconcile them to the Altar.

SECT. 4. How far, and in what Senſe Abſolution might be ſaid to be given by a Layman.

BUT as Presbyters and Deacons did nothing alone in this matter without the Biſhop, but either in Conjunction with him, or by his Authority and Permiſſion: So much leſs was this Power intruſted in the Hands of any Layman. Only in Caſe of extreme Neceſſity, ſome Canons allowed a Layman to give Baptiſm to a Catechumen, (which was reputed, as we have heard before, one Sort of Abſolution) rather than he ſhould die unbaptized. This is evident from the Decree made in the Council of Eliberis [k], that in a Voyage at Sea, or in any Place where there was no Church near at Hand, if a Catechumen happen'd to be extremly ſick, and at the Point of Death, any Chriſtian, who had his own Baptiſm entire, and was no Bigamiſt, might baptize him. And the Sentiments of Tertullian, St. Jerom, and St. Auſtin, with ſeveral others that have been canvaſſed [l] in another Book, ſhew that this was not the ſingular Opinion of that Council. As to the other Sacrament, we no where find, that either Deacons or Laymen were allowed to conſecrate it; that being the Office of Presbyters only. Neither were Laymen allowed to miniſter publickly either the Bread or the Cup, when conſecrated, to the People: For that was the ſtanding Office of Deacons. Yet a Layman in Caſe of abſolute Neceſſity might carry and miniſter miniſter the conſecrated Bread and Wine in private to a dying Perſon, and ſo far be inſtrumental in his Abſolution. As appears from that famous Caſe related by Euſebius [m] out of Dionyſius of Alexandria, concerning Serapion, who had the Euchariſt ſent him by the Prieſt, and given him by the Hands of his Servant. But the Remark which Biſhop Fell [n] makes upon this, is very juſt: That whatſoever Neceſſity compels Men to do, it defends but only ſo far and ſo long as the Neceſſity laſts. It is a known Story in Euſebius, of the Euchariſt being tranſmitted to Serapion by a Boy: Yet no one may thence infer, that therefore Children may diſpence thoſe holy Myſteries. He thinks the ſame Reaſon holds for Deacons reconciling Penitents in Caſe of extreme Neceſſity: That it was an extraordinary Caſe; and no Conſequence is to be drawn from Neceſſity and extraordinary Caſes, to prejudice the ordinary Rules and ſtanding Meaſures of the Church. If Men exceed their Commiſſion, and excommunicate or abſolve without Power, they are themſelves liable to Cenſure for their Uſurpation, and the Church may reverſe all ſuch irregular Acts by her own juſt Authority at Pleaſure. Therefore when the Council of Epheſus had depoſed Neſtorius and Cæleſtius for their Hereſy, and reduced them to the State of Laymen, ſhe declared, that ſhe took from them all the Power of the Prieſthood, which enabled them to do Good [o] or Harm to others, that is, either to excommunicate or abſolve. And whereas Neſtorius after this, pretended to depoſe ſome Clerks from their Prieſtly Office for their Orthodoxy, the Synod declared his Act a Nullity, and that the Prieſts ſo depoſed [p], ſhould be reſtored to their Station again. And on the other Hand, whereas Neſtorius and his Accomplices had attempted to reſtore thoſe to Communion, or their Order, whom the Synod had condemned, the Synod [q] declared, this ſhould not profit them; they ſhould remain excommunicate or depoſed notwithſtanding. This ſhews, that neither Laymen, nor Clerks reduced to the State of Laymen, had any Power of binding or looſing by the ordinary Rules of Diſcipline in the Church. And ſo Theodoret [r] ſays, a certain Biſhop told Theodoſius Junior, when he was under ſome Concern for being raſhly excommunicated by a Monk. The good Emperor was uneaſy even under an unjuſt Excommunication, by an incompetent Authority pronounced againſt him, and would not ſit down to Meat till he was abſolved. For which Purpoſe he ſent to the Biſhop, to deſire him to engage the Perſon who had bound him, to come and abſolve him; the Biſhop told him, it did not belong to every one to excommunicate, and therefore he was abſolved already: Yet this did not ſatisfy the Emperor, till the Man was found out, to come himſelf, and reſtore him to the Communion of the Church. The Biſhop's Anſwer in this Caſe was certainly very juſt; but the Emperor being a Man of a tender Conſcience, could not entirely reſt upon it. Perhaps he was ſenſible he had done the Monk ſome perſonal Injury, in which Caſe perſonal Satisfaction was to be made, and private Pardon to be asked, according to the Rule of our Saviour, If thou bring thy Gift to the Altar, and there remembereſt that thy Brother hath ought againſt thee; leave there thy Gift before the Altar, and go thy Way; firſt be reconciled to thy Brother, and then come and offer thy Gift. In this Caſe every Man has Power to pardon the Sins of his Brother, and alſo to admoniſh him, and inſtruct him, and pray for him, which are private and remote Ways of reconciling him to the Altar: 'Tis of theſe St. Auſtin [s] ſpeaks in Conformity to that Precept of the Apoſtle Col. iii. 13. Forgiving one another, if any Man have a Quarrel againſt any; even as Chriſt forgave you, ſo alſo do ye. "Let us forgive "one another's Sins, ſays he, and pray for "the Sins of each other, and ſo in ſome "meaſure waſh one another's Feet. 'Tis our "Part, by the Gift of GOD, to uſe the Mi"niſtry of Charity and Humility; but it "belongs to GOD to hear our Prayers, and "cleanſe us from all Pollution of Sins by "Chriſt, and in Chriſt, that what we forgive "unto others, that is to ſay, what we looſe "upon Earth, may be looſed in Heaven." This is ſo neceſſary a Part of Chriſtian Duty, that no one may forego this Way of looſing his Brother, under Pain of having his own Sins retained by GOD. For if we forgive Men their Treſpaſſes, our heavenly Father will alſo forgive us: But if we forgive not Men their Treſpaſſes, neither will our Father forgive our Treſpaſſes. Upon which one of the Ancients [t] obſerves, that we bind our ſelves the faſter in our own Sins, if we refuſe to looſe the Bonds of others. And nothing is more common among the Fathers than to ſay, Men bind themſelves, or are bound by others, when they treſpaſs againſt them, and never ask Forgiveneſs: And that they looſe themſelves ſelves or others from Sin, either by Almſ-deeds, or Charity, or converting of Sinners, or praying for them, or remitting their Treſpaſſes committed againſt them. With reſpect to binding [u] St Auſtin ſays, when any Brother ſins againſt another, and he thereupon begins to eſteem him as a Publican, he binds him on Earth; but he muſt take Care that he bind him juſtly, for unjuſt Bonds are broken by the Juſtice of GOD. And for looſing, Origen reckons up ſeven Ways, whereby Chriſtians may obtain Remiſſion of Sins, whereof five are apparently private Actions of private Men. The firſt is Baptiſm, whereby Men are baptized for the Remiſſion of Sins [x]. The ſecond is the Suffering of Martyrdom. The third is Almſdeeds. For our Saviour ſays, give Alms, and behold all Things are clean unto you. The fourth is forgiving the Sins of our Brethren. For our LORD and Saviour ſays, If ye from your Heart forgive your Brethren their Treſpaſſes, your Father will forgive your Treſpaſſes. The fifth is, when one converts a Sinner from the Error of his Ways. The ſixth is the Abundance of Charity, as our LORD ſays, her Sins, which are many, are forgiven, becauſe ſhe loved much. The ſeventh is the hard and laborious Way by Penance, when a Man waters his Couch with his Tears, and his Tears are his Bread Day and Night, and he is not aſhamed to declare his Sin to the Prieſt of the LORD, and ſeek a Cure. The firſt and laſt of theſe, viz. Baptiſm and Penance, are publick Acts, in which the Miniſtry of the Prieſt is concerned: But all the reſt, Martyrdom, Almſdeeds, forgiving Injuries, converting Sinners, and exceeding Love of GOD are private Actions of private Men, and may be performed by any good Chriſtian. And therefore the Remiſſion of Sins that is aſcribed to them, is no peculiar Act of the Miniſtry, but may be the Act of any private Chriſtian. Conſequently ſo far Laymen may be concerned in the Remiſſion of Sins without any Intrenchment upon the Miniſtry: But theſe being only private Acts, are of no farther Conſideration in the preſent Diſcourſe, which only relates to miniſterial Abſolution, and the publick Diſcipline of the Church.

I have now gone over all that relates to the Exerciſe of penitential Diſcipline, ſo far as concerns the Practice of the ancient Church. As for doctrinal Points, ſuch as the Queſtion, whether Penance be properly a Sacrament? And whether Sacerdotal Abſolution be neceſſary to Salvation? Theſe come not directly within the Deſign of the preſent Undertaking, which only conſiders the Practice of the Church. But becauſe I have had Occaſion to write ſome little Tracts upon the latter Queſtion, and it will not be unacceptable to ſome Readers to ſee them made publick, I ſhall here ſubjoin them by Way of Appendix to the preſent Diſcourſe.

NATURE and NECESSITY

ABSOLUTION:

Shewing how far that Neceſſity extends, and where it ceaſes.

JOHN XX. 23.

Whoſeſoever Sins ye remit, they are remitted unto them; and whoſeſoever Sins ye retain, they are retained.

" THOUGH the Doctrine of Miniſterial Abſolution, or Remiſſion of Sins, be a Doctrine of " great Uſe in Chriſtianity, as " a Matter wherein our Practice " is much concerned; yet I know not by " what hard Fate it has happened, that there " are few Doctrines which have been more " abuſed or leſs underſtood. The Extravagancies of ſome on the one Hand, who " would have it almoſt to do every Thing in " Chriſtianity, have made others think it " could do nothing: As violent Diſputes uſually beget great Oppoſitions, and great Oppoſitions commonly end in different Extremes. It will not be amiſs therefore to ſet " this uſeful and neceſſary Doctrine in its proper Light, by diſcourſing of it in a practical " Way without any Diſpute, beginning with " its Original or firſt Inſtitution.

" WHEN our SAVIOUR was about to leave " the World, he gave Commiſſion to his Diſ- " ciples to act in his Name, as his Miniſters " and Vice-gerents, in all Things relating to " the Kingdom of GOD. This Kingdom " was founded chiefly upon the Promiſe and " Proſpect of Pardon or Remiſſion of Sins: " And this Pardon was to be diſpenſed, and " aſcertained to Men, by the Intervention of " thoſe whom he had appointed and commiſ- " ſioned for this very Purpoſe. For this " was Part of their Commiſſion, to remit or " to retain Sins, as they ſhould judge pro- " per, acting by the Rules which he gave " them; with a Promiſe, that what they did " regularly in his Church on Earth, ſhould " be ratified and confirmed by himſelf in " Heaven.

" IN general therefore it is evident be- " yond Diſpute, that CHRIST left a Pow- " er in the Hands of his Miniſters to retain, " or to forgive Men's Sins: But yet to have " a more particular Account and right Appre- " henſion of this, three Enquiries will be ne- " ceſſary to be made farther,

" I. INTO the Nature of this Power, as " it belongs to Man: For notwithſtand- " ing the Commiſſion and Authority grant- " ed to Man, there is ſtill a vaſt Diffe- " rence to be made between the Power " of forgiving Sins, as exerciſed by GOD, " and as exerciſed by Man.

" II. WE muſt enquire into the ſeveral " Acts or Ways, in which the Miniſters " of CHRIST are commiſſioned and au- " thorized to exemplify this Power.

" III. HOW far all Men are bound to ſub- " mit to the lawful Exerciſe of it.

" FROM the Reſolution of which Points " we ſhall be able to reduce this Conſidera- " tion to Practice, and eaſily diſcern what are " the proper Uſes to be made of this Doctrine " of Abſolution, both as it relates to the Mi- " niſters of CHRIST and his People.

" I. I begin with the firſt Enquiry into " the Nature of this Power, as it belongs to " Man. Where I obſerve, that notwithſtand- " ing the Commiſſion granted to Man, there " is ſtill a vaſt Difference to be made between " the Power of forgiving Sins, as exerciſed " by GOD, and as exerciſed by Man. For " the Power of GOD is abſolute and ſove- " reign in pardoning Sins; his Judgment un- " erring and infallible about the Subjects who " are capable of Pardon: And conſequently " his Sentence always exact, and irreverſible " by any other Power whatſoever. Whereas " the Power of Man to forgive Sins is not " abſolute but only miniſterial: His Commiſ- " ſion and Authority is not only derivative, " but tied up and bounded by certain Rules, " which are to be the Meaſures of his Pro- " ceedings in this grand Affair with his Fel- " low-Creatures. Conſequently his Judgment " is neither infallible, nor his Sentence irre- " verſible, but only ſo far as he obſerves the " Rules preſcribed by his Sovereign LORD, " who ſtill reſerves to himſelf the Privilege of " reviewing the Determinations of his Vice- " gerents and Judges upon Earth, and of " Judging over again their Sentence by his " final and unerring Judgment. If the Mi- " niſters of CHRIST indeed obſerve exact- " ly the Rules which he has preſcribed, in " judging Sinners and pardoning Sin; if they " neither through Haſte or Partiality, or Ig- " norance and Error, condemn the Guiltleſs, " or abſolve the Guilty; then their Sentence, " whether it be of remitting, or retaining " Sins, will be confirmed and ratified in Hea- " ven: Becauſe they act according to the " Tenour of their Commiſſion, and only as " faithful Stewards conforming to the Mea- " ſures and Rules which their Sovereign LORD " has appointed them. But if they chance " to deviate from thoſe Rules, either by Ig- " norance of Men's Caſe, or the ſly Pretences " of hypocritical [a] Sinners; or by any Ne- " glect, or Weakneſs, or aſſuming Tyranny, " or fond Indulgence, or any other Paſſion " incident to human Nature; in all ſuch Caſes " CHRIST the Supreme LORD will judge " Things over again, and reverſe their Sen- " tence, whether it be too rigorous, or too " indulgent: Becauſe they exceed their Com- " miſſion, and judge by other Rules than " what he has appointed them. This is that " noted Difference between the Power of " GOD and Man in forgiving Sins; the " one

[a] Cyprian to this Purpoſe ſays: Neque enim præjudica- mus Domino judicaturo, quò minùs ſi Pœnitentiam ple- nam & juſtam peccatoris invenerit, tunc ratum faciat quod à nobis fuerit hîc ſtatutum. Si verò nos aliquis Pœ- nitentiæ ſimulatione deluſerit; Deus qui non deridetur, & qui cor hominis intuetur, de his quæ nos minùs perſpexi- mus judicet, & ſervorum ſententiam emendet. Cypr. Ep. 52. al. 55. ad Antonian. p. 108. We do not prejudge or foreſtall the Lord, who is to judge; but that if he find the Repen- tance of the Sinner to be full and juſt, he may then ratify that which was here ordained by us: But if any one do deceive us by a falſe Appearance of Repentance, God (who is not mocked, and who beholdeth the Heart of Man) may judge of thoſe Things, which we did not well diſcern, and the Lord may amend the Sentence of his Servants. In like manner Pacian. Ep. 1. ad Sempro- nian. Bibl. Patr. Tom. 3. p. 53. Redder quidem ille rationem, ſi quid perperàm fecerit, vel ſi corruptè & impiè judicârit. Nec præjudicatur Deo, quò minùs mali ædificatoris opera reſcindat: Interea ſi pia illa admini- ſtratio eſt, adjutor Dei operum perſeverat. The Miniſter ſhall give an Account, if he has done any thing amiſs, or if he has judged corruptly and wickedly: Neither is God foreſtalled, that he may not undo the Works of this evil Builder. But in the mean time, if that Adminiſtration of his be godly, he continues an Helper of the Works of God.

" one does it by an abſolute and indepen" dent Authority, the other only by a ſub-" ordinate and reſtrained Commiſſion, which " is rather a Declaration of GOD's Will,
" than any ſovereign Power inveſted in him.
" For no Man can ſay to his Brother, with " the ſame Authority and infallible Aſſurance,
" as CHRIST did to the Thief upon the
" Croſs, To Day thou ſhalt be with me in Paradiſe.
" This is the Prerogative of GOD alone, to " pardon Sins with an abſolute and uncon" troulable Power. And in this Senſe it is " properly ſaid in Scripture, that none can for-
" give Sins but GOD. And upon this Foun" dation Athanaſius, and the Generality of the " ancient Writers [b] always argued for the " Divinity of our SAVIOUR againſt Arius,
" from this Topick, that he took upon him
" to forgive Sins with an abſolute Authority,
" which was the peculiar Privilege of GOD
" alone.

" YET this does not hinder but that Man
" may have a Miniſterial Part in the For-" giveneſs of Sins, in ſuch Acts as are by " Commiſſion entruſted with him: And what
" thoſe Acts of his Miniſtry are I come now
" in the next Place to conſider by proceed" ing in order to the Second Enquiry, which " was

" II. WHAT thoſe ſpecial Acts or Ways
" are, in which the Miniſters of CHRIST
" are commiſſioned or authorized to exem-
" pliſy this their Power of retaining or re-" mitting Sins.

" NOW theſe upon an exact Enquiry ap" pear to be theſe Four Acts of the Miniſtry,
" whereby the Benefit of Abſolution is ordi" narily diſpenſed unto Men.

" 1. THE Power of adminiſtering the two
" Sacraments of Baptiſm and the LORD's Sup" per to all ſuch as are qualified to receive " them. Which is therefore called ſacramen-
" tal Abſolution.

" 2. THE Power of declaring or publiſhing
" the Terms or Conditions, upon which the " Goſpel promiſes Pardon and Remiſſion of " Sins, which is called the declaratory Abſo" lution of the Word and Doctrine.

" 3. THE Power of interceding with GOD
" for Pardon of Sins through the Merits of " CHRIST; which is the Abſolution of " Prayer.

" 4. THE Power of executing Church-Diſ-
" cipline and Cenſures upon Delinquents;
" which conſiſts in excluding flagitious and " ſcandalous Sinners from the Communion of " the Church, and receiving Penitents again
" into her Communion, when they have given " juſt Evidences of a ſincere Repentance. In
" theſe Four Acts, regularly exerciſed, conſiſts
" the Miniſterial Power of retaining or remit-
" ting Sins, ſo far as the delegated Authority
" of Man can be concerned in it.

" 1. IN the Power of adminiſtering the " two Sacraments of Baptiſm and the LORD's " Supper to all ſuch as are qualified to re" ceive them. Baptiſm is the grand Abſolu-
" tion [*] of the Chriſtian Church: For by
" it all Men, who are admitted as living " Members of CHRIST's Myſtical Body, the " Church, receive certain and univerſal Re-
" miſſion of Sins. Whence it had anciently
" the Names [*] of Indulgence, and Salva" tion, and Remiſſion of Sins, becauſe theſe
" were the undoubted Effects to all worthy
" Receivers. Therefore ſo far as the Miniſters
" of CHRIST are authorized to admit Pro-" ſelytes and Converts into the Church by " the Sacrament of Baptiſm, ſo far they are " impowered to grant Remiſſion of Sins; be-
" cauſe they adminiſter that, whoſe proper Ef" fect is the Remiſſion of Sins, as it is the Seal " of GOD's Covenant, and Means of convey" ing all the Spiritual Bleſſings of CHRIST's " Death and Paſſion to all thoſe, who come " in the Sincerity of their Hearts with due " Qualifications to receive it.

" NOW it is certain the Miniſters of CHRIST
" are inveſted with a Power, not only to ad-
" miniſter this Sacrament unto Men, but alſo
" to judge by certain Rules of Probation,
" who are capable and proper Subjects of it;
" and according as they find them qualified " or unqualified, by bringing them to the " Teſt of thoſe Rules, correſpondently either " to receive them, or reject them from the " Privilege of Baptiſm. Which is in Effect
" to grant them, or not grant them Remiſſi-
" on of Sins, becauſe it is to grant them, or " not grant them that ordinary Means, which " is made by CHRIST the Seal of Remiſſion
" of Sins. The Ancients commonly found " this Power of remitting or retaining Sins in
" Baptiſm upon theſe very Words of the Text,
" and thoſe other Words of our SAVIOUR to
" Peter, Whatſoever thou ſhalt bind on Earth, ſhall
" be bound in Heaven; and whatſoever thou ſhalt
" looſe on Earth, ſhall be looſed in Heaven. St.
" Cyril of Alexandria expounding the Words " of the Text, ſays, ſpiritual Men remit or " retain Sins [c] two Ways: 1. When they
" call thoſe to Baptiſm who are worthy of it
" upon the Account of a good Life and ap" proved Faith; or forbid and repel thoſe
" from the Divine Gift, who are unworthy
" of

[b] See this fully proved, Orig. Eccleſ. Book XIX. Chap. i. n. 1. [*] See the Senſe of the Ancients upon this Point, Orig. Eccleſ. Book XIX. Chap. i. n. 2. [c] Cyril. Lib. 12. in Joan. xx. 23. Tom. 4. p. 1101.

" of it. 2. When they puniſh and correct " the Children of the Church for offending, " and pardon them again upon their Repen- " tance. St. Cyprian and St. Ambroſe having to " deal with the Novatians, who denied the " Church all manner of Power to pardon " Sins after Baptiſm, argue with them upon " this common Principle acknowledged on " both Sides, that CHRIST gave his Mini- " ſters Power to remit Sins by Baptiſm. For " the Novatians did not deny this; therefore " St. Ambroſe [d] reduces them to an Abſur- " dity, with great Acuteneſs, putting this " Queſtion to them, Why do ye baptize, if " Sins cannot be remitted by the Miniſtry of " Man? What is the Difference, whether " Prieſts aſſume this Power, as given to them " in the Exerciſe of Penance, or in the Ad- " miniſtration of Baptiſm? Plainly implying, " that the Adminiſtration of Baptiſm was one " Way of remitting Sins. And it may be " ſaid with Truth, that the Ancients were ge- " nerally in theſe Sentiments [e], and per- " haps to a man concurring in this Opinion, " that the Miniſters of CHRIST are inſtru- " mental in remitting of Sins by the Admini- " ſtration of Baptiſm.

" 'TIS true indeed, this Power of giving " or refuſing Baptiſm to Men, is not a mere " arbitrary, abſolute, or deſpotick Power, au- " thorizing the Miniſters of CHRIST to give " or refuſe it at their own mere Pleaſure; but, " as was ſaid, it is a Miniſterial Power, tying " them to certain Rules, whereby they are to " judge, whether Men be duly qualified for " Baptiſm or not, and accordingly obliging " them to admit, or reject them. They are " to examine, whether Men ſincerely perform " the ordinary Conditions required of all Men " that come to CHRIST's Holy Baptiſm; that " is, whether they make Profeſſion of believ- " ing ſuch neceſſary Articles of the Chriſtian " Faith, as the Church has commonly ſummed " up in her Creed, and whether they promiſe " to renounce Satan and all his Works; and " whether they actually forſake his Service by " a manifeſt and plain Converſation and turn- " ing unto GOD, engaging themſelves by " Covenant to live in conſtant and perpetual " Obedience to all the Laws of CHRIST. They " who take upon them theſe Profeſſions, and " actually perform theſe Conditions, have a " Right to demand Baptiſm; and the Mini- " ſters of CHRIST are empowered and obli- " ged to miniſter it to them; that is, to ſeal " unto them the Remiſſion of their Sins. But " if they contumaciouſly refuſe any one of " theſe Conditions; if they either will not " make Profeſſion of the ſeveral Articles of " the Chriſtian Faith; or not renounce their " old Maſter, and promiſe univerſal Obedi- " ence unto CHRIST; or continue in the " open and avowed Practice of any notorious " Vice, and ſcandalous Profeſſion of Life; " then the Miniſters of CHRIST are equally " empowered [f] to reject ſuch Men from " Baptiſm; that is, to retain their Sins, by " denying them the ordinary Means of Re- " miſſion and Forgiveneſs.

" THUS far it is plain even to a Demon- " ſtration, that the Miniſters of CHRIST are " inveſted with a Power of retaining or re- " mitting Sins, as they are appointed by " CHRIST to be the Adminiſtrators of Bap- " tiſm, and ſubordinate Judges of the Fitneſs " and Qualifications of ſuch Perſons as are to " be admitted to it. For they who are en- " truſted with the ordinary Adminiſtration of " ſuch a Myſtery, as conveys or ſeals Re- " miſſion of Sins to Men, muſt be allowed to " be the proper Inſtruments of binding and " looſing, of retaining and remitting Mens " Sins, whillſt they are authorized to admit " the worthy, and reject the unworthy from " the Participation of ſuch a Myſtery.

" THE Caſe is the very ſame with reſpect " to their Power in adminiſtering the other " Sacrament of the LORD's Supper. For that " alſo is a Means of conveying and ſealing " to Men the Remiſſion of Sins. It only dif- " fers from Baptiſm in this; that Baptiſm is " the firſt Grant of ſuch a Bleſſing, and the " LORD's Supper is a farther Confirmation, " or Continuance and Repetition of it. So " that as Miniſters are empowered, by Virtue " of being Stewards of CHRIST's Myſteries, " to admit the worthy to a Participation of " the Euchariſt, and debar the unworthy, or " ſcandalous and prophane Livers, from the " Benefit of ſuch Communion; ſo far they are " inveſted with Power of remitting or retain- " ing Mens Sins, as being proper Judges of " Mens Qualifications for the Reception or " not Reception of ſuch a Myſtery, upon " which, in the ordinary Method and Diſ- " penſation of GOD's Grace, Remiſſion of " Sins is made to depend.

" AND herein conſiſts the firſt Act of the " Miniſter's Power in remitting or retaining " Sins, by applying unto Men the Sacraments " of the Church, in the Uſe of which Re- " miſſion of Sins is granted to all worthy " Receivers.

" 2. THE ſecond Act of this Power is the " declaratory Abſolution of the Word and " Doctrine, [d] Ambroſ. de Pœnitent. Lib. 1. cap. 7.

[e] See this proved, Orig. Eccleſ. Book XIX. Chap. i. n. 2.

[f] The Practice of the Primitive Church, in rejecting all ſuch from Baptiſm, who refuſed any of theſe neceſſary Conditions, is largely ſet forth by St. Auſtin, De Fide & Operibus, Cap. 15. 17. 18. &c. and both out of him and others, in Orig. Eccleſ. Book II. Chap. v. n. 6. and Chap. vii. n. 6. and 8.

" Doctrine, which conſiſts in publiſhing the " Terms and Conditions, upon which the " Goſpel promiſes Pardon and Remiſſion of " Sins. This is either general or particular: " The general Abſolution is ſuch as our Church " appoints every Miniſter to pronounce after " the general Confeſſion of Sins in her daily " Service; where it is ſaid, that GOD hath " given Power and Commandment to his Mi- " niſters, to declare and pronounce to his " People, being penitent, the Abſolution and " Remiſſion of their Sins; by virtue of which " Power they declare, that GOD pardoneth " and abſolveth all them that truly repent " and unfeignedly believe his holy Goſpel. " This in Effect is done, whenever a Miniſter " publiſhes or preaches the Terms of the " Goſpel to Men, declaring in GOD's Name " upon what Conditions Remiſſion of Sins may " be obtained; and the Deſign of it is to ex- " cite and encourage all Sinners to repent " and turn to GOD in Hopes of Mercy, " and to give Conſolation and Comfort to all " ſuch as do actually and ſincerely turn to " him. For which Reaſon the Church has " thought fit to inſert this into her publick " Offices, and give it a Place in her daily " Liturgy; which is a peculiar Excellency " and Commendation of her Service, the Want " whereof is lamented in ſome other Churches. " For Calvin [g] declares, he was very deſi- " rous to have had ſuch a general declaratory " Abſolution inſerted into the Geneva Liturgy, " but could not prevail with his Aſſociates to " introduce it.

" BUT beſides this general declaratory Ab- " ſolution retained in our Service, there is a " more particular Abſolution appointed to be " given to ſingle Perſons in ſome ſpecial " Caſes; that is, when Men labour under " Troubles of Mind and Diſquiet of Con- " ſcience for any particular Sins, which they " make Confeſſion of to a Miniſter, with pro- " per Signs of a genuine Repentance. In that " Caſe the Miniſter is authorized, not only " to give them ghoſtly Counſel and Advice, " but alſo the Benefit of Abſolution; that is, " if upon a juſt Examination of their Caſe, " he judges them to be real Penitents before " GOD, that he may not only declare to " them the general Promiſes of Pardon, but " aſſure them in particular, that as far as he " can judge of their Caſe by the viſible To- " kens and Indications of their Repentance, " he eſteems them abſolved before GOD, and " accordingly declares and pronounces to them " their Abſolution. This is no infallible Judg- " ment indeed, becauſe one Man may deceive " another by ſpecious Pretences of Repen- " tance, which are not always real: But yet it " is as great an Aſſurance, as a prudent, ſaga- " cious, and pious Miniſter of CHRIST can " give to his Fellow-Creature for his Satisfa- " ction, without particular Inſpiration.

" AND it muſt needs be of conſiderable " Weight and Moment towards the Satiſ- " faction and Comfort of an afflicted, or a " doubtful and deſponding Soul, to have the " Declaration of a skilful Phyſician to rely " upon; to have one, who by his Office is " qualified to be a proper Judge in ſuch Caſes, " to pronounce his Abſolution.

" THEREFORE our Church, for the Com- " fort of ſuch penitent Sinners, has appointed " the Miniſter in two of her Offices (the Ex- " hortation to the Communion, and the Viſi- " tation of the Sick) to grant ſuch a parti- " cular Abſolution, ſaying in one of them, By " the Authority of JESUS CHRIST committed un- " to me, I abſolve thee from all thy Offences. Which " though it be not an abſolute Authority, yet " it is ſuch a Declaration of GOD's Will, as " one Man can make to another upon the " niceſt Enquiry into his State, and matureſt " Conſideration. It is like the Prieſt's Decla- " ration under the Old Law concerning the " Leper, whether he was clean or unclean; " His Declaration or Judgment concerning " ſuch an one is ſaid to be the cleanſing or " polluting him; the making him clean or " unclean; though ſtrictly ſpeaking, the Prieſt " did neither make him leprous, nor not le- " prous, but only declare upon a juſt Exa- " mination and View, whether he was ſo or " not. In like manner St. Jerom, and the " Maſter of the Sentences, and many others " after them, have obſerved [*], that the Mi- " niſters of the Goſpel have that Right and " Office, in remitting or retaining Sins, " which the legal Prieſts had of old under " the Law in curing of the Lepers: They " forgive Sins or retain them, whilſt they ſhew " and declare, that they are forgiven or re- " tained by GOD. And ſuch a Declaration, " proceeding from the Mouth of thoſe who " are conſtituted Miniſterial Judges of par- " ticular Mens Repentance, is juſtly conſtru- " ed an Evangelical Abſolution, ſufficient to " miniſter Satisfaction and Comfort to the pe- " nitent Sinner.

" 3. THE third Act of this Miniſterial " Power is Interceſſion with GOD for Par- " don of Sins through the Merits of CHRIST; " which is what the Church has always cal- " led the Abſolution of Prayer, joined to the " Abſolution of the Word and Sacraments. " This always either implicitly or expreſsly " accompanies the other Acts of Abſolution " [*], as

" [*], as a chief Part of the Miniſter's Office, " which is to intercede and pray to GOD " for the Sins of the People. The Sacraments " are ſometimes adminiſtered in a precatory " Form, as is that of the Euchariſt in our Li- " turgy: The Body of our Lord JESUS CHRIST " preſerve thy Body and Soul unto Everlaſting Life. " And ſo [h] ſome tell us, that Baptiſm now " in the Greek Church is adminiſtered in the " like Manner and Form, Baptizetur Servus Chriſti " in Nomine Patris, &c. Let the Servant of " CHRIST be baptized in the Name of the " FATHER, SON, and HOLY GHOST, by " Way of Prayer. And though our preſent " Form, I baptize thee, differ a little from " this; yet it is always accompanied with " Prayers, that GOD would releaſe the Par- " ty baptized of Sins, and grant him all the " Benefits of Regeneration. So it is obſerva- " ble, that immediately after the general de- " claratory Abſolution in our Liturgy, the " Church appoints the Lord's-Prayer to be " uſed, as that whereby we obtain a general " Diſcharge or Remiſſion of Sins of daily In- " curſion. And ſome of our Churches Forms " of Abſolution are plain and direct Prayers " for Pardon and Forgiveneſs. As that in " the Communion-Office after the general " Confeſſion; where the Rubrick ſays, Then " ſhall the Prieſt or the Biſhop being preſent, ſtand " up, and turning himſelf to the People, pronounce " this Abſolution: Almighty GOD our Heavenly " Father, who of his great Mercy hath promiſed " Forgiveneſs of Sins to all them that with hearty " Repentance and true Faith turn unto him; have " Mercy upon you, pardon and deliver you from all " your Sins, confirm and ſtrengthen you in all Good- " neſs, and bring you to Everlaſting Life, through " JESUS CHRIST our Lord. Here the declara- " tory Abſolution, and the precatory are " joined together in the ſame Prayer: For the " Prayer conſiſts partly of a Declaration of " GOD's Promiſes to pardon true penitent " Sinners, and partly of an Interceſſion with " GOD for actual Pardon for particular Sin- " ners, for whom the Miniſter then makes " his Application and Addreſs to the Throne " of Grace. And there are many other ſuch " Form of Abſolution throughout the Liturgy " of our Church: Nay all the Abſolutions of " the ancient Church, when Penitents after " Excommunication and a long Courſe of " Diſcipline were received into Grace and " Favour again, were accompanied with Im- " poſition of Hands and Prayer [*], to de- " note that the Miniſterial Benediction and " Interceſſion with GOD for Sinners, was a " principal, though not the only Act of Sa- " cerdotal Power in the Buſineſs of Evange- " lical Abſolution. And this was conforma- " ble to the Rule of Benediction given by " Moſes to the Prieſts of the Old Law, Numb. " vi. 27. They ſhall put my Name upon the Children " of Iſrael, and I will bleſs them. It is GOD, " properly ſpeaking, that bleſſes and pardons: " And yet when the Prieſts intercede with " GOD for theſe Things, they are alſo ſaid " in their Way to give Bleſſing and Abſolu- " tion. All which fully evinces Interceſſion " and Prayer to be one Sort of Miniſterial " Abſolution, as it is a Means in the Hand of " Man, whereby GOD is pleaſed to derive " and ſhower down the Bleſſing of his Abſo- " lution upon his People.

" THERE is yet a fourth Inſtance of this " Power of remitting or retaining Sins, which " is the Power of executing Church-Diſcipline " and Cenſures upon Delinquents. This con- " ſiſts in excluding flagitious and ſcandalous " Sinners from the Communion of the Church, " and receiving Penitents into Communion " again upon their Submiſſion and Repen- " tance. This is properly a judicial Act: For " as the Miniſters of CHRIST are Judges of " Mens Qualifications for their firſt Admiſſion " into the Church by Baptiſm, ſo are they " Judges of their Qualifications for their Con- " tinuance in the ſame; and as Stewards of " the Myſteries of GOD, they are obliged " to ſeparate the precious from the vile, and " diſtinguiſh the worthy Receivers of thoſe " Myſteries from the Prophaners and Con- " temners of them. Holy Things are not to be " given unto Dogs, neither are Pearls to be caſt be- " fore Swine: And therefore when Men de- " baſe themſelves to thoſe infamous and bru- " tiſh Characters, they have no longer a Right " to the Privileges of Chriſtian Communi- " on; but are to be lopped off as unſound " Branches, partly to avoid Contagion and " Infection of the ſound Members, and part- " ly to make the Sinners themſelves aſhamed, " and thereby bring them to Reformation and " Amendment.

" 'TIS true indeed, this Power is not ar- " bitrary in the Miniſters of CHRIST: They " are not to uſe this ſevereſt of Puniſhments " for every Jealouſy and Suſpicion of Evil; " nor yet for every light and trivial Offence, " which may be cured by other Remedies; " nor for greater and more heinous Crimes, " without previous Admonition, and Tryal of " other Methods, which CHRIST has appoint- " ed to be uſed for the Reformation of Sinners: " nor yet upon whole Bodies of Men [*], " where there is Danger of rooting up the " Wheat with the Tares, and of doing more " harm than good to the Church, by invol- " ving the Innocent with the Guilty, or lay- " ing whole Churches under Interdict, or " occaſioning

" occaſioning great and dangerous Schiſms, " to the Church's manifeſt Peril and De- " ſtruction. For the Deſign of this Power " and Diſcipline is for Edification, and not " for Deſtruction; to cleanſe and purify the " Church, but not to ſhock its very Con- " ſtitution, and raze and overturn its Foun- " dations by an indiſcreet and intemperate " Zeal for the Preſervation of it. And there- " fore here, if ever, the Miniſterial Power is " to be exerciſed with the greateſt Wiſdom " and Prudence, as well as Charity and Con- " cern for the Souls of Men, and the Good " of the whole Community. Of all which " the Miniſters of CHRIST are conſtituted " diſcretionary Judges, inveſted with Power " to examine both Mens Faith and Morals, " and to exclude the Scandalous and Pro- " phane, and to re-admit the truly Penitent " upon their giving evident Tokens of a real " Converſion, and bringing forth Fruits meet " for Repentance. They are CHRIST's Sub- " ſtitutes and Vicegerents in his Church, " binding and looſing, opening and ſhutting " with the Keys of the Kingdom of Heaven: " Which ſo long as they uſe according to the " Rules preſcribed them by CHRIST, their " Sentence, though only miniſterial, is of " great Effect in the External Communion of " the Church at preſent, and will be found to " be of Force, as a prejudging Forerunner " of the Sentence of the laſt Day. For un- " der theſe Limitations, and reſerving a due " Prerogative to the infallible Sovereignty of " CHRIST, it cannot be doubted, but that " whoſeſoever Sins they retain, they are re- " tained; and whoſeſoever Sins they remit, " they are remitted unto them.

I ſhould now have proceeded to the third Enquiry, how far it is neceſſary for all Men to ſubmit to the Miniſterial Exerciſe of this Power in all the Four ſeveral Branches of it thus explained? And alſo have reduced this whole Conſideration to Practice. But becauſe the juſt Examination of theſe Things would exceed the Limits of the preſent Diſcourſe, I ſhall only ſay theſe Two Things by Way of general Remark in the Cloſe of it.

1. THAT the Neceſſity of Abſolution in any Kind is the ſame as the Neceſſity of the Thing by which it is wrought and miniſtred to us. So that if there be any Neceſſity of receiving the two Sacraments of Baptiſm and the LORD's Supper, there is the ſame Neceſſity of receiving the ſacramental Abſolution, that is conveyed to us by and in the Uſe of thoſe Holy Myſteries. If there be any Neceſſity of having the Conditions of the Goſpel, and GOD's general Promiſes of Pardon declared to us, and applied to our Souls; then there is an equal Neceſſity of a general declaratory Abſolution, to excite our Hopes, and invigorate our Faith, and engage us to a true Repentance and holy Obedience. If there be any Neceſſity for an afflicted Soul, that labours under inſuperable Doubts and Troubles of Mind, to be relieved of her Burden, and to be quietly ſettled in a State of Comfort and Satisfaction; then there is a like Neceſſity of a particular declaratory Abſolution. If there be any Neceſſity of the publick Prayers of the Church, to implore GOD's Mercy for the Remiſſion of Sins to publick Penitents; then there is the ſame Neceſſity of a precatory Abſolution. And finally if there be any Neceſſity for ſcandalous Sinners, who are caſt out of the Church, to be reſtored to the Peace and Communion of the Church again, in order to make their Peace with GOD; then there is a Neceſſity of a judicial Abſolution. So far as any of theſe Offices and Miniſtries are neceſſary in the Church, ſo far the ſeveral Sorts of Abſolution, that depend upon them, muſt be concluded to be neceſſary likewiſe. And ſo far a Reſpect is due to them, as the Ordinances of GOD: Inſomuch as that where they may be ordinarily had, they are not ordinarily to be omitted; much leſs to be deſpiſed or neglected; becauſe that, in other Words, is the ſame Thing as contemning the Sacraments of CHRIST, and publick Prayer, and Preaching, and the Diſcipline and Cenſures of the Church, which are Ordinances of GOD's own appointing.

2. THE other Thing I am to remark in the Cloſe of this Diſcourſe, is, That whatever Neceſſity there be of an External Abſolution, yet there is ſtill a greater Neceſſity of the Internal Qualifications of Mens own Minds in order to receive it. Theſe Qualifications are a true Faith, a true Repentance, and new Obedience of Life; which are the Goſpel Conditions, required to make any human Abſolution effectual to our Pardon. GOD may, and ſometimes does (where there is no Contempt) diſpenſe with the Want of the former, but he never diſpenſes with the latter: For without Holineſs no Man ſhall ſee the LORD. It is neither Confeſſion nor Attrition, nor an External Abſolution of any Kind, but only a ſincere Converſion, that will qualify us for his Pardon. And therefore as ever we expect to be abſolved in Heaven, we muſt prepare ourſelves with thoſe Qualifications, which alone can give us Security at the Day of Judgment. GOD of his Mercy inſpire us all with theſe moſt neceſſary Qualifications, through the Interceſſion and Merits of the Great High-Prieſt of our Profeſſion, JESUS CHRIST our Bleſſed Lord and Saviour. To whom, &c.

SERMON II.

JOHN XX. 23.

Whoſeſoever Sins ye remit, they are remitted unto them; and whoſeſoever Sins ye retain, they are retained.

IN the former Diſcourſe upon theſe Words, I propoſed three Enquiries to be made concerning the Doctrine and Exerciſe of Miniſterial Abſolution:

I. To examine into the Nature of this Power in general, as it belongs to Man: Becauſe notwithſtanding the Commiſſion and Authority granted to Man, there is ſtill a vaſt Difference to be made between the Power of forgiving Sins as exerciſed by GOD, and as exerciſed by Man.

II. To examine more particularly into the Nature of the ſeveral Sorts of Abſolution, as exerciſed by Man.

III. To enquire how far all Men are concerned to ſubmit to the Exerciſe of this Power in the ſeveral Branches of it.

I have already diſcourſed of the two firſt, and now proceed to the Third Enquiry. In reſolving of which it will be proper to conſider the Queſtion diſtinctly, with reſpect to the four ſeveral Branches of Miniſterial Abſolution: The Abſolution of the Two Sacraments; the declaratory Abſolution of the Word and Doctrine; the precatory Abſolution; and the judicial Abſolution of publick Diſcipline. Concerning all which it has already been obſerved in general, that ſo far as either the Sacraments, or Preaching of the Word, or publick Prayer, or publick Diſcipline, are of any Uſe or Force in the Chriſtian Church; ſo far the Abſolutions are to be embraced, that attend any of theſe Divine Inſtitutions. I ſhall now make a more particular Enquiry into the Neceſſity of each of them.

1. I begin with the Neceſſity of ſacramental Abſolution. Concerning which it muſt be aſſerted, that whatever Neceſſity there is of receiving the Sacrament of Baptiſm, or the LORD'S Supper, appointed for all who have Opportunity to receive them; there is the ſame Neceſſity of receiving the ſacramental Abſolution that depends upon them: Becauſe they are ſo intimately united and linked together, that they cannot be ſeparated from each other; neither does GOD diſpenſe with the Want of ſacramental Abſolution in any Caſe, but where he diſpenſes with the Want of the Sacraments themſelves. GOD can indeed, and often does diſpenſe with the Want of the Sacraments, and ſupply them by his extraordinary Grace, where either by the Frowardneſs of his Miniſters, or their Neglect, or ſome unforeſeen Accident, or natural Incapacity, there is no Poſſibility [*] of receiving them: But Mens own Neglect or Contempt of his Ordinances will doubtleſs be imputed to them as a Crime, for which they muſt expect to give Account to the Sovereign Author of theſe Inſtitutions at his great Tribunal. So in the like Caſes, if Men through any unavoidable Neceſſity want the Abſolution which is exhibited in theſe Two Sacraments, GOD can ſupply this Defect, and by his extraordinary Grace grant them Abſolution in ſome other Way: But if Men are juſtly debarred by the Miniſters of GOD from the ſacramental Abſolution, or Pardon of Sins belonging to theſe Sacraments, not by any Neceſſity, but only for their own Contumacy, in refuſing to qualify themſelves by the Performance of ſuch Conditions as are required of worthy Receivers; in this Caſe the Miniſter's Act, in retaining their Sins, and refuſing them this ſacramental Abſolution, becauſe he judges them apparently unqualified for it, and unworthy of it, will doubtleſs be ratified and confirmed by CHRIST, as the Supreme Judge, and Aſſerter of his own Authority given unto Men to retain Sins, and deny Abſolution to thoſe who are profeſſed Deſpiſers and Contemners of the Conditions upon which he has offered it. And this plainly ſhews what Neceſſity there is of Abſolution, as that ſignifies in the firſt Place the Abſolution of the Two Sacraments, which is to be granted to the Worthy, and (as far as human Judgment can go) to no other but thoſe thoſe that are worthy of it. Therefore Men are to prepare for this Abſolution, for the ſame Reaſons that they are to prepare for the Reception of either of the Sacraments, which in the ordinary Methods and Ways of diſpenſing GOD's Grace, are made the neceſſary Means of Salvation.

2. IN the next Place for the declaratory Abſolution of the Word and Doctrine. Whatever Neceſſity there is of having the Truth of GOD's Promiſes operatively and effectively applied to Mens Souls, in order to work in them Faith and Hope, Repentance and New Obedience; That very Neceſſity there is of this general declaratory Abſolution, either at firſt to create and excite, or afterwards to foment and cheriſh theſe good Qualities, upon which the Pardon of Sins depends. Faith, we are told, comes by Hearing, and Hearing by the Word of GOD. And Men do not ordinarily hear without a Preacher, nor ordinarily preach, except they be ſent. Therefore as it is neceſſary that Men ſhould believe and repent, and obey the Goſpel; ſo it is neceſſary they ſhould hear the general Declarations of Pardon, which GOD has made in his Goſpel on the one Hand, and the Declarations of Wrath revealed from Heaven on the other Hand, in order to engage them to comply with thoſe Terms, upon which the Goſpel makes the Remiſſion of Sins to depend. And as the Heralds of the Goſpel are obliged to preach and declare the Mind of GOD towards repenting and unrepenting Sinners; ſo every Man is concerned to hear, and fear, and do no more preſumptuouſly, as he expects to find Favour and Mercy of GOD at the Day of Judgment. This is the Neceſſity and Uſe of declaratory Abſolutions, both to beget, and to ſupport that Faith, which is the firſt Spring and Foundation of a Chriſtian Life. It is the Word of GOD, whereby we are begotten to a lively Hope through the Goſpel. And we may reaſonably ſuppoſe, that Faith will laſt no longer than the Preaching of the Goſpel does in the World. When Antichriſt is come to his full Height, and ſeated in the Meridian of his Kingdom; when inſtead of Goſpel-Truth, he ſhall fill Men with Error by Signs and lying Wonders, and all Deceivableneſs of Unrighteouſneſs; then will be verified what our SAVIOUR has predicted, When the Son of Man cometh, ſhall he find Faith on Earth? It will be impoſſible to maintain Faith generally among Men, without the conſtant Declarations of the Goſpel to ſupport it. And That, if any Thing, may convince us of the neceſſary Uſe of a true Goſpel-Miniſtry, or ſuch an Order of Men, as have Authority and Commiſſion to declare the Will of GOD, to keep the very Faith itſelf from dwindling into nothing.

BUT I told you, that beſides the general Declarations of the Goſpel, there was ſometimes a more particular declaratory Abſolution neceſſary to relieve a diſtreſſed and wounded Conſcience, and extricate a deſponding and doubtful Sinner out of the Fears and perplexing Labyrinths of Sin: And the very Neceſſity of Comfort to the Feeble-minded, in ſuch a Caſe, is a ſufficient Argument of the Neceſſity of ſuch an Abſolution. For whither ſhould an anxious and afflicted Soul betake herſelf, but to thoſe whom GOD has appointed as proper Helps and Judges in the Caſe? Whoſe Office inveſts them with ſomething of Authority, and whoſe Studies and Experience qualify them to ſearch and examine into the Nature of Spiritual Diſeaſes, and then judge of proper Methods of Cure, and apply ſuitable Remedies to them. Should ſuch a Soul fly immediately and ſolely to GOD? That indeed will be very well, had ſhe ſufficient Faith, and Courage, and Confidence to approach him. But he is the Perſon whom ſhe has offended, and now ſhe thinks of nothing but his Wrath and Indignation. Should ſhe betake herſelf to the Son of GOD, the great Interceſſor and Mediator between GOD and Man? All would be right in this Caſe too, could ſhe come with full Aſſurance of Faith to him, as to a merciful and faithful High-Prieſt, who is both able and willing to ſave to the uttermoſt all that truly turn to him. But that is her great Misfortune, and her very Diſeaſe, that ſhe dares not come now ſo boldly to the Throne of Grace, to find Help in Time of Need: Or if ſhe does come even with Prayers and Tears to CHRIST, ſhe is afraid they will not be accepted; becauſe ſhe can now hardly look upon him as her SAVIOUR, but as her offended Judge. She is overwhelmed and confounded with her own Ingratitude, to think, that ſhe was once like an Angel of Light, pure and immaculate in the Blood of CHRIST; but now ſhe has deſerted her Station, and is fallen from Grace. She was once enlightned, and had taſted of the Heavenly Gift, and was made Partaker of the HOLY GHOST, and taſted the Good Word of GOD, and the Powers of the World to come: But now ſhe is fallen away, and has crucified to herſelf the Son of GOD afreſh, and put him to an open Shame. She has trodden under Foot the Son of GOD, and counted the Blood of the Covenant, wherewith ſhe was ſanctified, an unholy Thing, and has done Deſpite to the Spirit of Grace. And how ſhall ſhe make her Addreſſes to CHRIST, whom ſhe has thus ſhamefully abuſed? What then? Shall ſhe call in the Aſſiſtance and Counſel of the holy Angels? They are miniſtring Spirits indeed, ſent forth to miniſter to thoſe who are Heirs of Salvation; but their Miniſtry is wholly ſpiritual and indiſcernable: They maintain now no viſible Intercourſe with Men. But ſhe has need of ſome viſible Comforter, to whom ſhe may lay open her Grief, and take his Advice in the midſt of all her Sorrows; and this muſt be ſome of her viſible Fellow-Creatures: And who ſo proper among theſe, as thoſe whom GOD himſelf has appointed for this Purpoſe? Private Men may ſhew their Charity to ſuch a languiſhing Soul, as far as their Knowledge and their Abilities will direct them: Yet after all there may be a Neceſſity of ſome farther Aſſiſtance. And whence may that more reaſonably be expected, than from the Mouths of thoſe, whoſe Lips ſhould preſerve Knowledge? Whoſe Studies are the holy Scriptures; whoſe Buſineſs is to explain them to Men; to ſolve their Doubts, and take off their Scruples; to examine their Repentance, and compare it for them with the Rule of GOD's Word; and chiefly to guard them againſt the Wiles of Satan, and teach them not to wreſt the Scripture to their own Deſtruction. For this is commonly the moſt difficult Part in this whole Affair with ſuch diſtreſſed Souls, to fortify them againſt the Subtilties of Satan, who transforms himſelf into an Angel of Light, and teaches them to plead Scripture againſt themſelves; making that which was deſigned for their Health and Strength, become to them an Occaſion of falling; and robbing them of their Peace by that very Inſtrument which was intended to raiſe their Hopes, and fix their Conſolation. Indeed this is Satan's Maſter-Piece of Temptation, to accoſt and tempt us in Scripture-Dialect, and with the Tongue of an Angel: And he never ſpeaks more like himſelf, that is, more artfully ſubtil and diabolical, than when he ſpeaks to us the Language of Heaven. Thus he tempted our SAVIOUR himſelf, by quoting Scripture; by ſaying, thus and thus it is written. And what wonder then, that he ſhould uſe the ſame Weapon againſt other Men, who are leſs able to reſiſt him? But the weaker Men are, and the more they are liable to Temptation, the greater Neceſſity there is in that Caſe, that they ſhould have Recourſe to ſome abler Hand, who can give them both Succour and Direction; who can rightly apply the Word of GOD to their Souls, and give them a right Apprehenſion both of GOD and themſelves; who can ſet every Text of Scripture, which Satan abuſes, in its proper Light; and ſo baffle all his Arguments, and countermine all his Plots by the ſame Inſtrument that he abuſes with a Deſign to beguile Men and overthrow them.

IT would be well indeed, if all Men could ſo dexterouſly uſe the Sword of the SPIRIT, which is the Word of GOD, as that they might be able of themſelves (like our SAVIOUR in his Temptation) to anſwer and repel all Satan's Sophiſtry and falſe Gloſſes upon the holy Text, by juſter Comments and more pertinent Allegations. But if this cannot be expected from the weaker Sort, it is neceſſary they ſhould in ſuch Caſes betake themſelves for Help to thoſe that are more experienced, and have their Senſes more exerciſed to diſcern between Good and Evil.

COMMON Reaſon and Intereſt direct Men what to do, when they are under any Doubts or Difficulties in all other Concerns. He who doubts his Title to a Temporal Eſtate, thinks himſelf obliged to conſult an able Lawyer, and take his Advice and Counſel; and in Caſe of a bodily Diſtemper every Man as readily betakes himſelf to a skilful and experienced Phyſician: And there is the ſame Reaſon in ſpiritual Diſtempers to engage a Man to conſult a ſpiritual Guide, who may be preſumed to be as learned and skilful in his Profeſſion as either of the former: His Office obliges him to a more general and exact Study of the Scriptures; to be more expert and accurate in reſolving Caſes of Conſcience, and more ready and prepared to anſwer all the Objections, Doubts and Scruples, that either the natural Weakneſs of Mens own Fancies, or the Subtilty of Satan throws in upon their Minds. His Buſineſs and Employment is to underſtand the Nature of GOD, and his Religion, and his Laws, and the Extent of his Mercy, and the Terms of Reconciliation to penitent Sinners. He can therefore examine Mens Tranſgreſſions, and judge of their Repentance and Condition better than themſelves. Beſides all this, he is conſtituted by GOD to be his Miniſter here upon Earth, for theſe very Purpoſes; not only in CHRIST's Stead to beſeech them to be reconciled to GOD, and to ſhew them the Method of Reconciliation, and to pray for them; but alſo upon an impartial View of their Condition, if he finds them real Penitents, to declare them abſolved by GOD, and in his Favour: His Commiſſion is to aſſure them, that in Spite of all that Satan can ſuggeſt to the contrary, there are no Sins ſo great that GOD cannot pardon, provided they bring the Condition of Pardon, which is a true Repentance: And he can judge, though not with an infallible Judgment, yet with a moral Certainty, whether their Repentance be ſincere and perfect; and give them Directions to ſupply it where it is defective; and free them from all unreaſonable Scruples, which are apt to diſcompoſe and trouble their Souls: All which muſt needs be of extraordinary and ſovereign Uſe to Perſons in ſuch a Condition, and afford them the ſureſt Relief, and the moſt ſolid Comfort and Satisfaction, that can be expected, without a particular Revelation, on this ſide Heaven.

SO that the Uſe and Advantage of ſpiritual Guides in ſuch a Caſe ſufficiently diſcovers the Reaſonableneſs and Neceſſity of making Application to them, in order to obtain the Benefit and Comfort of a particular declaratory Abſolution.

AND

AND upon this Account our Church, though ſhe lays no neceſſary Injunction upon Men to make a particular Confeſſion of their Sins to her Miniſters in all Caſes, yet wiſely requires them in this one ſpecial Caſe of Exigency to do it for their own Benefit and Satisfaction. If there be any of you, who by this means cannot quiet his own Conſcience (viz. by Confeſſion to GOD alone) but requireth farther Comfort and Counſel, let him go to ſome diſcreet and learned Miniſter of GOD's Word, and open his Grief; that by the Miniſtry of GOD's Holy Word he may receive the Benefit of Abſolution, together with ghoſtly Counſel and Advice, to the quieting of his Conſcience, and avoiding of all Scruple and Doubtfulneſs. This I take to be the true State of the Caſe, as to what concerns the Neceſſity of a particular Confeſſion and a particular declaratory Abſolution. It is not ſimply neceſſary for all Men, but only for thoſe whoſe Condition is ſuch, that they cannot have Peace and Satisfaction without it. And therefore the Church of Rome is highly to blame, which impoſes the abſolute Neceſſity of a particular Confeſſion, and a particular Abſolution, univerſally upon all Men, in all Caſes of mortal Sin, under Pain of Damnation. Our Church keeps cloſer to the Rule of Scripture and the Practice [*] of the ancient Church, in making particular Abſolution only neceſſary to thoſe, to whom the Neceſſity of the Caſe itſelf makes it ſo. And ſo much for the neceſſary Uſe of a general or particular declaratory Abſolution.

3. THE next Part of our Enquiry is, concerning the Neceſſity of a precatory Abſolution: And of this there is the ſame Neceſſity that there is of the Prayers of the Church for Pardon of Sins. We have obſerved before, that Prayer uſually accompanies all other Sorts of Abſolution, and is an Ingredient, and as it were the Form of ſome of them. The Sacraments are ordinarily adminiſtered with Prayer; and Prayer always immediately follows the Declaration of GOD's Will and Intention to pardon penitent Sinners in our publick Liturgy; and Prayer is the Means commonly uſed to reconcile a ſcandalous Offender, who for his Crimes has been judicially caſt out of the Church, and is now to be received again to Peace and Favour. So that as neceſſary as any of thoſe Abſolutions are, ſo neceſſary is the Abſolution of Prayer, that always ſo neceſſarily attends them. If it be neceſſary firſt for a Man to be releaſed of his Sins by the Sacrament of Baptiſm; it muſt be equally neceſſary for him to be admitted a Member of CHRIST by the Prayer, which the Adminiſtration of that Sacrament either includes or ſuppoſes: If he would have Abſolution by the Euchariſt, he muſt receive it with that uſual Form of Prayer, which the Church has appointed to be uſed in the Diſtribution of it. If he would have the general or particular Declaration of GOD's Will to pardon Sinners, made effectual to his own Abſolution, he muſt join with the Miniſter in interceding with GOD for the Pardon of his Offences. And if after any Excommunication for any ſcandalous Offence, he would be admitted formally into the Communion of the Church again, he muſt implore GOD's Mercy by the publick Miniſtry and Prayer of his Prieſts, becauſe that is the Rite and Ceremony [†] of ſuch an Admiſſion.

4. AND hence it follows in the laſt Place, that when Men are formally and judicially caſt out of the Church, by the Power of the Keys, for any ſcandalous Offences; there is a Neceſſity they ſhould have as formal and judicial an Abſolution, by an authentick Relaxation of their Bonds and Cenſures, to reſtore them again to the Peace and Privileges of Church Communion. For if the Excommunication be juſt and according to the Rules of CHRIST's Goſpel; they muſt either ſue for an Abſolution in the Way that he has appointed, or elſe the Bonds that are laid upon them, will ſtand in full Force againſt them; and their Excommunication and Expulſion from the Church on Earth will exclude them from the Kingdom of Heaven. I ſay if their Excommunication be juſt and legally founded. For it is one thing, when Men are unjuſtly caſt out of the Church, and excommunicated without Reaſon, by the raſh Exerciſe of a mere tyrannical and arbitrary Power; and quite another thing, when they are legally cenſured for their Impenitency, and obſtinate perſiſting in flagrant and notorious Crimes, to the Scandal of the Church, and Reproach of CHRIST's holy Religion. In the former Caſe there is no Danger to be feared from Excommunication, becauſe it is unjuſt: But in the latter Caſe it is the moſt dreadful Sentence that can be paſſed upon Earth againſt Man; becauſe what is done upon Earth, will be ratify'd in Heaven, and purſue a Man unto the Day of Judgment, unleſs a timely and ſincere Repentance and Reconciliation intervene to retract the Sentence. Which abundantly ſhews the Neceſſity of this Sort of Abſolution, and of all ſuch Things as are previous and neceſſary to obtain it. Men muſt truly repent of the Crimes which have given the Scandal; make humble and publick Confeſſion of their Sins before the Church; modeſtly ſubmit ſubmit to her Diſcipline, and give evident Tokens of their hearty Sorrow for having offended GOD and Man: And then after ſuch Satisfactions made, to convince the Church of their true Repentance by bringing forth Fruits meet for it, they muſt ſue to the ſame Hands to admit them to Communion, which were the Inſtruments under CHRIST of taking it from them: And they by the ſame Authority, wherewith they caſt them out of the Church, will receive them again; making Prayer and Interceſſion to GOD for them; and declaring them abſolved from the Bonds they were under, and now fully reſtored to all the Privileges of Chriſtian Communion. But without ſuch a proper Satisfaction as this, if Men continue obſtinate in their Sins, in a careleſs Impenitency, or contumacious Neglect or Contempt of the Churches Cenſures; they may be aſſured, that an Account of theſe Miſdemeanors, added to all their other Sins, will be required of them another Day; when CHRIST will vindicate the Authority of his Miniſters in all their juſt Proceedings, and confirm their Sentence by his unalterable Approbation.

WHAT Allowances GOD will make for ſome Mens Weakneſs, or Ignorance in this Affair, belongs not to us to determine. Neither would it be charitable in us, poſitively to condemn every Man that dies excommunicate in Foro externo, without an actual Relaxation of his Bonds, when he was truly penitent, and deſirous to be reconciled to the Church; but only ſome unforeſeen Accident and unavoidable Exigency prevented the Execution of his good Intention. In this caſe the Church has generally accepted the Will for the Deed, and declared ſuch to be virtually in her Communion [*] after Death: In like manner as they who die wthout Baptiſm or the Euchariſt, not by any Contempt, but by ſome preſſing Neceſſity, are charitably ſuppoſed to die in GOD's Favour by virtue of their Faith and Repentance, becauſe they do not deſpiſe GOD's Ordinances, but heartily deſire them. But the Caſe is otherwiſe with Men that live and die in Contempt of the Church's Diſcipline and Cenſures: If ſuch Men periſh, they may thank themſelves for it: The Church has no Power to abſolve thoſe who will not be abſolved: If they ſuffer their Sins to be retained on Earth, they will be retained in Heaven, and follow them to the Day of Judgment.

AND ſo I have done with the Third Enquiry, How far all Men are bound to ſubmit to the lawful Exerciſe of the Miniſterial Power of retaining and remitting Sin? Or what Neceſſity there is of Abſolution in the ſeveral Caſes now before us?

"IT now only remains, that we reduce "this whole Conſideration to Practice, and "ſhew what are the proper Uſes of this "Doctrine, both as it relates to the Mini-"ſters of CHRIST, and his People.

"AS to the Miniſters of CHRIST, there "is no Doctrine in the whole Body of "Chriſtianity more forcible than this, to "engage them either, Firſt, to Purity and "Holineſs of Life; or Secondly, to Diligence "in their Studies and Labours; or Thirdly, "to Fidelity in diſpenſing the Myſteries of "CHRIST, and Care in their Proceedings "with penitent and impenitent Sinners.

"1. IN the firſt Place, the Commiſſion of "Power to Miniſters to retain and remit "other Mens Sins, in whatever Senſe we "take it, is a great Engagement on them "to lead holy and pure Lives themſelves. "For it looks like an Abſurdity in Practice, "and is too often really thought ſo, that Men "ſhould be qualified to forgive other Mens "Sins, who are loaded with Guilt and Im-"purity themſelves. There is nothing ſo na-"tural and obvious as, Phyſician, heal thy-"ſelf: And therefore if it be not a real Ob-"jection againſt their Office, yet it is an un-"anſwerable one againſt their Perſons. If it "do not deſtroy the Tenor of their Commiſ-"ſion in the Nature of the Thing, yet it cer-"tainly diminiſhes their Authority and Re-"putation in the Opinion of Men; when "every profligate Sinner can retort upon "them, and ſay, Thou that teacheſt ano-"ther, teacheſt thou not thyſelf? Thou that "preacheſt, a Man ſhould not ſteal, doſt "thou ſteal? Thou that ſayeſt, a Man ſhould "not commit Adultery, doſt thou commit "Adultery? Thou that makeſt thy Boaſt of "the Law, through breaking the Law diſho-"noureſt thou GOD? It muſt needs take off "very much from the Veneration of the Sa-"crament of Baptiſm, to have a Man pre-"tend to waſh away the Sins of others, who "is himſelf polluted and prophane; and equal-"ly diminiſh the Reverence which is due to "the tremendous Myſtery of the Euchariſt, to "have it miniſtred with unholy Hands. It "cannot reliſh well with Men, to hear an "unſanctified Mouth give Bleſſing to others, "who in Effect is curſing himſelf; praying, "that the Blood of CHRIST may preſerve "others to Eternal Life, whilſt he himſelf "is eating and drinking his own Damnation, "not diſcerning the LORD's Body. But "above all, ſuch a Man cannot with any

[*] See Orig. Eccleſ. Book XIX Chap. 2. n. 11.

" tolerable Decency or Freedom discharge the " Office of punishing and correcting others, " who is himself more justly liable to Re- " buke and Censure. With what Face can he " debar others from Baptism or the Eucharist, " who is himself unqualified to receive ei- " ther? Or exclude others from the Church, " who is himself unworthy to enter into it? " Nothing therefore can be a greater Engage- " ment upon Ministers to lead holy and pure " Lives, than the Consideration of the Com- " mission which CHRIST has given them " to retain or remit other Mens Sins, whe- " ther in a sacramental Way, or a declara- " tory Way, or a precatory Way, or a ju- " dicial Way: Because without Purity they " can by no means answer the End of this " Office, and the Nature of their Trust, but " their Male-Administration will rise up in " Judgment against them and condemn them.

" 2. A Second Thing, which this Office " of retaining and remitting Sins requires of " Ministers, is great Diligence in their Stu- " dies and Labours, without which they can " never be able sufficiently to discharge it. " The Church indeed has made some Part " of this Work tolerably easy, by a prudent " Provision of many proper general Forms " of Absolution; such as the Forms of ad- " ministering the Absolution of the two Sa- " craments, and many general Forms of de- " claratory and precatory Absolution; to " which in her Wisdom she may add proper " Forms of Excommunication and judicial " Absolution. But when this is done, there " still remains a great deal more belonging " to the full Discharge of this Office, for " which the Church can make no particular " Provision: And therefore that must be left " to the Industry and Diligence of Mini- " sters in their particular Studies and Labours. " And this requires both a diffused Know- " ledge, and great Application; to be able " to understand the Nature of all GOD's " Laws, and the Bounds and Distinctions " betwixt every Virtue and Vice; to be able " to resolve all ordinary Cases of Conscience, " and answer such Doubts and Scruples as " are apt to arise in Mens Minds; to know " the Qualifications of particular Men, and " the Nature and Degrees and Sincerity of " their Repentance, in order to give them " a satisfactory Answer to their Demands, " and grant or refuse them the several Sorts " of Absolution, as they shall think pro- " per upon an impartial View of their " State and Condition. He that thinks all " this may be done without any great La- " bour and Study, and a diligent Search of " the holy Scriptures, the Rule and Record " of GOD's Will, seems neither to under- " stand the Nature of his Office, nor the " Needs of Men; nor what it is to stand " in the Place of CHRIST, and judge for " him between GOD and Man. The Priests " Lips should preserve Knowledge: And a " Man that considers the large Extent of " that Knowledge, together with the great " Variety of Cases and Persons, to which " he may have occasion to apply it, would " rather be tempted to cry out with the " Apostle, Who is sufficient for these Things? " And if this be not an Argument to en- " gage a Man to Industry in the Office of " a Spiritual Physician, it is hard to say " what is so.

" 3. BUT as this Consideration is an Ar- " gument for Purity and Industry, so it is " no less an Engagement to Fidelity also. It " is required in Stewards, the Apostle tells us, " that a Man be found faithful; and more espe- " cially in those who are Stewards of the " Mysteries of GOD, because that is the " greatest Concern of any other. It was Mo- " ses's Argument to temporal Judges, Deut. " i. 17. Ye shall not respect Persons in Judgment, " for the Judgment is GOD's: And the Ar- " gument will hold much stronger in Spiri- " tual Judgment, because the Consequence of " the Decision is of greater Importance. Here " then a just Medium is always to be obser- " ved between Flattery and an imperious " Stiffness and Moroseness; between too great " Indulgence on the one Hand, and too " great Severity on the other. The Judg- " ment is GOD's; and therefore Men are " neither to be absolved nor condemned at " the mere arbitrary Will of the Minister, " but by the Rules prescribed by the Sove- " reign LORD. If Men are either to be " received into the Church, or to be cast " out of it, the only Thing here to be re- " garded, is their Performance or not Per- " formance of the Conditions, which the " Gospel requires. No true Penitent is to " be denied Absolution in any Kind: No " impenitent Person for any Favour or Re- " spect to have the Benefit of it. If Men " are qualified for Baptism or the Eucharist, it " is not in the Minister's Power, properly " speaking, to deny them the Privilege of " either: If they are utterly unqualified, it " is not in his Power to admit them to ei- " ther, if he will be just to his Commission, " and faithful to his Trust. So neither can " he, with an equitable Judgment, declare " the Impenitent to be absolved, nor retain " the Sins of the Penitent: For this is slay- " ing the Souls that should not die; and saving the " Souls alive, that should not live: It is making " the Heart of the Righteous sad, whom GOD " has not made sad; and strengthening the Hands " of the Wicked, that he should not return from his " wicked Way, by promising him Life; as GOD " complains of the false Prophets by the Pro- " phet Ezekiel, Chap. xiii. 19, 22. All this " is a manifest Abuse of the Ministerial Pow- " er, tending directly to discourage Virtue " and

" and encourage Vice: And all ſuch Judg" ments GOD himſelf will reverſe, and pu-
" niſh the Male-adminiſtration of his unfaith-
" ful Stewards. For as in all Caſes, ſo eſpe-
" cially in this, he that juſtifieth the Wicked,
" and he that condemneth the Juſt, even they
" both are Abomination to the LORD. No" thing therefore is more neceſſary in the " Stewards of the Myſteries of GOD, than " that they be found faithful; giving to every " Man his proper Portion, Peace to the Righ" teous, and Terror to the Wicked: Other-
" wiſe they are threatned to have their Por" tion with the Hypocrites, where ſhall be " weeping and wailing and gnaſhing of Teeth.
" It is a Phariſaical Arrogance, St. Jerom [*]
" ſays, for a Biſhop or a Prieſt, under Pre-
" tence of having the Keys of the King" dom of Heaven, to aſſume to himſelf the " Power of condemning the Innocent, or of " abſolving the Guilty. He that does ſo, " abuſes his Commiſſion, and muſt expect to " give Account to GOD of his illegal Ad-
" miniſtration.

" THUS we ſee, what Ties and Obliga" tions this Doctrine lays upon the Stewards
" of GOD, to be firſt, Holy, ſecondly, Di" ligent, thirdly, Faithful in their Service.
" Let us now ſee what Influence the ſame " Doctrine ought to have upon all GOD's " People.

" AND here I ſhall not inſiſt upon any " Perſonal Reſpect, that is due from them to " Miniſters, as the Meſſengers of GOD and " Embaſſadors of CHRIST, but only as a " Religious Regard is to be had to the ſe-" veral Parts of the Office with which they " are intruſted. If GOD has made them In-" ſtruments of Remiſſion of Sins by thoſe four
" ſeveral Ways of Abſolution; then at leaſt it " becomes every one to be careful, that he
" do not by any wilful Neglect or Contempt
" deprive himſelf of any one of thoſe Me" thods of Expiation.

" IF Baptiſm be an ordinary Means of Re-
" miſſion of Sins, and ſo neceſſary by di" vine Command, that unleſs a Man, who " has Opportunity, be born again of Water
" and of the Spirit, he cannot enter into
" the Kingdom of GOD; it highly concerns
" all Men who are unbaptized, to preſent
" themſelves and their Children to CHRIST's " holy Ordinance, that they may receive the " promiſed Remiſſion of Sins, and ſpiritual
" Regeneration. For though zealous Martyrs " and pious Catechumens may be ſaved in " an extraordinary Way, yet that is not the " Condition of Deſpiſers.

" AGAIN, if the Euchariſt be another
" Means of Abſolution, then it equally con" cerns Men not to live in the manifeſt
" Neglect or Contempt of that holy Ordinance,
" but to be as frequent as they can in the " Reception of it, leſt they deprive them-
" ſelvs of the Grace and Pardon exhibited
" and ſealed in that Sacred Inſtitution.

" IF the Prayers of the Church be like-" wiſe a farther Means of deriving GOD's
" Bleſſing upon his People; that muſt be al" lowed to be an Argument to engage Men
" conſtantly to attend them: And every " Man ſhould be glad to ſay, We wait for " thy Loving-kindneſs, O LORD, in the midſt
" of thy Temple.

" IF the declaratory Abſolution be of any Uſe
" and Comfort to true Penitents; that ſhould
" make Men ſtrive to be among the firſt
" and foremoſt in GOD's Service, and rather " wait at the Poſts of his Doors before the " Service begins, than come dropping in after" wards, as if they were haled into GOD's " Preſence, when they have loſt both the " Benefit of their own Confeſſion and his " Abſolution.

" IF a particular declaratory Abſolution be " of any Uſe and Service to an afflicted Con-
" ſcience and a doubting Mind; that ſhould
" ingage thoſe, who cannot quiet their own
" Concience, but require farther Comfort or " Counſel, to have Recourſe to ſome diſcreet " and learned Miniſter of GOD's Word, and " open their Grief; that by the Miniſtry of " GOD's holy Word they may receive the " Benefit of Abſolution, together with ghoſtly
" Counſel and Advice, to the quieting of " their Conſcience, and avoiding all Scruple
" and Doubtfulneſs.

" LASTLY, If it be neceſſary, that when " Men are excommunicated and caſt out of " the Church, for any ſcandalous Crimes,
" they ſhould endeavour to reconcile themſelves
" again to GOD and his Church, by ob" taining a Judicial Abſolution; that ſhews
" what Reverence is due to Church-Diſcpline
" and Cenſures, that are juſtly paſt upon " them; and that a wilful Neglect and Con" tempt of Reconciliation in ſuch a Caſe
" may prove more fatal to them than they are " apt to imagine; and in the juſt Judgment " of CHRIST, confirming the Sentences of " his Miniſters, finally exclude them from
" the Kingdom of Heaven.

" BUT when they have paid the greateſt
" outward Reverence imaginable to theſe
" Ordinances;

[*] Hieron. Com. in Mat. xvi. Tom. 9. p. 49. See the Place at length, Orig. Eccleſ. Book XIX. Chap. ii. n. 6.

" Ordinances, there is one thing ſtill behind " to make them effectual; which if it be wan- " ting, all the Abſolutions in the World " will avail them nothing: And that is the " internal Qualifications of their own Hearts " and Souls by an unfeigned Repentance and " Obedience; without which all the reſt are " but mere Forms, that cannot compleatly " operate, whilſt Men put in Bars and Impe- " diments againſt them. For all Abſolutions " are conditional, and ſuppoſe Repentance " and Obedience, before they confer any " real Benefit on the Sinner. The Miniſter " can only lend his Mouth or his Hand " toward the external act of an Abſolution; " but he cannot abſolve internally; much " leſs the unqualified Sinner. CHRIST him- " ſelf has aſſured us, that unleſs Men repent, " they muſt inevitably periſh; and that un- " leſs they forgive Men their Treſpaſſes, " their heavenly Father will not forgive them " their Treſpaſſes. Now it would be abſurd " to think, after this, that a Sinner who " performs neither of theſe Conditions, " ſhould notwithſtanding be pardoned by " GOD, continuing impenitent ſtill; and " only becauſe he chances ſurreptitiouſly to be " looſed on Earth by ſome Error or Fraud, " that therefore he ſhould be alſo moſt cer- " tainly looſed in Heaven. This were to " imagine one of the vaineſt Things in " the World, that CHRIST to make " his Prieſt's Words true, would make his " own Words falſe: As they muſt needs be, " if any outward Abſolution, given by a fal- " lible and miſtaken Man, could tranſlate an " impenitent Sinner into the Kingdom of " Heaven.

" I ſay not this to leſſen the Reverence " that is due to any of the forementioned " ſorts of Abſolution, but that the Ordinan- " ces of GOD may have their proper Ef- " fect upon us, whilſt the outward and in- " ward Acts go together, to make up the " perfect Work of an Abſolution; and that " CHRIST may not ſay to us at the laſt Day, " Theſe Things ought ye to have done, and " not to have left the other undone. He that " deſpiſes an Abſolution of any Kind, which " GOD has appointed, deſpiſes indeed the " Ordinance of GOD: But he that receives " it without Repentance and Obedience, de- " ſpiſes the weightier Things of the Law, " and only ſtrains at a Gnat to ſwallow a " Camel. Let not ſuch a Man think he ſhall " receive any Abſolution from the LORD, " who thus mangles his Inſtitution; who puts " aſunder what GOD has joined together, " and dares to promiſe himſelf Security, where " GOD threatens only Ruin and Deſtruction. " If we would be ſecure, we muſt uſe GOD's " Ordinances as he has appointed them; join " the outward and the inward Act together, " let the Repentance and Obedience of our " Souls prepare the Way by the Miniſtry of " his Prieſts: And then what Sins they re- " mit upon Earth, ſhall be remitted in Hea- " ven; when CHRIST ſhall confirm the Word " of his Servants by his irreverſible Sentence " of Abſolution, ſaying, Come ye bleſſed of my " Father, inherit the Kingdom prepared for you from " the Foundation of the World. Which GOD " grant unto us all, through the Merits of " the ſame JESUS CHRIST our Lord: To " whom with the FATHER and the HOLY " GHOST be aſcribed all Honour and Glory, " World without End. Amen.

CHARLES,

LORD BISHOP of WINCHESTER,

AND

PRELATE of the Most Noble Order of the GARTER.

My LORD,

IT was one of those ancient Rules, many of which I have had Occasion to speak of in this Work, That Presbyters should do nothing, ἄνευ Γνώμης τῦ Ἐπισκόπυ, or sine Conscientia Episcopi, without the Consent or Knowledge of the Bishop: Which though it extend not to all Private, Domestical, and secular Affairs, yet doubtleſs it was intended to keep a good Harmony and Subordination between them, in all Matters of a Publick Nature relating to the Affairs and Welfare of the Church. And therefore with a View to this Rule, as I firſt preſented the Beginning of this Work to Your Predeceſſor, my then Dioceſan, ſo now I lay this laſt and finiſhing Part of it at Your LORDSHIP'S Feet: Not doubting but that Your LORDSHIP, who is an Encourager of Good Literature and Ancient Learning, will give it Your Favourable Acceptance and Approbation. I have the more Reaſon to hope for this, becauſe out of Your great Good Nature and Condeſcenſion, Your LORDSHIP has always been an Encourager of the Undertaking, as I have been made ſenſible by happy Experiment, in many Years diſtant Correſpondence with You. The Work, I hope, is of General Uſe, and will meet with a General Acceptance among all thoſe, who are without Prejudice true Lovers of ancient Learning. A Noble Lord was once pleaſed to tell me, he had ſent it into Scotland by the Hands of a Great Man of the Aſſembly: Though what Approbation it meets there, I cannot ſay. But I can ſpeak it with more Satisfaction, That our worthy Primate was once pleaſed to acquaint me in Private Converſation, that he himſelf had ſent it to the Profeſſors of Geneva, who returned him their Thanks together with their Approbation. And if it be well accepted there, there is ſome Reaſon to hope it may be accepted in moſt other Proteſtant Churches, and be a little Means to bring them to a nearer Union to the CHURCH of England in ſome Points, for which ſome Parts of the Work are particularly deſigned. A late Author has thought fit to epitomize ſome Part of it, for the Service (as he ſays) of his Poor Brethren of the Clergy: Though I fear, for the Reaſons I have been forced to give againſt his Undertaking, it will prove of no Service, but rather hurtful to them. But if He, or any other Perſon of Ability would undertake to tranſlate the Whole into Latin, now that it is finiſhed and compleated; That might perhaps be of more General Uſe to all the Proteſtant Churches. And in the mean Time our Poor Brethren, if it pleaſe God to bleſs me with Health, ſhall not want ſuch an Epitome, if it be Needfull, as is proper for their Information.

And now, My Lord, that I have made mention of my own Health, I cannot but with Hearty Prayers to God moſt ſincerely wiſh Yours, for the Good Things You have already done to this Dioceſe, and more that may be expected, if it ſhall pleaſe God to confirm Your Health, in ſuch a State, as may inable you to go through the Great Work You want no Will to perform. The Reducing the Exorbitant Fees of this Dioceſe to a Proper Standard, is a Thing that will never be forgotten by Your Poor Brethren, who will always feel the ſweet Effect of it. Your Encouragement given to the meaneſt Clergymen to write to Yourſelf in Perſon, and not to any Officers, upon Buſineſs relating to the Church, is a ſingular Inſtance of Your Good Nature and Condeſcenſion; and alſo a ſure Method to prevent Corruption. Your Care to inform Yourſelf of the Character and Worth of

Your

Your Clergy, with a View to the Promotion of ſuch as have long laboured diligently in great Cures, or ſmall Livings, is a Method that cannot fail of giving a New Life and Spirit to all ſuch, as may reaſonably hope that their Merits and Labours will not always be overlooked and deſpiſed; but that they may in due Time find their Reward both in Eaſe and Advancement from ſo kind an Inſpector.

THAT You may have Health and long Life to proceed in ſuch Good Acts, and all other Offices of Your Function, I believe is the Wiſh of all Your Clergy: I am ſure it is the Hearty Prayer of Him who is,

My LORD,

Your moſt Dutiful

and Obedient Servant,

JOSEPH BINGHAM.

To the RIGHT REVEREND the Lord Biſhop of WINCHESTER,

Concerning the

Shewing how far that Neceſſity extends, and where it ceaſes.

LETTER I.

MY LORD,

HAVING read your Queſtion about the indiſpenſable Neceſſity of Abſolution in all Caſes whatſoever, I could not but return this ſpeedy Anſwer to it (ſo far as the Time would permit) from what occurred to my Thoughts without any tedious Enquiry; reſerving the farther Improvement and Confirmation of the Things here ſuggeſted to a little more diligent Search and Conſideration.

THE Queſtion about Abſolution may reſpect either, I. That Abſolution which is given upon private or auricular Confeſſion: Or, II. The general Abſolution, that is given upon a general Confeſſion, as it is in our Daily Service: Or, III. That Abſolution which is diſpenſed in the Adminiſtration of the Sacraments, which are Indulgences [*] in the true Senſe, and GOD's Ordinances for obtaining Abſolution and Remiſſion of Sins: Or, IV. The Abſolution that is given by the Relaxation of Church Cenſures. Now the abſolute and indiſpenſable Neceſſity of theſe ſeveral Sorts of Abſolution in all Caſes whatſoever, is what, I conceive, neither our Church, nor the Primitive Church ever aſſerted; though ſome of them are of much greater Neceſſity than others.

[*] See the Sacraments proved to be true Indulgences and Abſolutions, Orig. Eccleſ. Book XIX. Chap. i. n. 2, & 3.

FOR, I. As to the Abſolution that is given upon private or auricular Confeſſion; that cannot be more neceſſary than the Confeſſion itſelf, which (except in ſome particular Caſes) is only Matter of Advice, rather than ſtrict Duty impoſed upon all Men under Pain of Damnation; as our Church with the Primitive Church defends, againſt the Roman Impoſition and Yoke laid upon Mens Conſciences in this particular. I ſhall not trouble your Lordſhip with any ancient Teſtimonies upon this Point, unleſs you pleaſe to require me to tranſcribe ſome, which may eaſily be done out of Chryſoſtom and many others [†].

II. As to a general Abſolution upon a general Confeſſion, which is retained in our Liturgy, and is a Defect in Calvin's: Though it muſt be owned to be a very uſeful and edifying Part and Form of divine Service (which Calvin wiſhed [a] to have inſerted into his Liturgy, but could not obtain it) yet we cannot ſay, it is ſo neceſſary a Part of divine Service, as that no Church can have Abſolution or Remiſſion of Sins, without ſuch a Form of Abſolution in her Liturgy. For this would be an unwarrantable Condemnation of all Churches that want that particular Form, though they otherwiſe ſupply it by Preaching, which is the declaratory Application of GOD's Promiſes of Pardon to his Church.

III. The Neceſſity of the Abſolution which is diſpenſed in the Adminiſtration of the Sacraments, is indeed the ſame as the Neceſſity of the Sacraments themſelves. So far therefore as the one is neceſſary, ſo far the other is neceſſary likewiſe. But the Neceſſity of the Sacraments is not ſo abſolute and indiſpenſable, as that GOD cannot in many Caſes (where there is no Contempt of his Ordinances) ſave Men without the external Application of them by the Hand of his Miniſters. For in the Caſe of extreme Neceſſity, where Men deſire Baptiſm, but cannot poſſibly have it, GOD ſupplies inviſibly by his Holy Spirit what is wanting in the outward Adminiſtration. I believe there is not one ancient Writer, that has ſpoken upon this Head, but has allowed of ſome Exceptions in reference to the abſolute Neceſſity of Baptiſm: Particularly in two Caſes: 1. In the Caſe of Martyrdom, which they call ſecond Baptiſm, and Baptiſm in Mens own Blood. 2 In caſe of a true Faith and Converſion without Martyrdom, when a Catechumen was preparing for Baptiſm, and deſirous of it, but by ſome ſudden Accident was taken away before he had any Opportunity to receive it. In theſe two Caſes they always maintained, that the Baptiſm of the Spirit might be had without the external Waſhing of Water. Tertullian ſpeaking of Martyrdom [b], calls it the Chriſtian's ſecond Baptiſm, and the Baptiſm of Blood, of which our LORD ſpake, when he ſaid, I have a Baptiſm to be baptized with, when he had been baptized before in Water. And he adds, this is that Baptiſm, which both compenſates for the Want of Baptiſm, and reſtores it, when Men have loſt the former Benefit of it. Cyprian [c] has the like Obſervation upon the Catechumens, who were called to ſhed their Blood for CHRIST before they could be baptized in Water: "We are not to imagine, ſays he, "that theſe Men were deprived of the Sacra- "ment of Baptiſm: For they were baptized "with the moſt glorious and honourable Bap- "tiſm of their own Blood, of which our "LORD himſelf ſaid, I have another Baptiſm "to be baptized with." And he proves, that they who were thus baptized in Blood, are alſo ſanctified and protected by their Sufferings, and made Partakers of the Promiſes of GOD, from the Declaration made by our Saviour in his Goſpel, when he ſaid to the Thief upon the Croſs, who believed in him and confeſſed him, To day thou ſhalt be with me in Paradiſe.

ST. Auſtin often mentions this Argument of Cyprian, and improves it to ſhew, that not only Martyrdom may ſometimes ſupply the Room of Baptiſm, but alſo a true Faith and Converſion [d] in Caſe of abſolute Neceſſity, when a Man has no Opportunity to receive Baptiſm. That Martyrdom, ſays he, may ſometimes

Cyprianus aſſumit: Quod etiam atque etiam conſiderans, invenio non tantùm Paſſionem pro Nomine Chriſti id quod ex Baptiſmo deerat poſſe ſupplere, ſed etiam Fidem Converſionemque Cordis, ſi fortè ad celebrandum Myſterium Baptiſmi in anguſtiis temporum ſuccurri non poteſt. Neque enim Latro ille pro Nomine Chriſti crucifixus eſt, ſed pro meritis facinorum ſuorum; nec quia credidit, paſſus eſt, ſed dum patitur credidit. Quantum igitur valeat ſine viſibili Sacramento Baptiſmi quod ait Apoſtolus, Corde creditur ad Juſtitiam, ore autem Confeſſio fit ad Salutem, in illo Latrone declaratum eſt: Sed tunc impletur inviſibiliter, cùm Miniſterium Baptiſmi non Contemptus Religionis, ſed articulus neceſſitatis excludit.

ſometimes ſupply the Place of Baptiſm, is well argued by Cyprian from the Example of the Thief, to whom, though he was not baptized, it was ſaid, To Day thou ſhalt be with me in Paradiſe. Which Argument I conſidering over and over again, do find, that not only Martyrdom for the Name of CHRIST may ſupply what is wanting in Baptiſm, but alſo Faith and a true Converſion of Heart, if through Straightneſs of Time there be no Opportunity to celebrate the Myſtery of Baptiſm. For neither was that Thief crucified for the Name of CHRIST, but for the Deſerts of his own Crimes; neither did he ſuffer becauſe he believed, but only believed whilſt he was Suffering. Therefore his Caſe declares how far that Saying of the Apoſtle avails without the viſible Sacrament of Baptiſm, With the Heart Man believeth unto Righteouſneſs, and with the Mouth Confeſſion is made unto Salvation. But then only this inviſible Operation is performed when Baptiſm is excluded purely by the Article of Neceſſity, and not by any Contempt of Religion. He argues in another Place from the ſame Example of the Thief [e], that many are ſanctified by the inviſible Grace without the viſible Sacraments: But yet the viſible Sacrament is not therefore to be contemned; becauſe the Contemner of it cannot by any means be ſanctified by the inviſible Grace thereof.

HENCE it is evident, that according to St. Auſtin's Doctrine, it is not the bare Want of an external Ordinance, whether Sacramental Abſolution, in the Article of Neceſſity, when it cannot be had, but the Contempt of it when it may be had, that is pernicious and deſtructive of Salvation. For GOD is able to ſupply the inviſible Grace without the viſible means in ſuch Caſes to true Believers.

AND upon this Ground St. Ambroſe comforts the ſurviving Friends of the younger Valentinian, who was only a Catechumen, preparing for Baptiſm, but ſuddenly ſlain by the Treachery of Arbogaſtes before he could come to St. Ambroſe to receive it. If any one, ſays he [f], be troubled, that the Myſteries of Baptiſm were not ſolemnized upon him, he may as well conclude, that the Martyrs are not crowned, if they die whilſt they are only Catechumens. But if they be waſhed in their Blood, then this Man alſo was waſhed by his Piety and Deſire of Baptiſm.

SO that in ſuch Caſes of Neceſſity, Baptiſm in Voto is equivalent to actual Baptiſm. GOD accepts the Will for the Deed, when Men do what they can do, and where it is not Contempt of the Sacrament, but ſome unavoidable Exigency, that hinders their Reception of it. Now then, if in ſuch Caſes the external Miniſtry of Baptiſm be not abſolutely neceſſary, the external Miniſtry of Abſolution cannot be neceſſary neither: For they are the very ſame Act in this Particular: And if GOD can ſave Martyrs and Believers without viſible and external Baptiſm, he can abſolve them without viſible and external Abſolution.

ABUNDANCE of Authorities [*] might be added more, if there were Occaſion, in Favour of this Aſſertion.

IV. FOR the Abſolution which is diſpenſed by the Relaxation of the Church-Cenſures: Though it be neceſſary to be ſought after by true Penitents in all Ordinary Caſes; yet there are ſeveral Exceptions in Caſes extraordinary, in which Pardon may be had without a formal Abſolution. For what if a Biſhop for unjuſt Ends, or unworthy Deſigns, refuſe to abſolve a true Penitent, when he both gives true Signs of Repentance, and humbly deſires Abſolution? Will there be no Pardon in Heaven for him, who is ſo unjuſtly and imperiouſly denied it on Earth by Men, who exceed their Power, which is only given to Edification, and not to Deſtruction? Bellarmine indeed ſays ſo, Negatur Remiſſio illis, quibus noluerint Sacerdotes remittere. Bellarm. de Pœnit. lib. 3. cap. 2. tom. 2. p. 1287. Ed. Lugd. 1587. Forgiveneſs is denied to them, whom the Prieſts will not forgive. But this is carring the Prieſts Authority to an abſolute Sovereignty and arbitrary Power, which has no Foundation in Scripture or the ancient Canons of the Church. For even Pope Gregory the Great could tell theſe Men, that the Biſhop in binding and looſing thoſe under his Charge, doth often [g] follow the Motions of his own Will, and not the Merits of the Cauſe: In which Caſe he deprives himſelf of this Power of binding and looſing, who exerciſes the ſame according to his own Will, and not according to the Deſerts of thoſe that are ſubject to him; that is, his unrighteous Judgment is of no Value; it is reverſed and cancelled in the Court of Heaven.

THE Caſe here is the ſame as refuſing Baptiſm to thoſe who are qualified for it, and very deſirous to receive it: The Miniſters unjuſt Refuſal in that Caſe is a very great Crime; but it will not prejudice the Perſon, that by ſuch Default is forced againſt his Will, or the Will of his Parents to die without it. As Hincmar [b] Archbiſhop of Rhemes long ago obſerved for the Conſolation of thoſe in France, whoſe Children died without Baptiſm, through the perverſe Obſtinacy of Hincmar Biſhop of Laon, who refuſed them Baptiſm, when their Parents and Godfathers earneſtly deſired it. "As the Benignity of "the ALMIGHTY, ſays he, perfected in the "Thief upon the Croſs, what was wanting "in the Sacrament of Baptiſm, and the Com-"munion of the Body and Blood of CHRIST, "becauſe it was wanting not through Pride "or Contempt, but by Neceſſity; and as the "Faith of others, that is of Godfathers or "Sureties, anſwering for little Children in "Baptiſm, is ſufficient for the Salvation of "thoſe, who are born obnoxious to Original, "that is, other Mens Sin; ſo the Faith and "earneſt Deſire of Parents or Godfathers, "who believe with the Heart, and with the "Mouth deſire Baptiſm for their Infants, who "could not obtain it, becauſe you ordered "it to be denied them, ſhall be of Advan-"tage to thoſe Infants, by the Gift of him, "whoſe SPIRIT is the Author of Regene-"ration; and who blows where he liſteth." Whence he concludes in the Caſe of Church Cenſures, that if a Penitent dies without Abſolution, only becauſe the Biſhop for his own Will, or any unjuſt Cauſe refuſes to abſolve him; the Biſhop's unjuſt Judgment and obſtinate Refuſal cannot prejudice the true Penitent, as to what concerns his Salvation and Abſolution in the Kingdom of Heaven.

2. BUT it may happen, that a Man may not only deſire Abſolution, but the Miniſter alſo may be diſpoſed and ready to grant it him; and yet by ſome unavoidable Accident the Man may die without it: In this Caſe the Canons have determined, that the Want of Abſolution is no Prejudice to his Salvation; nor was he to be treated as an excommunicate Perſon, but to be received into the Communion of the Church, and to be commemorated among the Faithful in the Service of the Church, though he died without Abſolution. The Fourth Council of Carthage [*] and the Second of Vaiſon are plain to this Purpoſe.

THESE Allegations plainly ſhew, what Sort of Neceſſity there is of Abſolution: That it is not the bare Want of it, but the proud Neglect or Contempt of it, when Men are under Church Cenſures, that makes it hurtful. But where there is no Contempt or Neglect, Salvation may be had without it. And therefore a true Penitent, who ſubmits to the Church's Diſcipline, can be in no Danger; becauſe, though he may chance to die without Abſolution, either through Neceſſity or the obſtinate Will of his Superiors, yet he dies in no Neglect or Contempt of the Church; and conſequently has no Reaſon to doubt of GOD's Abſolution in Heaven.

YOUR Lordſhip's Obſervation concerning the Form, Abſolvo te, is very juſt: It is but of a late Date, a little before the Time of Thomas Aquinas. The ancient Forms were all either deprecatory, or declaratory, or elſe conſiſted in the Application of the Sacraments of the Church. And the Abſolvo te is to be reduced to ſome of the other Forms, as the elder Schoolmen commonly reduce it: Of all which I will endeavour to give your Lordſhip a more full Account in my next, taking it for an Honour, that you are pleaſed to command any Service of this Kind from,

MY LORD,

Your moſt Dutiful and

Obedient Servant

LETTER

LETTER II.

MY LORD,

IN Addition to my laſt upon the Fourth Sort of Abſolution, which is the Relaxation of Church Cenſures, I have obſerved the Opinion of Cyprian to be conformable to what I wrote before, That if Penitents died in the Time of their Penance, before they could have the Biſhop's Abſolution, their Salvation was not to be deſpaired of. For "the Divine Mercy, ſays he, [a] is able to "heal them: Yet we ought not be too haſty, "nor do any Thing inconſiderately or raſh-"ly; leſt if we over haſtily give them the "Peace of the Church (that is, reſtore them "to Communion before their Penance was "compleated) we thereby more grievouſly "offend and provoke the Divine Indigna-"tion." The Caſe was this: Cyprian was now in Exile, and ſome that had lapſed were very impatient to be reſtored to Communion before his Return; which he would not conſent to, but ordered them to ſtay till he ſhould return in Peace, and then their Cauſe ſhould be examined before all the Church. If in the mean Time they died, whilſt they were doing their Penance, GOD's Mercy was able to ſave them without a formal Abſolution, or Reception into the External Communion of the Church. The Learned Biſhop Fell gives the ſame Expoſition upon the Place: Recte auctor noſter hoc ſufflamen opponit lapſis, qui ad pacem feſtinarent, quod non de eorum ſalute conclamatum ſit, quibus ante pœnitentiæ decurſum mori contingeret. Our Author, ſays he, rightly oppoſes the Lapſers, who were ſo haſty to be reſtored, and ſtops their Mouths with this Conſideration: That their Salvation was not to be deſpaired of, though they chanced to die before their Courſe of Penance was ended.

2. IT may be obſerved farther, that according to the Diſcipline ſometimes uſed in the ancient Church, ſome very groſs and ſcandalous Criminals were denied the Communion and Peace of the Church even at the Point of Death: The Deſign of which was not abſolutely to exclude them from Heaven: For they ſtill exhorted ſuch to repent and caſt themſelves on GOD's Mercy, tho' they thought fit to exerciſe ſuch Severity and Rigour toward them in debarring them wholly from the Communion of the Church, to be an Example and Terror to others. There are no leſs than Twenty Canons in the Council of Eliberis [b] to this Purpoſe, that if Men were guilty of ſuch or ſuch Crimes there ſpecified, they ſhould not be reſtored to Communion, no not at their laſt Hour. The great Council of Sardica has a Canon of the like Import, to repreſs ſome exorbitant Uſurpations of ambitious Men: Such an one, ſay they [c] ſhall not be admitted to Lay-Communion even at his laſt Hour. Yet they exhorted all ſuch to repent, and accordingly admitted them to a State of publick and perpetual Penance in the Church, at the ſame Time that they denied them Communion to the laſt: As we find in the Letters of Pope Innocent the Firſt, who ſays [d], the ancient Cuſtom was to admit ſuch to Penance, but to refuſe them Communion. And ſo St. Ambroſe [e] writing to a conſecrated Virgin, who had ſinned, bids her to continue in doing Penance all her Life, and not expect to be pardoned by human Judgment. For ſhe that had ſinned immediately againſt the LORD, was to expect Abſolution from him alone in the Day of Judgment.

ST. Auſtin [f] makes the ſame Obſervation upon ſuch as relapſed into great Crimes, after they had once done publick Penance in the Church, that a ſecond Penance was not allowed them in the Church: Yet if they turned turned to GOD, he would not forget his Mercy and Patience toward them. In all these Cases therefore they thought Pardon might be had from GOD, though no Absolution was granted them in the Church.

NOR were even the Novatians so rigorous in this Matter, as to assert, that GOD could not pardon those Sinners, whom they refused to receive into Communion, when they had once lapsed after Baptism: For they encouraged them to repent, and hope for Mercy from GOD, though they denied that the Church had any Power to receive them. This appears from what Asclepiades the Novatian Bishop said in his Discourse with Atticus Bishop of Constantinople, as Socrates [g] relates it, that they dealt with their Laity only as the Catholicks did with their Clergy, excluding them from Communion unto Death, and leaving their Pardon only to GOD. This Account is given of the Novatians by Bishop Fell [h], Bishop Beveridge [i], Cardinal Bona [k], Albaspinæus [l] and others.

WHENCE it is evident, that though Men might be denied Absolution on Earth, either for Discipline's Sake, as it was sometimes in the Church; or out of an erroneous Opinion, that the Church had no Power to receive Sinners lapsing after Baptism, as it was among the Novatians; yet if they truly repented, they might notwithstanding by GOD's Mercy be received to Pardon and Absolution in Heaven. All these Cases do evidently shew it, according to the Sense of the ancient Church.

AS to the Form, Absolvo te, it is agreed by learned Men, that it was not known in the Practice of the Church till a little before the Time of Thomas Aquinas, who was one of the first that wrote in Defence of it, about the Year 1250, against another Doctor, who maintained, that the ancient Form of Absolution in the Church was not this Indicative Form, but an Impetratory Form, by way of Prayer, Deprecation, or Benediction; viz. Absolutionem & Remissionem tribuat tibi Omnipotens Deus, Almighty GOD grant thee Absolution and Forgiveness. This Doctor alledged the Authority of Gulielmus Altissiodorensis, Gulielmus Parisiensis and Hugo Cardinalis; and said, it was not then above thirty Years since this new Form began to be used. Thus much is collected out of Aquinas 22 Opusculum de Forma Absolutionis cap. 5. But we have not that Book of Thomas in our Library here, and therefore I only send you what Morinus among the Papists (not to mention Bishop Usher [m] or any other Protestant Writers) has observed out of him concerning the Original of this Form, Absolvo te. Morinus [n] proves at large out of all the ancient Rituals and Fathers, that the old Forms of Absolution were all by way of Prayer. And it is evident from the Ceremony of Imposition of Hands, which was always accompanied with Prayer.

BUT our Quarrel is not with the Newness of this Form, but with the Abuses the Romish Church has affixed to it. For otherwise it may be lawfully used, as our Church appoints in the Office of Visitation of the Sick. But then this Power of Absolution is only ministerial, not authoritative properly, directly, and absolutely, as our Writers commonly word it. It does not empower a Priest to open and shut Heaven at his Pleasure; to absolve without a true Contrition, by a sacramental Act conferring Grace ex Opere operato, actively, immediately, and instrumentally effecting the Grace of Justification, as Bellarmin would have it; who makes it also so necessary, that a Man is denied Forgiveness, if the Priest will not forgive him. It may be authoritative and judicial in a ministerial Way, as all Acts of the Ministry are under GOD. A declarative Absolution is so, and an impetratory Absolution is so, and an applicatory Absolution by the Sacraments is so, and a Relaxation of Church Censures is the same likewise. For all these are done by Virtue of Power and Authority communicated by GOD to his Ambassadors, as the Ministers of Reconciliation under him. Only in all these Absolutions they must observe certain Rules, which if they do not observe, their Absolution avails nothing in the Court of Heaven.

NOW this Form, Absolvo te, is understood to be no other than the declaratory Absolution upon a special and particular Case; when a Man having confessed his Sins, and given Signs and Indications of a true Repentance, the Minister declares to him, that as far as he can judge by the Rule of GOD's Word, his Repentance is true; and therefore by Virtue thereof he declares him absolved by GOD: But if there be any Illusion or Deceit in the Man's Heart, which no Mortal can judge of, then, notwithstanding this favourable Sentence and Judgment of the Priest, GOD will judge him over again, and rectify the Error of the Keys by his unerring Judgment.

PETER Lombard among the Schoolmen (following St. Jerom among the Ancients) gives this as

as the moſt probable Senſe of that kind of Abſolution. "We can affirm with Truth, "ſays he [a], and believe, that GOD alone "remits and retains Sins: And yet he has "given Power of binding and looſing to "the Church; but he binds and looſes after "one manner, and the Church after ano-"ther. For he remits Sin by himſelf alone, "who cleanſes the Soul from inward Pollution, "and looſes from the Debt of eternal Death. "But he has not given this Power to the "Prieſts, to whom yet he has given the Pow-"er of binding and looſing, that is, of ſhew-"ing who are bound or looſed. Upon "which Account the LORD having firſt "cured the Leper by himſelf, afterwards "ſent him to the Prieſts, by whoſe Judgment "he was to be declared clean. And having "firſt raiſed Lazarus to Life, he then pre-"ſented him to the Diſciples, that they "ſhould looſe him. For though a Man be "looſed before GOD, yet he is not accoun-"ted looſed in the Face of the Church, "but by the Judgment of the Prieſt. There-"fore the evangelical Prieſt in looſing and "retaining Sins acts and judges after the "ſame manner, as the legal Prieſt did here-"tofore in the Caſe of thoſe who were de-"filed with Leproſy, which is the Emblem "of Sin. Whence St Jerom commenting upon "thoſe Words of our LORD to Peter, To thee "will I give the Keys of the Kingdom of Hea-"ven; and whatſoever thou ſhalt bind on Earth, "ſhall be bound in Heaven; and whatſoever thou "ſhalt looſe on Earth, ſhall be looſed in Heaven; "ſays, ſome not underſtanding this Place, "aſſume to themſelves ſomething of the ſu-"percilious Pride of the Phariſees, ſo as to "imagine they have Power to damn the In-"nocent and ſave the Guilty; whereas be-"fore GOD the only thing that is inquired "into, is the Life of Criminals, and not the "Sentence of the Prieſts. In Leviticus the "Lepers are commanded to ſhew themſelves to "the Prieſts, whom they do not make leprous "or clean, but only ſhew who are clean "or unclean. So here it is plainly declared, "that GOD does not always follow the "Judgment of the Church, which ſometimes "judges by Surreption and Ignorance, but "GOD always judges according to Truth. "And in remitting or retaining Sins the evan-"gelical Prieſts have the ſame Right and "Office, as the legal Prieſts had of old un-"der the Law in curing the Lepers. Theſe "therefore remit or retain Sins, whilſt they "judge and declare them to be remitted or "retained by GOD. For the Prieſts put "the Name of the LORD upon the Chil-"dren of Iſrael, but he himſelf bleſſed them, "as it is read in Numbers vi.

THE Maſter of the Sentences here cites St. Jerom but imperfectly, and therefore I ſhall recite his Teſtimony more exactly in his own Words: "Some Biſhops and Prieſts, ſays he "[b], not underſtanding that Place (where "our LORD ſays to Peter, Whatſoever thou ſhalt "bind on Earth, &c.) aſſume to themſelves "ſomething of the ſupercilious Pride of the "Phariſees, ſo as to imagine they have Pow-"er to damn the Innocent or abſolve the "Guilty; whereas before GOD, the only "thing that is enquired into, is the Life of "the Criminals, and not the Sentence of "the Prieſts. We read in Leviticus concern-"ing the Lepers, where they are command-"ed to ſhew themſelves to the Prieſts, and "if they have the Leproſy, they are then "made unclean by the Prieſt: Not that the "Prieſts

[a] Lombard. Sentent. Lib. 4. Diſt. 18. p. 334. Lugd. 1594. Hoc ſanè dicere & ſentire poſſumus, quòd ſolus Deus dimittit peccata & retinet: Et tamen Eccleſiæ contulit poteſtatem ligandi & ſolvendi; aliter ipſe ſolvit vel ligat, aliter Eccleſia. Ipſe enim per ſe tantùm dimittit peccatum, qui & animam mundat ab interiori maculâ, & a debito æternæ mortis ſolvit. Non autem hoc ſacerdotibus conceſſit, quibus tamen tribuit poteſtatem ſolvendi & ligandi, id eſt, oſtendendi homines ligatos vel ſolutos. Unde Dominus leproſum ſanitati priùs per ſe reſtituit, deinde ad Sacerdotes miſit, quorum judicio oſtenderetur mundatus. Ita etiam Lazarum jam vivificatum obtulit diſcipulis ſolvendum. Quia etſi aliquis apud Deum ſit ſolutus, non tamen in facie Eccleſiæ ſolutus habetur niſi per judicium ſacerdotis. In ſolvendis ergo culpis vel retinendis ita operatur Sacerdos evangelicus & judicat, ſicut olim legalis in illis qui contaminati erant leprâ, quæ peccatum ſignat. Unde Hieronymus ſuper Mat. xvi. ubi Dominus ait Petro, Tibi dabo claves, &c. Hunc, inquit, locum quidam non intelligentes, aliquid ſumunt de ſupercilio Phariſæorum, ut damnare ſe innoxios, vel ſalvare ſe putent noxios; cum apud Deum non ſententia Sacerdotum, ſed reorum vita quæratur. In Levitico ſe oſtendere Sacerdotibus jubentur leproſi, quos illi non faciunt leproſos vel mundos, ſed diſcernunt qui mundi vel immundi ſunt. Ita & hic apertè oſtenditur, quòd non ſemper Deus ſequitur Eccleſiæ judicium, quæ per ſurreptionem & ignorantiam interdum judicat: Deus autem ſemper judicat ſecundum veritatem. Et in remittendis vel retinendis culpis id juris & officii habent evangelici Sacerdotes, quod olim habebant legales ſub lege in curandis leproſis. Hi ergo peccata dimittunt vel retinent, dum dimiſſa à Deo vel retenta judicant & oſtendunt. Ponunt enim Sacerdotes nomen Domini ſuper filios Iſrael, ſed ipſe benedixit, ut legitur in Numeris.

" Prieſts make them leprous and unclean, " but becauſe they had the Power of judg- " ing who were leprous or not leprous, and " might diſcern who were clean or unclean. " as therefore there the Prieſt makes the " Leper clean or unclean, ſo here the Bi- " ſhop and Prebsyter binds or looſes; not " [making] them innocent or guilty: But ac- " cording to the Tenour of his Office, when " he hears the Diſtinction of Sins or Sin- " ners, he knows who is to be bound, or " who to be looſed.

THERE ſeems to be ſomething wanting in the Grammar of thoſe Words, Non eos qui inſontes ſunt vel noxii; and to make it coherent with what goes before, the Word Faciens, or the like, ſeems needful to be ſupplyed. But all the reſt is very plain, that as the Prieſts of old did not properly make a Man leprous or clean, but only declare whether he were ſo or not; ſo the Prieſts of the New Teſtament bind or looſe Men from their Sins, by declaring who are to be bound or looſed.

BP. Fell indeed has a more ſingular Notion of the Form, Abſolvo te: He ſuppoſes [q], that in every Crime there are two things to be conſidered, viz. The Offence againſt GOD, and the Offence againſt the Church; the former of which is forgiven by GOD alone upon Mens Prayers and Repentance; but the latter by this authoritative Form, I abſolve thee.

BUT this (though it may be true with reſpect to the Crimes that fall under publick Diſcipline) cannot well be the Meaning of the Form as it is uſed in the Liturgy, in the Office of the Viſitation of the Sick, which is the only Place, as I remember, where our Church appoints it to be uſed. For in private Sins there is no Offence given to the Church, and yet it is private Sins, confeſſed privately to a Miniſter, for which that Rubrick orders Abſolution to be given in this Form, Abſolvo te. So that though his Interpretation may be good in Reference to the Church's publick Abſolution [*] for publick and ſcandalous Crimes, which give Offence to the Church; yet I think it cannot hold with reſpect to private Crimes, becauſe there no Offence is given. Therefore it ſeems better to reſolve it, as St. Jerom and Peter Lombard do, into a declarative Form, and explain it by the Example of the Legal Prieſts cleanſing the Leper, by declaring him to be clean.

I have now ſent your Lordſhip all that I have obſerved material in this Diſpute: But if there be any thing omitted or deficient, that you deſire ſhould be farther conſidered, your Lordſhip cannot more readily command, than I ſhall be ready to obey with the greateſt Pleaſure, who am,

MY LORD,

Your moſt Dutiful and

Obedient Servant

Of the FESTIVALS obſerved in the Primitive CHURCH.

CHAP. I.

Of the Diſtinction to be made between Civil and Eccleſiaſtical Feſtivals.

SECT. 1. What meant by the Civil Feſtivals.

HAVING hitherto taken a diſtinct View of the great Services of the Ancient Church in the ſeveral Parts of her Liturgy, and the Adminiſtration of her Sacraments, and the Exerciſe of Diſcipline; I come now to give an Account of the Leſſer Kind of Obſervations relating to her Feſtivals, and Days of Faſting, and Marriage Rites, and Funeral Rites, all which may in ſome Meaſure be comprized under the General Name of the Service of the Church.

IN ſpeaking of the Feſtivals, it will be neceſſary firſt of all to diſtinguiſh the Eccleſiaſtical Feſtivals from the Civil. For ſome were purely Eccleſiaſtical, others purely Civil; and others (as Feſtivals of greater Account) were both Eccleſiaſtical and Civil. All Sundays throughout the Year, and the Fifteen Days of the Paſchal Solemnity were Feſtivals both in the Eccleſiaſtical and Civil Account. For they were not only Days of more ſolemn Religious Obſervation, but alſo Days of Vacation from Law-Suits and Proſecution of ſecular Buſineſs. Other Feſtivals were purely of Eccleſiaſtical Account. For they were Days of Religious Aſſembly, but not entirely Days of Vacation. Others were purely Civil Feſtivals, that is, Days of Vacation from Law-Suits and Secular Affairs, but but not distinguished by any peculiar Character of Religious Observation. Of this Sort were the Feriæ Æstivæ, or the Thirty Days of Harvest; and the Feriæ Autumnales, or the Thirty Days of Vintage; and three Days under the common Name of the Kalends of January; one Day called the Natalis Urbis Romæ, The Foundation of Rome; and another the Natalis or Foundation of Constantinople; and Four Days called the Natales Imperatorum, including both their Natural Birth-days, and their Civil Birth-days, that is, their Inauguration to the Empire. Of all which, because there is frequent mention made of them in the Ancient Writers and Laws, and Canons, it will not be amiss to speak a little more particularly in the Entrance of this Discourse.

SECT. 2. Of the Feriæ Æstivæ, or Thirty Days of Vacation in the Harvest Month, and the Feriæ Autumnales.

ALL these are comprehended in one Law of Theodosius and Valentinian Junior, under the general Name of Feriæ Forenses, Days of Vacation or Rest from Pleadings in the Civil Courts of Judicature. Where all Days in the Year are appointed to be Juridical [a], except the two Months of Harvest and Vintage, and the Kalends of January and the Natales of the two great Cities, Rome and Constantinople, and the Birth-days of the Emperors, and their Inauguration to the Empire, and the Fifteen Days of Easter, which were Festival both in the Ecclesiastical and Civil Account, as also all Sundays throughout the Year. Where it is rightly observed by Gothofred, that the other Ecclesiastical Festivals of Christmas, Epiphany and Pentecost were not as yet made Festivals in the Civil Account. For at this Time many of the Judges were still Heathens, and therefore Juridical Pleadings were allowed on these Days, notwithstanding that they were kept with great Solemnity and Religious Veneration among the Christians. But afterwards when Justinian repeated this Law [b] in his Code, the Prohibition of Pleadings upon these Days, and upon the Passions of the Apostles, was inserted, together with a Prohibition of all the Publick Shews and Games upon any of these Solemnities, of which more hereafter.

As to those Festivals which were purely Civil, we are to observe, that some of them were of long standing in the Roman Empire, and no new Institution of Christians, but only reformed and regulated by them in some Particulars, to cut off the Idolatrous Rites and other Corruptions that sometimes attended them. The Multitude of them was complained of by Tully [c] and therefore Augustus cut off Thirty of them at once, turning those Days which were deputed for Honorary Games, into Days of Pleading, for the better Prosecution of Criminals, and Expedition of Justice, as Suetonius reports [d] in his Life. And a like Reduction was made by Antoninus Philosophus, who is said [e] to have added several Judiciary Days to the Kalendar, striking out many Festivals, and appointing Two Hundred and Thirty Days in the Year for hearing of Causes, and dispatching Business of the Law. The Christian Emperors reduced the Number of these Festivals to a much shorter Compass. For they cast away all Festivals that were held in Honour of the Heathen Gods: And though they brought in all Sundays in the Year into the Computation of Civil Festivals, and also the Fifteen Days of the Paschal Solemnity, yet the whole Number did not amount to above an Hundred Twenty-five: So that there remained Two Hundred and Forty Days still for Publick Business of the Law. And of those One Hundred and Twenty-five Days that were exempt, Sixty Days or two Months were only set apart as Days of Vacation from the Law for the Convenience of gathering in the Harvest and the Vintage. The one were called Feriæ Æstivæ, and the other Feriæ Autumnales. And these were ancient Roman Festivals, mention'd by Statius [f] and Aulus Gellius [g] and Pliny [h], and after them by Ulpian [i] the Famous Lawyer, who shews at large for what End they were appointed, that Countrymen might not be molested in gathering their Fruits at their proper Seasons, except it were in some extraordinary Cases, which required a more speedy Decision before the Prætor. The Schools of Rhetorick had also their Vacations at these Seasons, as we learn both from Aulus Gellius and St. Austin [k]. And because this Sort of Feriæ had nothing of Harm, but only Convenience venience in them, they were continued without Scruple by the Chriſtian Emperors, and eſtabliſhed by their Laws, as we have ſeen, upon Conſideration of the Uſefulneſs and Neceſſity of them; leaving it to the Judges of the ſeveral Provinces of the World to determine preciſely what Time they ſhould commence: For they did not begin the Harveſt Month, or the Vintage Month, every where on the ſame Day, but ſome Countries ſooner and ſome later, according to the different State and Condition of every Climate. And ſo the Obſervation of theſe Two Months continued, as Gothofred notes [l] to the Time of the Emperor Otho, who firſt abrogated them in the Laws of the Lombards.

SECT. 3. Of the Kalends of January.

THE next Civil Feriæ were the Kalends of January: Which as Gothofred thinks, comprized three Days, the Day before the Kalends, the Kalends, and the third of the Nones, or as others [m] ſay, the Day before the Nones, that is, the fourth of January, commonly called Bota and Vota, becauſe it was the Day of Sacrificing for the Emperors Safety. Theſe were continued by the Chriſtian Emperors without any Idolatrous Rites, but ſtill were Days of great Liberty and Extravagance. Upon which Account the Ancient Fathers and Councils commonly declaim with great Invectives againſt the Obſervation of them. For not only Tertullian ſpeaks againſt them [n], whilſt they were accompained with Idolatrous and Superſtitious Rites in the Time of Heatheniſm, but in after Ages the Fathers in their Popular Diſcourſes are often very ſevere and copious in their Diſſuaſives from the Obſervation of them, both upon the Account of the Relicks of Superſtition remaining in the Hearts of many Chriſtians, and alſo becauſe they were Occaſions of great Looſeneſs and Debauchery among the People. St. Chryſoſtom [o] ſays, Many were ſuperſtitiouſly addicted to the Obſervation of Times, and made Divination and Conjectures upon them; as if they ſpent the New-Moon in Mirth and Pleaſure, the whole Year would be proſperous and lucky to them. So both Men and Women gave themſelves to Intemperance on theſe Days, out of this Diabolical Perſuaſion, that the good or bad Fortune of the reſt of the Year depended upon ſuch an ominous Beginning of it. Which was the Devil's Invention to ruin the Practice of all Virtue. He obſerves farther [p], that they were uſed in the Celebration of theſe Times to ſet up Lamps in the Market-Place, and crown their Doors with Garlands, which he condemns together with their Superſtition and Intemperance, as a Mixture of Diabolical Pomp and Childiſh Folly. The like Complaints are made by St. Auſtin [q], Chryſologus [r], Prudentius [s], Aſterius Amaſenus [t], and St. Ambroſe [u]. So that though theſe Feſtivals of the Kalends were allowed by the Imperial Laws, yet they were generally condemned by the Ancient Writers, becauſe of the Vanities and Exceſſes and Abuſes, that were uſually committed in them. And particularly the Council of Trullo [x] forbids the Dancings and other Ceremonies, that were uſed both by Men and Women, on the Kalends and the Bota, under the Penalty of Excommunication; as I have had Occaſion to ſhew more fully in ſpeaking [*] of the Diſcipline of the Church. And the Council of Auxerre takes Notice [y] of the Remains of ſome Heathen Superſtition in France, in offering an Hind or a Calf, which they call a Diabolical Obſervation.

SECT. 4. Of the Emperors Birth-days.

THE next Civil Feſtivals were the Emperors Birth-days, which were of Two Sorts; the one was called Natalis Genuinus, their Natural Birth-day; and the other Natalis Imperij, their Inauguration; as they are diſtinguiſhed in ſeveral Laws [z] of the Theodoſian Code, and other ancient Writers, which are collected by Gothofred [a] in great Abundance. Who alſo obſerves, That when it is ſaid by Ancient Writers, that Conſtantine was born in Britain, it is to be underſtood according to this Diſtinction, to mean his Imperial Birth-day, and not his Natural. For his Natural Birth was at Naiſus in Dacia, as Pagi [b] ſhews from many expreſs Teſtimonies of Julius Firmicus and Stephanus de Urbibus, and other ancient Writers: But his Imperial Birth, or Inauguration to the Empire, was in Britain. Which Baronius and many other Learned Writers miſtaking for his Natural Birth, have thence concluded that he was born in Britain. But this only by the way. Theſe Birth-days of the Emperors, whether Natural or Political, were always of great Eſteem and Veneration. The Law of Theodoſius orders them to be obſerved with the ſame Reverence and Ceremony as all other Civil Feſtivals, that is, to be Days of Vacation from Publick Pleadings at the Law: And on theſe Days it was uſual for great Men to entertain the People with the Publick Games and Shews, which was partly to honour the Days, and partly to give ſome Diverſion to the People. The Prætor of Rome was oblig'd by his Office to do this, as appears by ſeveral Laws [c] of Arcadius in the Theodoſian Code. And the Judges might be preſent at them [d] once a Day in the Morning, when they diſtributed Money, ſome Silver, ſome Gold, according to their Quality, among the People. And on theſe Days the Emperors Statues or Images were produced [e] for the People to pay their Civil Reſpect and Veneration to them; Reſerving Divine Worſhip, and Religious Adoration, exceeding the Dignity of Man, to the Celeſtial Majeſty alone, as the Laws elegantly word it. But if it happened that any of theſe Days fell upon a Sunday, then by a Law of Theodoſius [f] the publick Games were omitted, and came not into the Solemnity of the Day. And Theodoſius Junior excepted alſo the other great Feſtivals of CHRIST's Nativity, and Epiphany, and Eaſter, and Pentecoſt, or the whole Fifty Days between Eaſter and Whitſontide, on any of which Days it was unlawful to exhibit the uſual Games to the People: And that no one ſhould fear leſt it ſhould be interpreted a Diſreſpect to the Imperial Majeſty, if he did not according to Cuſtom exhibit the Games on the Emperors Birth-day (happening to fall on any of theſe Feſtivals) he inſerted [g] a particular Clauſe, declaring, That ſuch an Omiſſion ſhould be no Offence, but moſt agreeable to have the Service of the Divine Majeſty preferred before that uſual Ceremony of the Games and Shews in the Celebration of his Birth-day. And in this chiefly conſiſted the Difference between an Eccleſiaſtical and Civil Feſtival, that the one was a Day of mere Pleaſure and Diverſion, and the other a ſolemn Time of Devotion and Religion, to which the former muſt give Place, whenever they happened by any ſuch Co-incidence to fall together.

SECT. 5. Of the Natales Urbium, or the two Feriæ in Memory of the Foundation of Rome and Conſtantinople.

THE laſt Sort of Civil Feſtivals were the Natales Urbium, or the two annual Days kept in Memory of the Foundation of the two great Cities, Rome and Conſtantinople. The former was an ancient Roman Feſtival, obſerved on the Eleventh of the Kalends of May, or the Twenty-firſt of April, under the Name of Palilia; of which the Reader may find a large Account [h] in any of the common Writers of Roman Antiquities. That which is only to be noted here, is, That it continued a Feſtival under the Chriſtian Emperors. Which we learn not only from the forementioned Law of Theodoſius, but alſo from Sozomen [i], who ſays, that the γενέθλια, or Nativities of the Emperors, and the Royal Cities, and the Kalends, were the uſual Times of diſtributing the Emperors Donations or Largeſſes among the Soldiers. And Caſſiodore [k] ſpeaks of the Games of the Circus, as an uſual Part of the Peoples Entertainment on theſe Feſtivals of Pleaſure. The Encænia or Dedication of Conſtantinople was annually celebrated on the Fifth of the Ides of May, that is, the Eleventh of May, as is noted by Gothofred out of Marcellinus Comes, Caſſiodore, Cedrenus, the Chronicon Alexandrinum, and Zonaras. And as in all Things both the Ancient Laws and Canons [l] gave Conſtantinople the ſame Royal and Honourable Privileges that were allowed to Old Rome: So in this they were equalled, that the Annual Days of their Dedication were celebrated with the ſame Solemnites among the Feriæ or Civil Feſtivals, and Days of Vacation and Joyfulneſs throughout the Roman Empire. And the Reaſon of this is given in the aforeſaid Law of Theodoſius [m] ſo often mentioned, becauſe theſe two great Cities, Rome and Conſtantinople, were the Fountains and Springs from whence the Laws were originally derived; and therefore it was proper, that the Feaſts of their Dedication ſhould be obſerved by a Vacation from Law-Suits

Law-Suits on the Annual Days of their Foundation. This is the ſhort Account of the Civil Feriæ, or Feſtivals, ſo far as concerns their Obſervation under the Government and Allowance of Chriſtian Emperors. I now proceed to the other Sort of Feſtivals, which were of Sacred or Eccleſiaſtical Obſervation.

CHAP. II.

Of the Original and Obſervation of the Lord's-Day among Chriſtians.

SECT. 1. The Lord's-Day of continued Obſervation in the Church from the Days of the Apoſtles, under the Names of Sunday, the Lord's-Day, the firſt Day of the Week, and the Day of Breaking Bread, &c.

THE Principal and moſt noted among the Sacred and Eccleſiaſtical Feſtivals was always that of the Lord's-Day, which was obſerved with great Veneration in the ancient Church from the very Time of the Apoſtles. The Apoſtles themſelves are often ſaid to meet on this Day for Divine-Service, being the Day of the LORD's Reſurrection. Acts xx. 7. On the firſt Day of the Week, when the Diſciples came together to break Bread, Paul preached unto them, ready to depart on the Morrow, and continued his Speech until Midnight. So again, 1 Cor. xvi. 2. Upon the firſt Day of the Week, let every one of you lay by him in ſtore, as GOD hath proſpered him, that there be no Gatherings when I come. And St. John expreſsly ſtiles it the Lord's-Day. Rev. i. 10. I was in the Spirit on the Lord's-Day. Which cannot mean the Jewiſh Sabbath: For then he would have called it ſo: Nor any other Day of the Week: For that had been ambiguous: But the Day on which CHRIST aroſe from the Dead, on which the Apoſtles were uſed to meet to celebrate Divine-Service, on which Paul had ordered Collections to be made, according to the Cuſtom of the Primitive Church. Seeing therefore he ſpeaks of this as a Day well known and uſed in the Church, it cannot be doubted, but that it was diſtinguiſhed by this Name from the received Uſe and Cuſtom of the Church. For otherwiſe how could Chriſtians have underſtood what St. John intended to ſignify by this Name, if he had deſigned to denote any other Day by it? As Mr. Turretin [a] argues well upon the Reſolution of this Queſtion.

THE Matter thus founded in Apoſtolical Practice, may be farther illuſtrated and confirmed from the general Uſage of the Church in the following Ages. Pliny, who was an Heathen Magiſtrate in the Reign of Trajan not long after St. John's Death, took the Account of the Chriſtian Aſſemblies from the Mouths of ſome Apoſtatizing Chriſtians, and they told him, their Cuſtom was [b] to meet together early in the Morning before it was Light on a certain fixed Day, and ſing Hymns to CHRIST as their GOD, and bind themſelves with a Sacrament to do no Evil, and afterwards to partake of a common Feaſt. Which is a plain Deſcription of the Service of the Lord's-Day, and particularly of the Agape or Feaſt of Charity, which was uſually an Attendant of the Communion in the Primitive Church every Lord's-Day. Ignatius, who lived about the ſame Time, makes as plain a Reference to the Obſervation of the Lord's-Day, when he bids the Magneſians [c] not to ſabbatize with the Jews, but to lead a Life agreeable to the Lord's-Day, on which our Life was raiſed from the Dead, by him (that is, by the Lord CHRIST) and by his Death. Clemens Alexandrinus [d], as Cotelerius obſerves, well illuſtrates and explains this Paſſage of Ignatius, ſhewing what it is to lead a Life conformable to the Lord's-Day, when he ſays, He that obſerves the Precept of the Goſpel, makes it to be the Lord's-Day, whilſt he caſts away every evil Thought, and takes to him the true Gnoſtick Thoughts of Wiſdom and Knowledge, thereby glorifying the Reſurrection of the LORD.

HENCE we learn, that Κυριακὴ was the common Name of the Lord's-Day, and that Κυριακὴν ζῆν is to lead a Life conformable to the Lord's-Day, in Memory of our SAVIOUR's Reſurrection. Yet ſometimes the Ancients, when they write to the Gentiles, ſcruple not to call it Sunday, to diſtinguiſh it by the Name beſt known to them. As Juſtin Martyr writing his Apology to the Heathen [e], ſays, We all meet together on Sunday, on which GOD having changed Darkneſs and Matter, created the World, and on this Day

Day JESUS CHRIST our SAVIOUR arose from the Dead. In like manner Tertullian [f] answering the Objection made by the Heathens, that the Christians worshipped the Sun, says indeed they made Sunday a Day of Joy, but for other Reasons than to worship the Sun, which was no Part of their Religion. At other Times, when he writes only to the Christians, he commonly uses the Name [g] of the Lord's-Day, and especially when he would distinguish it from the Jewish Sabbath [h]. And the like may be observed in the Laws of the first Christian Emperors. Constantine [i] uses the Name Sunday, when he forbids all the Law-suits on this Day. Valentinian [k] uses the same Name upon the same Occasion. So does also Valentinian [l] Junior, and Theodosius Senior, and Theodosius Junior, in settling the Observation of this Day. But they use the Name indifferently, stiling it sometimes the Lord's-Day, which was more proper among Christians, as is particularly noted in one of the Laws of the Younger Valentinian, which runs thus, Solis Die, quem Dominicum rite dixere majores, &c. On Sunday, which our Forefathers [m] have rightly and customarily called the Lord's-Day. His Reference to ancient Custom is confirmed not only from what has been alledged out of Ignatius, and Clemens Alexandrinus and Tertullian, but from the Use of the Word Κυριακὴ in the Epistle of Dionysius, Bishop of Corinth, to Pope Soter, recorded by Eusebius [n], where he says, To Day we observed the LORD's Holy Day, τὴν κυριακὴν ἁγίαν ἡμέραν διηγάσαμεν. And from what Eusebius [o] says of Melito Bishop of Sardis, that he wrote a Book περὶ Κυριακῆς, concerning the Lord's-Day. In like manner Irenæus in his Epistle [p] to Pope Victor, says, the Mystery of the LORD's Resurrection, or the Paschal Festival, ought to be kept only on the Lord's-Day, τῇ τῆς κυριακῆς ἡμέρᾳ. And Origen [q] to distinguish it from the Jewish Sabbath, says, That Manna was first rained down from Heaven on the Lord's-Day, and not on the Sabbath, to shew the Jews that even then the Lord's-Day was preferred before it. This evidences not only the Antiquity of the Name, but that the Observation of the Day in Memory of our LORD's Resurrection was the Universal Practice of the Church from the Time of the Apostles. And from one solemn Act of Breaking Bread in the constant Celebration of the Eucharist on this Day, I have once before [*] observed out of Chrysostom, that it is sometimes called, Dies Panis, the Day of Bread, because it was the general Custom in the Primitive Church to meet for Breaking of Bread, and receiving of the Communion on every Lord's-Day throughout the Year. And I shall not need here to be more particular concerning this, or any other Part of the Publick Service performed on the Lord's-Day, such as Psalmody, Reading of the Scriptures, Preaching, and Praying, and exercising Discipline upon Penitents, and absolving them, (because I have treated largely of these in their Order in several Books before): But now only take Notice of some special Laws and Customs, that were observed, to shew a more peculiar Reverence, Honour and Respect, to the Super-eminent Dignity of this Day.

All Proceedings at Law forbidden and suspended on this Day, except such as were of Absolute Necessity or great Charity: As Manumission of Slaves, &c.

AMONG these we may reckon in the first Place those Imperial Laws, which suspended all Actions and Proceedings at the Law on this Day, whether Arrests, Pleadings, Exactions, Sentences of Judges, or Executions; except only such as were of Absolute Necessity or some eminent Charity, as the Manumission of Slaves, or granting them their Freedom, which was not forbidden, because it was an Act of considerable Charity and great Mercy. This was the same Respect as the Old Roman Laws had paid to their Feriæ or Festivals in Times of Idolatry and Superstition. But as then the Lord's-Day was of no Account among the Heathen, so no Exemption was made in its Favour, but this was Juridical as well as any other, till Constantine made the first Law to exempt it. And now also the Christian Laws concerning the Observation of the Lord's-Day, which exempted it from being Juridical, still admitted of some Exceptions, as the Heathen Laws in Relation to their Feriæ had done before them. The Exceptions made by the Heathen Laws are particularly specified by Ulpian [r] out of the Edicts of Trajan and and Marcus Antoninus, where the Hearing of all Cauſes of Abſolute Neceſſity and great Charity, and about all Military Affairs, are allowed on the Feſtivals: As the appointing of Curators and Guardians to Orphans, and Cauſes relating to Matters of Preſervation and Damage, and Legacies and Truſts, and exhibiting of Wills, and Maintenance of Children, Parents, and Patrons: And all Cauſes wherein a Man might ſuffer great Damage either by Delay or by Death: As in Caſe of Theft, or great Injuries and Loſſes by Fire, or Shipwrack, or Piracies, or any Caſes of the like Nature. Now as the Old Roman Laws exempted the Feſtivals of the Heathen from all Juridical Buſineſs, and ſuſpended all Proceſſes and Pleadings, except in the foremention'd Caſes: So Conſtantine ordered that the ſame Honour and Reſpect ſhould be paid to the Lord's-Day; that it ſhould be a Day of perfect Vacation from all Proſecutions, and Pleadings, and Buſineſs of the Law, except where any Caſe of great Neceſſity or Charity required a Juridical Proceſs and Publick Tranſaction: For ſuch Caſes were always thought to be conſiſtent with the Deſign of the Reſt both of the Sabbath and the Lord's-Day, as our LORD himſelf had interpreted the Law of the Sabbath in many Caſes of Beneficence and doing Good both by his Doctrine and his Example. Therefore Conſtantine [s] peremptorily forbad all his Judges to hear any Cauſes either Criminal or Civil on this Day, except ſuch as could not be deferred without intrenching upon the Rules of Charity; which Sort of Actions and Cauſes the Law calls Votiva, Good Offices, ſuch as the Emancipation or Manumiſſion of Slaves, which he allows any one to perform, in a Legal Manner, on this Day, and there ſhould lie no Prohibition againſt them. Honorius in like manner excepts the Cauſes that were commenced againſt the [t] Navicularij, or Maſters of Veſſels tranſporting the publick Corn from Africk to Rome: If any Fraud was ſuſpected in them, they were to be examined by Torture upon any Feſtivals or Days of Devotion without Delay or Moleſtation: Becauſe the Preſervation of the Publick Corn was a Matter of great Concern to the Publick Welfare of Rome (Bread being the Staff of Life;) and therefore Inquiſition into ſuch Frauds was proper to be made upon any Day whatſoever without Exception. For the ſame Reaſon Honorius and Theodoſius Junior by another Law [u] ordered Proſecution to be made againſt the Iſaurian Pirates on any Day, not excepting Lent or Eaſter-Day: Leſt the Diſcovery of wicked Deſigns ſhould be delayed, which was to be effected only by putting the Robbers to the Rack in their Examination; which it was to be hoped the Great GOD would readily pardon, ſeeing the Preſervation and Safety of many Innocent Men was procured thereby. So that in ſuch Caſes where Mercy and Charity, or the Neceſſities of the Publick Good were concerned, all Days were Juridical, and Actions at Law might be proſecuted on the Lord's-Day as well as any other. But excepting theſe particular Caſes, the Proſecution of Law-Suits on this Day was univerſally forbidden. Valentinian Senior [x] prohibited all Arreſts of Men for Debt, whether Publick or Private, on this Day. For no Man might be convened even by the Exactors of the Publick Revenues, under Pain of incurring the Emperor's higheſt Diſpleaſure for the Breach of his Law. Valentinian Junior [y] ſpeaks a little more expreſsly: On Sunday, which our Forefathers rightly called the Lord's-Day, let all Proſecution of Cauſes, Controverſial Buſineſs and Diſputes be wholly laid aſide: Let no one demand either a Publick or a Private Debt: Let there be no Hearing of Cauſes either before Arbitrators appointed by Law, or voluntarily voluntarily chosen. And let him be accounted not only infamous, but sacrilegious also, whoever departs from the Rule and Custom of our holy Religion. And the same Valentinian together with Theodosius the Great, has another Law [z], wherein he appoints all Sundays in the Year to be Days of Vacation from all Business of the Law whatsoever, according to the Observation of other Festivals.

SECT. 3. All secular Business forbidden, except such as Necessity or Charity compelled Men to, as Gathering of their Fruits in Harvest, by some Laws.

NEITHER was it only Business of the Law, but all other secular and servile Labour and Employments that were superseded on this Day, except only such as Men were called to by Necessity or some great Charity; as Earing and Harvest, which at first were allowed on this Day, that Men might not be disappointed of their Seasons; and the Visiting of Prisoners by the Bishops and Judges, which was so far from intrenching upon the Sacred Rest of this Day, that it was a necessary Office of Mercy and Charity which the Law injoyned them. Eusebius in the Life of Constantine [a] takes Notice of two Laws made by him in Relation to his Army, whom he obliged to rest from all Military Exercise on this Day. And whereas some of them were Heathens, and some Christians, by the first Law he obliged that Part of his Army which were Christians, to repair with all Diligence to the Church of GOD: And that they might have more Liberty and Leisure to attend their Prayers there, he discharged them from all other Business and Employment on that Day. As to the other Part of the Army, which were still Heathens, he obliged them by a second Law to repair into the open Fields, and there having laid aside their Arms, with one Consent upon a Signal given, with Hands and Minds lift up to Heaven, to address their Supplications to GOD the Supreme King of all. And for this End he gave them a Form of Prayer of his own Composing; Not willing, says the Historian, that they should confide in their Spears or Armour, or in the Strength of their Bodies, but acknowledge the Supreme GOD, who is the Author of all good Things, and that they should think it their Duty to make solemn Supplication unto him. Sozomen [b] takes Notice of the same Thing, when he relates how Constantine appointed, that the Lord's-Day (which the Hebrews call the first Day of the Week, and the Greeks dedicate to the Sun) and also the Day before the Sabbath, should be Days of Vacation from Law-Suits and all other secular Business, and that Men should worship GOD on these Days with Supplication and Prayer: And this Honour he shewed to the Lord's-Day, because it was the Day of our LORD's Resurrection; and to the other, because it was the Day of his Crucifixion. Valesius [c] thinks, that Sozomen was mistaken in saying, That Constantine made Friday a Day of Vacation from Juridical Business, and that he spake rather according to the Usage of his own Times, when the Practice might be so: But as to the Lord's-Day there is no Dispute: For not only Eusebius, but the Law itself, still extant in the Theodosian Code, makes it a Day of Vacation from all Juridical Actions: And there is another Law in the Justinian Code, which not only forbids Pleadings at Law, and Judges keeping Courts on this Day, but all other [d] secular Business in the City, and all working at any Art or Trade: Only allowing Husbandmen in the Country to work at their Agriculture, because it often happens that no Time is more seasonable for sowing Corn, or planting Vines; and he thought it not reasonable to let the commodious Moment slip, which the Providence of GOD put into their Hands. By a Law of Honorius [e] the Judges also were not only allowed, but injoyned to visit the Prisons every Lord's-Day, and have the Prisoners brought before them, to examine whether the Keepers of the Prison denied them any Office of Humanity which the Law allowed them: And they were to grant necessary Subsistance to those that wanted it, allowing the Jaylor Two or Three Sesterces or Deniers a Day, to provide Food for the Poor; and they were also to give Orders that the Prisoners should be carried out of Prison under a sufficient Guard, to bathe or or waſh themſelves on this Day. And if any Judges, or their Officers under them acted in Contempt of theſe Rules, they were to be fined Twenty Pounds of Gold, and the City-Magiſtrates Three Pounds. And the Biſhop of the Place was alſo to contribute his laudable Care, to put the Judges in mind of their Duty in this Particular. We find a like Rule made in France by the 5th Council [f] of Orleance under King Childebert. An. 549. where it is ordered, That the Archdeacon, or Provoſt of the Church, ſhould every Lord's-Day viſit the Priſoners, for whatever Crimes they were put in Durance, that the Neceſſities of thoſe that lay bound in Priſon might mercifully be relieved, according to the Command of GOD: And the Biſhop was to appoint ſome Faithful and Diligent Perſon to provide them Neceſſaries and to ſee that they had a Competent Suſtenance out of the Church. This was an Act of great Mercy, and therefore juſtly excepted from the Common Works and Employments that were forbidden on the Lord's-Day. However in the Juſtinian Code [g] this Work is transferred from the Lord's-Day to Wedneſdays and Fridays, which were Days alſo of Church-Aſſemblies, but not ſo ſtrictly obſerved as the Lord's-Day. And by other Laws [h] that Liberty which Conſtantine granted to Countrymen to follow their Works of Husbandry on the Lord's-Day, was in a great Meaſure reſtrained. Private Writers and the Canons of the Church alſo run againſt it. Irenæus expounding the Law of the Sabbath, thus expreſſes his Senſe of it: Though the Law did not forbid thoſe that were hungry, to take Meat, and eat of ſuch Things as were next at Hand; yet metere & colligere in horreum vetabat [i], it did forbid Men to reap, and and carry into Barns. Exod. xxxiv. 21. Six Days thou ſhalt work, but on the Seventh Day thou ſhalt reſt: In Earing-Time and Harveſt thou ſhalt reſt. Tertullian in like manner ſays, The Law of the Sabbath forbids all Human Works, but not Divine. Conſequently it forbids [k] all thoſe Works which are enjoyned on the Six Days, Namely their own Works, that is, Human Works, or Works of their daily Vocation. But ſuch a Work as the Levites carrying about the Ark on the Sabbath, was no Human or Common Work, but Sacred and Divine by GOD's expreſs Command. St. Auſtin, or whoever was the Author of the Sermons de Tempore [l], ſays, The Apoſtles transferred the Obſervation of the Sabbath to the Lord's-Day, and therefore from the Evening of the Sabbath to the Evening of the Lord's-Day, Men ought to abſtain from all Country-Work and Secular Buſineſs, and only attend Divine-Service. Some think this Homily is one of Cæſarius Arelatenſis a French Biſhop, which is very probable: For the French Councils about his Time are very expreſs in forbidding Works of Husbandry on the Lord's-Day. The Third Council of Orleance diſtinguiſhes between the Jewiſh and Chriſtian Way of obſerving the Lord's-Day: For whereas ſome People were perſuaded [m] that it was unlawful to travel on the Lord's-Day, either with Horſes, or Oxen, or Chariots, or to dreſs any Victuals, or do any Thing pertaining to Cleanlineſs of Houſe or Man: Which came nearer the Jewiſh, than the Chriſtian Obſervation: They therefore decreed, That all Things might lawfully be done that were uſed to be done before. But however Men ought to abſtain from all Country-Work, as Husbandry, Dreſſing of Vineyards, Reaping and Mowing, and Threſhing, that they may have more Liberty to come to Church, and offer up their Prayers to GOD. So likewiſe the Council of Auxerre [n]: It is not lawful on the Lord's-Day to yoke Oxen, or do any Works of the like Nature. And the Second Council [o] of Maſcon: Let no one on this Day proſecute a Law-Suit, no Lawyer plead any Cauſes, no one put himſelf under the Neceſſity of yoking his Oxen. But be ye all intent and ready both in Body and Mind to ſing Hymns and Praiſes to GOD. If any one contemn this Admonition, he ſhall be puniſhed according to the Quality of his Offence. If he be a Lawyer, he ſhall looſe his Privilege of Pleading; if he be a Countryman or Slave, he ſhall be ſeverely beaten with Rods; if a Clergyman or Monk, he ſhall be Six Months ſuſpended from the Communion of his Brethren. There are [p] a great many other French and Spaniſh Councils to the Time of Charles the Great, that have Canons prohibiting the ſame Thing: Which ſhew, that the Liberty indulged by Conſtantine of working at Husbandry on the Lord's-Day, was never well approved by the Church: But it was no eaſy Matter to reſtrain Men from the Uſe of that firſt Liberty which the Law had granted them, and therefore they continued to enjoy the Indulgence, which had ſo plauſible a Pretence; and in many Places the Evil increaſed; for ſome kept Courts, and pleaded Cauſes, and kept Fairs and Markets, and traded on this Day as well as any other, as appears from the ſeveral Complaints made againſt theſe Things in the Time of Charles the Great, who endeavoured among other Things to correct theſe Abuſes in his Reformation.

BUT the Church did not only oppoſe the Prophaners of the Lord's-Day, but all ſuch as with a Phariſaical Superſtition on the other Hand pretended to carry the Obſervation of it to an unreaſonable Rigor and Strictneſs in abſtaining from all Bodily Labour. The Doſitheans among the Jews are noted by Origen [q] as putting a Ridiculous Senſe upon the Law of Moſes, which ſaid, Abide ye every Man in his Place, let no Man go out of his Place on the Seventh-Day. This they interpreted ſo literally and rigorouſly, as that whatever Habit, Place or Poſture a Man was found in on the Sabbath-Day, he was to continue in it till the Evening: That is, if he was found ſitting, he muſt ſit ſtill all the Day; or if lying down, he muſt lye all the Day. The Jewiſh Rabbins were as ridiculous in their Confutation of this Dream of Doſitheus: For they pretended to ſay out of ſome fabulous and frivolous Traditions, that every Man's Place was the Space of two Thouſand Cubits round him: And therefore he that travelled no farther, was not reputed to move [r] out of his Place. They were no leſs ridiculous in interpreting thoſe other Laws againſt working and bearing Burdens on the Sabbath-Day. They ſaid [s], If a Man had Nails in his Shoes, it was reputed a Burden; but if he had no Nails, it was no Burden. If he carried any Thing upon one Shoulder, it was a Burden; but if upon both Shoulders, it was none. And ſome of them were ſo ſuperſtitious, as if their Lives lay at Stake, they would not move a Finger to help themſelves, for fear they ſhould be thought to break the Sabbath by working. Syneſius [t] gives a famous Inſtance of this in a certain Jewiſh Pilot, who was ſteering a Ship in a violent Tempeſt: He laboured hard till the Sabbath came on, but then he let go the Helm, and left the Ship to the Mercy of the Winds and Sea; and though a Soldier threatned him with preſent Death, unleſs he would reſume his Labour, yet he refuſed, and like a true Maccabee was ready to ſacrifice his Life to his Superſtition. But afterwards upon ſecond Thoughts about Midnight he betook himſelf to his Poſt, ſaying, Now the Law allows it, becauſe we run the Hazard of our Lives. Syneſius elegantly calls him a Maccabee for his firſt Reſolution: Becauſe a Thouſand of the Maccabees ſuffered themſelves to be cut in Pieces by their Enemies, rather than they would take the Sword in Hand to fight, or do any Thing to defend themſelves on the Sabbath-Day. Which made Mattathias and his Friends decree, That whoever ſhould come to make Battel with them on the Sabbath-Day, they would fight againſt him, and not die all as their Brethren that were murdered in the ſecret Places, 1 Mac. ii. 41. And the Jewiſh Pilot wiſely bethought himſelf in Time of this Example, and ſo ſaved the Ship at laſt by working on the Sabbath. Joſephus [u] ſays, this Decree of Mattathias was obſerved by the Jews in Part: For if they were in preſent Danger of their Lives, they would fight on the Sabbath: But if the Enemy only made Preparation for an Aſſault the next Day, and did not actually aſſault them on the Sabbath, they would do nothing to oppoſe them on that Day. And this gave Occaſion to Pompey firſt, and to Titus afterwards to overcome them. The Eſſenes were yet more rigorous: For they would not kindle a Fire, nor move a Veſſel out of its Place on the Sabbath-Day. And the Doſitheans exceeded all the reſt, as we have heard before, in ſuperſtitious Madneſs. The Chriſtians therefore in Oppoſition to theſe Furies were careful to obſerve a juſt Medium in the Celebration of the Lord's-Day, neither to indulge themſelves the Liberty of unneceſſary Works on this Day, nor wholly to abſtain from working, if a great great Occaſion required it. The Council of Laodicea thus determines [x] the Matter, in ſettling the Obſervation both of the Sabbath and the Lord's-Day, between which they put this Difference, That Chriſtians ſhould not judaize, or reſt from bodily Labour on the Sabbath, but work on that Day (that is, ſo far as Divine-Service would permit:) But they were to give Preference in this Reſpect to the Lord's-Day, and to reſt, if poſſible, and abſtain from Working. But if any were found to judaize, they were to be anathematized as great Tranſgreſſors. Balzamon and Zonaras upon this Canon very well obſerve, that the Words, ἐὰν δύναιντο, if poſſible, ſuppoſe ſome ſpecial Caſes that may diſpenſe with Mens Working on the Lord's-Day, as extreme Poverty and Want, to which may be added all other Caſes of Neceſſity, as Fighting to preſerve Mens Lives againſt an Enemy, Toiling at the Helm and Oar to eſcape the Violence of a Tempeſt, Travelling to Church for the Service of GOD, Dreſſing of Food for the Life of Man, Labouring to deliver a Man or Beaſt in manifeſt Danger of Death, and any the like Caſes, which are all ſo reaſonable, that the greateſt Adverſaries of our SAVIOUR, when he propoſed ſome ſuch Caſes, could not but own the Juſtneſs of his Proceedings: And from his Example the Chriſtian Church took her Meaſures, in ſtating the Exceptions that were proper to be made to the Law about Working on the Lord's-Day, in Contradiſtinction to the Perverſe Way of obſerving the Jewiſh Sabbath.

SECT. 4. No Publick Games, or Shews, or Ludicrous Recreations, allowed on this Day.

ANOTHER Thing which the Chriſtian Laws took Care of, to ſecure the Honour and Dignity of the Lord's-Day, was, That no ludicrous Sports, or Games, or Recreations, however allowable at other Times, ſhould be followed or frequented on this Day. There are two Famous Laws of Theodoſius Senior, and his Grandſon Theodoſius Junior to this Purpoſe in the Theodoſian Code. The firſt peremptorily forbids any one, who either by his Office or otherwiſe had any Concern in exhibiting the Publick Games to the People, to gratify them with any Thing of this Kind on the Lord's-Day [y], whether it were a Gymnaſtical Exerciſe of Gladiators in the Theatre, or a Stage-Play, or an Horſe-Race in the Cirque, or an Hunting and Fighting of Wild Beaſts; leſt the Worſhip of GOD ſhould be diſturbed and confounded with any ſuch Entertainments as theſe. And the other [z] extends the Prohibition of theſe Pleaſures as well to the Feſtival of CHRIST's Nativity, and Epiphany, and Eaſter, and Pentecoſt, as to the Lord's-Day: And equally injoins both Jews and Gentiles over all the World ſo far to ſhew a Reſpect to theſe Days, as to know how to make a Diſtinction between Times of Supplication and Times of Pleaſure. Nor ſhould it be any Excuſe for any one to plead, he exhibited ſuch Diverſions to the People in Honour of the Emperors Birth-Day, which might happen to fall in with ſome of theſe Seaſons: For they were given to underſtand, that no greater Honour could be paid to his Imperial Majeſty on Earth, than to have a juſt Reſpect and Veneration ſhewed to the Majeſty of Almighty GOD in Heaven. A like Order was made by Leo and Anthemius, that no Stage-Play, nor Games of the Cirque, nor Hunting of Wild Beaſts ſhould [a] be performed on this Day. And if it ſo happened that any of the Emperors Birth-Days fell upon the Lord's-Day, the Obſervation of their Birth-Day ſhould be put of to another Day. And whoever tranſgreſſed this Order, either by exhibiting theſe Games, or by being preſent at them as a Spectator only, if he were a Military Man, he ſhould forfeit his Office; if a private Man, be liable to Confiſcation of all his Goods. And the ſame Penalty is impoſed on all Judges, Advocates, and Apparitors, that pretended to proſecute any Buſineſs of the Law upon this Day. The Church was no leſs careful to guard the Service of this Day from the Encroachment of all vain Paſtimes and needleſs Recreations. The Jews, though they would not work on their Sabbath, yet made no ſcruple to ſpend it in Idleneſs, or worſe Exerciſes than any Innocent Bodily Labour, as Dancing and Revelling and other unlawful Pleaſures. Againſt which the Ancients often inveigh, and endeavour to diſſuade their People from following ſo bad an Example. The Jews in our Time, ſays St. Auſtin [b], celebrate their Sabbath in a Sort of Reſt, which is nothing but a Corporal Lazineſs, Languid, Vain, and Luxurious.

For they reſt only for Trifling Vanities: And when GOD commands them to obſerve the Sabbath, they exerciſe the Sabbath in thoſe Things which GOD forbids. Our Reſt is from evil Works, their Reſt is from good Works. For it is better to go to Plowing, than as they do, to Dancing. They Reſt from good Works, but Reſt not from Works of Vanity and Trifling. So in another [c] Place, A Jew would do better to work in his Field at ſome uſeful Labour, than ſpend his Time at the Theatre in a ſeditious Manner. And their Women had much better ſpin on the Sabbath, than ſpend the whole Day on their New Moons in immodeſt Dancing. Therefore GOD commands thee to obſerve the Sabbath ſpiritually, not as the Jews do in Carnal Reſt to ſatisfy their Vanity and Luxury. Prudentius [d] brings the ſame Charge againſt the Jews, objecting to them their Miſemploying the Sabbath in Laſcivious Dancing. And Ruffin [e] on thoſe Words of Hoſea ii. 11. I will cauſe all her Mirth to ceaſe, her Feaſt-days, her New Moons, and her Sabbaths, and all her ſolemn Feaſts, ſays, Theſe were the Feaſts in which the whole Nation ſpent their Time in Dancing, Singing, and Laſcivious Banquetings. St. Chryſoſtom [f] alſo objects it to them, that when they were delivered from ſecular Cares, they had no Regard to ſpiritual Things, Sobriety, Modeſty, and Hearing of the Word of GOD, but did all Things contrary, ſerving their Belly, indulging Drunkenneſs, ſtuffing themſelves with Meat and Delicacies, and ſpending their Time in Banquetings and Pleaſures. This was their Way of keeping the Sabbaths, which St. Chryſoſtom, following the Septuagint, Amos vi 3. calls Σάββατα ψευδῆ, Falſe Sabbaths, when they lay upon Beds of Ivory, and ſtretched themſelves upon their Couches, and eat the Lambs out of the Flock, and the Calves out of the midſt of the Stall; chanting to the Sound of the Viol, and inventing to themſelves Inſtruments of Muſick, like David; drinking Wine in Bowls, and anointing themſelves with the chief Ointment, but were not grieved for the Affliction of Joſeph. Which agrees with the Character which another Prophet gives of them: The Harp and the Viol, the Tabret and Pipe, and Wine are in their Feaſts; but they regard not the Work of the LORD, nor conſider the Operation of his Hands, Iſa. v. 12. Theodoret [g] in like manner reflects upon their Abuſe of the Sabbatical Reſt in Laſcivious Dancing. And again [h] on the Effeminacy and Luxury, wherein they indulged themſelves on this Day. Upon which Account both he [i] and Cyril of Alexandria [k] apply to them the forementioned Words of Amos, and charge them with keeping Falſe Sabbaths. Their Luxury and Banqueting on this Day was become ſo extravagant and infamous, that it was noted even to a Proverb. Cotelerius [m] thinks the Phraſe, Luxus Sabbatarius, in Sidonius Apollinaris [b] has Reference to this; though Savaro interprets it as ſpoken of Theodorick and his Arian Goths keeping Saturday as a Feaſt, in Oppoſition to the Roman Church, who made it a Weekly Faſt, as we ſhall ſee more in the next Chapter. The Heathens indeed had a quite contrary Notion of the Jews: For they thought they faſted on their Sabbath: Which was a Vulgar Miſtake in them, ariſing merely from a Miſapprehenſion of their Laws and Practice: For becauſe they kindled no Fires, nor dreſſed any Meat on the Sabbath, they wrongfully concluded that they ſpent the Day in Faſting: Whereas the Chriſtian Writers, who better underſtood their Practice, charge them every where with making it a Day of Rioting, and Drunkenneſs, and Exceſs of unlawful Pleaſures; and as ſuch they earneſtly caution thoſe of their own Religion againſt imitating the Jews in ſuch perverſe and abominable Corruptions of the Law, by turning a Day of Spiritual Reſt into a Day of Carnal Pleaſure.

BUT beſide the Example of the Jews, Chriſtians were under another Temptation from the Practice of the Gentiles. Therefore the Fourth Council of Carthage made a Decree, That if any one forſook the ſolemn Aſſembly of the Church on the Lord's-Day, to go to a Publick [n] Shew, he ſhould be excommunicated. St. Chryſoſtom [o] threatens the ſame Puniſhment, copiouſly declaiming againſt the Publick Games, as the Conventions of Satan. The African Fathers in one of their General Synods [p] petitioned the Emperor Honorius, that the Spectacles both of the Theatre and other Games might be wholly omitted on the Lord's-Day, and all other noted Feſtivals of the Chriſtian Religion, becauſe they had found by ſad Experience, that even upon the Sunday, called, The Octaves of Eaſter, the People met more at the Horſe-Races in the Circus, than at Church:

Church: And therefore they thought, if any ſuch Days as were devoted to theſe Pleaſures, as the Emperors Birth-Days, or the like, happened to fall upon a Sunday, it ought to be transferred to ſome other Day: And no Heathen ſhould have Power to compel a Chriſtian to be a Spectator of them upon any Occaſion. For by the Eccleſiaſtical Law theſe Sort of Diverſions were univerſally forbidden to all Chriſtians [q], for the Extravagancies and Blaſphemies that were committed in them. What Care was taken by Honorius to ſatisfy theſe Demands, and remedy the Abuſes here complained of, appears not from any Law of his in either of the Codes, but rather that he refuſed to comply with their Requeſt to prohibit the Games and Shews upon any other Feſtivals beſide the Lord's-Day, which had been prohibited before. For by one of his Laws [r] An. 399. he granted Licence to the People to ſolemnize and frequent their uſual Games and Diverſions on any Publick Days of Rejoicing, only forbidding Sacrifice and other Superſtitious Rites of the Heathen. But not long after Theodoſius Junior publiſhed that famous Law called Dominico, [s] wherein he not only reſtrained the People from celebrating their Games on the Lord's-Day, but on all other ſolemn Feſtivals, Chriſtmas, Epiphany, Eaſter, and Pentecoſt, and obliged both Jews and Gentiles over all the World to ſhew a Reſpect to theſe Days, by putting a Diſtinction between Days of Supplication and Days of Pleaſure. And this became the ſtanding Law of the Roman Empire.

SECT. 5. All Faſting prohibited on this Day, even in the Time of Lent.

BUT we are here to note, that ſuch Recreations and Relaxations or Refreſhments, as contributed only to the Preſervation or Convenience of the Life of Man, or had any Tendency to promote the Performance of Divine Worſhip with greater Decency or Perfection, were no Ways comprehended in this Prohibition of Recreations and Diverſions on the Lord's-Day. Therefore though the Ancient Church was very ſtrict in obſerving her ſtated and ſolemn Faſts, yet ſhe never allowed any Faſt to be held on the Lord's-Day, no not even in Lent, out of which the Sabbath and Lord's-Day were generally excepted, and made Days of Common Recreation and Refreſhment. Tertullian [t] ſays in general, That they counted it a Crime to faſt on the Lord's-Day. And he remarks in particular concerning the Montaniſts [u], that though they were more rigid than others in obſerving their Faſts, yet they omitted every Saturday and Lord's-Day throughout the Year. St. Ambroſe ſays [x], they faſted not even in Lent either on the Sabbath or the Lord's-Day: But condemned the Manichees particularly for Faſting on the Lord's-Day, as in Effect denying [y] the LORD's Reſurrection; which is alſo cited by St. Auſtin [z]; and Pope Leo [a] condemns the Priſcillianiſts for the ſame Practice. The Fourth Council of Carthage [b] reckons him no Catholick, that faſts upon this Day. The Firſt Council of Braga particularly [c] anathematizes the Cerdonians, Marcionites, Priſcillianiſts and Manichees for their Perverſeneſs in this Particular. And there are more General Anathema's in the Apoſtolical Canons [d], and the Council of Gangra [e], and the Council of Saragoſſa and Agde [f], and the Council of Trullo, [g], againſt all that under any Pretence whatever preſumed to make the Lord's-Day a Faſting-Day; which was not allowed to thoſe who led an Aſcetick Life, without Suſpicion of ſome Perverſe and Heterodox Opinion. Whence Epiphanius [h] obſerves, That the true Aſceticks of the Church never faſted on the Lord's-Day, no not in Lent, becauſe it was againſt the Cuſtom of the Catholick Church. And the like Obſervation is made by Caſſian of all the Monks [i] in the Eaſt, that they faſted Five Days in the Week, but on the Hebdomas and Ogdoas, that is, the Seventh and the Eighth Day (ſo he terms the Sabbath and the Lord's-Day) they always abſtained from Faſting, and kept them Feſtival. Nor would the Council of Gangra allow the Euſtathians to faſt on the Lord's-Day, as Aſceticks, under Pain of Anathema.

THE Reaſon of this Obſervation, the ſame Caſſian [k] tells us, was the Reſpect they had to our SAVIOUR's Reſurrection from the Dead on this Day, which they always commemorated with Joyfulneſs, and therefore neither faſted on this Day, nor the whole Fifty Days between Eaſter and Pentecoſt, which were all kept Feſtival in Memory of our SAVIOUR's Reſurrection. The ſame is ſaid by the Author of

of the Conſtitutions, Every Sabbath [l] except one, (viz. the Great Sabbath before Eaſter) and every Lord's-Day ye ſhall keep Feſtival. For he is guilty of Sin, that faſts on the Lord's-Day, as being the Day of his Reſurrection; or whoever makes Pentecoſt or the Lord's-Day a Day of Sorrow. For in theſe Days we ought to rejoice, and not to mourn. So again [m], Keep the Sabbath and the Lord's-Day Feſtival: Becauſe the one is the Commemoration of the Creation, and the other of the Reſurrection. In like manner Peter Biſhop of Alexandria [n], We keep the Lord's-Day as a Day of Joy, becauſe of him who roſe upon it. And Cotelerius [o] cites a Fragment of Theophilus Biſhop of Alexandria to the ſame Purpoſe: Both Cuſtom and Decency requires us to keep the Lord's-Day a Feſtival, and to give Honour to it, becauſe on this Day our Lord JESUS CHRIST procured for us the Reſurrection from the Dead. Yet this Rule was not ſo ſtrictly binding, but that when a Neceſſary Occaſion required, and there was no Suſpicion of Heretical Perverſeneſs or Contempt, Men might faſt upon this Day: As St. Jerom [p] obſerves, That the Apoſtle Paul ſometimes did; and that famous Monk, who for the Space of Forty Years never eat till the Sun was ſet; and Celerinus the Confeſſor in Cyprian, ſpeaking of his Siſters lapſing into Idolatry in Time of the Perſecution [q], ſays, For this Fact I wept Day and Night in the midſt of the joyful Feſtival of Eaſter, and ſpent many Days ſorrowing in Sackcloth and Aſhes. But ſuch Exceptions as theſe were no Derogation to the General Practice, which prevailed univerſally over the whole Church, and was obſerved with great Exactneſs.

SECT. 6. And all Prayers offered in the ſtanding Poſture on the Lord's-Day in Memory of our Saviour's Reſurrection.

ANOTHER Cuſtom, as generally prevailing, was always to pray Standing, and never Kneeling, on the Lord's-Day, in Memory alſo of our SAVIOUR's Reſurrection. And we ſcarce meet with any Exception to this, except it were in the Caſe of Penitents under Publick Diſcipline, whom the Canons [r] oblige to pray Kneeling even upon Days of Relaxation. But ſetting aſide this Caſe, which only reſpected the Penitents in their own particular Prayers, the general Cuſtom was for all the Faithful or Communicants to pray Standing. For which we have the concurrent Teſtimony of Irenæus, Tertullian, Clemens Alexandrinus, Cyprian, the Council of Nice, Hilary, Baſil, Epiphanius, St. Jerom, St. Auſtin, Caſſian, the Author of the Queſtions under the Name of Juſtin Martyr, Martin Bracarenſis, the Council of Trullo, and the Council of Tours in the Time of Charles the Great. All which Teſtimonies I have had Occaſion to recite at large once before [*], and therefore ſpare the Repetition of them in this Place; only obſerving from the two laſt of them, that this Cuſtom was not only General, but of long Continuance in the Church; and when, or how it came to be altered or laid aſide, I think is not very eaſy to determine.

SECT. 7. The great Care and Concern of the Primitive Chriſtians in the Religious Obſervation of the Lord's-Day. This demonſtrated Firſt, from their conſtant Attendance upon all the Solemnities of Publick Worſhip.

THE laſt Thing to be noted in this Matter, is the great Care and Concern of the Primitive Chriſtians for the Religious Obſervation of the Lord's-Day: Of which they have left us ſeveral Demonſtrations: Firſt, in that they paid a ready and conſtant Attendance upon all the Offices and Solemnities of Publick Divine Worſhip. They did not only reſt from bodily Labour and ſecular Buſineſs, but ſpent the Day in ſuch Employments as were proper to ſet forth the Glory of the LORD, to whoſe Honour the Day was devoted. That is, in holding Religious Aſſemblies for the Celebration of the ſeveral Parts of Divine Service, Pſalmody, Reading of the Scriptures, Preaching, Praying, and Receiving the Communion, all which were the conſtant Service of this Day: And ſuch was the flaming Zeal of thoſe Pious Votaries, that nothing but Sickneſs, or a great Neceſſity, or Impriſonment, or Baniſhment could detain them from it; and then alſo Care was taken, that the Chief Part of it, the Communion, was adminiſtred to them by the Hands of the Deacons, who carried it to thoſe that were Sick or in Priſon, that as far as was poſſible they might communicate ſtill with the Publick Congregation. This is plain from the Account which Juſtin Martyr gives [s] of their Worſhip: On the Day called Sunday all that live in City or Country meet together, and the Writings of the Apoſtles and Prophets are read to them, after which the Biſhop or Preſident of the Aſſembly makes a Diſcourſe to the People, exhorting them to follow the good Things they have heard: Then we all riſe, and make Common-Prayer; and when Prayers are ended, Bread and Wine and Water are brought to the Preſident, who Prays and gives Thanks with with all poſſible Fervency over them, the People anſwering, Amen. After which, Diſtribution of the Elements is made to all that are preſent, and they are ſent to the Abſent by the Hands of the Deacons. By this Account it appears, that all Chriſtians joined, as far as was poſſible, in the Publick Service of the Lord's-Day, and particularly in Receiving the Communion, from which the Abſent were not exempt, if there was any Poſſibility of their Receiving it.

NEITHER was it any Pretence of Danger in Times of Difficulty and Perſecution, that could abate their Zeal for the Publick Worſhip on the Lord's-Day. For when they could not meet by Day to ſerve GOD without Hazard of their Lives, they kept their Nocturnal Convocations, or Morning Aſſemblies for this Purpoſe. Which is evident from the Account which Pliny [t] gives of them, that they were uſed to meet before it was Light on this ſolemn Day, and ſing their Morning Hymns to CHRIST. So Tertullian in anſwer [u] to one asking, How they ſhould celebrate the Lord's-Day Solemnities for Fear of the Soldiers coming in to diſcover them? replies firſt, That they ſhould do it as the Apoſtles did, by Faith, and not by bribing them. For if Faith could remove Mountains, it could much more eaſily remove a Soldier out of the Way. But if they could not meet by Day, they had the Night ſufficiently clear with the Light of CHRIST to protect them. The ſame Author [x] tells the Heathen, who maliciouſly objected to them the Murdering of an Infant in their Aſſemblies, that they were often beſet, they were often betrayed, they were daily ſeized in their Meetings and Congregations: But no one ever found them acting ſuch a Tragedy, no one ever made Evidence of their being ſuch bloody Cyclops and Sirens before a Judge. Nay, they were ſometimes barbarouſly murdered in their Aſſemblies, whilſt the Laws forbad their Meetings under the Name of Hetæriæ, and denied them their Areæ, or Places of Worſhip, as unlawful Cabals, where they met only to plot Treaſon amd Rebellion againſt the Government. Under which Pretence, Lactantius [y] and Euſebius [z] tell us, one of the Heathen Judges burnt a whole City of People in Phrygia, together with their Church, where they were met together to worſhip GOD. And the Laws [a] forbidding their Aſſemblies, are mentioned both by Pliny and the Chriſtian Writers. So that in theſe Times of Difficulty the Chriſtians could not meet for Divine Worſhip, but at the Hazard of their Lives: And yet they did not think this a ſufficient Excuſe to forſake the Aſſembling of themſelves together, but met continually to ſolemnize the Lord's-Day in ſpite of all Danger and Oppoſition to the contrary.

SECT. 9. 3dly, From their ſtudious Obſervation of the Vigils or Nocturnal Aſſemblies preceding the Lord's-Day.

A FARTHER Inſtance of their Zeal was ſhewed in the ſtudious Obſervation of the long Vigils, or Nocturnal Aſſemblies preceding the Lord's-Day. For though theſe were firſt begun in Times of Perſecution, yet they continued them as an uſeful Exerciſe of Piety, when the Perſecutions were over: And the greateſt Perſonages did not refuſe to frequent and encourage them, as Sidonius Apollinarius [b] particularly notes of Theodorick King of the Goths, that he uſually came with a ſmall Guard to the Morning or Antelucan Aſſemblies of his Party (for he was by Sect an Arian:) Which he did to promote the Cauſe of the Arians, who commonly vied Zeal with the Catholicks in this Service. And this made the Catholicks, both Clergy and Laity, Princes and People, expreſs a more earneſt Concern for this particular Way of Introducing the great Service of the Lord's-Day, as I have had Occaſion more fully to demonſtrate [*] in a former Book. All that I ſhall remark farther here is, That though this Morning Service was very long (for it commonly continued in Pſalmody, Hymns and Prayers from Midnight till break of Day) yet it was generally attended with great Alacrity and Aſſiduity by Men of all Ranks, who voluntarily reſorted to it without any Neceſſity or Compulſion laid upon them. And this was another Inſtance of their great Zeal in the Religious Obſervation of the Lord's-Day.

SECT. 10. 4thly, From their Attendance upon Sermons in many Places, twice on this Day.

4. IT is worth our remarking alſo, That in many Places, eſpecially in Cities and Churches of greater Note, they had uſually Sermons twice on this Day, and Men reſorted with Diligence to the Evening as well as the Morning Sermon. St. Chryſoſtom ſometimes [c] commends the People of Antioch for their Zeal in this Matter. And there are ſeveral Paſſages in St. Baſil, Theodoret and Gaudentius, which plainly refer to the ſame Practice, of which I need ſay no more here, becauſe I have more fully repreſented them in diſcourſing of the Ancient Manner of Preaching [d] in another Place.

SECT. 11. 5thly, From their Attendance on Evening-Prayers, where there was no Sermon.

5. IN ſuch Churches as had no Evening Sermon, there was ſtill the Common-Service of Evening-Prayer: And Men generally thought themſelves obliged to attend this, as a Neceſſary Part of the Publick Worſhip and Solemnity of the Lord's-Day. Some indeed in theſe Primitive Ages had their Objections againſt this, which St. Chryſoſtom [e] in one of his Homilies mentions, and ſmartly anſwers. Why ſhould we go to Church, ſaid they, if we cannot hear a Preacher? This one Thing, ſays Chryſoſtom in his Reply, has ruined and deſtroyed all Religion. For what need is there of a Preacher, except when that Neceſſity ariſes from our Sloth and Negligence? What need is there of an Homily, when all Things neceſſary are plainly revealed in Scripture? Such Hearers as deſire to have ſomething New every Day, only ſtudy to delight their Ears and Fancy. Tell me, What pompous Train of Words did St. Paul uſe? And yet he converted the World. What Eloquent Harangues did the Illiterate Peter make? But the Scriptures are dark and hard to be underſtood (without a Sermon to explain them.) How ſo? Are they read in Hebrew, or Latin, or any other ſtrange Language? Are they not read in Greek, to you that underſtand Greek? What Difficulties do the Hiſtories contain? You may underſtand the Plain Places, and take ſome Pains about the reſt. Oh, but we have the ſame Things read to us out of Scripture. And do you not hear the ſame Things every Day in the Theatre? Have you not the ſame Sight at the Horſe-Race? Are not all Things the ſame? Does not the ſame Sun riſe every Morning? Do you not eat the ſame Meat every Day? Hence he concludes, That all theſe were but Pretences for Idleneſs, or mere Indications of a Sceptical Temper. So again, when ſome would have excuſed themſelves from theſe Prayers of the Church, by this frivolous Plea, that they could pray at Home, but they could not hear a Sermon in their own Houſes; and therefore they would come to Sermon, but not to Prayers: He makes this handſome Reply. You deceive [f] yourſelf, O Man: For though you may pray at Home, yet you cannot pray there in the ſame Manner as you may in the Church, where there are ſo many Fathers together, and where the Cry of your Prayers is ſent up to GOD with one Conſent. You are not heard ſo well, when you pray to GOD by yourſelf alone, as when you pray with your Brethren. For there is ſomething more here, Conſent of Mind, and Conſent of Voice, and the Bond of Charity, and the Prayers of the Prieſts together. For the Prieſts for this very Reaſon preſide in the Church, that the Peoples Prayers, which are weaker of themſelves, laying hold on thoſe that are ſtronger, may together with them mount up to Heaven. In another Place, anſwering the ſame Vulgar Plea, That Men could pray at Home, he tells them [g], You may pray at home indeed, but your Prayers are not of that Efficacy and Power, as when the whole Body of the Church, with one Mind, and one Voice, ſend up their Prayers together; the Prieſts aſſiſting, and offering up the Prayers of the whole Multitude in Common. This was the Senſe which that Holy Man had of Publick Prayer on the Lord's-Day, though there was no Sermon; and the Method he took to ſhew Men their Obligation to frequent the Church for Publick Prayer, which, when they had Opportunity to frequent it, was always to be preferred before Private Devotion. They might both very well conſiſt together, and both be performed as proper Exerciſes for the Lord's-Day: But the one was not to juſtle out the other, or to be pleaded as a Rational Excuſe for abſenting from the Publick Service. He that would ſee this Matter more fully ſtated, may look back to the Diſcourſe of Church-Unity [*], where Mens Obligation to preſerve the Unity of Worſhip, in joining with the Church in Prayers, and Adminiſtration of the Word and Sacraments, has been amply conſidered.

SECT. 12. Fifthly, From the Censures inflicted on those who violated the Laws concerning the Religious Observation of the Lord's-Day.

6. I SHALL but mention one Instance more of their great Zeal and Concern for the Religious Observation of the Lord's-Day, and that is the Church's Care in making many good Laws of Discipline, for the Censure and Punishment of those, who in any considerable Degree violated the just Observation of it. If any one absented for three Lord's-Days from the Publick Assembly of the Church, without any just Reason or Necessity to compel him, this was an Offence thought worthy of Excommunication, as may be seen in the Canons of the Council of Eliberis [b], and Sardica and Trullo. If any one went to the Publick Games in the Theatre, or the Circus on this Day, he was liable to Excommunication also for a single Offence after a first Admonition, as appears from the Councils of Carthage [i] and the Denunciations of St. Chrysostom. If any one left the Church whilst the Bishop was Preaching, by a Rule of the Fourth Council of Carthage [k] he was liable to the same Condemnation and Censure. If any one came to Church to hear the Scriptures read and the Sermon preached, but refused to join in Prayers or the Reception of the Communion (which in those Times was administred to all in general every Lord's-Day) he was to be excommunicated for his Offence, and reduced to the State of a Penitent, as one who brought Confusion and Disorder into the Church. This we learn from the Apostolical Canons [*], and the Council of Antioch, Eliberis, and Toledo. If any one held a separate Assembly, or frequented or encouraged any such, he was to be treated as an Heretick or Schismatick, for despising the Service of the Lord's-Day. The Apostolical Canons [l] excommunicate all such, and the Council of Gangra [m] lays the heaviest Censure of Anathema upon them. If any one perversely chose to make the Lord's-Day a Day of Fasting; because this was contrary to the general Rule and Practice of the Church, and gave Suspicion of some Heresy denying the Resurrection of the LORD; the Apostolical Canons [n], and the Council of Gangra [o]; and the Fourth Council of Carthage [p], and the First of Braga [q] peremptorily denounce such an one excommunicate, and Anathema, and no Catholick, as herding with the impious Manichees, Marcionites, Priscillianists, and such other Hereticks, as purposely chose to fast on the Lord's-Day, to shew Despite to the Doctrine of our SAVIOUR's Humanity and Resurrection. I have discoursed these Things at large in giving an Account of the Unity and Discipline of the Church in a former Book [*], and therefore only just touch them here, to shew with what Zeal and Concern the Ancients laboured to establish the Observation of the Lord's-Day, which they esteemed the Queen and Empress of all Days, in which our Life was raised again, and Death conquered by our LORD and SAVIOUR: As the Author of the Epistle to the Magnesians under the Name of Ignatius [r] words it, who in this speaks the Language of the Ancients, who often stile this Day, the Queen of Days, [s] as Buxtorf observes [t] the Rabbins were used to term the Jewish Sabbath, Malchah, that is, The Queen of Days; from whom the Christians took the Name, and transferred it to the Lord's-Day, which is the proper Christian Sabbath.

CHAP. III.

Of the Obſervation of the Sabbath or Saturday, as a Weekly Feſtival.

SECT. 1. The Saturday or Sabbath, always obſerved in the Eaſtern Church as a Feſtival.

NEXT to the Lord's-Day, the ancient Chriſtians were very careful in the Obſervation of Saturday, or the Seventh Day, which was the ancient Jewiſh Sabbath. Some obſerved it as a Faſt, others as a Feſtival; but all unanimouſly agreed in keeping it as a more ſolemn Day of Religious Worſhip and Adoration. In the Eaſtern Church it was ever obſerved as a Feſtival, one only Sabbath excepted, which was called the Great Sabbath, between Good-Friday and Eaſter-Day, when our SAVIOUR lay buried in the Grave, upon which Account it was kept as a Faſt throughout the whole Church. But ſetting aſide that one Sabbath, all the reſt were kept as Feſtivals in the Oriental Church. St. Auſtin, though he lived in a Country where it was kept a Faſt, yet teſtifies for the contrary Practice [a] of the Eaſtern Church. For writing to St. Jerom, he asks him, Whether he thought an Oriental Chriſtian, when he came to Rome, might not without any Diſſimulation Faſt on every Sabbath, as well as that one Sabbath called the Paſchal Vigil? If we ſay it is a Sin (to faſt on the Sabbath,) we ſhall condemn not only the Roman Church, but many neighbouring Churches, and ſome at a greater Diſtance, where that Cuſtom is kept and retained. But if we think it is a Sin not to faſt on the Sabbath, we ſhall raſhly condemn all the Oriental Churches, and the greateſt Part of the Chriſtian World. We ſhould therefore rather ſay, it is a Thing indifferent in itſelf, which a good Man may perform either way without any Diſſimulation, complying with the Society and Obſervation of the Church where he happens to be. From hence it is plain, that all the Oriental Churches, and the greateſt Part of the World obſerved the Sabbath as a Feſtival. And the Greek Writers are unanimous in their Teſtimony. The Author of the Conſtitutions, who deſcribes the Cuſtoms chiefly of the Oriental Church, frequently ſpeaks of it. On the Sabbath [b] and the Lord's-Day, on which CHRIST roſe from the Dead, ye ſhall more carefully meet together, to praiſe GOD, who created all Things by JESUS, to hear the Prophets and the Goſpels read, to offer the Oblation, and partake of the Holy Supper. In another Place [c] he ſays, CHRIST commanded them to faſt on the Sabbath before Eaſter: Not that they were to faſt on the Sabbath, on which GOD reſted from the Creation, but only on that one Sabbath, when the Creator of the World lay under the Earth. And again [d], On every Sabbath, except one, and the Lord's-Day, ye ſhall hold Feſtival-Aſſemblies. The Sabbath [e] and the Lord's-Day ye ſhall obſerve as Feſtivals, becauſe the one is the Remembrance of the Creation, and the other of the Reſurrection. But one Sabbath in the Year, viz. That on which our LORD lay buried in the Grave, ye ſhall keep as a Faſt, and not a Feſtival. For whilſt the Creator lay under the Earth, Mourning was more becoming upon his Account, than Joy for the Creation: Becauſe the Creator in Nature and Dignity is more Honourable than all his Creatures. Finally he repreſents it as [f] the Order of the Apoſtles Peter and Paul, that Servants ſhould work five Days in the Week, but on the Sabbath and the Lord'-Day they ſhould reſt, that they might have Liberty to go to Church for Inſtruction in Piety; on the Sabbath, in Regard to the Creation; on the Lord's-Day, in Regard to the Reſurrection. Athanaſius likewiſe tells us [g], that they held Religious Aſſemblies on the Sabbath, not becauſe they were infected with Judaiſm, but to worſhip JESUS the LORD of the Sabbath. Epiphanius ſays the ſame [h], That it was a Day of Publick Aſſembly in many Churches, meaning the Oriental Churches, where it was a Feſtival.

SECT. 2. Obſerved with the ſame Religious Solemnities as the Lord's-Day.

OTHER Authors are more particular in deſcribing the Religious Service of this Day: And ſo far as concerns Publick Worſhip, they make it in all Things conformable to that of the Lord's-Day; which is a farther Evidence of its being a Feſtival. They tell us, They had not only the Scriptures read, as on the Lord's-Day, and Sermons preached, but the Communion adminiſtred alſo. Which is expreſsly

I have once before [p] had Occaſion to produce the Teſtimonies of theſe ſeveral Writers at large, and therefore it is ſufficient here to make a ſhort Reference to them, to ſhew the Ancient Manner of keeping the Sabbath Feſtival in the Oriental Church.

SECT. 3. But in ſome other Reſpects the Preference was given to the Lord's-Day.

ONLY here we are to obſerve, that though the Subſtance of the Service for the Sabbath and the Lord's-Day was the ſame, yet in Rites and Ceremonies a Difference was made, and in ſome other Reſpects the Preference was given to the Lord's-Day above the Sabbath. For, Firſt, we find no Eccleſiaſtical Laws obliging Men to pray ſtanding on the Sabbath. For that was a Ceremony peculiar to the Lord's-Day in Memory of our SAVIOUR's Reſurrection. Nor Secondly, are there any Imperial Laws forbidding Law-Suits and Pleadings on this Day. Nor Thirdly, any Laws prohibiting the Publick Shews and Games, as on the Lord's-Day. Nor Fourthly, any Laws obliging Men to abſtain wholly from Bodily Labour. But on the contrary the Council of Laodicea [q] has a Canon forbidding Chriſtians to judaize, or reſt on the Sabbath, any farther than was neceſſary for Publick Worſhip: But they were to honour the Lord's-Day, and reſt on it as Chriſtians. And if any were found to judaize, an Anathema is pronounced againſt them. The like Direction is given by the Author of the Epiſtle to the Magneſians [r] in Conformity to this Rule: Let us not keep the Sabbath after the Jewiſh Manner, rejoicing in Idleneſs: For he that will not work, neither let him eat: And in the Sweat of thy Face ſhalt thou eat thy Bread, ſay the Divine Oracles: But let every one of you keep the Sabbath ſpiritually, rejoicing in the Meditation of the Law, not in the Reſt of the Body; admiring the Workmanſhip of GOD, not eating Things dreſs'd the Day before, nor drinking Lukewarm Drink, nor walking within a certain Space (the Limits of a Sabbath-Day's Journey), nor taking Pleaſure in Dancing and Shouting, which Things have no Senſe or Reaſon in them. Here are ſeveral Superſtitions and Vanities in the Jewiſh Obſervation of the Sabbath reflected on by this Author, but I only note the Oppoſition he makes between the Chriſtian and Jewiſh Way of obſerving the Sabbath in Point of Working. The Jews abſtained wholly from Working on the Sabbath; the Chriſtians only ſo far as was neceſſary for their Attendance upon Divine-Service in the Church. And in this Senſe, I think, we are to underſtand the Author of the Conſtitutions [s], when he ſays, Let Servants work Five Days in the Week, but on the Sabbath and the Lord's-Day let them reſt in the Church for their Inſtruction in Piety. But if any think with Cotelerius, that he extends the Reſt of the Sabbath as far as that of the Lord's-Day, becauſe he joins them both together; I will not contend about it, but only ſay, he then contradicts the Laodicean Fathers, who plainly forbid a total Reſt upon the Sabbath, to give ſome Preference in this Reſpect to the Lord's-Day, which was of greater Eſteem in the Chriſtian Church.

If it be enquired, Why the Ancient Church continued the Obſervation of the Jewiſh Sabbath, when they took it to be only a Temporary Inſtitution given to the Jews only, as Circumciſion and other typical Rites of the Law: (which is expreſsly ſaid by many of the Ancient Writers, particularly by Juſtin Martyr [t], Irenæus [u], Tertullian [x], Euſebius [y], to name no more: It is anſwered by Learned Men [z], That it was to comply with the Jewiſh Converts, as they did in the Uſe of many other indifferent Things, ſo long as no Doctrinal Neceſſity was laid upon them. "For the Jews being generally the firſt Converts to the Chriſtian Faith, they ſtill retained a mighty Reverence for the Moſaick "Inſtitutions, and eſpecially for the Sabbath, "as that which had been appointed by GOD "himſelf, as the Memorial of his Reſt from "the Work of Creation, ſettled by their "great Maſter Moſes, and celebrated by their "Anceſtors for ſo many Ages, as the ſolemn "Day of their Publick Worſhip, and were there-"fore very loth it ſhould be wholly antiquated and laid aſide. For this Reaſon it ſeemed good to the Prudence of thoſe Times "(as in other of the Jewiſh Rites, ſo in this) "to

" to indulge the Humour of that People, and " to keep the Sabbath as a Day for Religi- " ous Offices, viz. Publick Prayers, Reading " of the Scriptures, Preaching, Celebration of " the Sacraments, and ſuch like Duties". But when any one pretended to carry the Obſervation of it farther, either by introducing a Doctrinal Neceſſity, or preſſing the Obſervation of it preciſely after the Jewiſh Manner, they reſolutely oppoſed it, as introducing Judaiſm into the Chriſtian Religion. For this Reaſon the Ebionites were condemned for joining the Obſervation of the Sabbath [a] according to the Law of the Jews, with the Obſervation of the Lord's-Day after the Manner of Chriſtians. Againſt ſuch the Council of Laodicea [b] pronounces Anathema, that is, ſuch as taught the Neceſſity of keeping the Sabbath a perfect Reſt with the Jews. And in this Senſe we are to underſtand what Gregory the Great [c] ſays, That Antichriſt will renew the Obſervation of the Sabbath. He muſt needs mean the Obſervation of it after the Jewiſh Manner: Since in the Chriſtian Way it was obſerved as well by the Latin Church as the Greek; only with this Difference, that the Latins kept it a Faſt, and the Greeks a Feſtival.

SECT. 5. Why it was kept as a Feſtival in the Oriental Church.

IF it be enquired, what was the Occaſion of this Difference, why the Greek Church obſerved it as a Feſtival, and the Latin as a Faſt? I anſwer, The Greek Church received it as they found it delivered to them by the Jews, among whom it was always a Feſtival. But beſides this there was another Reaſon inclining them to do it. For Marcion the Heretick made it a Part of his Hereſy to faſt on the Sabbath, in Oppoſition to the GOD of the Jews, pretending that there was another GOD to be worſhipped beſide the Creator of the World, who was the GOD of the Jews; and therefore he appointed the Sabbath to be kept a Faſt, that he might not ſeem to comply with the Rites of the GOD of the Jews, who reſted from his Work of Creation on the Sabbath or Seventh-Day. This is expreſsly ſaid by Epiphanius [d]: Marcion for this Reaſon faſted on the Sabbath. For, ſaid he, ſince that Day is the Reſt of the GOD of the Jews who made the World and reſted on the Sabbath-Day, we therefore faſt on that Day, that we may not do any Thing in Compliance with the GOD of the Jews. Now this made the Catholicks more zealous to keep the Sabbath a Feſtival, that they might not ſeem to give any Countenance to the wicked Blaſphemy and Impiety of Marcion, or any ways reflect upon the GOD of the Old Teſtament, whom they owned and honoured as the Father of our Lord JESUS CHRIST, which Marcion did not: Since he in Spite to the true GOD made the Sabbath a Faſt, they thought it proper to keep it a Feſtival, as it had always been from its firſt Inſtitution. And in Oppoſition to his Hereſy, ſoon after it began to ſpread, a Canon was made in the Church, which now we have among thoſe called the Apoſtolical Canons [e], That if any Clergyman was found to faſt on the Lord's-Day, or on the Sabbath, one only excepted, he ſhould be depoſed; or if he was a Layman, be caſt out of the Communion of the Church. After Marcion there aroſe many other Sects, who followed him in this particular Singularity of keeping the Sabbath as a Faſt, though they did not all agree in the ſame Reaſons for doing it. The Euſtathians did it for the Exerciſe of an Aſcetick Life; and the Maſſalians or Euchites on the ſame Pretence: Yet the Church would not allow them in their Practice. The Marcianiſts (who were a diſtinct Sect from the Marcionites: For they were ſo called from one Marcianus Trapezita in the Time of Juſtinian) kept the Sabbath alſo a Faſt. So did alſo the Sabbatians, Lampetians, Choreutæ, and Adelphians, who are condemned by Maximus [f], and Anaſtaſius [g], and Timotheus of Conſtantinople [h] and Nicephorus Patriarcha [i] whoſe Teſtimonies, collected and corrected out of Manuſcripts, the Curious Reader may find at large in Cotelerius [k] and Combefis [l]. I only obſerve, That the Council of Trullo, which was held An. 692, or 707, cenſures the Roman Church itſelf for faſting on this Day, and orders them to correct their Practice: The Words of the Canon [m] are remarkable: Foraſmuch as we underſtand, That in the City of Rome the Sabbath in Lent is kept as a Faſt, contrary to the Rule and Cuſtom of the Church: It ſeemed good to the Holy Synod, that in the Roman Church alſo the Ancient Canon ſhould be revived and inforced, which ſays, If any Clergy-man be found to faſt on the Lord's-Day, or on the Sabbath, one only excepted, let him be depoſed; if a Layman, let him be excommunicated. From whence we may obſerve, That this Cuſtom of celebrating the Sabbath as a Feſtival, was conſtantly and inviolably maintained in the Greek Church without any Variation.

SECT. 6. And why a Fast in the Roman, and some other of the Latin Churches.

AND there are some Learned Men of the Roman Communion, who think it was so originally in the Latin Church also. Albaspinæus [n] is so clearly of this Opinion, that he thinks the Church of Rome herself at first observed the Sabbath as a Festival. And it appears plainly from Tertullian, who writing against the Orthodox in Favour of the Montanists, says expressly, That both the Catholicks and the Montanists excepted the Sabbath out of the Fasts. The Catholicks, he says, kept no Sabbath a Fast [o], except the great Sabbath before Easter. And the Montanists, who observed twice in the Year Two Weeks of Xerophagiæ, or Fasts upon Dry Meats only, yet never [p] fasted in them either on the Sabbath or the Lord's-Day. So that it is next to impossible, that the Sabbath should have been a Fast in the Roman Church at this Time, and yet not have been discerned by so acute a Man as Tertullian, when it was so much for his Cause in this Dispute to have taken Notice of it. However it is certain, that not long after in the Roman, and some other of the Latin Churches, a Change was made: But then the very Manner of the Change sufficiently discovers the Novelty of it. The Council of Eliberis [q] which first introduced the Saturday-Fast into Spain, plainly intimates that it was not observed there before, till they first introduced it, and that most probably from the Example of the Roman Church, where it had been settled a little before. St. Austin [r] long after this observes, That only the Roman, and some of the Western Churches, not all of them, kept the Sabbath a Fast: And he notes more particularly in Africk how they were divided [s] in their Practice: For in the Churches of the same Province, and sometimes among the People of the same Church, it was very common for some to dine, and some to fast on the Sabbath. But at Milan, which was a much nearer Neighbour to Rome, the Ancient Custom still continued of keeping Saturday always a Festival. So that even in Lent, as St. Ambrose himself assures us [t], not only the Lord's-Day, but every Sabbath, except the Great Sabbath before Easter, were observed as Festivals, and Days of Relaxation. And for this Reason, as the Author of his Life tells us, He was used to dine upon Saturday as well as the Lord's-Day. Which is often noted also by St. Austin [u] in answering a Scruple, which perplexed his Mother Monicha and some others, concerning the Observation of this Day, when they could not well account for the different Practices of different Churches, some of which kept it as a Fast, and others as a Festival. To satisfy their Doubts, he told them, That in all Things of this Nature, where the Scripture had determined nothing positively one way or other, the Custom of the People of GOD, and the Rules of our Forefathers were to be taken for a Law: And to dispute about such Things, and condemn the Practice of one Church from the contrary Custom of another, was to raise endless Debates, and loose Charity in the Heat of Contention. He added, That for the Sake of his Mother Monicha, he once went to consult St. Ambrose upon this Particular Question; who told him, he could give no better Advice in the Case, than to do as he himself did: For when I go to Rome, said he, I fast on the Saturday, as they do at Rome; when I am here, I do not fast. So likewise you, whatever Church you come to, observe the Custom of the Place, if you would neither give Offence to others, nor take Offence from them. With this Answer, he says, he satisfied his Mother, and ever after looked upon it as an Oracle sent from Heaven. Nothing can be plainer now, than that the Saturday-Fast was not received in all the Churches of the West, since even at Milan it always continued to be a Festival. And even those Churches, which turned it into a Fast, could not agree about the Reason and Original of it. Some said it was instituted by St. Peter at Rome upon a particular Occasion: For when he was to contend [x] with Simon Magus on the Lord's-Day, for the Danger of the great Temptation he held a Fast with the Church at Rome the Day before, and having obtained a prosperous and glorious Success thereby, he continued the same Custom, and some of the Western Churches followed his Example. But many among the Romans themselves rejected this as a mere Fiction, even in St. Austin's Time, though others continued still in the Belief Belief of it, as appears from what is ſaid in Caſſian [y] and ſome later Writers, about this Faſt in the Roman Church. Pope Innocent [z] gives another Reaſon for it, becauſe on this Day our SAVIOUR lay buried in the Grave, and the Apoſtles were in deep Sorrow for their Maſter, and hid themſelves for Fear of the Jews. Which is the uſual Reaſon now aſſigned by the Learned Writers of the preſent Roman Church, Baronius [a], Bellarmin, Combefis [b] and others. Yet this was only a Conjecture of Pope Innocent, which may ſerve for a Reaſon why the Roman Church might turn the Saturday into a Faſt before his Time, but does not prove that to have been the Original Practice. Socrates [c] makes the Roman Church to vary once more in this Matter: For he ſays in his Time they did not faſt on Saturdays at Rome even in Lent, but only Five Days in the Week: And Valeſius [d] and Menardus go farther, and aſſert that in the Time of Pope Leo they kept but Three Days in the Week Faſting in Lent at Rome: For which they alledge the Words of Pope Leo himſelf in one of his Lent Sermons: On the Second and Fourth and Sixth Day [e] of the Week, that is, Monday, Wedneſday, and Friday, let us faſt: And on the Sabbath celebrate our Vigil at St. Peter's Church. But ſince Mr. Queſnel [f] and Pagi [g] have ſhewed this Paſſage to be foiſted into Leo's Sermon by ſome later Hand, from the Authority of ſeveral Manuſcripts that want it; and ſince 'tis poſſible Socrates being a Greek Writer, might ſometimes miſtake the Roman Cuſtoms; we will charge the Romans with no more Alterations in this Matter, becauſe the Council of Trullo [h] and all the Modern Greeks rather accuſe them for keeping Saturday a Faſt, when all other Churches kept it a Feſtival. It is ſufficient to have ſhewed, that both the Greek and Latin Church originally agreed in the ſame Practice, obſerving the Sabbath together with the Lord's-Day as weekly Feſtivals, and that even in Lent, the Great Sabbath before Eaſter only excepted.

CHAP. IV.

Of the Feſtival of CHRIST's Nativity and Epiphany.

SECT. 1. The Nativity of CHRIST anciently by ſome ſaid to be in May.

HITHERTO we have conſidered the Weekly Feſtivals of the Ancient Church, and now we are to ſpeak of thoſe that were Annual, or only celebrated once a Year, ſuch as the Feſtivals of our SAVIOUR's Nativity and Epiphany, and Eaſter, and Pentecoſt, and Aſcenſion, and the Anniverſary Commemorations of the Apoſtles and Martyrs. The Nativity of our SAVIOUR was not anciently fixed to the ſame Day by all Churches, though Baronius [a] and other Writers commonly aſſert, That both in the Greek and Latin Churches it was always obſerved on the Twenty-fifth of December. Which is a very great Miſtake in Learned Men. For not to mention what Clemens Alexandrinus [b] ſays of the Baſilidian Hereticks, that they aſſerted, that CHRIST was born on the Twenty-fourth or Twenty-fifth of the Month, which the Egyptians call Pharmuthi, that is, April: He ſays a more remarkable Thing of ſome others, who were more curious about the Year and the Day of CHRIST's Nativity, which they ſaid [c] was in the Twenty-eighth Year of Auguſtus Cæſar, and the Twenty-fifth Day of the Month Pachon; which though Pamelius artfully [d] calls December, to ſerve the Common Hypotheſis, and impoſe upon his Reader, yet nothing is more certain than that it ſignifies the Month of May, as Mr. Baſnage [e] has at large demonſtrated out of Epiphanius and Theophilus Alexandrinus, who uſually follow the Egyptian Kalendar, where Pachon anſwers to our May, as every one knows, who has any Underſtanding in the ſeveral Stiles, by which the Ancient Writers made their Chronological Computations.

SECT. 2. By others fixed to the Day of Epiphany or Sixth of January.

BUT what is more conſiderable in this Matter, is, That the greateſt Part of the Eaſtern Church for Three or Four of the firſt Ages kept the Feaſt of CHRIST's Nativity on the ſame Day, which is now called Epiphany, or the Sixth of January, which denotes CHRIST's Manifeſtation to the World in four ſeveral Reſpects, which at firſt were all commemorated upon this Day: viz. 1. By his Nativity or Incarnation, which was the Appearance of GOD manifeſted in the Fleſh. 2. By the Appearance of the Star, which guided the Wiſe-Men unto CHRIST at his Birth, and was the Epiphany or Manifeſtation of him to the Gentiles. 3. By the Glorious Appearance that was made at his Baptiſm, when the Heavens were opened, and the HOLY GHOST deſcended in a bodily Shape like a Dove, and lighted upon him, and a Voice came from Heaven, ſaying, This is my beloved Son in whom I am well pleaſed. 4. By the Appearance or Manifeſtation of his Divinity, when by his firſt Miracle he turned the Water into Wine at the Marriage in Cana of Galilee. That this Day was kept as our SAVIOUR's Birth-day for ſeveral Ages by the Churches of Egypt, Jeruſalem, Antioch, Cyprus, and other Churches of the Eaſt, is ſo evident from good Authorities, that among Learned Men [f] it is now a Thing beyond all Diſpute. Caſſian [g] ſays expreſsly, That in his Time all the Egyptian Provinces, under the general Name of Epiphany, underſtood as well the Nativity of CHRIST as his Baptiſm: And therefore they did not commemorate thoſe two Myſteries upon two diſtinct Days, as was uſual in the Weſtern Provinces, but celebrated both of them together upon that one Day's Feſtival. And Gennadius [h] mentions one Timothy a Biſhop, who compoſed a Book concerning the Nativity of the LORD, which he ſuppoſed to be on the Day of Epiphany. Cotelerius [i] not improbably conjectures, that this was no other than Timothy Biſhop of Alexandria, tho' Dr. Cave [k] ſpeaks of him as a later Writer. But before the Time of the Council of Epheſus, An. 431. the Egyptians had altered the Day of CHRIST's Nativity, and fixed it to the Twenty-ninth Day of their Month Chæac, which is the Twenty-fifth of December: As appears from the Homily of Paulus Emiſenus [l] ſpoken before Cyril of Alexandria, and related in the Acts of that Council. It was not long before this, that the Churches of Antioch and Syria came into the Weſtern Obſervation. For Chryſoſtom [m] in one of his Homilies to the People of Antioch, tells them, that Ten Years were not yet paſt, ſince they came to the true Knowledge of the Day of CHRIST's Birth, which they kept before on Epiphany, till the Weſtern Church gave them better Information. And from that Time the Nativity and Epiphany were diſtinct Feſtivals, as appears from other Homilies [n] of this Writer, where he ſpeaks diſtinctly of them as Two Days, which had been thought one and the ſame before. Epiphanius, who was Biſhop of Salamis, or Conſtantia, the Metropolis of Cyprus, often ſpeaks of CHRIST's Nativity, and always follows the Eaſtern Calculation, fixing it to the ſame Day with Epiphany in the Month of January. In one Place [o] he ſays, It is not lawful to faſt on the Day of Epiphany, on which Day the LORD was born in the Fleſh. In another [p] he takes a great deal of Pains to make his Reader underſtand, That CHRIST was born in January, that is, ſays he, on the Eighth of the Ides of January, which is the Fifth of January, according to the Romans [*], and the Eleventh of Tybi according to the Egyptians, and the Sixth of Audinæus according to the Syro-Macedonians, and the Fifth of the Fifth Month according to the Cypriots or Salaminians, and the Fourteenth of Julus according to the Paphians, and the Twenty-firſt of Aleon according to the Arabians, and the Thirteenth of Atarta according to the Cappadocians, and the Thirteenth of Tibeth according to the Hebrews, and the Sixth of Memacterion according to the Athenians. Nothing could be more particular in fixing the Day of CHRIST's Nativity to that of Epiphany, or Epiphany to the Fifth or Sixth of January, than this ſo minute Account of Epiphanius. Which is confirmed by St. Jerom, who though he differed from Epiphanius as to the Day of CHRIST's Nativity, yet he intimates [q], there were ſome who ſtill believed that CHRIST's Nativity was upon the Epiphany, phany, which was the Fifth of January, which the Prophet Ezekiel called the Fifth Day of the Fourth Month, reckoning the First Month from October, when the Tithes were carried to the Temple after the Harveſt and Vintage were gathered in, according to the Cuſtom of the Oriental Nations. The Author of the Homily upon the Epiphany among the Works of Origen [r] ſays the ſame, that there were different Opinions and Traditions in the World about it: Some ſaid he was born upon that Day; others ſaid it was only the Day of his Baptiſm. Pagi [s] adds Clemens Alexandrinus and Euſebius to the Number of thoſe who believed the Nativity of CHRIST to be on the Epiphany or Sixth of January: And conſidering where and when they lived, it is very probable they did ſo, though he cites no Authority out of them: For not only the Alexandrians, but the Churches of Jeruſalem and Paleſtine, where Euſebius lived, obſerved the Nativity of CHRIST on the ſame Day with Epiphany for ſeveral Ages, and pretended the Authority of an Epiſtle of St. James for their Practice, till Juvenal Biſhop of Jeruſalem upon better Information reduced it to the Twenty-fifth of December, as Cotelerius ſhews at large out of Baſilius Cilix, Joannes Nicænus, and an Homily under the Name of St. Chryſoſtom, and other Writers [t].

SECT. 3. In the Latin Church always obſerved on the 25th of December.

THUS ſtood the Caſe in the Eaſtern Church for ſeveral Ages; in thoſe of the Weſt it was generally obſerved, as now it is, a diſtinct Feſtival from Epiphany, on the Twenty-fifth of December. For ſo St. Auſtin ſays [u], the current Tradition was, That CHRIST was born on the Eighth of the Kalends of January, that is, on the Twenty-fifth of December. And both Caſſian [x] and St. Jerom [y] ſay, the Nativity and Epiphany were kept on different Days in all the Weſtern Churches. And both theſe were indifferently called Theophania, & Epiphania, & Prima & Secunda Nativitas, the Epiphany, or Manifeſtation of GOD, and his Firſt, and Second Nativity: That being the firſt whereon he was born in the Fleſh; and that his ſecond Nativity or Epiphany, whereon he was baptized, and manifeſted by a Star to the Gentiles, as the Reader may find largely demonſtrated by Cotelerius [z] and Suicerus, out of Gregory Nazianzen, Ambroſe, Baſil, Theodorus Studita, and ſeveral other Writers.

SECT. 4. The Original of this Feſtival derived from the Apoſtolical Age by ſome Ancient Writers.

NOW the Original of this Feſtival is by many Learned Men carried as high as the Age of the Apoſtles. Dr. Cave [b] ſays, the firſt Footſteps he can find of it are in the Second Century, though he doubts not but that it might be celebrated before. His Authority is Theophilus Biſhop of Cæſarea, who lived about the Reign of the Emperor Commodus, An. 192. But he quotes no Book of Theophilus, therefore we are left to conjecture that he meant his Paſchal Epiſtle mentioned by Euſebius and St. Jerom, out of which Hoſpinian [c] before had alledged theſe Words, importing, that the French obſerved the Nativity of CHRIST on the Twenty-fifth of December: For they, ſays Hoſpinian, argued thus for the Obſervation of the Paſchal Feſtival: Sicut Domini Natalem quocunque die 8. Kalend. Januarij venerit, ita & 8. Kalend. Aprilis, quando reſurrectio accidit, Chriſti debemus Paſcha celebrare: As we celebrate the Nativity of CHRIST on the Eighth of the Kalends of January (that is, the Twenty-fifth of December) whatever Day of the Week that happens to fall upon: So we ought to keep the Paſchal Feaſt on the Eighth of the Kalends of April (that is, the Twenty-fifth of March) becauſe the Reſurrection of CHRIST happened upon this Day. But ſtill I am at Loſs to find theſe Words in Theophilus. For Bede, who relates the Letter, has no more than theſe Words in his Synodical Epiſtle [d]: Galli quacunque die octava Calendarum Aprilium fuiſſet, quando Chriſti Reſurrectio tradebatur, ſemper Paſcha celebrabant. But there is no Mention made at all of the Nativity of CHRIST throughout the whole Epiſtle, which ſeems to be ſpurious alſo, and of no Credit: Certain enough it is not that which is mentioned by Euſebius and St. Jerom: So that I lay no Streſs upon this Authority, as being neither full to the Point, nor Authentick. Hoſpinian and Dr. Cave alledge farther for its Antiquity, that ſad Story, which is related by Nicephorus [e] and Baronius [f] out of the Ancient Martyrologies, where it is ſaid, That when the Perſecution raged under Diocletian at Nicomedia, among other Acts of his barbarous Cruelty, he finding Multitudes of Chriſtians, young and old, met together in the Church upon the Day of CHRIST's Nativity, to celebrate that Feſtival, commanded the

the Church Doors to be ſhut up, and Fire to be put to it, which in a ſhort Time reduced them and the Church to Aſhes. This is probable enough, becauſe we have the like Inſtances of Barbarity committed upon them in other Places on the Lord's-Day, as has been related before out of Lactantius [g] and Euſebius. But it is more material, that Chryſoſtom ſays [h] this Day was of great Antiquity and of long Continuance, being famous and renowned in the Church from the Begining far and wide from Thrace as far as Gades in Spain. It is certain it was obſerved religiouſly in the Time of Gregory Nazianzen and St. Baſil: For they have both Sermons upon the Occaſion; and Ammianus Marcellinus [i] ſays, Julian in the Time of Conſtantius pretending to be a Chriſtian, when in his Heart he was an Heathen, and had ſecretly revolted, to conceal his Apoſtaſie (which was known only to a few of his Confidents) went with the Chriſtians to Church, and performed the ſolemn Worſhip of GOD with them, on the Feſtival which they call Epiphany, and celebrate in the Month of January. Zonaras in telling the ſame Story, ſays, it was on the Nativity of CHRIST: Which makes ſome conclude, that the Nativity and Epiphany were ſtill in France the ſame Feſtival: But conſidering that France was one of the Weſtern Provinces, where theſe Feſtivals were always kept apart, it is more probable that Zonaras was miſtaken in the Day: However we may ſafely conclude, that at this Time both the Nativity and the Epiphany were kept as Feſtivals in France: And that is enough, ſo far as we are concerned, to aſcertain the Antiquity of their Obſervation.

SECT. 5. This Feſtival obſerved with the ſame Religious Veneration as the Lord's-Day.

AS to the Manner of keeping this Feſtival, we may obſerve, they did it with the greateſt Veneration. For they always ſpeak of it in the higheſt Terms, as the Principal Feſtival of Chriſtians, from which all others took their Original. Chryſoſtom [h] ſtiles it the moſt venerable and tremendous of all Feſtivals, and the Metropolis or Mother of all Feſtivals: Adding, That from this both the Theophania, (ſo he ſtiles Epiphany) and the Holy Paſchal Feaſt, and the Aſſumption or Aſcenſion, and Pentecoſt, took their Original. For if CHRIST had not been born according to the Fleſh, he had not been baptized, which is the Theophania or Epiphany: Neither had he been crucified, which is the Paſchal Feſtival: Neither had he ſent the HOLY GHOST, which is our Pentecoſt. But we do not give this Feſtival the Preference merely upon this Account, but becauſe the Thing that was done upon this Day, was more Tremendous than all others. For that CHRIST ſhould die, when he was a Man, was a Thing of Natural Conſequence: But that when he was GOD, he ſhould be willing to be made Man, and condeſcended to humble himſelf beyond all Imagination and Conception, this is indeed Wonderful and Aſtoniſhing in the higheſt Degree. In Admiration of this St. Paul as it were in a Rapture ſays, Without Controverſy great is the Myſtery of Godlineſs: God was manifeſted in the Fleſh. For this Reaſon chiefly I love and embrace this Day, and propound it to you, that I may make you Partakers of the ſame Inducement to love. I therefore pray and beſeech you, come with all Diligence and Alacrity, every Man firſt purging his own Houſe, to ſee our LORD wrapt in Swadling-Cloths and lying in a Manger. A Tremendous and Wonderful Sight indeed! Thus the Holy Father invites his Auditory, Five Days beforehand, to celebrate the Nativity of CHRIST. And we may obſerve, That the Day was kept with the ſame Veneration and Religious Solemnity as the Lord's-Day. For they always had Sermons on this Day, of which there are many Inſtances in Chryſoſtom, Nazianzen, Baſil, Ambroſe, Auſtin, Leo, Chryſologus and many others. Neither did they let this Day ever paſs without a ſolemn Communion. For Chryſoſtom in this very Place invites his People to the Holy Table, telling them, that if they came with Faith, they might ſee CHRIST lying in the Manger: For the Holy Table ſupplied the Place of the Manger; The Body of the LORD was laid upon the Holy Table, not as before wrapt in Swadling-Cloths, but inveſted on every Side with the HOLY SPIRIT. And that the Solemnity might be more univerſally obſerved, Liberty was granted on this Day to Servants, to reſt from their Ordinary Labours, as on the Sabbath and the Lord's-Day. This is particularly mentioned [l] by the Author of the Apoſtolical Conſtitutions: Let Servants reſt from their Labour on the Day of CHRIST's Nativity, becauſe on this Day an unexpected Bleſſing was given unto Men, in that the WORD of GOD, JESUS CHRIST was born of the Virgin Mary for the Salvation of the World. And all Faſting was as ſtrictly prohibited on this Feſtival as on the Lord's-Day: And no one without Suſpicion of ſome impious Hereſy could go againſt this Rule, as appears from what Pope Leo [m] ſays of the Priſcillianiſts, that they diſhonoured noured the Day of CHRIST's Nativity and the Lord's-Day by Faſting, which they pretended they did only for the Exerciſe of Devotion in an Aſcetick Life, but in Reality it was to affront the Days of his Nativity and Reſurrection, becauſe with Cerdon and Marcion, and the Manichees they neither believed the Truth of our SAVIOUR's Incarnation, nor his Reſurrection. Therefore in Oppoſition to theſe and ſuch like Hereſies, the Church was always very jealous of any who pretended to make a Faſt of the Nativity of CHRIST.

FINALLY to ſhew all poſſible Honour to this Day, the Church obliged all Perſons to frequent Religious Aſſemblies in the City-Churches, and not go to any of the other Churches in the Countrey, except ſome Neceſſity of Sickneſs or Infirmity compelled them ſo to do [n]. And the Laws of the State prohibited all Publick Games and Shews on this Day, as on the Lord's-Day. For though at firſt the Prohibition only extended to the Lord's-Day, yet Theodoſius Junior [o] by a new Law reſtrained them on the Lord's-Day, and Epiphany, and the Paſchal Feſtival, and the Fifty Days of Pentecoſt, becauſe at theſe times the Minds of Chriſtians ought to be wholly employed in the Worſhip and Service of GOD. Some alſo think [p] the very Deſign of appointing the Feaſt Days of CHRIST's Nativity and Epiphany at this Seaſon of the Year, was chiefly to oppoſe the Vanities and Exceſſes which the Heathen indulged themſelves, in upon their Saturnalia and Kalends of January at this very Time of the Year. Nazianzen's Exhortation [q] to his People on the Nativity of CHRIST ſeems directly intended againſt them, when he thus endeavours to guard his Auditory from running into the ſame Abuſes: Let us celebrate this Feſtival, not after the Way of the World, but in a Divine and Celeſtial Manner; not minding our own Things, but the Things of the LORD; not the Things that tend to make us Sick and Infirm, but thoſe Things which will heal and cure us. Let us not crown our Doors with Garlands, nor exerciſe our ſelves with Dances; Let us not adorn our Streets, nor feed our Eyes, nor gratify our Ears with Muſick, nor any of our Senſes, Touching, Taſting, Smelling, with any of thoſe Things that lead the Way to Vice, and are the Inlets of Sin. Let us not effeminately adorn ourſelves with ſoft Clothing, nor Jewels, nor Gold, nor Artificial Colours invented to deſtroy the Divine Image in us: Let us not indulge Rioting and Drunkenneſs, which are frequently attended with Chambering and Wantonneſs: Let us not ſet up our lofty Canopies or Tables, providing Delicacies for the Belly; nor be inamoured with the Fragrancy of Wines, or Niceties of Cookery, and precious Ointments: Let not Sea and Land preſent us with their precious Dung; (For that is the beſt Name I can give their Delights) nor let any of us ſtrive to out-do one another in Luxury and Intemperance. But let us leave theſe Things to the Heathen, and to their Heatheniſh Pomps and Feſtivals, who give the Name of Gods to thoſe, who delight in the Smell of Sacrifices, and agreeably worſhip their Deities with the Belly, being wicked Makers of wicked Devils, and as wicked Prieſts and Worſhippers of them. But let us who worſhip the WORD of GOD, place our Delights in the Divine Law, and ſuch Diſcourſes as are proper and agreeable to the preſent Feſtival.

SECT. 6. Of Epiphany as a diſtinct Feſtival.

AS to Epiphany, they who obſerved it as a Diſtinct Feſtival from the Nativity, did it chiefly upon the Account of of our SAVIOUR's Baptiſm, and the appearing of the Star which conducted the Wiſemen of the Eaſt to come and worſhip our SAVIOUR. To Which ſome added two other Reaſons, that of our SAVIOUR's firſt Miracle wrought at Cana in Galilee, when he turned the Water into Wine; and that other Miracle of his feeding Five Thouſand Men with Five Loaves. All which are put together in one of the Sermons which go under the Name of St. Auſtin upon this Day. On this Day, ſays he [r], we celebrate the Myſtery of GOD's manifeſting himſelf by his Miracles in Human Nature; either becauſe on this Day the Star in Heaven gave Notice of his Birth; or becauſe he turned Water into Wine at the Marriage-Feaſt at Cana in Galilee; or becauſe he conſecrated Water for the Reparation of Mankind by his Baptiſm in the River Jordan; or becauſe with the Five Loaves he fed Five Thouſand Men. For each of theſe contain the Myſteries and Joys of our Salvation. Petrus Chryſologus [s] and Eucherius Lugdunenſis [t] mention the three firſt Reaſons, but not the laſt. Pope Leo [u] has Eight Sermons

Sermons upon this Feſtival, in which he inſiſts upon no other Reaſon but the Manifeſtation of CHRIST's Birth to the Wiſemen by the Appearance of the Star. St. Jerom on the other hand [x] makes it to be celebrated chiefly in Commemoration of our SAVIOUR's Baptiſm, and the Manifeſtation of him to the World by the Voice that came from Heaven, ſaying, Thou art my Beloved Son, in whom I am well pleaſed. And the Greek Writers commonly inſiſt upon this Reaſon. Why, ſays Chryſoſtom [y], is not the Day on which CHRIST was born, called Epiphany, but the Day on which he was baptized? Becauſe he was not manifeſted to all when he was born, but when he was baptized. For to the Day of his Baptiſm he was generally unknown. As appears from thoſe Words of John the Baptiſt, There ſtandeth one among you, whom ye know not. And what Wonder that others ſhould not know him, when the Baptiſt himſelf knew him not before that Day. For I know him not, ſays he, but he that ſent me to baptize with Water, the ſame ſaid unto me, Upon whom thou ſhalt ſee the Spirit deſcending and remaining on him, the ſame is he that baptizeth with the HOLY GHOST. Gregory Nazianzen [z] aſſigns the Reaſon for the Obſervation of this Feſtival: This Holy Day of Lights, to which we are come, and which we this Day celebrate as a Feſtival, had its Original from the Baptiſm of CHRIST, the true Light that lighteth every Man that cometh into the World. In like manner Gregory Nyſſen [a] intitles his Sermon on the Baptiſm of CHRIST, εἰς τὴν ἡμέραν τῶν φωτῶν, &c. a Diſcourſe on the Day of Lights, on which our LORD was baptized. And Aſterius Amaſenus ſpeaking of the chief Chriſtian Feſtivals [b], ſays, we celebrate the Nativity, becauſe at this Time GOD manifeſted his Divinity to us in the Fleſh. We celebrate the Feaſt of Light (φῶτος πανήγυριν) becauſe by the Remiſſion of our Sins (in Baptiſm) we are brought as it were out of the dark Priſon of our former Life, to a Life of Light and Virtue.

SECT. 7. Why this Day called by ſome the Second Epiphany, and Dies Luminum the Day of Lights.

FOR Baptiſm being generally called φῶς and φώτισμα, Light and Illumination, from the great and admirable Effects conſequent to it: This Day, being the ſuppoſed Day of our SAVIOUR's Baptiſm, was thereupon ſtyled ἡμέρα φώτων, or ἅγια φῶτα, the Day of Lights, or Illumination, or Baptiſm. As appears not only from the formentioned Paſſages of Gregory Nazianzen and Nyſſen, but ſeveral other Greek Writers noted by Suicerus [c], who juſtly reproves Xylander and Pamelius for interpreting this Day of Lights, Candlemas-Day, becauſe now it is uſual in the Church of Rome to conſecrate their Wax-Candles on this Day, which is otherwiſe called the Purification of the Virgin Mary; whereas there was no ſuch Feſtival in Uſe in the Church in the Time of Gregory Nazianzen and Nyſſen, nor many Years after them, till the Reign of Juſtinian, when it was firſt inſtituted by the Greek Church under the Name of Hypapante. And therefore when Nazianzen [d] in another Place brings in ſome giving this Reaſon why they deferred their Baptiſm; one ſaying, μένω τὰ φῶτα, I ſtay till the Feaſt of Lights come; another, He had a greater Reſpect for Eaſter; and a Third, That he waited till the Time of Pentecoſt: It is plain, the Feaſt of Lights cannot ſignify the Purification of the Virgin Mary (which was no ſolemn Time of Baptiſm) but Epiphany, on which the Greek Church allowed Perſons to be baptized, as one of the three ſolemn Times of Baptiſm, and that in Regard to our SAVIOUR's Baptiſm (which they [e] called his Second Nativity, or Second Epiphany) when his Divinity was more clearly manifeſted by the Voice which came from Heaven, ſaying, Thou art my Beloved Son, in whom I am well pleaſed.

SECT. 8. Celebrated as all other great Feſtivals, and in one Reſpect more noted, as being in the Greek Church one of the Three ſolemn Times of Baptiſm.

SO that we may obſerve, that in the Greek Church in one Reſpect it was more taken Notice of than even the Nativity itſelf; being allowed as one of the Three ſolemn Times of Baptiſm, which the Nativity was not. In the Latin Church indeed it wanted this Privilege. For as I have ſhewed elſewhere [*], the Roman, French, and Spaniſh Churches for many Ages would allow of no other ſolemn Times of Baptiſm but only Eaſter and Pentecoſt, except in Caſe of Sickneſs and Extremity. But the Greek and African Churches made Epiphany alſo a Day of Baptiſm, as appears not only out of the forementioned Place of Nazianzen, but Victor Uticenſis [f] and Joannes Moſchus [g] and the Ancient Ritual, called, Typicum Sabæ. To which we may add what Chryſoſtom ſays [h], That in this Solemnity, in Memory of our SAVIOUR's Baptiſm, by which he ſanctified the Nature of Water, they were uſed at Midnight to carry home Water from the Church, and lay it up, where it would would remain as fresh and uncorrupt for one, or two or three Years, as if it were immediately drawn out of any Fountain. And Fronto Ducæus [i] observes the like Custom in the Syriack Kalendar, published by Genebrard, upon this very Day. Which argues it to be a Peculiar Rite of the Eastern Church. As to other Things, the Observation of this Day was after the same Manner as that of the Nativity and other great Festivals. For they had Sermons and the Communion on this Day, and Servants had Liberty to rest from their Bodily Labour to attend the Religious Service of the Day. In regard to which Usage the Author of the Constitutions [k] gives this Direction: Let Servants rest from their Labour on Epiphany, because on that Day the Divinity of CHRIST was declared, when the FATHER gave Testimony to him at his Baptism, and the HOLY GHOST in the Shape of a Dove shewed him to those that stood by, and heard the Testimony that was given him. And though at first this Day was not exempt from Juridical Acts and Prosecutions at Law; nor were the Publick Games and Shews forbidden for some Time to be exhibited thereon: Yet at length Theodosius Junior [l] gave it an honourable Place among those Days, on which the Publick Games should not be allowed; forasmuch as Men ought to put a Distinction between Days of Supplication and Days of Pleasure. And Justinian reciting one of the Laws of Theodosius the Great [m] makes both the Nativity and Epiphany Days of Vacation from all Pleadings at the Law, as well as from Popular Pleasures. And so it is in the Laws of the Wisigoths [n] published out of the Body of the Roman Laws by Recisswindus and other Gothick Kings, and the old Gothick Interpreter [o] of the Laws in the Theodosian Code. From whence we may conclude, that this was become the standing Rule and Custom throughout both the Roman and Wisigoth Dominions, to keep this Festival of Epiphany with great Veneration; neither allowing the Courts to be open on this Day for Law, nor the Theatre for Pleasure.

SECT. 9. Notice usually given on Epiphany concerning the Time of Easter in the ensuing Year.

I HAVE but one Thing more to note, as it were by the Way, concerning this Day: That they to whom the Care of the Paschal Cycle, or Rule for finding out Easter, was committed, were obliged on or about the Time of Epiphany to give Notice what Time Easter and Lent and all the Moveable Solemnities were to be kept the ensuing Year. The Letters sent from the Metropolitan to the Provincial Bishops upon this Occasion, are commonly called Epistolæ Paschales, and Heortasticæ, Paschal and Festival Epistles, which are usually a short Discourse upon some useful and important Subject, closed with an Intimation or Notice of the Day when Lent should begin, and of Easter-Day, and Whitsunday. As those Three Paschal Epistles of Theophilus Bishop of Alexandria, which were translated by St. Jerom, and are now among St. Jerom's Works, and in the Bibliotheca Patrum [p]. Concerning which and the rest of the same Kind, Cassian says, it was an Ancient [q] Custom in Egypt for the Bishop of Alexandria, as soon as Epiphany was past, to send his Circular Letters to all the Churches and Monasteries of Egypt, to signify to them the Beginning of Lent and Easter-Day. And there are some such of Dionysius, Athanasius and Cyril and Pope Innocent [r] and Leo [s]; and some Orders of Councils [t], that the Primates of Provinces should send their Circular Letters to give timely Notice of these Things to the several Churches under their Jurisdiction. Particularly the Fourth Council of Orleance speaking of the Time of keeping Easter uniformly by the Paschal Laterculus, or Table, made by Victorius (Victor they call him) say, The Bishops of France shall every Year on the Day [u] of Epiphany give Notice of the Time when the Festival is to be kept in their Churches. And if any Doubt arise about the Time, they shall have Recourse to their Metropolitan, and he to the Apostolical See for Resolution. And this leads us to the Consideration of the next great Festival, which was that of Easter.

CHAP. V.

Of Eaſter or the Paſchal Feſtival.

SECT. 1. The Paſchal Solemnity anciently reckoned Fifteen Days, the whole Week before, and the Week after Eaſter Sunday.

IN ſpeaking of the Paſchal Solemnity, I ſhall here only conſider that Part of it, which was properly Feſtival. For we are to know, the Ancients commonly included Fifteen Days in the whole Solemnity of the Paſch, that is, the Week before and the Week following it: Eaſter Sunday, The one of which was call'd Paſcha Στεωρόσιμον, the Paſch of the Croſs, and the other Paſcha Ἀναστάσιμον, the Paſch of the Reſurrection. Suicerus [a] will furniſh the Learned Reader with Examples of both. The general Name Paſcha (which is of Hebrew Extract from Peſach, which ſignifies the Paſſover) will comprize both. For the Chriſtian Paſſover includes as well the Paſſion as the Reſurrection of our SAVIOUR, who is the true Paſchal Lamb or Paſſover that was ſacrificed for us. And therefore though our Engliſh Word Eaſter, be generally uſed only to ſignify the Reſurrection, yet the ancient Word, Paſcha, was taken in a larger Senſe, to denote as well the Paſch of the Crucifixion, as the Paſch of the Reſurrection. And for this Reaſon the Ancients commonly ſpeak of Paſch as containing Fifteen Days in its Solemnity, including the Paſſion-Week together with that of the Reſurrection. Thus in one of the Laws of Theodoſius [b] where he decrees what Days ſhall be Days of Vacation from all Buſineſs of the Law, he reckons into the Number of them the Holy Days of the Paſch, Seven going before, and Seven following after. And Gothofred in his Learned Commentary upon the Place, ſays, both Papianus in his Body of Laws [c] collected by him out of the Roman for the Uſe of the Burgundians, and Anianus in his Collection for the Uſe of the Wiſigoths [d], keep to the ſame Phraſe of Fifteen Paſchal Days. To which we find alſo a plain Reference made by St. Auſtin [e] in a Sermon preached by him on the Dominica in Albis, or Sunday following Eaſter Day, wherein he thus addreſſes himſelf to his Audience: The Days of Vacation are now over, and thoſe of Convening, Exactions, and Law-Suits ſucceed in their Room: Take Care, my Brethren, how ye ſpend theſe Days: From the Vacation of the foregoing Days ye ought to learn Meekneſs, not to meditate ſubtil Devices: For ſome Men reſt on thoſe Days, only to plot Wickedneſs, which they may practice when the Feſtival Days are over. We deſire you may ſo live, as they that are to give Account to GOD, not only of thoſe Fifteen Days, but of their whole Life. Scaliger [f] mentions a Law of Conſtantine, wherein the Paſchal Weeks, the one before, the other after the Paſch, are ordered to be Days of Vacation from all Proceedings at Law. But becauſe the former of theſe Paſchal Weeks belongs to the Lent Faſt, we will conſider it under that Head, and here only ſpeak of the Paſchal Solemnity as it was properly Feſtival.

SECT. 2. Great Diſputes in the Church concerning this Feſtival. Some obſerving it on a fixed Day every Year.

NOW concerning this there were anciently very great Diſputes in the Church; though all agreed in the Obſervation of it in general, yet they differed very much as to the particular Time when it was to be obſerved; ſome keeping it preciſely on the ſame ſtated Day every Year; others on the Fourteenth Day of the firſt Moon in the new Year, whatever Day of the Week that happened to fall upon: Others deferring it to the firſt Sunday after the firſt full Moon; and thoſe often differing in the Sunday on which they celebrated it, by the Difference and Variety of their Calculations. Epiphanius ſays [g], ſome of the Quartadecimans in Cappadocia always kept their Paſch on the Eighth of the Kalends of April, that is, the Twenty-fifth of March, pretending certain Information from the Acts of Pilate, That that was the Day of our SAVIOUR's Paſſion; yet other Copies of thoſe Acts ſaid the Sixteenth of the Kalends of April, that is, the Seventeenth of March. The Chriſtians of Gaule alſo till the Time of Pope Victor, if Bede may be credited [h], kept their Paſch always on the Eighth of the Kalends of April, that is, the Twenty-fifth of March, taking that to have been the Day of our SAVIOUR's Reſurrection. Bede cites the Authority of of Theophilus Biſhop of Cæſarea, and the Synod held under him for this: But conſidering that Irenæus Biſhop of Lyons, who lived in the Time of Pope Victor, ſays no ſuch Thing of the French Churches, but the contrary, That they fixed their Eaſter to no certain Day, but kept it as other Weſtern Churches did, on the Sunday following the Fourteenth Day of the Moon, it is more likely that Bede was impoſed upon by ſome ſpurious Epiſtle of Theophilus, and falſe Act of his Synod, which charged the Gallican Churches with what they were not really guilty of.

SECT. 3. Others obſerving it, with the Jews, on the Fourteenth Day of the Moon, whatever Day of the Week that happened upon.

HOWEVER we are ſure, that in the Second Century there happened a great Diſpute between the Aſiatick Churches and the reſt of the World, concerning this Day. Pope Pius, who lived about the Year 147, had made a Decree, That the Annual Solemnity of the Paſch, ſhould be kept only on the Lord's-Day; and in Confirmation of this he pretended, That Hermes his Brother, who was then an eminent Teacher among them, had received Inſtruction from an Angel [i], who commanded, That all Men ſhould keep the Paſch on the Lord's-Day. Yet notwithſtanding this the Aſiaticks kept to their ancient Cuſtom, and Polycarp Biſhop of Smyrna, came to Rome to confer with Anicetus upon it. They could come to no Agreement upon the Time: For Anicetus could not perſuade Polycarp [k] to alter a Cuſtom, which he had obſerved with St. John the Apoſtle and the reſt of the Apoſtles of the LORD, with whom he had lived and familiarly converſed. Neither could Polycarp perſuade Anicetus to recede from a Cuſtom, which he had received from the Elders that were before him. Yet they continued to communicate with each other, and Anicetus did Polycarp the Honour to let him conſecrate the Euchariſt in his Church: And ſo they parted from each other in Peace; all Churches, as well thoſe that obſerved it on the Lord's-Day, as thoſe that did not, ſtill agreeing to preſerve Chriſtian Peace and Communion one with another.

NOT long after the Death of Polycarp, the Controverſy was revived again at Laodicea, upon which Melito Biſhop of Sardis wrote his Two Books de Paſchate, wherein he defended the Opinion of the Aſiaticks, as is evident from the Teſtimony and Character which not long after Polycrates Biſhop of Epheſus gives of him. For when the Diſpute was ſet on Foot again by the Fierceneſs of Pope Victor, Polycrates [l] wrote to him, and told him, They obſerved the Paſch on the Fourteenth Day of the Moon, as it had been kept, and handed down to them by St. Philip the Apoſtle, who died at Hierapolis, and St. John the Apoſtle, who died at Epheſus, by Polycarp Biſhop of Smyrna, by Thraſeas the Martyr, Biſhop of Eumenia, by Sagaris the Martyr, Biſhop of Laodicea, by Papirius, and Melito Biſhop of Sardis, and many others, whoſe Cuſtom was to celebrate the Paſch, on the ſame Day that the Jews were wont to put away their Leven. This did not ſatisfy Pope Victor, but he in a great Paroxyſm of Intemperate Zeal immediately excommunicated all the Aſiatick Churches, and ſent his Circular Letters to all Churches that were of his Opinion, That they ſhould hold no Communion with them. But this raſh and bold Act of his was ill reſented by all Wiſe and Sober Men of his own Party, ſeveral of which wrote ſharply to him, adviſing him rather to take ſuch Meaſures and Reſolutions as were proper to preſerve Charity, Unity and Peace among the Churches. Particularly Irenæus (whoſe Nature, by what the Greeks call Pheronymy, correſponded to his Name, being of an Irenical or Pacifick Temper) wrote to him in the Name of the Church of Gaule, and in a decent Manner admoniſhed him not to excommunicate whole Churches of GOD for obſerving an ancient Cuſtom, which they had received by Tradition from their Anceſtors: For as much as that there had been Diſputes of old in the Church, not only about the Day, but about the Manner of the Faſt preceding it: ſome Faſting One, ſome Two, ſome more Days; yet all theſe kept Peace one with another, as we now do, and the Difference in the Manner of Faſting only commended their Unanimity in the Faith. He added, That Polycarp and Anicetus, though they could not agree upon the Point, yet parted Friends, and continued to communicate with each other, notwithſtanding this Difference, as has been related before. Athanaſius [m] alſo tells us farther, That the Churches of Cilicia, Meſopotamia, and Syria, were in the ſame Sentiments with the Aſiatick Churches in his Time: Though it is a Diſpute between Biſhop Uſher [n] and Valeſius [o], Whether they were ſo originally: For Valeſius will not allow, That they were ſo in the Time of Pope Victor. However, we ſee there were many great and famous Churches, which kept the Paſch on the Fourteenth Day of the Moon, with the Jews, and that as a Cuſtom received by Tradition from St. Philip and St. John the Apoſtles. Neither were they induced by the Menaces of Pope Victor to alter their Cuſtom, but continued it to the Time of the Council of Nice, An. 324. About which Time Conſtantine being very deſirous to compoſe this Difference in the Church

Church, ſent Oſius Biſhop of Corduba firſt into the Eaſt, as Sozomen [p] relates, to try if he could bring the Diſſenting Party to an Unanimity with the reſt of their Brethren. But failing of his Deſign, he afterwards propoſed the Matter to the Council of Nice, where a Decree was made, That the holy Feaſt of the Paſch ſhould be kept on one and the ſame Day by all: As appears from one of Conſtantine's Epiſtles to the Biſhops, who came not to the Synod, which is recorded by all the Hiſtorians [q]. Not long after this the Council of Antioch An. 341, made a more peremptory Decree, That all who preſumed to diſannul the Determination [r] made by the holy and great Council of Nice concerning the Paſchal Feſtival, ſhould be excommunicated and caſt out of the Church, if they perſiſted contentiouſly to oppoſe what was there decreed. The like Canons had been made ſeveral Times before; but none ſo peremptory as this. Euſebius mentions Abundance of Synods [s] in the Time of Pope Victor, which determined with him, That the Reſurrection Paſch ought only to be kept on the Lord's-Day: But they did not excommunicate any that oppoſed them; but rather, as Sozomen relates [t], mutually tolerated one another in their different Obſervations. The firſt Council of Arles [u] likewiſe, before the Council of Nice, An. 314, had given in charge, That the Paſch of the LORD's Reſurrection ſhould be obſerved uno Die & Tempore per omnem Orbem, at one Time, and on one and the ſame Day throughout all the World. But they added no ſuch Penalty of Excommunication to be inflicted on thoſe that obſerved the contrary Cuſtom. The only Rule, which preſſed the Obſervation with Severity, was one of the Apoſtolical Canons [x], ſuppoſed to be made by ſome Eaſtern Council about the Time of Pope Victor, which ſays, If any Biſhop, Presbyter, or Deacon, keep the Day of the holy Paſch before the Vernal Equinox with the Jews, let him be depoſed. But this at moſt only affected the Clergy. But when the great Council of Nice had once undertaken to determine this Matter, ſuch a Deference was thought proper to be paid to her Decree, as that it was reputed a ſchiſmatical Act, and worthy of Eccleſiaſtical Cenſure, for any one to oppoſe it. And therefore from this Time the Oppoſers of the Decree are commonly cenſured either as Hereticks or Schiſmaticks, as may be ſeen in the Canons of Laodicea, [y], and the firſt Council of Conſtantinople [z] and the Accounts which St. Auſtin [a] and Epiphanius give of the ancient Hereticks, where they are condemned under the Names of Quartadecimani, and Teſſareſcædecatitæ, and Audiani, with a particular Reaſon given for their Condemnation. For St. Auſtin notes out of Epiphanius, That the Audians were condemn'd not ſo much for their Opinion in this Point, as for their Pervicacioufneſs in making a Diſturbance and Schiſm in the Church upon it. For they would not hold any Communion with their own Biſhops [b], nor with any that did not keep the Paſch at the ſame Time that the Jews did. Epiphanius gives a large Account of them, and ſays, They railed at the Council of Nice for introducing a New Cuſtom in Compliance with Conſtantine's Humour [c], and made a Separation in the Church; upon which Conſtantine baniſhed Audius their Leader into Gothia or Scythia, becauſe he drew many away from the Church into a ſeparate Communion. The Caſe was now very different from what it was in the Time of Pope Anicetus and Victor, when Polycarp and Polycrates kept their Paſch at a different Time from the reſt of the World, but ſtill made no Diviſion in the Church, but lived in Peace and Communion with thoſe that differed from them. And this no doubt was the Reaſon, why the Audians or new Quartadecimans were treated with ſuch Severity by both the Church and State above the old ones, becauſe they Pervicacioufly carried their Diſſent into a Schiſm, and made a formal Rupture in the Communion of the Church. And for this Reaſon the Imperial Laws were often very ſevere upon them. Theodoſius the Great [d] in one of his Laws, ranks them with the Manichees, forbidding their Conventicles, confiſcating their Goods, rendring them Inteſtate, and liable alſo to Capital Puniſhment. In like manner, Theodoſius Junior ranks the Sabbatians and Protopaſchitæ (which were new Denominations of the Quartadecimans, taken up in his Time) among the Manichees, Cataphrygians or Montaniſts, Arians, Macedonians [e], Eunomians, Novatians, and makes them all liable to the ſame general Puniſhments inflicted by the Laws: And more particularly in two other Laws [f], he ſtiles them execrable Men, who being being a Spawn of the Novatians, were not content to be in the Common Herd, but ſet up a new Sect, called Protopaſchites (becauſe they kept the Paſch before other Chriſtians, and they pretended that their Way was the true Primitive and Original Inſtitution.) Theſe he condemns to be both confiſcated and baniſhed, and ſays, they deſerved a more ſevere Puniſhment, becauſe they exceeded other Hereticks in Madneſs, worſhipping in a manner another CHRIST by keeping the Paſch at another Time, and after a different Manner than all Orthodox Chriſtians. I remember no other Place at preſent that mentions the Protopaſchites by Name but only this Law; but it is plain they were one of the worſt Sort of Quartadecimans, who had made a new Separation from the Novatian Schiſmaticks upon this Queſtion about the Paſchal Feſtival. For ſome of the Novatians in one of their Synods at Pazus in Phrygia had made a Decree, mentioned by Socrates [g], that Eaſter ought to be kept with the Jews. Which occaſioning a new Diſpute among them, (for the old Novatians at Rome and Conſtantinople were of a different Opinion) Marcianus the Novatian Biſhop of Conſtantinople called another Synod at Angarus in Bithynia, where to end the Controverſy and lay it aſleep, they made a new Canon, called the Ἀδιάφορον, which was, That the Matter ſhould be indifferent, and that both Parties might keep the Feaſt their own Way, and not break Communion upon it. But Sabbatius, a fierce Man among them, would not yield to this, but ſaid the Decree of the Synod of Pazus ought to be obſerved, and that the Paſch [b] ought to be obſerved after the Manner of the Jews. And upon this he made a new Separation among the Novatians, and headed the Protopaſchites, who from him were called Sabbatians. It appears alſo from Chryſoſtom [i] that theſe Protopaſchites were gone farther into the Jewiſh Notions about the Paſch than the reſt of the Quartadecimans. For they aſſerted, That it was neceſſary to obſerve the Jewiſh Azyma, and keep the Faſt as the Jews did, when the Paſch was over. For Sabbatius himſelf was originally a Jew, and retained a Tincture of Judaiſm, when he profeſſed the Chriſtian Religion, as Socrates notes in the forementioned Place. So they kept a Feaſt with the Jews, when the Chriſtians Faſted on the Paſſion-Day, (as Chryſoſtom charges [k] them) and faſted on Eaſter-Day, when the Chriſtians kept their Feſtival in Memory of the Reſurrection. This, as far as I can collect, is the true Hiſtory of the Progreſs which the new Quartadeciman Schiſm made after the Council of Nice, and the Reaſon why the Laws both Imperial and Eccleſiaſtical proceeded with greater Severity againſt them, above the old Quartadecimans, who never broke Communion with their Brethren, however they differed from them in their Practice. They thought the Peace and Unity of the Chnrch of greater Value, than the Obſervation of Times and Seaſons: And if they could not comply with their Brethren in the Preciſe Time of keeping Eaſter, yet they were careful for all that to keep the Unity of the Spirit in the Bond of Peace.

SECT. 4. They who kept it on the Lord's-Day, did not always agree to fix it on the ſame Lord's-Day, by reaſon of their different Calculations.

BESIDES this Difference about keeping Eaſter on the Lord's-Day, there was another, which though of leſs Moment, yet ſometimes very much embaraſſed and troubled the Church. That was a Diſpute among thoſe who agreed to obſerve this Feſtival on no other but the Lord'-Day. For though they all unanimouſly combined in this, yet it was not ſo eaſy to determine on what Lord's-Day it was to be held, becauſe it was a Moveable Feaſt; and therefore ſometimes it happened, that the Churches of one Country kept it a Week or a Month ſooner than others, by Reaſon of their different Calculations. It appears from an Epiſtle of St. Ambroſe [l], that in the Year 387. Eaſter was kept at Three ſeveral Times; ſome obſerving it, March 21. others April 18. And others 25. ſo it happened again, An. 577. The Churches of Gaul kept it on March 21. the Churches of Italy on April 18. and the Churches of Egypt on April 25. as Biſhop Stillingfleet [m] ſhews out of Gregory of Tours and Labbe's Chronologicon Technicum, An. 387, and 577. Where he ſhews farther out of the Ancient Laterculus Paſchalis publiſhed by Bucherius [n] that the Eaſter of the Latins was Three Times a Month ſooner than that of the Alexandrians within the Compaſs of of an Hundred Years, viz. An. 322. 349. 406. It appears alſo from Leo's Epiſtles [o] that in the Year 455. there were Eight Days Difference between the Eaſter at Rome and at Alexandria. Cyril of Alexandria [p] in one of his Paſchal Epiſtles complains, that there was great Confuſion in the Account of Eaſter both in the Church, the Camp, and the Palace. And Anatolius in his Preface to his Paſchal Canon complains [q] that there were very different and contrary Cycles in uſe in his Time (An. 270) ſome following Hippolytus's Cycle of Sixteen; others a Cycle of Twenty-five; others a Cycle of Thirty. And he tells us, that Iſidore, Hierom, Clemens and Origen, all his Countrymen Egyptians, had laboured in this Matter before him. But notwithſtanding any Endeavours that could be uſed then, or afterwards, there remained great Differences in the Church about it for many Ages. For the Churches of Great-Britain and Ireland did not accord with the Roman Church in keeping Eaſter on the ſame Sunday [r] till about the Year 800. Nor was the Roman Way fully received in France, till it was ſettled there by the Authority of Charles the Great; as has lately been ſhewed by two Learned Writers, Biſhop Stillingfleet and Dr. Prideaux, who give a full Account of the Controverſy between the Britains and Romans, which I ſhall not here repeat, but only acquaint the Reader how theſe Differences happened at firſt in the Church by uſing different Ways of Calculation.

IT is agreed on all Hands, That the firſt Chriſtians of Jeruſalem had no other way of finding out Eaſter, but by the Jewiſh Cycle of Eighty-four Years, which the Jews had uſed ſome Time before to ſettle the Anniverſary Returns of their Paſſover: Which Cycle, though it was a little faulty, continued to be uſed by the Chriſtians for near Two Hundred Years. Not that they kept their Eaſter on the Fourteenth Day with the Jews, as Scaliger [s] and ſome others have erroneouſly hence concluded; for which they are corrected by Biſhop Uſher [t] and Biſhop Beveridge [u], who ſhew, That thoſe firſt Chriſtians of Jeruſalem, though they followed the Jewiſh Computation, did not keep Eaſter with the Jews on what Day of the Week ſoever it fell, but on the Sunday following in Honour of our SAVIOUR's Reſurrection: However they continued to uſe the Jewiſh Cycle, till the Fifteen Biſhops of Jeruſalem, who were of the Circumciſion, were ſucceeded by others who were not of the Circumciſion, and then they began to reckon their Eaſter by other Computations. Epiphanius [x] ſays expreſsly, That they kept Eaſter at firſt by the old Jewiſh Cycle, and he quotes an Order out of the Apoſtolical Conſtitutions (different from thoſe which we have now) appointing them not to trouble themſelves about Calculations, but to keep the Feaſt at the ſame Time with the Brethren that came out of the Circumciſion, and not be concerned though they were miſtaken in their Calculations. But when that Succeſſion of Jewiſh Biſhops was ended with the Deſtruction of Jeruſalem in the Time of Hadrian, ſome Chriſtians began to enquire into the Defects of the Jewiſh Cycle, which was found to make Eaſter ſometimes anticipate the Vernal Equinox, and ſo bring Two Eaſters into one Year. To remedy which Inconvenience, they began to invent other Cycles. About the Year 220 Hippolytus Biſhop of Portus or Adana in Arabia, publiſhed a new Cycle in his Paſchal Canon, which, Euſebius ſays, was called [y] the Ἑξκαιδεκαετηρὶς, or the Cycle of Sixteen Years. Not long after this Dionyſius Biſhop of Alexandria about the Year 250 ſet forth another Canon, called the Ὀκταετηρὶς, or Cycle of Eight Years, in which, as Euſebius [z] tells us, he particularly remarked, that the Paſchal Feſtival ought never to be kept till after the Vernal Equinox. Not long after, Anatolius who was alſo an Alexandrian, about the Year 270 publiſhed another Cycle, which Euſebius ſays [a] was called the Ἐννεακαιδεκαετηρὶς, the Cycle of Nineteen: In which he ſhewed from ſeveral Ancient Jewiſh Writers themſelves, that the Paſch ought never to be before the Vernal Equinox, and therefore there was a Neceſſity of correcting their Cycle. Hence about this Time Biſhop Uſher [b] reckons the Seventh of thoſe called the Apoſtolical Canons, and the Interpolation of the old Conſtitutions took their Original. The former of which [c] ſays, If any Biſhop, Presbyter or Deacon keep the Paſchal Feaſt before the Vernal Equinox, with the Jews, let him be depoſed. And the other [d], Ye Brethren, who are redeemed with the precious Blood of CHRIST, ought to keep the Paſch with all Diligence and Exactneſs after the Equinox, that ye may not Twice in one Year commemorate the Paſſion of him who died but once, and be careful that ye obſerve not the Paſch with the Jews. For we have now no Communion with them. For they are deceived in their very Calculation, which they imagine to be exact. So that they err in all Reſpects, and are found to deviate from the Truth. We ſee, at this Time the Jewiſh Calculation was generally rejected by the Eaſtern Church, and yet no certain one agreed upon in its Room, to fix unalterably the preciſe Lord's-Day on which they were to celebrate this Feſtival. Therefore this Matter remaining ſtill uncertain, the Council of Nice, which determined that it ſhould be kept only upon the Lord's-Day, is ſaid [e] alſo to have committed the Care of the Cycle to the Biſhops of Alexandria, that they might inform the reſt of the World on what Lord's-Day every Year it was to be obſerved. Some think upon this Euſebius was employed to draw up the Cycle of Nineteen, which was afterwards perfected by Theophilus Biſhop of Alexandria in the Time of Theodoſius into a Calculation for an Hundred Years. And yet after this it was that Cyril ſtill complained of great Confuſion in the Camp, and in the Palace; and that the Roman and Alexandrian Accounts ſometimes varied a Week or a Month from each other (as we have ſeen before) which was owing purely to their different Ways of Calculation: Becauſe the Roman Church ſtill proceeded by the old Jewiſh Cycle of Eighty-four, and not by the new Alexandrian Cycle of Nineteen. To remedy this Confuſion one Victorius a Frenchman was employed by Hilarius Archdeacon of Rome to make a New Paſchal Canon: But neither did his Attempt ſucceed: For tho' he took in the Alexandrian Cycle of Nineteen, yet ſtill he retained ſo much of the Roman, as made the Variation of Eaſter Sunday ſometimes a Week, and ſometimes a Month between them. And no effectual Cure was found for this, till Dionyſius Exiguus, An. 525. brought the Alexandrian Canon entire into the Uſe of the Roman Church. Mean while the Churches of France and Britain kept to the old Roman Canon, and it was Two or Three Ages after before the new Roman, that is, the Alexandrian Canon, was, not without ſome Struggle and Difficulty, entirely ſettled among them. This is the Short of the Hiſtory of the long Diſpute that happened in the Church among thoſe that were otherwiſe agreed to keep Eaſter only on the Lord's-Day, which was owing purely, as we have ſeen, to the great Variety of their Cycles and Calculations. Mean while particular Members of particular Churches had no Concern in this Diſpute, but were obliged for Peace Sake to follow the Rule of their own Church, though there might be ſome Error in her Calculation. For, as Chryſoſtom [f] ſays well upon this Diſpute with the Protopaſchites, Men were not bound to be over Critical about Days and Times and Years, but carefully in ſuch Matters to follow the Church, and prefer Peace and Charity before all other Things. For though the Church were in an Error, yet there was no ſuch Advantage or Commendation to be gained by the exact Knowledge of Times, as there might be Diſadvantage and Diſpraiſe ariſing from Diviſion and Schiſm about it. And with this Conſideration Men were generally inclined to keep Eaſter in Peace, and ſometimes comply with what they thought a wrong Calculation, rather than make a Diſturbance in the Church upon it. As Pope Leo tells the French and Spaniſh Biſhops, he complyed with the Alexandrian Cycle in the Year 455. when there was a Weeks Difference in their Computation; the Roman Cycle placing Eaſter on the Seventeenth of April, and the Alexandrian on the Twenty-fourth. But he acquieſced, he ſays, in their Determination for the Sake of Peace and Unity [g], and deſired the Weſtern Biſhops ſo to do likewiſe, and to give Notice of the Time to their Brethren; that they who were united in the ſame Faith, might not be divided about the Solemnity of the Feſtival. This was an excellent Rule of Peace, though there were ſome fierce and untractable Spirits, that would not always be content to be governed by it.

SECT. 5. But they all agreed to pay a great Reſpect and Honour to it, as to the Day of our Lord's Reſurrection.

HAVING thus far accounted for the Differences that were in the Church about the Time of this Feſtival, I come now to ſhew wherein they all agreed to pay a peculiar Reſpect and Honour to it. Gregory Nazianzen [h], after his manner, ſtiles it the Queen of Days, and the Feſtival of Feſtivals, which excells all others, not only human, but even thoſe that are inſtituted to the Honour of CHRIST, as far as the Sun goes beyond the other Stars. It was a Day of extraordinary Rejoycing upon the account of our LORD'S Reſurrection; being, as Chryſoſtom [i] ſtyles it, the deſirable Feſtival of our Salvation, the Day of our LORD'S Reſurrection, the Foundation of our Peace, the Occaſion of our Reconciliation, the End of our Contentions and Enmity with GOD, the Deſtruction of Death, and our Victory over the Devil. Hence in ſome ancient Writers it is diſtinguiſhed from all other Lord's-Days in the Year by the peculiar Name of Dominica Gaudii, the Lord's-Day of Joy, as Papebrochius

And that implies, that this was then a known and noted Appellation.

SECT. 6. On this Day the Emperors granted a general Releaſe to the Priſons, and pardoned all Criminals, except ſome few that were guilty of Crimes of a more unpardonable Nature.

ONE great Inſtance of this publick Joy was given by the Emperors, who were uſed to grant a general Releaſe to the Priſons on this Day, and by an Act of Grace, called their Indulgence, ſet all Criminals free, except ſome few that had committed Crimes of a more unpardonable Nature. This Cuſtom was firſt begun by Valentinian An. 367, who has two Laws in the Theodoſian Code to this Purpoſe. The former of which runs in theſe Terms [l]: In Honour of the Paſchal Feſtival, which we celebrate from the Bottom of our Heart, we open the Priſons to all Criminals that lie bound in Chains, only excepting ſuch as are guilty of Sacrilege, Treaſon, Robbing of Graves, Poyſoning, Magick, Adultery, Stealing or Raviſhing of Virgins, and Murder, from the Benefit of this Indulgence. Valentinian Junior and Theodoſius, An. 381, made a like Act of Grace, only excepting the ſame Crimes, under which they more expreſsly compriz'd Parricide, Inceſt, and Counterfeiting [m] the Publick Coin, as Species of Murder, Adultery and Treaſon, which for their infamous Character ought to have a more notorious Mark ſet upon them. They alſo excepted ſuch as relapſed into their former Crimes, becauſe they abuſed the Indulgence of their Prince, by making that an Incitement to ſin, which was intended only as a Means to correct evil Habits, and bring them to a Reformation. The ſame Emperor An. 385. made another Decree, That whereas it might happen, that by the Negligence or Remiſſneſs of Meſſengers, or any other Accident, their Letters of Grace might come too late, the Judges of Provinces ſhould be impowered, as ſoon as Eaſter-Day [n] was come, to diſpenſe the accuſtomed Indulgence, cauſing the Priſons to be opened, the Chains to be knocked off, and the Perſons to be ſet at Liberty; ſuch only excepted, as it would be a Scandal to pardon, becauſe their Actions were a Reproach to the Purity of that holy and joyful Seaſon. For who (ſay they with great Elegancy) would grant an Indulgence to a ſacrilegious Villain at an holy Seaſon? Who would pardon an Adulterer, or an Inceſtuous Perſon, at a Time which calls for perfect Chaſtity? Who would not purſue a Raviſher of Virgins in the profoundeſt Peace and publick Joy? Let him have no Reſt nor Reſpite from his Bonds, whoſe barbarous Cruelty ſhould not ſuffer the Dead to reſt quietly in their Graves: Let the Poyſoner, and the Sorcerer, and the Falſifier of the Coin ſtill ſuffer Torment: Let the Murderer expect the ſame that he has done to others: And the Rebel deſpair of Pardon from his Prince, againſt whom he has plotted Treaſon. But excepting theſe Criminals, all others had the Benefit of theſe Imperial Indulgences at this holy Seaſon. Juſtinian takes no Notice of the former Laws, but inſerts this laſt into his Code [o], which ſhews that it became the ſtanding Law of the Roman Empire. And the Goths adopted it alſo into their Law, as appears from one of Caſſiodore's Epiſtles [p], which Gothofred commends as written with a great deal of Elegancy upon this Subject. The ancient Fathers not only mention'd theſe Paſchal Indulgences, but frequently ſpeak of them with great Commendations. St. Chryſoſtom more than once [q] tells us, That when Flavian Biſhop of Antioch went to intercede with Theodoſius the Emperor for that City, which by the ſeditious Practices of ſome had highly incurred his Diſpleaſure, among other Arguments to mitigate his Anger againſt them, he made uſe of this, taken from his own Practice, That in Honour of the Paſchal Feſtival, he was uſed to ſend Letters round the World to cauſe all Priſons to be open'd, and all that were in Bonds to be ſet at Liberty: Therefore take an Example, ſaid he, from yourſelf, and call to mind your own Humanity; when in one of your Letters, as if it had not been enough to diſcharge the Priſoners, you were pleaſed to add, I wiſh I were able to recall thoſe that are already executed, and reſtore them to Life again. St. Ambroſe [r] made uſe of the ſame Argument to aggravate the Offence of the Younger Valentinian, when by the Perſuaſion of his Mother Juſtina the Arian Empreſs he had ſent ſome of the Catholick Biſhops to Priſon at the holy Feaſt of Eaſter, when it was Cuſtomary to looſe the Bonds of thoſe that were already in Priſon, and which he himſelf before was uſed to do, as appears from his Laws already mentioned.

The ſame Cuſtom is mentioned by Gregory Nyſſen [s], who ſpeaking of the Reſurrection of CHRIST, ſays, There is no one ſo miſerable as not to find a Releaſe by the Magnificence of this great Feſtival. For at this Time the Priſoner is looſed, the Debtor is ſet at Liberty, and the Slave has his Manumiſſion or Freedom granted him by the kind Declaration of the Church. In like manner, the Petition preſented by the Eutychian Monks to the Second Council of Epheſus, recorded in the Acts of the Council of Chalcedon [t] takes Notice, That as the Church was wont to abſolve Sinners at Eaſter from the Bonds of Excommunication, ſo the Emperors uſed to looſe the Bonds of thoſe that were in Priſon for their Offences.

CHRYSOSTOM farther [u] acquaints us with the Reaſon or Ground of this Practice, telling us, That the Emperors ſet Priſoners at Liberty, that they might imitate, as far as in them lay, the Example of their LORD and MASTER. For as He delivered us from the grievous Priſon of our Sins, and made us capable of injoying innumerable Bleſſings; ſo ought we in like Manner, as far as was poſſible, to imitate the Mercy and Kindneſs of our LORD. So again in his Homily upon Pſalm cxlv. (which was ſpoken in the Paſſion-Week, and therefore goes under both Titles): The Imperial Letters, ſays he [x] are ſent forth, commanding all Priſoners to be looſed from their Bonds. For as our LORD, when He was ἐν ἅδῃ, in Hell, or the State and Place of the Dead, ſet at Liberty all that were under the Power of Death: So his Servants, contributing what they are able in Imitation of the Mercy of their LORD, looſe Men from theſe viſible Bonds, having no Power to looſe them from thoſe which are ſpiritual and inviſible. Whence we may obſerve, That theſe Indulgences of the Princes, were not deſigned to make Men believe they were cleared either of the Guilt or Infamy of their Crimes, but only freed from the Puniſhment that was due to them. Both the Guilt and Scandal ſtill remained upon them, and the very Indulgence itſelf was a Note of Infamy, implying, that they had done ſomething that needed ſuch a Pardon. And for this Reaſon theſe Indulgences were never granted promiſcuouſly to whole Bodies of Men, becauſe that would have been to have ſet a Mark of Infamy and Condemnation upon the Innocent as well as the Guilty, as Valentinian once [y] told the Senate, when they petitioned for a general Act of Grace to be granted to their whole Body for the Sake of a few Offenders in it. He aſſured them, He was ready to pardon any particular Members among them; but to grant a general Indulgence to the Senate, was to defame the Senate without Reaſon: Since every Indulgence ſet a Mark upon thoſe, whom it freed; and did not eraſe the Infamy of the Crime, but only relax the Puniſhment. For as one of the old Poets ſaid well, Pœna poteſt demi, Culpa perennis erit, The Puniſhment may be remitted, but the Crime, both in its Guilt and Scandal, will remain upon Men for ever, notwithſtanding any ſuch human Act of Grace, unleſs they take ſome proper Methods to ſue out a Divine Pardon. However the Emperors were willing to grant what Indulgence they could to Mens Bodies at this holy Feſtival, that Criminals might partake of their Clemency ſhewed in Imitation of their LORD, and uſe the Opportunity to do ſomething more for themſelves, by having Recourſe to Heaven as Penitents, and applying to the Throne of Grace for a more effectual Pardon.

SECT. 7. At this Time alſo it was uſual more than ordinary for Men to ſhew their Charity to Slaves by granting them their Freedom.

WE may obſerve farther out of the forementioned Place of Gergory Nyſſen, that it was uſual at this Time not only to releaſe Criminals out of Priſon by a publick Act of State, but for Private Men alſo to ſhew their Charity to their Fellow-Creatures, by granting Slaves their Manumiſſion or Freedom, as a proper Expreſſion of Mercy becoming this Holy Feſtival, which brought a general Redemption from Slavery, and Univerſal Liberty to Mankind by our SAVIOUR's Reſurrection. And that there might be no Clog or Impediment to this good Diſpoſition caſt in Mens Way to hinder this Kind of Charity, the Law provided, that though all other Kinds of Legal Proceſſes ſhould ceaſe for the whole Week following this Feſtival, yet whatever was neceſſary to be done by Way of Charity for the Manumiſſion of Slaves, ſhould be allowed of, as comporting with the true Intent and Deſign of this Holy Solemnity. This we learn from a Law of Theodoſius [z] in the Juſtinian Code, which ſays, Let all Actions at Law, whether Publick or Private, ceaſe in the Fifteen Paſchal Days (that is, in the Week before and the Week after Eaſter Sunday.) Yet all Men have Liberty at this Time

Time to grant Freedom to their Slaves, and whatever Acts are neceſſary to be done in Law to promote this End, are not prohibited. This is the ſame Exception that Conſtantine had made [a] before with reſpect to the Lord's-Day, on which all Proceedings at Law were prohibited, except ſuch as were Matters of abſolute Neceſſity or great Charity, among which he reckons the Manumiſſion of Slaves, which therefore was allowed at any Time, as has been ſhewed before in ſpeaking of the Lord's-Day.

SECT. 8. And to the Poor by Liberal Donations.

BUT this was not the only Inſtance of their Charity at this Holy Seaſon. For they were ambitious at this Time eſpecially to ſhew their Liberality to the Poor; nothing being thought more congruous and ſuitable to the Occaſion, than for Men to make the Hearts of the Poor rejoice, at a Time when they remembred the common Fountain of their Mercies, as Commodian [b] words it in his Inſtructions. Upon this account Euſebius tells us [c], Conſtantine was uſed, as ſoon as the Morning of Eaſter-Day appeared, to open his Hand in Liberality to all Nations, Provinces, and People; beſtowing rich Gifts upon them, in Imitation of the Beneficence of the common SAVIOUR of Mankind.

SECT. 9. The whole Week after Eaſter-Day celebrated with Sermons, Communions, &c. as Part of the ſame Feſtival.

NEITHER did they confine their Acts of Piety and Devotion to Eaſter-Day, but kept the whole Week following in the ſtricteſt Manner, as Part of the ſame Feſtival; holding Religious Aſſemblies every Day not only for Prayer, but for Preaching and Receving the Communion alſo. This is evident in part from what has been obſerved in the beginning of this Chapter, n. 1. That the Paſchal Solemnity in its full Extent included Fifteen Days, or two whole Weeks, the one before, and the other after Eaſter-Day. Concerning that which followed after (and of that we are only ſpeaking here) Chryſoſtom ſays plainly [d], that they had Sermons every Day throughout the whole Week. For Seven Days together we hold Religious Aſſemblies, and prepare a Spiritual Table for you, making you Partakers of the Divine Oracles, and every Day anointing you, he means, with the Spiritual Unction of Inſtruction, and arming you againſt the Devil. A little after he ſays again, Seven Days together ye have Preaching, that ye may learn perfectly to wreſtle with your Enemy. And he calls the whole Solemnity a Spiritual Marriage, which, after the manner of the other Marriage-Solemnities, laſted Seven Days. Upon this Account the Author of the Conſtitutions [e] requires Servants to reſt from their Labour this whole Week, that they might attend Sermons and other Offices of Divine Service. The ſame is required in the Second Council of Maſcon: On thoſe Six moſt Holy [f] Days let no one preſume to do any ſervile Labour, but let all with one Conſent attend the Service of the Paſchal Feſtival, and perſevere in offering up their Daily Sacrifices, praiſing him who created and redeemed us, both Evening and Morning and at Noon-Day. And to the ſame Purpoſe the Council of Trullo [g]: From the Holy Day of the Reſurrection of CHRIST our GOD to New-Sunday, μεχρὶ τῆς καινῆς κυριακῆς, all the Faithfull ought to ſpend their Time at Church, and exerciſe themſelves inceſſantly the whole Week in Pſalms and Hymns and Spiritual Songs, rejoicing in CHRIST, and celebrating the Feſtival by Attendance on the Reading of the Holy Myſteries. For ſo we ſhall riſe with CHRIST, and be exalted with him. Therefore let neither Horſe-Racing, nor any other Publick Games or Shews be performed on theſe Days.

WHAT this Council here forbids under the Name of Publick Games, is agreable to former Imperial Laws, which prohibited them not only on Eaſter-Day, as being one of the Lord's-Days, but extended the Prohibition to the whole Week after. For ſo Theodoſius Junior had expreſsly determined [h], That at Eaſter and Pentecoſt all Publick Games and Pleaſures both of the Theatre and Cirque ſhould univerſally be denied to the People, during the whole Time that the Newly-Baptized wore their White and ſhining Garments, repreſenting the Light of their Heavenly waſhing: (That is, till the Sunday following, which, as we ſhall ſee by and by, was the Concluſion of this Feſtival:) and the Reaſon of this Prohibition is there given; becauſe during this Seaſon the Minds of Chriſtians ought wholly to be employed in the Worſhip of GOD. And the Prohibition extends alſo to Jews and Gentiles, who are ſo far obliged to pay a Reſpect to this Holy Time, as to know how to make a Diſtinction between Days of Supplication and Days of Pleaſure.

SECT. 11. And all Proceedings at Law, except in ſome ſpecial and extraordinary Caſes.

AND for the ſame Reaſon all Proceedings at Law were prohibited at this Seaſon, except in ſome ſpecial and extraordinary Caſes. As the Caſe of Manumiſſion of Slaves, which being a Caſe of great Charity, was allowed at all Seaſons; as has been noted before [*] out of Gregory Nyſſen, and a Law of Theodoſius, which allows and confirms all Acts of Law that were neceſſary to be done in Order to ſet Slaves at Liberty and give them their Freedom. And a like Exception was made by Theodoſius Junior and Honorius [i] in the Caſe of Trying Pirates, becauſe this was neceſſary to be done immediately for the Sake of the Publick Safety: And therefore the Examination of ſuch Criminals was allowed in Lent, and on the Eaſter-Feſtival. But Excepting ſuch Caſes of Neceſſity, and Charity, all other Actions at Law were entirely ſuperſeded at this Time in Honour of the Paſchal Feſtival. There are Laws of Theodoſius in both the Codes [k] to this Purpoſe, That the whole Fifteen Days of the Paſchal Solemnity, that is, the Week following Eaſter-Day, called the Great Week in Lent, and the Week following, ſhould be Times of perfect Vacation from all Actions and Buſineſs of the Law; the forementioned Caſes only excepted. And they are often mentioned and referred to by St. Auſtin [l], Chryſoſtom, and others, who need not here be repeated, becauſe they have been alledged before upon other Occaſions in this Chapter, n. 1. and 6.

SECT. 12. The Sunday after Eaſter, commonly called Dominica Nova, and Dominica in Albis, obſerved with great Solemnity as the Concluſion of the Paſchal Feſtival.

NEITHER need I remark here, That Eaſter was the moſt noted and ſolemn Time of Baptiſm in the Church, becauſe of this the Reader has had a particular Account before in treating of Baptiſm: But I only obſerve, that the Sunday after Eaſter, which was the Concluſion of the Paſchal Feaſt, was uſually obſerved with great Solemnity. For on this Day the Neophytes, or Perſons newly baptized, were wont to lay aſide their White Garments, and Commit them to the Repoſitory of the Church. Whence, as it was ſometimes called the Octaves of Eaſter, as being the Concluſion of the Paſchal Feſtival: So more commonly it was known by the Name of Dominica in Albis, the Sunday of Albes, or White Garments. Under which Denominations we meet with it ſeveral Times in St. Auſtin in his Sermons upon this Day: Some of which are ſaid to be preached [m] Dominica in Octavis Paſchæ; and others, Dominica in Albis [n], if any Streſs is to be laid upon the Titles, which perhaps may be added by other Writers about the Time of Charles the Great, in whoſe Days theſe were the common Appellations among all the Ritualiſts of the Latin Church [o]. But the Greek Writers give it another Name, viz. Κυριακὴ Καινὴ, or Διακαινήσιμος, The New Sunday. Under which Title Nazianzen [p] and Chryſoſtom have Sermons upon it, and the Council of Trullo [q] mentions it under the ſame Denomination, ſaying, From the Day of the LORD's Reſurrection to the New Lord's-Day, Men ſhall attend at Church to Singing, Reading the Scriptures, and Participating of the Holy Myſteries. It was ſo called from the Renovation of Men by the New Birth of Baptiſm; being the Cloſe of the great Feſtival of Eaſter, at which they were baptized, and born anew of Water and the HOLY GHOST, and then clothed in New and White Garments, Emblems of their New Light and Birth; which being laid aſide again the Sunday following, the Day was called the New Lord's-Day from the whole Action that went before it: As the Six Days of the Week preceding it were called Dies Neophytorum, the Days of Neophytes, or Newly-Baptized, for the ſame Reaſon: As we find in St. Auſtin [r], who ſpeaking of the Time fron Eaſter-Sunday to the Sunday following incluſively, ſtiles it Octo Dies Neophytorum, The Eight Days of Neophytes, taking both Sundays into the Number.

CHAP. VI.

Of Pentecoſt or Whitſontide.

SECT. 1. Pentecoſt taken in a double Sence among the Antients. Firſt, For the Fifty Days between Eaſter and Whitſontide, and Secondly, For the Single Day of Pentecoſt.

THE next great Feſtival, was that of Pentecoſt, which is taken in a double Sence among the Ancients. For ſometimes it ſignifies the whole Space of Fifty Days between Eaſter and Whitſontide, which was one continued Feſtival; and ſometimes it was taken in a more reſtrained Sence for that particular Time which was ſet aſide for the Commemoration of the Deſcent of the HOLY GHOST upon the Apoſtles. In the former Acceptation Tertullian [a] ſpeaks of it, when he tells the Chriſtians by way of Triumph over the Heathens, That the Heathen Feſtivals were but a ſingle Day in the Return of every Year: But the Chriſtians had a Feſtival every Eighth Day, meaning the Lord's-Day: And beſides that, they had one continued Feſtival of Fifty-Days, which was more than all the Feſtivals the Heathen could pretend to reckon up in a whole Year. So again he ſays in another Place [b], That Pentecoſt was a large Space of Time appointed by the Church for adminiſtring of Baptiſm, during which Seaſon the Reſurrection of the LORD was frequently demonſtrated to the Diſciples, and the Grace of the HOLY GHOST was firſt poured out upon them. Where it is plain, He takes Pentecoſt not barely for the Day on which the HOLY GHOST deſcended on the Apoſtles, but for the whole Time that our SAVIOUR converſed amongſt his Diſciples to give them Proof of his Reſurrection. Therefore though Vicecomes [c] reprehends Ludovicus Vives for aſſerting this, yet Habertus [d] defends him out of theſe Places of Tertullian: And Dr. Cave [e] and other Learned Men are of the ſame Opinion. Particularly Gothofred takes a great deal of Pains to prove this to be the Meaning of Quinquageſima, which is the Latin Name for Pentecoſt, in that famous Law of Theodoſius Junior, where [f] he prohibits all Publick Games and Sports during the Solemnities of Eaſter and Pentecoſt, which Solemnities are there deſcribed by theſe two Circumſtances or Characters, Firſt, That the Neophytes then laid aſide their white and bright Garments repreſenting the new Light and Brightneſs of their holy and heavenly Waſhing: And ſecondly, That at this Seaſon the Acts of the Apoſtles, called, the Apoſtolical Paſſions, were read, in Commemoration and Confirmation of the great Doctrine of Chriſtianity, our LORD's Reſurrection.

SECT. 2. During which Time the Church chiefly exerciſed Herſelf in Reading and Meditating upon the Acts of the Apoſtles, as the great Confirmation of our Lord's Reſurrection.

THE latter of theſe Circumſtances is a peculiar Characteriſtick, not of any ſingle Day, but of the whole Time between Eaſter and Whitſontide; during which Time it was cuſtomary in the Church to read the Acts of the Apoſtles, as we learn from ſeveral Paſſages in Chryſoſtom, which plainly ſhew, that he takes Pentecoſt for the whole Fifty Days between Eaſter-Day and Whit-Sunday. One of his Homilies is chiefly ſpent in giving an [g] Anſwer to this Queſtion, Why the Acts of the Apoſtles are read in Pentecoſt? The Sermon itſelf bears this Title; and in Anſwer to the Queſtion, he ſays, That on every Feſtival ſuch Portions of Scripture were read, as particularly related to that Feſtival. Thus on the Day of our SAVIOUR's Paſſion all ſuch Scriptures were read, as had any Relation to the Croſs; on the great Sabbath, or Saturday before Eaſter, they read all ſuch Portions of Scripture as contained the Hiſtory of his being betrayed, crucified, dead and buried; on Eaſter-Day they read ſuch Paſſages as gave an Account of his Reſurrection. But then it ſeemed a Difficulty, Why the Acts of the Apoſtles, which contain the Hiſtory of their Miracles done after Pentecoſt, ſhould be read in this Interval, before Pentecoſt was fully ended. To this he anſwers, That the Miracles of the Apoſtles, contained in that Book, were the great Demonſtration of our SAVIOUR's Reſurrection: And therefore the Church appointed that Book to be read always immediately after our our SAVIOUR's Reſurrection, to give Men the Evidences and Proofs of that holy Myſtery, which was the Completion of their Redemption. And hence it became a ſtanding Rule over the whole Church to read the Acts in theſe Fifty Days of Pentecoſt, as appears from many other Places of Chryſoſtom [h], Auſtin [i], Caſſian [k], and the Fourth Council of Toledo [l], which becauſe I have had occaſion to recite at large in a former Book [*], I forbear to repeat them in this Place.

SECT. 3. All Faſting and Kneeling at Prayers prohibited at this Seaſon, as on the Lord's-Day.

DURING this Seaſon likewiſe they generally prohibited all Faſting, and Kneeling at Prayers, as on the Lord's-Day, becauſe at this Time they more eſpecially celebrated with Joy the Memorial of our SAVIOUR's Reſurrection. This is plain from thoſe Words of Tertullian [m], We count it unlawful to faſt, or to worſhip Kneeling on the Lord's-Day: And we enjoy the ſame Immunity from Eaſter to Pentecoſt. Epiphanius [n] ſays the ſame, That though the Aſceticks of the Church faſted on the Stationary Days, that is, Wedneſdays and Fridays, or other Times, yet they neither faſted nor kneeled on the Lord's-Day, or the whole Fifty Days of Pentecoſt. And this Cuſtom about Kneeling, was made a ſtanding Rule by the Council of Nice: For whereas, ſay they [o], there are ſome who kneel on the Lord's-Day, and the Fifty Days of Pentecoſt; that an uniform Way of Worſhip may be obſerved in all Churches, it ſeems good to the holy Synod, that Prayer be made to GOD ſtanding. Yet all Churches did not exactly conform to this Rule, nor obſerve theſe Cuſtoms ſo preciſely in Pentecoſt, as they did on the Lord's-Day. For St. Auſtin [p] ſays, He was not certain that theſe Things were in Uſe in all Churches either in Pentecoſt or the Lord's-Day. And Caſſian [q] ſays more expreſsly, That in the Monaſteries of Syria, they had no great Regard to this Rule, which forbad Kneeling at Prayers, or Faſting in Pentecoſt, though their Neighbours the Egyptians were very preciſe and punctual in the Obſervation of both thoſe Cuſtoms. Which made him more curious to enquire into the Ground and Reaſon of theſe Obſervations: And their Anſwer was, That [r] this Feſtival being kept in Honour and Memory of our SAVIOUR's Reſurrection, it was a Time of more than ordinary Joy; and Faſting and Kneeling were incongruous at ſuch a Seaſon, becauſe they were Indications of deep Mourning, and a more than ordinary Repentance: Therefore they neither faſted, nor prayed Kneeling on theſe Days, or the Lord's-Day, but ſung Praiſes and Hallelujahs to GOD in Honour and Thankfulneſs for our SAVIOUR's Reſurrection. This Cuſtom of Singing Hallelujah, in many Churches, was peculiar to this Seaſon; but in ſome Churches it was uſed upon other Occaſions. Of which the Reader may find a full Account in a former Book [*], where we treat of the Pſalmody of the Church.

SECT. 4. And all publick Games and Stage-Plays; but not Pleading at Law forbidden, or Bodily Labour.

TO proceed with the preſent Feſtival, we may obſerve farther, That it was of ſo great Eſteem and Veneration, that Theodoſius Junior, a Pious Prince, thought it proper to forbid all publick Games and Diverſions, as well of the Theatre as the Cirque, during this whole Seaſon; becauſe this was a Time of more ſolemn Worſhip, when the Minds of Chriſtians ought to be wholly imployed in the Service of GOD, and Commemorating of thoſe wonderful Miracles that were wrought in Confirmation of the Goſpel by the Hand of the Apoſtles, as he words it in his Law [s] made for this Purpoſe. But Buſineſs of Law and Adminiſtration of Juſtice, was a more neceſſary Thing than Sports and Paſtimes; and therefore there was no Ceſſation of thoſe injoined at this Seaſon, but only in the firſt Week after Eaſter, which was reckoned into the Paſchal Feſtival. As ſoon as this was over, the Law was open again, and all Actions commenced afreſh, as at other Times, which is evident from that Diſcourſe of St. Auſtin, which he preached on the Octaves of Eaſter, or Dominica in Albis, where he ſays [t], The Days of Vacation are now paſt, and thoſe of Convening, Exactions, and Law-Suits, ſucceed in their Room. So that in this Reſpect the Remainder of theſe Fifty Days was inferior to the other great Feſtivals: But this was the only Thing in which there there appears to be any Distinction or Difference in Law made between them. And in regard to Ecclesiastical Affairs, they were observed with almost the same religious Solemnity as the other Festivals, as appears from what has now been said upon them: Only some Learned Men make a just Remark, That the Observation of this Solemnity did not oblige Men, especially those of the poorer Sort, to a strict Abstinence from bodily Labour. For this was a Rule only for the Lord's-Day, and some of the greater Festivals; as appears from the Author of the Constitutions, who speaking [u] of the Days on which Servants were to rest from their Labour, mentions the Lord's-Day, and the Sabbath, and the Nativity of CHRIST, and Epiphany, and the great Week in Lent, and Easter-Week, and Ascension-Day, and Pentecost, as it signifies the particular Day of the Descent of the HOLY GHOST upon the Apostles, but says nothing of Pentecost, in the larger Acceptation, as it signifies the whole Fifty Days between Easter and Whitsontide. The Council of Eliberis [x] has a pretty severe Canon against some who kept Pentecost at a wrong Season, not Fifty, but Forty Days after Easter: But it does not clearly appear, that they intended the whole Fifty Days should be observed, but only the particular Day of Pentecost at its proper Season. Or if they intended more, yet Albaspinæus [y] thinks they made no Rule about keeping these Days, as Days of perfect Vacation from bodily Labour, but only Days of Relaxation from Fasting and Kneeling, and Days of Publick Joy and Thanksgiving, and holding Religious Assemblies for Prayer and receiving the Eucharist, which probably was administred every Day during this whole Season. And in these Things consisted the Observation of Pentecost in this larger Acceptation.

SECT. 5. Of Ascension-Day, its Antiquity and Observation.

IN the Course of this long continued Festival of Pentecost, we are to take more special Notice of one particular Day, before we come to Whitsunday: That is, of the Feast of our SAVIOUR's Ascension or Assumption into Heaven. The Observation of this Festival was so Ancient, that St. Austin could derive its Original from no other Fountain, but either Apostolical Institution, or the general Agreement of the Church in some Plenary Council: For those Things, says he [z], which are received and observed over all the World, not as written in Scripture, but as handed down to us by Tradition, we conceive to be either instituted by the Apostles themselves, or some numerous Councils, whose Authority is of very great Use in the Church. Such are the Anniversary Solemnities of our SAVIOUR's Passion, and Resurrection, and Ascension into Heaven, and the Coming of the HOLY GHOST from Heaven. It is certain therefore the Feast of Ascension was generally observed all over the Church long before St. Austin's Time. Chrysostom often speaks of it under the Name of Ἀνάληψις, or our LORD's Assumption into Heaven. For not to mention those two Sermons in Sir H. Savil's Edition [a] upon the Ascension, which are reckoned spurious, he has one upon the Assumption [b], the Credit of which was never called in Question, wherein he stiles this Festival the Illustrious and Refulgent Day of our LORD's Assumption into Heaven. And in another Homily [c] upon Whitsunday, recounting the great Solemnities that had just gone before, he says, We have lately celebrated our SAVIOUR's Passion, his Resurrection, and then his Ἄνοδον εἰς Οὐρανὸν, his Return into Heaven, that is, the Feast of his Ascension. In like manner the Author of the Constitutions [d] puts Ascension-Day into the Number of the great Christian Festivals, because on this Day our SAVIOUR's Oeconomy on Earth was completed. Among the Cappadocians the Day was called Episozomene. For so Leo Allatius [e] tells us, he found it noted in a Manuscript of Gregory Nyssen's Works. And one of Chrysostom's Homilies [f] is said to be preached Κυριακῇ σωζομένης, or ἐπισωζομένης, which the Curators of Sir H. Savil's Edition take to be Dominica in Albis, or the Sunday after Easter; but Suicerus [g] and Allatius understand it of the Sunday after Ascension-Day, which from thence took its Denomination. Why Ascension-Day was so called, is not very easy to conjecture. Perhaps it might be, because by our SAVIOUR's Assumption into Heaven again, the whole Oeconomy of his Incarnation and the World's Redemption was now completed, as the Author of the Constitutions words it. And Chrysostom [h] much after the same manner says, On this Day GOD and Man was reconciled together; On this Day that Ancient Enmity was destroyed, and that long War ended; On this Day an admirable and unexpected expected Peace was restored to us. After GOD in his Anger had destroyed Man and Beast from off the Earth by an Universal Deluge, we that were unworthy of the Earth, were this Day exalted to Heaven; We that were not worthy to reign below, were advanced to a Kingdom above: We ascended above the Heavens and took Possession of a Royal Throne; and that Nature of ours, against which the Cherubims were set to guard Paradise, was this Day set above the Cherubims. He means, that CHRIST, as the Firstfruits of our Nature in Perfection, was exalted unto Heaven; and all his Members in some Measure now partake of that Glory, and hope in due Time to meet him in the Clouds, and to be translated to the same Place, whither their Forerunner is gone before them. This is the best Account I can give at present of the Name Episozomene, and the Application of it to the celebrated Festival of our SAVIOUR's Ascension or Assumption into Heaven. I need not stand now to enquire into the Manner of its Observation. For being in the midst of Pentecost, it certainly had all the Solemnity that belonged to that Festival, and never passed without a proper Discourse, to excite Men to elevate their Souls, and ascend with CHRIST in Heart and Mind to Heaven, in hopes of obtaining it as their proper Mansion both for Body and Soul hereafter to all Eternity. But as for any such ridiculous Pageantry, as has been used in some Places to represent CHRIST's Ascension in the Church, by drawing up an Image of CHRIST to the Roof of the Church, and then casting down the Image of Satan in Flames, to represent his Falling as Lightening from Heaven, with Abundance more of the same Kind (which the Curious Reader may find described by Hospinian [i] out of Naogeorgus;) the Ancient Church was wholly a Stranger to it: This being the Invention of later Ages, when superstitious Ceremonies had debased Religion into Sport and Ridicule, and made the Great Things of GOD's Law look more like Ludicrous Pomp and Comedy, than Venerable Mysteries of the Christian Faith. But I return to the Ancient Church.

SECT. 6. Of Pentecost in the stricter Sense, as denoting the Festival of the Descent of the Holy Ghost upon the Apostles.

THE Conclusion of this great Festival-Season was Pentecost, taken in the stricter Sense for that particular Day commonly called Whitsunday, or Pentecost, when they commemorated the Descent of the HOLY GHOST upon the Apostles; which happening upon the Day which the Jews called Pentecost, or the Fiftieth Day after the Passover, (A Day of great Note among the Jews, both for the Memorial of the Law delivered at Mount Sinai, and also for the gathering and bringing in of their Harvest;) it retained the same Name of Pentecost among the Christians; though they kept it not as a Jewish Feast, but only as a Commemoration of the Glorious Effusion of the SPIRIT in the Gift of Tongues and other Miraculous Powers, made at this Time upon the Disciples. Hence it had also the Name of ἡμέρα πνεύματος, The Day of the HOLY GHOST, as we find in Nazianzen [k] and others. And some Learned Men [l] think, it was hence called Whitsunday, partly because of those vast Diffusions of Light and Knowledge, which upon this Day were shed upon the Apostles, in order to the enlightning of the World; but principally, because this being one of the stated Times of Baptism in the Ancient Church, they who were baptized put on White Garments, in Token of that pure and innocent Course of Life they had now engaged in. The Original of this Feast is by some carried as high as the Apostles. Epiphanius [m] was of Opinion that St. Paul meant it in those Words, when he said, He hastened to be at Jerusalem on the Day of Pentecost, Acts xx. 16. But because Interpreters generally take that in another Sense, we will lay no Stress upon it. However it is certain this Feast was observed in the Time of Origen: For he speaks of it in his Books [n] against Celsus: As does also Tertullian [o] before him, and Irenæus before them both in his Book concerning Easter, as the Author of the Questions under the Name of Justin Martyr informs us, where speaking of the Custom of Standing at Prayers on the Lord's-Day and Pentecost, he says [p] This Custom obtained from the Days of the Apostles, as Irenæus Bishop of Lyons and Martyr testifies in his Book of Easter, where he also makes mention of Pentecost, in which we kneel not, because it is equivalent to the Lord's-Day, being a Symbol of the LORD's Resurrection. St. Austin [q] says, the Law was written by the Finger of GOD, and given to Moses on this Day; and that was a Type of the HOLY GHOST, called the Finger of GOD in the Gospel, which CHRIST promised to his Disciples as a Comforter, and sent to them on the Fiftieth Day after his Passion and Resurrection. And all such eminent Facts, as were done upon certain Days, were annually celebrated in the Church, that the Anniversary Feast might preserve the useful and necessary Memorial of them. This Festival of Pentecoſt in particular was obſerved the whole Week after till the Octaves, or Sunday following, without Faſting or Kneeling, and then the Church returned to her uſual Stationary Faſts on Wedneſdays and Fridays, and in ſome Places a ſtrict Faſt all the Week ſucceeded this Feſtival, as we learn from the Second Synod of Tours [r]: But this was a new Inſtitution, as was alſo the Rogation-Faſt for Three Days in Aſcenſion-Week; of which more hereafter in their proper Place.

CHAP. VII.

Of the Feſtivals of the Apoſtles and Martyrs.

SECT. 1. The Original of the Feſtivals of Martyrs.

WE have hitherto conſidered thoſe Feſtivals which peculiarly related to our LORD's Oeconomy on Earth, and were obſerved over the whole Church as Memorials of the great Acts of his Life and Death: But beſides theſe there were another Sort of Feſtivals inſtituted by the Church in Honour of the Apoſtles and Martyrs, by whoſe Actions and Sufferings Chriſtianity was chiefly propagated and maintained in the World. The firſt Original of theſe Feſtivals is not certainly known, but Learned Men [a] commonly carry it as high as the Second Century. And there is plain Evidence for this: For they are not only frequently ſpoken of in Cyprian and Tertullian, but long before in the Epiſtle of the Church of Smyrna to the Church of Philomelium, recorded by Euſebius [b], where ſpeaking of the Martyrdom of Polycarp their Biſhop, who ſuffered about the Year 168, they tell their Brethren, that they intended by GOD's Permiſſion to meet at his Tomb, and celebrate his Birth-day, meaning the Day of his Martyrdom, with Joy and Gladneſs, as well for the Memory of the Sufferer, as for Example to Poſterity.

SECT. 2. Why called their Natalitia or Birth-Day.

WHERE we may obſerve their peculiar Phraſe in ſtiling the Day of his Martyrdom his Birth-day: Which was according to the uſual Stile of the Church in this Affair: For ſo Tertullian [c] and others uſe the Words Natalitia and Natales, meaning not their natural Birth, but their Nativity to a Glorious Crown in the Kingdom of Heaven. I have noted before [*] in ſpeaking of the Civil Feſtivals, That the Natales or Birth-days of the Emperors often ſignifies not their Natural, but Political Birth-day, or the Day of their Inauguration to the Imperial Crown: And ſo it was with the Church, whenever ſhe ſpake of the Nativities of her Martyrs, ſhe meant not the Day of their natural Birth, but the Day wherein by ſuffering Death they were born again to a New Life, and ſolemnly inaugurated to a celeſtial Kingdom and a Crown of endleſs Glory. To this Purpoſe, Peter Chryſologus bids his Auditors, when they hear of the Birth-Day of a Saint, not to imagine that it means the Day of his carnal Birth on Earth [d], but the Day on which he was born from Earth to Heaven, from Labour to Reſt, from Torments to Delight and Pleaſure. In this Senſe Tertullian [e] ſays, St. Paul was born again by a new Nativity at Rome, becauſe he ſuffered Martyrdom there. In like manner Prudentius [f] ſays, a Martyr's Birth-day is the Day of his Paſſion. And Chryſoſtom [g] gives the Reaſon of this, becauſe the Death of a Martyr is not properly a Death, but an endleſs Life; for the Sake of which, all Things were to be endured, and Death itſelf to be deſpiſed. Upon this Account the ancient Author under the Name of Origen [h] ſays, When they celebrated the Memorials of thoſe holy Men, they kept not their firſt Nativity, as being the Inlet to Sorrow and Temptation; but the Day of their Death, as the Period of their Miſeries, and that which ſets them beyond the Reach of Temptations. We celebrate the Day of their Death, becauſe they die not, even when they ſeem to die.

NOW these Solemnities were usually celebrated at the Graves or Monuments of the Martyrs, which, according to the Custom of Burying in those Times, were commonly without the Cities in large Cryptæ under-Ground; where in Times of Persecution the Christians were often used to meet for Safety, when they could not enjoy their Churches. And in after-Ages, Churches were built over these Graves, which were therefore called Martyria, Areæ, Cœmeteria, Mensæ & Memoriæ Martyrum, as I have shewed at large in a former [*] Book. To these Places they resorted, whenever they celebrated the Memorial of any particular Martyr. Which is the Reason, why in the ancient Panegyricks of the Fathers upon particular Martyrs, we sometimes hear them speaking of leaving the City-Churches upon the Anniversaries of the Martyrs, and going out into the Country to the Monuments or Memorials of the Martyrs, to hold Assemblies there, where the Martyrs lay buried. Thus Chrysostom in one of his Homilies upon the Martyrs, says [i], As before, when the Festival of the Maccabees was celebrated, all the Country came thronging into the City: So now, when the Feast of the Martyrs, who lie buried in the Country, is celebrated, it was fit the whole City should be transferred thither. And in another Homily upon St. Drosis [k], he says, Though they had spiritual Entertainment in the City, yet their going out to the Saints afforded them both great Profit and Pleasure.

SECT. 4. And mostly confined to those particular Churches where the Martyrs suffered and lay buried.

WHENCE we may observe, That those Festivals at first were not general Festivals, like those of our LORD, observed over the whole Church, but chiefly celebrated in those particular Churches, where the Martyrs suffered and lay buried. As the Festival of Polycarp was chiefly celebrated at Smyrna, and that of Cyprian at Carthage, at the Places where they were Bishops, and suffered Martyrdom: This being most for the Edification of the People, to have the Examples of their own Martyrs, who lived and died among them, proposed to their Imitation. And this is confirmed by a peculiar Remark made by Sozomen [l] upon the two Churches of Gaza and Constantia in Palestine, that though they were not above Twenty Furlongs distant from one another, yet they had each of them their own Bishop and Clergy, and distinct Festivals of their own particular Martyrs, ἰδίαι πανηγύρεις μαρτύρων. To this Purpose it was Customary for every Church to have her own Fasti or Kalendar of Martyrs; and Publick Notaries to take the Account of what was said and done to or by the Martyrs at their Passions; out of which, general Martyrologies were made by Men in after-Ages, collecting all these particular Accounts into one Body, which Valesius [m] and Pagi [n] own to be the first Original of the Roman and all other Martyrologies, which are not so ancient as the Kalendars. For such Kalendars and Publick Acts were originally kept in every Church, to preserve the Memorial of their Martyrs. As is evident from Tertullian [o], who speaks of the Churches having her Census and Fasti, that is, as Rigaltius and others well explain it, here Rolls or Accounts both of her Expences on the Poor, and the Acts or Passions of her Martyrs. To which Cyprian also plainly refers, when being in Exile he sent to his Clergy to be careful in setting down the Days on which the Martyrs suffered, that there might be an Anniversary Commemoration made of them.

SECT. 5. Usual to read the Acts or Passions of the Martyrs on their proper Festivals.

THESE Acts or Passions of the Martyrs, when they were carefully taken and preserved Genuine without Corruption, were commonly read in the Church upon the Anniversary Commemoration and proper Festival of the Martyr. The third Council of Carthage, which forbids all other Books to be read in the Church besides the Canonical Scripture, excepts the Passions of the Martyrs [q], as Books that might be read on their Anniversary-Days of Commemoration. St. Austin, and Pope Leo, and Gelasius, often mention the Reading of such Histories in the African and Roman Churches. Cæsarius Arelatensis and Alcimus Avitus and Ferreolus speak of the same in the French Churches. And some think, not improbably, that such sort of Histories and Passions of the Martyrs, had particularly the Name of Legenda, Legends, upon this Account, because they were used to be read in the Church on the Festivals of Martyrs: But the Fabulous Writers of Lives, such as the Author of the Golden Legend, and other Monkish Impostors, have since written the Lives of Saints and Martyrs in such a scandalous Manner, as to alter the Signification of

of the good old Word, and make a Legend paſs for a Romantick Fiction, and mere Impoſture. Of which, Learned Men even in the Romiſh Church, ſuch as Ludovicus Vives, and Melchior Canus, and Papebrochius [r], and Pagi [s], have made frequent and juſt Complaints; confeſſing, That even their Breviaries and Paſſionals, are often filled with ſuch monſtrous Fables, as would make a wiſe Man bluſh to hear or read them in the publick Offices of the Church; and which they deſire heartily to ſee perfectly reformed. Particularly Pagi expoſes the Fiction of Urſula [t] and her Eleven Thouſand Companions, all Virgins, ſaid to be Martyred at Colen at one Time under Cyricius, a Pope that never was in Being; and he tells us the Roman Martyrology and Breviary have dropped the Number as an Incredible Fiction; as alſo did the Colen Editors, and the School of the Sorbon, retaining the Name of Urſula, but being aſhamed of her Eleven Thouſand Companions, notwithſtanding that Hermannus Cromback wrote a large Volume, call'd Urſula Vindicata, to defend this monſtrous Fable. It were eaſy to give many other ſuch Inſtances, but this one is ſufficient to ſhew the Difference between the modern Paſſionals, and the Simplicity of thoſe of the ancient Church, the Reading of which was one Part of their ſolemn Exerciſe upon theſe Feſtivals.

SECT. 6. And to make Panegyrical Orations upon them.

To theſe they commonly added a Panegyrical Oration or Sermon of their own Compoſing, in Commendation of the Virtues of the Martyr, to excite their Audience, which was uſually very great upon ſuch Occaſions, to the Imitation of them. We have a great many Inſtances of ſuch Orations in Chryſoſtom, Baſil, Nazianzen, Nyſſen, Auſtin, Ambroſe, Leo, Chryſologus, and others. Where the whole Deſign of the Orator is ſo to extol the Excellencies of the Saint, as to inflame his Auditory with the Love of his admirable Virtues. This was the great End and Deſign of keeping theſe Feſtivals, and of their Meeting together upon ſuch Occaſions, partly to pay a due Reſpect and Honour to the Memory of the Dead, and partly to ingage themſelves to imitate ſuch great and brave Examples. 'Tis thus the Church of Smyrna in their Epiſtle to the Church of Philomelium [u] tell their Brethren, they intended annually to meet at Polycarp's Tomb, and celebrate his Birth-day with Joy and Gladneſs, as well for the Memory of the Sufferer, as for Example to Poſterity: But as for any other Honour of Religious Worſhip (which their Enemies the Jews ſuggeſted they would be inclined to give him) they declared they had no ſuch Intention: For they could never be induced either to forſake CHRIST, who ſuffered for the Salvation of the whole World, or to worſhip any other. Him, as being the SON of GOD, we worſhip and adore: But the Martyrs, as the Diſciples and Followers of the LORD, we love with a deſerved Affection, for their exceeding great Love toward their own King and Maſter; deſiring to be made Partners and Fellow-Diſciples with them. In like manner St. Auſtin ſays, Our Religion conſiſts not in the Worſhip of Dead Men; Becauſe if they lived Piouſly, they are not eſteemed ſuch as would deſire that Kind of Honour; but would have him to be worſhipped by us, through whoſe Illumination they rejoice to have us Partners with them in their Merit. They are therefore to be honoured [x] for their imitable and worthy Examples, not to be worſhipped for Religion. So again in Anſwer to the Calumny of the Manichees [y], who made no Conſcience of falſly accuſing the Catholicks of giving them Divine Honour and Adoration, he ſays, We celebrate the Memories of the Martyrs with Religious Solemnity, to excite ourſelves to their Imitation, and to become Partners in their Merits, and to have the Benefit of their Prayers: Yet ſo, as that we never offer any Sacrifice to a Martyr, but only to the GOD of the Martyrs. For what Prieſt, ſtanding at the Altar in the Places where the holy Bodies lie, ever ſaid, We offer unto thee, Peter, or Paul, or Cyprian? But whatever is offered, is offered unto GOD that crowned the Martyrs, at the Memorials or Graves of thoſe whom he crowned, that the very Places may admoniſh us of our Duty, and raiſe our Affection, and quicken our Love both toward them, whom we may imitate, and toward Him, who enables us to imitate them. Imitation, we ſee, was the great Thing deſigned by theſe Feſtivals and all the Eloquent Diſcourſes that were made upon the Martyrs: They were not ſo much intended to be Panegyricks and Praiſes of the Martyrs, who were above them and needed them not, as to be flaming and warm Engagements upon the Audience, to induce them to imitate the glorious Actions and Virtues of the Martyrs. Thus Chryſoſtom expreſsly tells his Auditory, beginning one of theſe Panegyricks with theſe [z] Words: Bleſſed Barlaam hath called us together to this Holy Feſtival and great Solemnity; not to praiſe him, but to imitate him; not to be Hearers of his Encomium, but to be Followers of his Worthy Actions. For then the Martyrs are chiefly ſenſible of Honour done to themſelves, when they ſee their Fellow-Servants made Partakers of their own Goodneſs. Therefore if

if any one would praiſe the Martyrs, let him imitate the Martyrs: If any one would give the Champions of Religion their juſt Encomium, let him emulate their Labours. This will bring no leſs Pleaſure to the Martyrs than their own Virtues. And he cloſes the ſame Diſcourſe with this Exhortation: Thou art a Soldier of CHRIST, Beloved, Put on thy Armour, and mind not thy Dreſs: Thou art a generous Combatant, Quit thyſelf like a Man, and Regard not external Comelineſs. So ſhall we imitate theſe Holy Men: So ſhall we honour theſe Valiant Warriors, theſe crowned Champions, theſe Friends of GOD. It were eaſy to cite Hundreds of Paſſages out of Chryſoſtom and other Ancient Writers to the ſame Purpoſe. For this was the great Drift of all their Panegyricks and Diſcourſes upon theſe Feſtivals, to aſſure Men, that to copy after the Example of the Martyrs was the greateſt Honour they could ſhew to theſe renowned Champions of the Chriſtian Faith. And it always had its proper Effects upon Mens Minds. For as in Times of Perſecution, Tertullian [a] told the Heathen, That the Blood of the Martyrs was the Seed of the Church; and the more they were cut down, the more they grew; the exquiſite Cruelty that was uſed to deſtroy them, did only allure greater Numbers to come over to their Party: So Chryſoſtom [b] afterwards aſſures us, That the very Memory of the Martyrs wrought wonderfull Effects upon the Minds of Men: It confirmed them againſt the Aſſaults of wicked Spirits, it delivered them from impure and abſurd Thoughts, and ſet their Minds in great Tranquillity. The Death of the Martyrs [c] was ſtill an Exhortation to Chriſtians, the Support of the Church, the Confirmation of Chriſtianity, the Deſtruction of Death, the Demonſtration of the Reſurrection, the Reproach of Devils, the Condemnation of Satan, the Doctrine of Philoſophy, an Exhortation to deſpiſe the Things of this World, and the Way to lead Men to the Deſire of a better, a Comfort to Men in Affliction, a Motive to Patience, an Engagement to Fortitude, and in a Word the Root and Fountain and Mother of all that is Good. When you ſee the Martyrs [d] deſpiſe Life, though you be the moſt ſtupid and negligent of all Creatures, you cannot but entertain ſublime and exalted Thoughts, contemning Pleaſures, deſpiſing Riches, and deſiring to have your Converſation in Heaven. If you languiſh under a Diſeaſe, the Paſſions of the Martyrs will afford you one of the ſtrongeſt Arguments to engage you to Patience; if you are oppreſſed with Poverty, or any other Evils, caſt but your Eye to the Bitterneſs of the Torments which they endured, and you have a preſent Conſolation and Remedy for all the Troubles that can befall you. For this Reaſon, I love above all Things the Commemorations of the Martyrs; I love and embrace them all, but eſpecially thoſe wherein we commemorate the Martyrdom of Women (ſuch as Droſis, about whom he was now ſpeaking:) Becauſe by how much they are the weaker Veſſel, by ſo much greater is their Grace, their Trophy more illuſtrious, their Victory more glorious, not only for the Weakneſs of their Sex, but becauſe the Enemy of Human Nature is overcome by that, by which it was firſt vanquiſhed. For by a Virgin the Devil firſt ſlew Adam, and by a Virgin afterwards CHRIST overcame the Devil; and that very Sword, which was ſharpned againſt us, cut off the Head of the Dragon. He often repeats this famed Aphoriſm, That the Honour of the Martyrs [e] is to imitate their Fortitude and Virtue; and as frequently inculcates Tertullian's Obſervation, That the Blood of the Martyrs waters the beautiful [f] Plants of the Church. For as Plants grow the more for being watered, ſo the Faith flouriſhes the more [g] for being oppoſed, and the more it is perſecuted, the more it grows: Nor does Water make a Garden more fertile, than the Blood of the Martyrs does the Church. For this Reaſon the Ancients ſtrained all their Eloquence to ſet off the Conſtancy and Gallantry of the Martyrs on their proper Feſtivals, that hereby they might induce their Hearers to copy after ſuch great and brave Examples.

AND becauſe, as Chryſoſtom [b] obſerves, the Blood of CHRIST which he firſt ſhed for the Martyrs themſelves, was the great Thing that animated ſo many Thouſands to lay down their Lives with Joy and Alacrity for his Sake, that they might communicate in his Sufferings, and be made conformable to his Death: Therefore theſe Feſtivals of the Martyrs never paſſed without a general Communion of the whole Church partaking of the Bleſſed Symbols of CHRIST's Body and Blood, the Oblation of which was always celebrated upon theſe Occaſions. This we learn from the ſame St. Chryſoſtom, who diſſuading his People from Intemperance upon one of theſe Solemnities, lemnities, bids them consider [i], how absurd it was after such a Meeting, after a whole Nights Vigil, after hearing the Holy Scriptures, after Participating of the Divine Mysteries, after such a Spiritual Repast, for a Man or Woman to be found spending whole Days in a Tavern. The Foundation of his Argument is laid upon this Supposition, that they had received the Eucharist in the Church before, in celebrating the Memorial of the Martyrs. And so Sidonius Apollinaris represents the Matter, when speaking of the Festival of St. Justus, one of their proper Martyrs at Lyons, he says [k], That after they had kept his Vigil the Night preceding, they assembled again by Day at Nine in the Morning, when the Priests did rem divinam facere, offer the Oblation, or consecrate the Eucharist, as Savaro rightly expounds it.

SECT. 8. And herein a particular Commemoration of the Martyrs was made, called, the Oblation or Sacrifice of Praise and Thanksgiving to GOD for them, and Prayer for a general Consummation and happy Resurrection.

AND at this Time particularly they made a more solemn Commemoration of the Martyrs in the Oblation of the Eucharist; which being a Sacrifice of Praise and Thanksgiving to GOD for the Example of their noble Courage and Sufferings on the Behalf of Religion, it was therefore commonly styled the Oblation or Sacrifice made for the Nativities of the Martyrs. Thus we find it in Tertullian [l], We make Oblations for the Dead, for their Birth-Days, or New-Birth unto Heaven and Happiness, on their Anniversary Commemorations. In like manner Cyprian bids his Clergy [m] register the Days on which any of the Confessors suffered Death, that Commemoration might be made of them among the Memorials of the Martyrs, and their Oblations and Sacrifices might be made for them on the solemn Days of their Commemoration. So again in another Epistle [n], Ye remember how we are used to offer Sacrifices for them, as often as we celebrate the Passions and Days of the Martyrs by an Anniversary Commemoration. There is some little Dispute indeed among some of the Ancients, what was to be understood by these Sacrifices or Oblations for the Martyrs. St. Austin was of Opinion, That they could only mean the Sacrifice of Praise and Thanksgiving to GOD for their glorious Deaths and brave Examples. And this no doubt was one Part of the Sacrifice they speak of: But when he says [o], That he who prays for a Martyr, does an Injury to the Martyr, because Martyrs have attained to a Sort of Perfection in this Life, and have no need of the Prayers of the Church: This is not so consistent with the general Practice of the Church, which was used to pray for Patriarchs, Prophets, Apostles, and Martyrs, as considering them in a State of Imperfection still, so long as their Bodies continued in the Grave: Which the Apostle himself allows, when he says, GOD having provided some better Thing for us, that they without us should not be made Perfect: Therefore the Church may be supposed, by her Sacrifices and Oblations for Martyrs, to understand Prayers as well as Praises and Thanksgivings, that they and all the Faithful might obtain a Perfect Consummation in Bliss by the means of an happy Resurrection. And that the Church did sometimes thus offer the Sacrifice of Prayer even for Martyrs themselves, I have fully evinced in a former [*] Book, and therefore need say no more of it in this Place.

SECT. 9. The Night preceding any of these Festivals commonly observed as a Vigil, with Psalmody and Prayers.

BUT we must observe, That for the solemnizing of these Festivals of the Martyrs, they commonly kept a Vigil the Night preceding, which they spent, as they did those before the Lord's-Day and other great Festivals, in Psalmody, Hymns, and Prayers till the Morning-Light. This is plain from Chrysostom's Exhortation to the People upon one of these Festivals: Ye have turned [p] the Night into Day, διὰ τῆς παννυχίδων τῆς ἱερῶν, by keeping your Holy Stations all the Night: Do not turn the Day into Night again by Drunkenness and Intemperance, and wanton and lascivious Songs. In like manner Sidonius Appollinaris [q] describing the Manner of their Solemnizing the Festival of St. Justus Bishop of Lyons, take Notice not only of the Observation of the Day, but of the preceding Vigil: We met, says he, at the Grave of St. Justus; It was a Morning Procession before Day; It was an Anniversary Solemnity; The Confluence of People of both Sexes was so great, that the Church, though very capacious and surrounded with Cloysters, would not contain them. When the Service of the Vigil was ended, which the Monks and Clerical Singers performed with Alternate Melody, we separated for some Time, but went not far away, as being to meet again at Three a Clock, that is, Nine in the Morning, ing, when the Prieſts were to perform Divine Service, that is, the Service of the Communion, as on a Feſtival. Thus the Feſtivals of the Martyrs were always introduced with a Vigil, according to the Manner of the Lord's-Day.

SECT. 10. Common Entertainments made by the Rich for the Uſe of the Poor upon theſe Feſtivals at the Graves of the Martyrs, till Abuſes cauſed them to be laid aſide.

IT was uſual alſo upon theſe Days, for the Rich to make Feaſts of Charity, or common Entertainments for the Uſe of the Poor at the Graves of the Martyrs. Some Learned Men [r] think this may be one Meaning of thoſe Sacrifices and Oblations which are ſaid to be made at the Monuments of the Martyrs; and others there are [s], who think this was the only Meaning of them; becauſe the Word, Natalitia, in Propriety, ſignifies the Donations and Largeſſes which Men were uſed to make upon their Birth-Days, rather than the Birth-Days themſelves. But not to diſpute this Matter by way of Criticiſm with any, 'tis certain they had their Συμπόσια, or Feaſts of Charity, and common Banquets on theſe Days at the Graves of the Martyrs. The ancient Writer under the Name of Origen [t], ſays, On theſe Solemnities they met together, both Clergy and People, inviting the Poor and Needy, and refreſhing the Widows and the Orphans; that ſo their Feſtival might not only be a Memorial of the happy State of the Deceaſed, but in reſpect of themſelves alſo an Odour of a ſweet Smell in the Sight of GOD. In like manner, Conſtantine [u] ſays, ſober Feaſts were made by many for the Relief of the Poor, and ſuch as ſtood in need of their Aſſiſtance. So Chryſoſtom [x] diſſuading his People from running to the Diabolical Entertainments that were uſed to be made at Daphne, one of the Suburbs of Antioch, tells them, If they deſired a corporeal, as well as a ſpiritual Table upon any of theſe Feſtivals, they might as ſoon as the Aſſembly was done, recreate and refreſh their Bodies under a Vine or Fig-tree near the Monument of the Martyr, and thereby ſecure their Conſcience from Condemnation. For the very Sight of the Martyr being near them, and as it were ſtanding by their Table, would not ſuffer their Pleaſure to run out into Exceſs and degenerate into Sin; but as a good Father or a Maſter, being looked upon with an Eye of Faith, would reſtrain all ridiculous Mirth, and cut off all indecent Pleaſures, and take away all laſcivious Motions of the Fleſh, which could not be avoided, if they went to the vain Pomps of Daphne, where the Devil reigned in the midſt of them. It appears from this, that theſe Feaſts were then managed with great Sobriety and Gravity, and chiefly uſed as they were originally deſigned, for the Uſe and Benefit of the Poor. And as ſuch, they are recommended by Nazianzen [y], Theodoret [z], Paulinus [a], and others, being indeed nothing more than thoſe common Feaſts of Charity, called Agapæ, and derived from Apoſtolical Practice, only now applied to the Feſtivals of the Martyrs. But as the beſt Things by the Corruptions of Men often degenerate into Abuſes, ſo it fared with this laudable Practice. Some made uſe of it only as an Opportunity of gratifying their Covetouſneſs and Deſires of filthy Lucre; others hence took Occaſion to indulge themſelves in Revellings and Dancings; and ſome were ſo vain as to think, that even Rioting and Drunkenneſs at ſuch Times was for the Honour of the Martyr. The laſt of theſe Abuſes was ſo notorious, that the Manichees hence took Occaſion to rail at the Church, and callumniate her as incouraging ſuch abominable Practices in her People: Which though it was a malicious Slander in Reſpect of the Church, which did all She could to diſcourage ſuch Exceſſes; yet in Reſpect of the People, the Fact was too true, and the Charge too well-grounded to be denied of them all in general. Therefore St. Auſtin in Anſwer to this Objection, is forced to own the Charge in Part as true; I know, ſays he [b], there are many who ſuperſtitiouſly worſhip Graves and Pictures: I know many that drink luxurioufly and exceſſively over the Dead, and when they make a Feaſt for the Deceaſed, bury themſelves over thoſe that lie buried in the Graves, and after all place their Gluttony and Drunkenneſs to the Account of Religion. But I adviſe you to leave off Railing at the Catholick Church for this: For in ſpeaking againſt the Morals of ſuch Men, you only condemn thoſe whom the Church herſelf condemns, and daily labours to correct them as wicked Children. They who make themſelves drunk in the Memorials of the Martyrs [c], ſays he again in another Place in Anſwer to the ſame Objection, are ſo far from having the Approbation of the Church, that She condemns them for being guilty of that Vice in their own private Houſes: It is one Thing that we are commanded to teach, and another Thing that we are commanded to correct, and forced to tolerate and endure, till we can amend it.

St. Ambroſe happily corrected this Intemperance at Milan [d] by prohibiting all ſuch Feaſts in the Church: And St. Auſtin made uſe of his Example to perſuade Aurelius the Primate of Carthage [e] to uſe his Authority to do the ſame in the African Churches. Upon which Aurelius got a Canon made in the Third Council of Carthage [f] obliging the Clergy to refrain from all ſuch Feaſting in the Church, and as much as in them lay, to reſtrain the People from the ſame Practice. This had been prohibited before by the Council of Laodicea [g], forbidding all Feaſts of Charity, and all eating, and ſpreading of Tables in the Church: And it was prohibited afterwards by the Second Council of Orleance [h] in France, where a general Canon was made, That no one ſhould pretend to pay any Vow in the Church by Singing, or Drinking, or any looſe Behaviour whatſoever: Becauſe GOD was rather provoked, than appeaſed by ſuch Vows as theſe. There was another evil Cuſtom prevailing in France in the Time of King Clodoveus II, about the Year 650, when the Firſt Council of Chalon was held, which endeavoured [i] by a Canon to correct it, viz. That on the Feſtivals of Martyrs and Dedications of Churches, Companies of Women were uſed to come before the Church, ſinging filthy and obſcene Songs, whilſt they ſhould have been at Divine-Service: Whom they therefore order to be repelled, and if they perſiſted obſtinate in their Wickedneſs, to be proſecuted with the ſevereſt Cenſures of the Church. St. Baſil [k] mentions another Abuſe of theſe Feſtivals, which was, Mens keeping Markets at theſe Times and Places, under Colour of making better Proviſion for theſe Feaſts: But he ſmartly rebukes this as a great Incroachment upon Piety, wholly unbecoming ſuch Solemnities, which were deſigned purely for Prayer and the Commemoration of the Vertues of holy Men, for our Incouragement and Imitation; and he tells ſuch Men, They ought to remember the Severity of our SAVIOUR, who whip'd the Buyers and Sellers out of the Temple, when by their Marketings and Merchandize they had turned the Houſe of Prayer into a Den of Thieves. There are many other Abuſes and Corruptions, which crept into the Church at this Door in after-Ages, ſuch as the Invocation of Saints and Martyrs, The Worſhipping of Relicks, Pilgrimages, and Viſitings of Shrines, and the like ſuperſtitious Practices, which as they were utterly unknown or diſallowed in the purer Ages of the Church, ſo it is none of my Buſineſs here farther to purſue them.

BUT it may be enquired, Whether any particular Days were ſet apart in Memory of the Apoſtles and firſt Diſciples of CHRIST? To which I anſwer, That as many of them as were Martyrs, and the Time and Place of their Paſſion was known, there is no Reaſon to queſtion, but that they had Anniverſary Commemorations among the reſt of the Martyrs, at leaſt from the Time that the Feſtivals of Martyrs began to be obſerved in the Church. Thus the Martyrdom of St. Peter and St. Paul was obſerved at Rome, either upon the 29th of June, or the 22d of February: For the Day is diſputed between Biſhop Pearſon [l] and Pagi [m], and I will not pretend to decide the Controverſy between them. But it is generally agreed both by the Ancients and Moderns, that they both ſuffered Martyrdom at the ſame Time in the Perſecution under Nero at Rome. This Euſebius [n] ſhews out of Caius Romanus, Tertullian, Origen, and Dionyſius of Corinth, who ſay, That the one was crucified, and the other beheaded; and that their Trophies or Monuments were the one in the Via Oſtienſis, and the other in the Vatican, till Pope Xyſtus removed them into the Catacumbs, or ſubterraneous Vaults, as the old Indiculus Depoſitionis Martyrum calls them, for greater Security in the Heat of Perſecution. And here it was, that St. Jerom [o] ſays, when he was a School-Boy at Rome, he often went with others of his Companions into the Cryptæ or Cemeteries under-Ground, to ſee their Sepulchres among the reſt of the Martyrs. So that it being unqueſtionable, that St. Peter and St. Paul were crowned with Martyrdom at Rome, there is no doubt to be made, but that their Feſtivals were anciently obſerved there, and elſewhere, as other Feſtivals of the Martyrs. And the like may be concluded of all the other Apoſtles who ſuffered Martyrdom in the ſeveral Countries where they preached the Goſpel.

SECT. 12. The Feſtival of the holy Innocents.

BESIDES theſe, the Ancient Church kept a Feſtival in Memory of the holy Innocents that were ſlain at our SAVIOUR's Birth. The ancient Writers never ſpeak of them but under the Title of Chriſtian Martyrs. Cyprian [p] ſays, The Nativity of

of CHRIST begun à Martyriis Infantium, immediately with the Martyrdom of thoſe Infants, that from Two Years old and under were ſlain for his Name. That tender Age, which was not yet able to fight, was fit to receive a Crown. The Innocent Infants were ſlain for his Name, that it might appear, that they are innocent who are ſlain for the Sake of CHRIST: And hereby it was ſhewed, that no one is free from the Danger of Perſecution, ſeeing even ſuch as theſe were martyred for his Sake. To the ſame Purpoſe St. Hilary [q] ſays, Bethlehem flowed with the Blood of the Martyrs, and that they were advanced to Eternity by the Glory of Martyrdom. So St. Auſtin [r]; Theſe Infants died for CHRIST, not knowing it: Their Parents bewailed them, dying Martyrs: And that they could not yet ſpeak, and yet for all that they confeſſed CHRIST: CHRIST granted them the Honour to die for his Name, CHRIST vouchſafed them the Benefit of being waſhed from original Sin in their own Blood. In like manner Prudentius in his Poetical Way [s] thus ſets forth their Praiſes: Hail, ye Flowers of the Martyrs, whom the Enemies of CHRIST cut off in your firſt Entrance upon the Light, as Men do Roſes when they firſt appear. Ye Proto-Victims of CHRIST, ye tender Flock of Sacrifices, play innocently with your Crowns and Garlands before the very Altar. St. Chryſoſtom [t] was of the ſame Mind, when he ſaid, Theſe Infants received no Harm by their Death: It only tranſlated them ſo much the ſooner to the Port and Haven of Reſt and Tranquillity. And ſo the Author of the Opus Imperfectum, under the Name of Chryſoſtom [u] ſpeaking of Herod's Cruelty, ſays, He gave all the Infants eternal Life for the Sake of one. Meaning, that he made them all Martyrs for the Sake of CHRIST, whom he thought to have ſlain among them. Before all theſe, Irenæus [x] ſays, CHRIST when He was an Infant, made Infants Maytyrs for himſelf, and ſent them before him into his Kingdom. Pope Leo [y] and Fulgentius ſpeak of them in the ſame Stile, as Infant-Martyrs and Co-partners in the Paſſion of CHRIST, who ſuffered Martyrdom for him without Knowledge or Grief.

BUT Origen goes a little farther, and not only calls them the Firſt-fruits of the Martyrs, but ſays [z] their Memorial was always celebrated in the Churches, after the Manner or Order of the Saints, as being the firſt Martyrs that were ſlain for CHRIST. And St. Auſtin ſays more than once [a], That the Church received them to the Honour of her Martyrs. Which ſeems to imply, That ſome peculiar Feſtival was appointed for their Commemoration. But whether this at firſt was a diſtinct Feſtival from the Epiphany, or rather kept on the ſame Day, is a Matter that may bear ſome Diſpute: Becauſe Prudentius, Fulgentius and Leo ſpeak of the Innocents only upon this Day, and not upon any other Occaſion.

SECT. 13. The Feſtival of the Maccabees.

BUT we are farther to obſerve, That anciently they celebrated not only the Feſtivals of the Chriſtian Martyrs, but alſo ſome of the more eminent Martyrs of the Old Teſtament: Such as the Seven Maccabees, whoſe Courage in oppoſing the Tyrant Antiochus Epiphanes, and dying for the Defence of the Jewiſh Law, ſeems to have been generally over the whole Chriſtian Church in the Fourth Century, about which Time we find Abundance of Panegyricks made upon them. Chryſoſtom [b] has Three Homilies upon this Occaſion, wherein he ſpeaks of their Feſtival being celebrated at Antioch with more than ordinary Concourſes of People. St. Auſtin ſays [c] the Chriſtians had a Church there called by the Name of the Maccabees: And he himſelf has two Sermons upon their Feſtival, in which he ſhews that they were eſteemed in Reality Chriſtian Martyrs. And hence it appears, That their Feaſt was ſolemnly obſerved in the African Churches: For he begins his firſt Homily with theſe Words, Iſtum diem nobis ſolennem fecit Gloria Maccabæorum, This Day is made a Feſtival to us by the Glory of the Maccabees. Gregory Nazianzen has a Sermon [d] upon the ſame Occaſion, wherein he ſays, This preſent Feſtival is kept in Memory of the Maccabees, who though they are not had in ſo great Honour by ſome, becauſe they ſtrove not for Maſtery by the Grace of CHRIST, yet they are worthy of all due Reſpect and Veneration, becauſe they contended valiantly for the Laws of their Fathers, and the Truth of Religion, as then revealed to them. We find the like Diſcourſes among thoſe of Gaudentius Biſhop of Brixia [e] and Euſebius

Eusebius Emissenus [f] and Leo [g] Bishop of Rome. Which manifestly shews, that this was a Festival of great Note throughout the whole Church: And the Reason is given by Gregory Nazianzen: Because they were really admirable in their Actions, yea more admirable in one Respect than the Martyrs that came after CHRIST. For, says he, if they suffered Martyrdom so bravely before CHRIST's Coming, what would they not have done, had they lived after him, and had the Death of CHRIST for their Example? For this Reason this Festival was particularly celebrated all over the Christian Church, but upon what Day I am not yet able to inform the Reader, save only that the Roman Martyrology places it upon the First of August.

BUT I must acquaint him with one Thing more concerning these Festivals of the Martyrs: That because the Number of them was exceeding great, and every particular Church could not observe them all, therefore they chose to have one solemn Day for the general Commemoration of all the Martyrs. This was on a certain Day not long after Pentecost or Whitsunday, as we learn from one of Chrysostom's Homilies [h] upon this Occasion, where he says, There are not yet Seven Days past, since we celebrated the great and holy Solemnity of Pentecost, and now again a Quire, or rather a Camp and Army of Martyrs overtakes us, an Army like the Camp of Angels which appeared to Jacob. This seems therefore to have been either what we now call Trinity-Sunday, or some Day very near it. For the Greeks called this Κυριακὴ τῶν ἁγίων, The Sunday of all the Martyrs, as Leo Allatius [i] shews out of Callistus's Synaxarion and Leo Sapiens, who has an Oration upon this Day, entitled, Upon all the Holy Martyrs. The Name Trinity-Sunday is but of Modern Use: The Ancients had no such Festival, because every Lord's-Day was esteemed the Feast of the Holy Trinity. Durandus [k] says, Gregory the Fourth about the Year 834 first instituted the Festival of the Holy Trinity, and that of the Angels together. But Potho Prumiensis will not allow it to be so ancient, for he says [l] it began to be used in the Monasteries not long before his Time, which was about the Year 1150. And it appears from a Decree of Alexander the Third, that it was not observed at Rome in his Time, An. 1179. For he says [m], the Feast of the Holy Trinity is diversly observed according to the Custom of different Countries; some keeping it on the Octaves of Pentecost, and others on the first Sunday before Advent: But in the Roman Church it is not used to be celebrated as any particular Festival; For we say every Day, Glory be to the Father, and to the Son, and to the Holy Ghost, and such other Things as appertain to the Praise of the TRINITY. So that Trinity-Sunday being wholly unknown to the Ancients under that particular Name, it is most probable this was the Day on which a general Commemoration was made of all the Martyrs in the World, as St. Chrysostom's Homily bears it in the Title. For the Multitude of Martyrs being vastly great, it was impossible that particular Days should be assigned to each of them: And therefore every Church chiefly celebrated the Days of her own Martyrs (which often came once or twice [n] in a Week) and added one solemn Day for the Commemoration of them all in general: Of which I have nothing more particularly to remark, but that the Ancients on this Day commonly exerted themselves, and shewed the utmost of their Skill in the Art of Oratory (of which many of them were great Masters) in describing the Passions, and setting forth the Glory of those Victories and Trophies that were so frequently and so surprizingly acquired by the Martyrs. 'Tis a beautiful Stroke of Chrysostom's Pen in his Homily upon this Occasion [o], with which I will end this Chapter upon these Festivals of the Martyrs. The Devil, says he, introduced Death into the World, but the Wisdom of GOD turned it to our Honour and Glory: For hereby he opened the way to Martyrdom, and made our Destruction become the Occasion of a Crown. The Devil design'd to ruin us by Death, but CHRIST inverted his Design, and makes use of Death to introduce us into Heaven by Martyrdom. Here, as in all other Battles, there were Armies engaged on both Sides, the Martyrs on the one Side, and Tyrants on the other. The Tyrants were armed, and the Martyrs naked: Yet they that were naked got the Victory, and they that carried Arms were vanquished. What an astonishing Engagement was this? He that is beaten, proves Victor over him that beats him: He that is bound, overcomes him that is at liberty: He that is burnt, tames him that burns him; and he that dies, vanquiſhes him that puts him to Death. Theſe are aſtoniſhing Things: But 'tis Grace that works theſe Miracles; they are above the Strength of Nature. Thus the Ancients extolled their Martyrs, thoſe Heroes of Chriſtianity, by juſt Praiſes and Commendations, and endeavoured to provoke others to Piety and Virtue by their Example: Which was the great End and Deſign of theſe holy Solemnities and frequent Meetings at the Memorials of the Martyrs.

CHAP. VIII.

Of ſome other Feſtivals of a later Date and leſſer Obſervation.

SECT. 1. Of the Encænia or Feaſts of Dedication of Churches.

BESIDE theſe Feſtivals, which were of great Antiquity in the Church, there were ſome others added in the Fourth and Fifth Centuries, which either for their Novelty, or their more limited Obſervation were far inferior to the former, and of leſs Eſteem in the Church. Among theſe we may reckon the Encænia, or Anniverſary Feaſts kept in Memory of the Dedication of Churches. The firſt Dedication or Conſecration of Churches (which began in the Time of Conſtantine after the demoliſhing of them in the Diocletian Perſecution, and rebuilding of them in the Peaceable Times that ſucceeded afterwards) has been largely ſpoken of under another [*] Head: Here I only take Notice of one Particular, which properly concerns this Place, that is, The Anniverſary Feſtival, which was ſometimes obſerved in Memory of the firſt Dedication of Churches. Sozomen [a] gives a famous Inſtance of this in the Church of Jeruſalem: For, he ſays, in Memory of the Dedication of their Church which Conſtantine built to the Honour of our SAVIOUR, they were uſed to keep an Anniverſary Feſtival which laſted for Eight Days together, during which Time both they of the Church, and all Strangers, which flocked thither in Abundance, held Eccleſiaſtical Aſſemblies, and met together for Divine Service. And from this Example the Cuſtom was received and propagated in other Churches. For Bede [b] ſays, Gregory the Great in his Letters to Auſtin and Mellitus the firſt Saxon Biſhops here in England, ordered them to allow the People Liberty on their Annual Feaſts of the Dedications of their Churches to build themſelves Booths round about the Church, and there feaſt and entertain themſelves with Eating and Drinking, in Lieu of their Ancient Sacrifices while they were Heathens. Hoſpinian [c] ſays, in the German Tongue theſe Feaſts were called Kerhweiches, that is, Church-Feaſts, whence comes our Engliſh Name, Church-Wakes, which is of the ſame Importance.

ANOTHER Sort of Feſtivals, much of the ſame Nature with the former, were the Anniverſary Solemnities which Biſhops held in their own Churches in Memory of their Ordination. Theſe are ſometimes called Natales Epiſcopi vel Epiſcopatus, Biſhops Birth-Days, which denote not the Days of their natural Birth; nor yet the Days of their Death, as in the former Caſe of Martyrs; but the Days of their Ordination, or Nativity to the Epiſcopal Office or Throne of the Church: In like manner, as we have ſhewed before [†], the Natales Imperatorum often denotes, not their natural Birth-Days, but the Days of their Inauguration or Advancement to the Throne of the Empire. That ſuch Days were obſerved as Anniverſary Feſtivals, I have had Occaſion once before [‖] to ſhew out of ſeveral Homilies of St. Auſtin and Pope Leo, which were preached by them upon thoſe Occaſions. To which I ſhall add what St. Auſtin [d] ſays alſo of the Donatiſts, That they agreed with the Church in this Practice. For though Optatus Gildonianus, one of their Biſhops, was a very baſe Man, yet they made no Scruple to celebrate his Natalitia, the Anniverſary of his Ordination, with great Solemnity, honouring him with the Kiſs of Peace in the midſt of the Holy Myſteries, and mutually giving and receiving the Euchariſt from him; which Circumſtances plainly ſhew, that by his Natalitials, nothing elſe can be meant but the Anniverſary of his Ordination, when it was uſual for the Biſhop to invite his neighbouring Biſhops to joyn in the Solemnity with him, which was obſerved with Reading, Pſalmody, Preaching, Praying, and receiving the Euchariſt, as other ſolemn Feſtivals. Paulinus likewiſe [e] takes Notice of this particular ticular Circumſtance, That they were uſed to invite their Fellow-Biſhops to come and celebrate theſe their ſpiritual Nativities with them: For ſo, he ſays, he himſelf was invited by Anaſtaſius Biſhop of Rome to celebrate his Birth-Day. The like we find in the Epiſtles [f] of St. Ambroſe, Pope Hilary, and ſeveral others.

NOW the Deſign of theſe Anniverſaries was very excellent, to put Biſhops in mind of the great and weighty Burden that was laid upon them, and to be a freſh Occaſion of Recollecting with themſelves how faithfully, and conſcientiouſly, and carefully they had diſcharged the Truſt committed to them. Thus St. Auſtin repreſents the Matter [g] in one of his Sermons upon this Occaſion. A Biſhop, ſays he, ought to conſider every Day, and every Hour, and with a continual Care, what a weighty Diſpenſation is committed to him, and what an Account thereof he is to make to his Lord. But when the Anniverſary Day of our Ordination returns, then the Honour of this Office is chiefly reflected on, as if it were then firſt impoſed upon us. But there is this Difference, That on the Day when we firſt received the Office, we had only to conſider how we ought to behave ourſelves in it: But every Day after, and eſpecially on that Day when the Solemnity returns, we not only look forward, and with great Caution and Foreſight conſider what we ought to do for the Time to come; but alſo look back to what is paſt, and carefully recollect what we have already done; that we may go on to imitate ourſelves, if we have done any Thing well; or if otherwiſe we have done Things that are Blame-worthy, be careful not to repeat them again in Time to come. Therefore on this Solemnity of my Ordination, I ſay to thoſe who are my Debtors by Treſpaſſing againſt me: If any Man becomes my Enemy, becauſe I tell him the Truth; if I ſeem troubleſome to any, becauſe I give him good Advice; If I am forced to offend any Man's Will, whilſt I ſeek his Profit: To theſe I ſay, Be ye not like to Horſe and Mule, which have no Underſtanding. For theſe Creatures chiefly kick and bite thoſe who take Care of them, and only touch them gently to cure their Wounds. So you and I are at a Strife one with the other; but the Cauſe makes a Diſtinction. Thou art an Enemy to thy Phyſician, I only an Enemy to thy Diſeaſe: Thou art an Enemy to my Diligence, I only to thy peſtilential Diſtemper. They rewarded me Evil for Good, ſays the Pſalmiſt, but I give myſelf unto Prayer. What did he pray? Father, forgive them, for they know not what they do. Rejoyce, and be exceeding glad, ſays CHRIST, when Men revile you, and ſay all manner of Evil againſt you for Righteouſneſs Sake: For great is your Reward in Heaven. But we would have you correct your Perverſeneſs, and acknowledge our Charity, and render Love for Love: We would not have our Reward augmented by your Deſtruction. Next I muſt ſpeak to thoſe, to whom I am a Debtor. For I am not ſo vain as to think, that I have injured no Man ſince I firſt took the Burden of this Office upon me. I know my Infirmity, and pray to the LORD my GOD Day and Night, and beg the Aſſiſtance of your Prayers for the Cure of it. If then in the Hurry and Difficulty of various Cares, I have at any Time been ſo diſtracted, as not to hear the Petition of him that made Suit to me; if I have looked upon any with a ſourer Countenance than there was Occaſion for; if I have given any one ſharper Words than I ought to have done; if I have troubled any one that was in Anguiſh of Spirit, and needed my Help, by an improper Anſwer; if I have overlooked any poor Man importuning me, when I was intent upon ſome other Buſineſs, or put him off to another Time, or grieved his Soul by any ſharp Sign or Intimation: If I have been above Meaſure angry with any one for entertaining any falſe Suſpicion of me, as one Man is apt to be jealous of another; or if I have humanly ſuſpected any one guilty of a Crime, from which his own Conſcience could clear him: I beſeech all you, to whom I confeſs myſelf a Debtor for theſe and the like Offences, to believe me to be your Debtor. For the tender Mother, when ſhe is in great Straits, ſometimes treads, though not with her whole Weight, upon her Young whom ſhe cheriſhes, and yet ceaſes not to be a Mother. Forgive me, that ye may be forgiven: and commend my Care for you to the LORD, that He may mercifully pardon my Offences, and guide my Way under this Burden for the future, ſo as may be pleaſing in his Eyes, and Profitable for you; that ye may be found my Joy and Crown, and not my Confuſion and Puniſhment at his Appearance.

THESE are pious Thoughts and excellent Contemplations, flowing with Expreſſions of great Humility and Charity: And they ſerve to ſhew us, both what a deep Senſe the Ancients had of the Weight and Burden of the Epiſcopal Office, and alſo after what manner they entertained their Auditories with uſeful Diſcourſes on theſe Anniverſary Feſtivals of their own Ordinations.

SECT. 3. Of Festivals kept in Memory of any great Deliverances or signal Mercies vouchsafed by GOD to his Church.

ANOTHER Sort of Festivals was observed as Annual Thanksgivings to GOD for any great Favours and Blessings vouchsafed by GOD to his Church. Thus Sozomen [b] says, The Church of Alexandria kept an Anniversary Thanksgiving upon the Twelfth of the Kalends of August, that is, the Twenty-first of July, for their Deliverance from a terrible Earthquake, and Inundation of the Sea, in the Reign of Julian, which was so great, that Boats were found upon the Tops of Houses. In Memory of this, they kept a Festival, which they called, γενέσια σεισμῦ, the Memorial of the Earthquake, which was observed in the Time of Sozomen with great Solemnity, the People offering Eucharistical Prayers to GOD, and setting up Lights all over the City for Joy. The Constantinopolitans kept such another Festival on the Twenty-fourth of September, in Memory of their Deliverance from the Earthquake, which is mentioned by Marcellinus Comes [i] in his Chronicon, as lasting with great Violence for Eleven Days together. Among these we may also reckon their Thanksgiving after any signal Victories; such as that of Constantine over the Tyrant Licinius, whereby the Christians were delivered from the Oppression of all their Persecutors, and gave GOD solemn Thanks and Praise both in City and Country for the glorious Success of Constantine's Arms, and their own Deliverance by his Victories, as Eusebius [k] more than once declares in setting forth the great Atchievements of Constantine for the Christian Church. So he that had ordered all possible Honour to be done to the Martyrs [l], had himself a Share in the Panegyricks that were made upon them, and next under GOD was celebrated as the great Supporter of the Christian Faith. But these seem not to have been Festivals of long Continuance, but to have ended their Period with the Life of the Emperor, on whose Account they were observed in the Church.

SECT. 4. Of the Feast of the Annunciation.

BUT from this Time Festivals grew and multiplied in the Church. Hospinian [m] thinks the Feast of the Annunciation was as old as Athanasius, because there is mention made of it in a Sermon that goes under [n] his Name. Others carry it higher to the Time of Gregory Thaumaturgus, because there is a Sermon also attributed to him upon the same Subject. But the best Criticks, Dr. Cave [o], Du Pin [p], Hammond l'Estrange [q] and Rivet [r], reject both these as spurious Writings: And even Bellarmin and Labbeé reckon them dubious. They were written by Maximus, or some Author after the Time that the Monothelite Heresy appeared in the World, which was in the VIIth Century. So the Antiquity of this Festival cannot be deduced from them. Neither could it be a Festival in those Times by the ancient Rules of the Church, which forbad the Celebration of all Festivals in Lent, except the Sabbath and the Lord's-Day, as appears from the Council of Laodicea [s]. But before the Time of the Council of Trullo it was come into Use. For that Council [t] renewing the foresaid Prohibition of Laodicea, makes a farther Exception in Behalf of the Annunciation: Forbidding all Festivals to be kept in Lent, except the Sabbath, and the Lord's-Day, and the Holy Annunciation; which shews, that by this Time it was become a noted Festival: And therefore we may date its Original from the Seventh Century, when we find Sermons began to be made upon it.

SECT. 5. Of the Festival called Hypapante, afterward Purification and Candlemas-Day.

ANOTHER Festival of later Date was that which is commonly called the Purification of the Virgin Mary, or Candlemas-Day. This at first among the Greeks went by the Name of Hypapante, Ὑπαπαντὴ, which denotes the Meeting of the LORD by Simeon in the Temple, in Commemoration of which Occurrence it was first made a Festival in the Church; some say in the Time of Justin the Emperor; others in the Time of his Successor Justinian, An. 542. There is indeed an Homily among St. Chrysostom's Works [u] which if it were Genuine, would carry this Feast an Hundred Years higher; for it is upon this Festival under this very Name of Hypapante. But all Learned Men are agreed that it is none of his. And particularly Leo Allatius [x] cites a Passage out of Georgius Hamartolus's Chronicon, which shews that there was no such Festival in Chrysostom's Time, but that it was first instituted in the Reign of Justinian. At this Time began the Hypapante to be celebrated, says he, which before was not numbred among the Festivals of our LORD. For Chrysostom says the Festivals of CHRIST's Oeconomy here upon Earth were proportioned to the Number of the Days of the Creation of the World. The first is his Nativity in the Flesh; the Second, Epiphany; the Third, the Day of his Passion; the Fourth, the Day of his his glorious Reſurrection; the Fifth his Aſſumption into Heaven; the Sixth the Deſcent of the HOLY GHOST; the Seventh the great Day of the general Reſurrection, which has no Succeſſion nor End. For that is an Eternal Feſtival (or perpetual Sabbath and Reſt for the People of GOD) to be celebrated with much Joy and Gladneſs by thoſe that ſhall be Heirs of ſuch Things as Eye hath not ſeen, nor Ear heard, neither have entred into the Heart of Man to conceive the Things that GOD hath prepared for them that love him. Thus far Georgius Hamartolus out of Chryſoſtom. And all the Hiſtorians that come after him, agree in the ſame thing, that this was no Feſtival in the Church till the Time of Juſtin, or Juſtinian. Cedrenus [y] fixes its Original to the laſt Year of Juſtin. But Landulphus Sagax [z], Siffridus Preſbyter [a], Martin Polonus [b], Nicephorus [c], Sigebert [d], and Paulus Diaconus [e] cited by Xylander [f] and Suicerus [g] deduce it only from the Reign of Juſtinian. And Baronius himſelf [h] does not deny it, only he would have it firſt inſtituted in Honour of the Virgin Mary, which the very Name of Hypapante confutes, which ſignifies the Coming of Simeon to meet the LORD in his Temple, according to the Revelation made to him, that he ſhould not ſee Death, till he had ſeen the LORD'S CHRIST: And the Greeks always reckoned it among thoſe Feſtivals which they called Feſta Dominica, Feſtivals appointed in Honour of our LORD, as Leo Allatius himſelf informs us.

SECT. 6. The Original of Feſtivals in Honour of Confeſſors and other Holy Men.

HE that would ſee more of the Increaſe and Progreſs of Feſtivals, may conſult Hoſpinian [i], who has noted the Original of every diſtinct Feſtival ſucceſſively as they were inſtituted in the following Ages of the Church. I only note that he allows Confeſſors and other Holy Men to have had their Memorials ſomething earlier than Cardinal Bona himſelf will allow. For Bona [k] thinks this Honour was only paid to Martyrs properly ſo called, and not to Confeſſors, or any other Saints for the Four firſt Ages: And he ſays, that in Fronto's Kalendar written about Nine Hundred Years ago, there are not above Four Saints, that were not Martyrs, named throughout the whole Year, viz. Pope Sylveſter, Pope Leo, Martin of Tours, and Gregory the Great. But Hoſpinian's Obſervation is more exact: For Sozomen [l] ſays expreſly, That it was Cuſtomary in Paleſtine long before to celebrate the Anniverſary Days of ſuch Man as had been eminent among them for Piety and Vertue, ſuch as Hilarion of Gaza, Abrilius of Anthedon, Alexion of Bethagathon, and Alaphion of Aſalea, who were no Martyrs, but only Men of Renown for their Piety, by whoſe Vertues the Chriſtian Religion had made a conſiderable Progreſs in many Heathen Cities in the Reign of Conſtantius; for which Reaſon their Memory was celebrated in thoſe Places with the Anniverſary Feſtivals. And ſo Baronius [m] obſerves out of St. Jerom [n], that Hilarion himſelf kept a Vigil preceding the Day of Antonius's Death in Commemoration of him. Therefore whatever might be the Cuſtom of the Weſtern Church, it is plain in the Eaſtern Parts the Anniverſary Commemoration of Confeſſors and other eminent Saints was introduced a little ſooner.

Of the FASTS in Uſe in the Ancient CHURCH.

CHAP. I.

Of the Quadrageſimal or Lent-Faſt.

SECT. 1. What this Faſt was originally, Forty Days or Forty Hours.

NEXT to the Feſtivals obſerved in the Ancient Church, we are to take a View of their ſolemn and ſtated Times of Faſting. Theſe, like the Feſtivals, were ſome of them Weekly, and ſome Annual, that is, ſuch as returned at a certain Seaſon only once a Year. Among thoſe that came only once a Year, the Quadrageſimal or Lent-Faſt was the moſt famous. The Greeks called it Τεσσαρακοστὴ, and the Latins Quadrageſima, both which Words denote the Number Forty, whence this Faſt for ſome Reaſon was called Quadrageſimal, but whether for its being a Faſt of Forty Days, or only Forty Hours, is variouſly diſputed among Learned Men. They of the Romiſh Church generally maintain, that it was always a Faſt of Forty Days, and that as ſuch it was of Apoſtolical Inſtitution. And there are ſome of the Proteſtant Communion who are of the ſame Opinion. Others think it was only of Eccleſiaſtical Inſtitution, and therefore as it was variable and alterable by the Churches Power, ſo it was variouſly obſerved in different Churches, and grew by Degrees from a Faſt of Forty Hours to a Faſt of Forty Days, ſtill retaining the Name of the Quadrageſimal Faſt under all its Variations. This is what Biſhop Morton [a], and Biſhop Taylor [b] and Peter du Moulin [c], and and Daille [d], and Chamier [e], have largely disputed againſt the Romaniſts. And even among the Papiſts ſome Writers of no mean Rank, ſuch as Melchior Canus [f], and Cajetan [g] ſay, It was only ſuch an Apoſtolical Rule or Cuſtom, as left the Church at Liberty to alter it, as ſhe did ſome other Things, upon juſt and proper Occaſions, and to abrogate it by introducing a contrary Practice. But this is a Queſtion I ſhall not here debate, but only enquire into Matter of Fact, by whom this Faſt was firſt inſtituted, and of what Duration and Length it was when it firſt began to be obſerved in the Church. Dr. Cave, in his Primitive Chriſtianity, p. 182. ſays, This Faſt was very ancient, but far from being an Apoſtolical Canon. And he cites Mr. Thorndike of Religious Aſſemblies, together with Biſhop Taylor for the ſame Opinion.

Now the Reaſons perſuading Learned Men to believe that it was not inſtituted by the Apoſtles, at leaſt not as any neceſſary Rule obliging all Men to faſt Forty Days, are theſe that follow.

SECT. 2. Some Probability that at firſt it was only a Faſt of Forty Hours, or the two Days from the Paſſion to the Reſurrection.

1. BECAUSE there is ſome Probability that at firſt it was only a Faſt of Forty Hours, or the Time that our SAVIOUR lay in the Grave, that is, the Friday and Saturday before Eaſter, the Time that CHRIST the Bridegroom was taken from his Diſciples between his Paſſion and his Reſurrection. Tertullian when he was a Montaniſt, diſputing againſt the Catholicks, ſays [h], They thought themſelves obliged only to obſerve thoſe Two Days in which the Bridegroom was taken away from them. This he elſewhere calls [i] the Paſchal Faſt, which all obſerved in common as a Publick Faſt, with great Religion. And again [k] objecting to the Catholicks their Obſervation of other Faſts beſides the Two Days in which CHRIST was taken away from them, ſuch as the Half-Faſts of their Stationary-Days, and other Faſts upon Bread and Water; he makes them anſwer, That thoſe other Faſts were kept at every Man's Liberty and Will, and not by any expreſs Command. So that they thought themſelves obliged only to obſerve thoſe Two Days on which the Bridegroom was taken away from them. This Irenæus calls the Faſt of Forty Hours before Eaſter, if we retain the Vulgar and Common Reading. For writing to Pope Victor about the Difference between the Eaſtern and Weſtern Churches concerning the Time of Eaſter, he tells him [l], there had been Differences not only about the Time of Eaſter, but about the Manner of Faſting. For ſome thought they ought to faſt one Day, others two, others more; and others meaſured their Day (or their Faſt, as Valeſius obſerves it ought to be read) by the Computation of Forty Hours, joyning Day and Night together. And this Variety among thoſe that obſerve the Faſt, did not begin in our Age, but long before us among our Anceſtors, many of whom probably not being very curious and exact in their Obſervation, handed down to Poſterity the Cuſtom as it had been thro' Simplicity, or private Fancy introduced among them. And yet nevertheleſs all theſe lived peaceably one with another, and we alſo keep Peace together. For the Difference in obſerving the Faſt does only ſo much the more commend the common Unity of Faith in which all are agreed. I muſt not here conceal from the Reader, that there are ſeveral Learned Men, who think one Clauſe in this Paſſage ought to be read a little otherwiſe: They ſay, Ruffin's old Tranſlation, and Sir H. Savil's Copy read it thus: Some faſt One Day, ſome Two, ſome more, ſome Forty Days. Hence they alſo argue, that a Lent of Forty Days was obſerved in the Time of Irenæus. So [m] Biſhop Beverege, [n] Biſhop Patrick, [o] Biſhop Hooper, and others, who have written peculiar Diſſertations on this Subject. On the other hand all the Manuſcripts uſed by Stephens and Valeſius in their accurate Editions, are ſo Pointed, as to make the Word Forty, referr not to Days, but Hours only. It is no eaſy Matter to determine a Point of ſuch a critical Nature between ſo many Learned Men: But if I may be allowed to conjecture in ſo obſcure a Caſe, I ſhould incline to compromiſe the Diſpute, and as it were divide the Matter between them; by ſaying, firſt, That in the Time of Irenæus and Tertullian, the Catholicks allowed the Faſt of Forty Hours between our SAVIOUR's Death and Reſurrection, call it a Faſt of One Day or Two Days, as we pleaſe, to have the Nature of an Evangelical Command, partly from the Example and Practice of the Apoſtles, and partly from thoſe Words of our SAVIOUR, The Days will come that the Bridegroom ſhall be taken from them, and then ſhall they faſt: Which, as we have ſeen, they underſtood of the Time of about Forty Hours that our SAVIOUR lay in the Grave: From whence it is not improbable, that the firſt Notion and Name of the moſt ſtrict Quadrageſimal Faſt might take its Original. Which is enough to prove the Perpetuity of a Quadrageſimal Faſt before Eaſter, as of conſtant Uſe in the Church. 2*dly*, That at the ſame Time that Irenæus and Tertullian wrote, there were other additional Days of Faſting ſuperadded to theſe by ſeveral Churches, but with a great deal of Variety in their Number and Obſervation, it being at every Church's Liberty to appoint what Number of theſe Additional Days ſhe thought fit: Which, though they were in ſome Churches more, and in ſome fewer, and none of them full Forty Days, till after the Time of Gregory the Great, yet they all went by the Name of the Quadrageſimal-Faſt, either becauſe they came near the Number of Forty Days, or becauſe they were an appendix to the Paſchal-Faſt, which was moſt ancient, and originally called Quadrageſimal. When firſt theſe Additional Days came in [p], is not very eaſy to determine: But that they were taken up by ſome Churches in the Time of Irenæus and Tertullian, is beyond Diſpute from what has been alledged out of each of them: For they both ſpeak of more Days than Two as obſerved in many Churches; only with this Difference, that the one were obſerved as more neceſſary, being founded upon the Words of CHRIST himſelf; and the other were at the Churches free Liberty and Choice, as being purely of Eccleſiaſtical Inſtitution, and therefore varying in their Number in different Churches, according to the Wiſdom and Diſcretion of thoſe that appointed them. And this opens the Way to a ſecond Argument or Reaſon inducing many Learned Men to believe, that the Lent-Faſt, as comprizing the preciſe Number of Forty Days, was neither of Apoſtolical Inſtitution nor Practice.

SECT. 3. Great Variety in Point of Time obſervable in the Celebration of this Faſt in many Churches.

BECAUSE if there had been any ſuch Apoſtolical Order or Example, it is ſcarce accountable how ſuch great Variety in Point of Time ſhould immediately happen in the Obſervation of this Faſt, as we are ſure in Fact did happen in many Churches; ſome keeping it only Three Weeks, ſome Six, ſome Seven, and yet none of them hitting upon the preciſe Number of Forty Days of Faſting. Socrates [q] gives this Account of it in deſcribing the Difference of Rites and Ceremonies in divers Churches. One may obſerve, ſays he, how the Ante-Paſchal-Faſt is differently obſerved by Men of different Churches. The Romans faſt Three Weeks [*] before Eaſter, only the Sabbaths and Lord's-Days excepted. The Illyrians, and all Greece, and the Alexandrians, faſt Six Weeks, and call that the Quadrageſimal-Faſt. Others (meaning the Conſtantinopolitans) begin their Faſt Seven Weeks before Eaſter, but only faſt Fifteen Days by Intervals, and yet they alſo call this the Quadrageſimal-Faſt. And it is wonderful, that when they differ ſo much about the Number of Days, they ſhould all call it Quadrageſimal, and aſſign different Reaſons for this Appellation. But we may obſerve not only a Difference in the Number of Days, but in the Manner of their Abſtinence. For ſome abſtain from all living Creatures; others of all living Creattues only eat Fiſh; ſome eat Fowls together with Fiſh, becauſe, according to Moſes, they ſay, they come of Water. Others abſtain from Seeds (or Berries) and Eggs; others eat dry Bread only, and ſome not ſo much as that. There are ſome that faſt till Nine a Clock, that is, Three in the Afternoon, and then eat any kind of Meat. Other Nations obſerve other Cuſtoms in their Faſts, and that for various Reaſons. And ſince no one can ſhew any written Rule about this, it is plain, the Apoſtles left this Matter free to every one's Liberty and Choice, that no one ſhould be compelled to do a good Thing out of Neceſſity or Fear. Sozomen [r] gives the like Account of theſe Variations: The Quadrageſimal-Faſt before Eaſter, ſays he, ſome obſerve Six Weeks, as the Illyrians and Weſtern Churches, and all Libya, Egypt and Paleſtine; others make it Seven Weeks, as the Conſtantinopolitans and neighbouring Nations as far as Phœnicia; others faſt Three only of thoſe Six or Seven Weeks by Intervals; others the Three Weeks next immediately before Eaſter, and others faſt only Two Weeks, as the Montaniſts.

SECT. 4. Lent conſiſted not of above Thirty-ſix Faſting Days in any Church till the Time of Gregory the Great, becauſe all Sundays were univerſally excepted out of the Faſt, and all Saturdays except one in all the Eaſtern Churches.

CASSIAN has ſomething of the ſame Obſervation: For he ſays, ſome Churches kept their Lent Six Weeks, and ſome Seven; and yet none of them made their Faſt above Thirty-ſix Days in the whole. For though Six Weeks be Forty-two Days, yet all Sundays were excepted out of the Faſt; and then Six Days being ſubducted, there remained but Thirty-ſix Days of Faſting. In like Manner thoſe Churches which kept Seven Weeks, that is Forty-nine Days, to their Lent, excepted not only the Lord's-Day, but all Saturdays ſave one, out of the Number of Faſting Days; and therefore Thirteen Days upon that Account being ſubducted, the Remainder [s] was ſtill but Thirty-ſix. And this was the whole of Lent till the Time of Gregory the Great, who ſpeaks of Forty-two Days [t] as the Appointment of Lent, but taking away the Sundays, the Remainder is only Thirty-ſix. Now that this was ſo, is evident from what has been diſcourſed before of the Lord's-Day [*] and the Sabbath, where I have fully ſhewed, That the Lord's-Day was never allowed to be kept a Faſt, but always obſerved as Feſtival, even in Lent, in all Churches of the World; and in the Oriental Churches the Saturday or Sabbath was excepted out of the Number of Faſt-Days alſo. To what I have ſaid before, I ſhall only add here one Paſſage of Chryſoſtom, where he gives the Reaſon why this Exception of theſe Two Days was made in the Lent-Faſt: As there are Stations, ſays he [u], and Inns in the publick Roads for weary Travellers to refreſh themſelves, and reſt from their Labours, that they may more chearfully go on again in their Journey: And as in the Sea there are Shores and Havens for Seamen to betake themſelves to when they are in a Storm, and refreſh themſelves from the Violence of the Winds, and then begin Sailing again; ſo the LORD hath appointed theſe Two Days in the Week, as Stations, and Inns, and Shores, and Havens, for thoſe to reſt in who have taken upon them the Courſe of Faſting in this holy Time of Lent, that they may refreſh their Bodies a little from the Labour of Faſting, and recreate their Minds, and after theſe Two Days are paſt, to go on again with Chearfullneſs in the Journey which they have begun. From hence it is apparent, that in ſome of the Eaſtern Churches, where the whole Time of Lent was but Six Weeks or Forty-two Days, when the Saturdays and Sundays were deducted, the Remainder of Faſting-Days were not above One-and-thirty; and where they were moſt, not above Thirty-ſix. See Biſhop Gunning, Lent-Faſt. p. 156.

SECT. 5. Who firſt added Aſhwedneſday and the other Three Days in the Roman Church to the Beginning of Lent.

WHO firſt added Aſhwedneſday and the other Three Days to the Beginning of Lent in the Roman Church, to make them completely Forty, is not agreed among their own Writers. Some ſay, It was the Work of Gregory the Great, but others aſcribe it to Gregory II, who lived above an Hundred Years after, in the Beginning of the Eighth Century. But as Azorius [x] ſays, It is not very Material, whether of the Two was the Author of that Addition, ſince it is confeſſed to be an Addition to Lent, after it had continued Six Hundred Years without it. And this is a plain Demonſtration, that Lent, in this Notion at leaſt, as taken for the preciſe Number of a Forty-Days Faſt, could not be of Apoſtolical Inſtitution, whatever it might be in any other Form or Duration.

SECT. 6. Whether the Ancients reputed Lent to be an Apoſtolical Inſtitution.

BUT many of the Ancients do not allow it in any Form to be an Apoſtolical Inſtitution, but only an uſeful Order and Appointment of the Church. So Caſſian ſays expreſsly [y], That as long as the Perfection of the Primitive Church remained inviolable, there was no Obſervation of Lent. But when Men began to decline from the Apoſtolical Fervour of Devotion, and give themſelves overmuch to worldly Affairs, then the Prieſts in general agreed to recal them from Secular Cares by a Canonical Indiction of Faſting, and ſetting aſide a Tenth of their Time for GOD. For ſo he reckons, that the Thirty-ſix Days, which was then the fixed Term of Lent, were by Computation [z] the Tenth of the whole Year. Caſſian was a Diſciple of St. Chryſoſtom's, and he ſeems to have had his Notion and Sentiments about the Original of Lent from him: For Chryſoſtom gives much the ſame Account of it: Why do we faſt theſe Forty Days? Many heretofore were uſed to come to the Communion indevoutly and inconſiderately, eſpecially at this Time, when CHRIST firſt gave it to his Diſciples: Therefore our Forefathers [a] conſidering the Miſchief ariſing from ſuch careleſs Approaches, meeting together appointed Forty Days for Faſting and Prayer, and Hearing of Sermons, and holy Aſſemblies, that all Men in theſe Days being carefully purified by Prayer and Almſdeeds, and Faſting and Watching, and Tears, and Confeſſion of Sins, and other the like Exerciſes, might come according to their Capacity with a Pure Conſcience to the Holy Table. St. Auſtin ſometimes delivers himſelf after the ſame manner, though at other Times he ſeems to derive the Original of Lent from the Authority of the Goſpel. In one Place he ſays [b], Tho' Faſting in general be preſcribed in the New Teſtament, yet what Days Men ought to faſt, or what not, he finds not defined ſined by any Precept of CHRIST or his Apoſtles. In another Place [c] ſpecifying more particularly the ſeveral Solemnities obſerved by Chriſtians, he ſays, There was ſome Foundation and Authority for them in Scripture: For we know out of the Goſpel what Day our LORD ſuffered and was buried, and roſe again from the Dead, and therefore the Obſervation of theſe Days was added by the Councils of the Fathers, and the whole World was perſuaded to celebrate the Paſch after that manner. The Forty Days Faſt has Authority both in the Old Teſtament from the Faſt of Moſes and Elias, and alſo from the Goſpel, becauſe our Lord faſted ſo many Days. He adds a little after [d] That the Supputation of Eaſter, and Fifty Days of Pentecoſt are firmly collected out of Scripture. For as the Cuſtom of the Church has confirmed the Obſervation of thoſe Forty Days before Eaſter, ſo has it alſo confirmed the Diſtinction that is made between the Eight Days of the Neophytes (or the Time of the Newly-baptized wearing their White Garments) from the reſt, that the Eighth Day might accord with the Firſt. Here are Two Things very obſervable in St. Auſtin's Words. 1. That the Authority and Foundation which the Lent-Faſt has out of the Goſpel, is the ſame that it has out of the Old Teſtament, which was not any Precept, but the Example of Moſes and Elias. 2. That the Lent-Faſt is owing to the Councils of the Fathers and the Cuſtom of the Church, in like manner as the Eight Days of the Neophytes and the Fifty Days of Pentecoſt owe their Obſervation to the ſame Original; concerning which no one doubts, but that though there may be remotely ſome Foundation for them in Scripture, yet there is no expreſs Command, but that they owe their Original purely to the Councils of the Fathers and the Cuſtom of the Church.

NOW by this we underſtand what others of the Ancients mean, when they ſay, the Forty Days Faſt is a Divine Inſtitution, and derived from the Authority of Scripture. As St. Jerom [e] ſays, Moſes and Elias faſting Forty Days, were filled with the Converſation of GOD; and our LORD himſelf faſted ſo many Days in the Wilderneſs, that he might leave to us the ſolemn Days of Faſting. And again [f] Our LORD, the true Jonas, being ſent to Preach in the World, faſted Forty Days, and leaving us the Inheritance of Faſting under this Number he prepares our Souls for the Eating of his Body. There are many the like Expreſſions occur in the Writings of St. Baſil [g], Theophilus [h] and Cyril [i] of Alexandria, Petrus Chryſologus [k] and ſeveral others, which Biſhop Beverege has put together upon this Occaſion. But none of theſe intended to ſay, That there is any Expreſs Divine Command for it, but only ſome Precedent or Example in the extraordinary Practice of the Forty Days Faſt of our SAVIOUR, or thoſe of Moſes and Elias: Which is not enough to ground a Precept upon, becauſe ſuch extraordinary Examples are not imitable, neither can they be reduced to Practice but in a much lower Way, which may warrant the Church to appoint a Faſt of Forty Days, but not to impoſe it as a Matter of Divine Command. Chryſoſtom among the Ancients ſaw this very clearly, and therefore he ſays [l], CHRIST did not ſay to his Diſciples, I have faſted, although he might have ſpoken of thoſe Forty Days: But, Learn of me, for I am meek and lowly in Heart: And when he ſent them to preach the Goſpel, he did not tell them, they ſhould faſt, but eat ſuch Things as were ſet before them. This I ſpeak not, ſays he, to depreciate Faſting, GOD forbid, but to give it extraordinary Commendations. Only I am ſorry ye ſhould think this, which is in the loweſt Rank of Vertues, ſufficient to Salvation, whilſt other Things of greater Value, Charity, Humility and Mercy, which exceed even Virginity itſelf, are wholly neglected. By this it is plain, they did not think the Example of CHRIST ſufficient to authorize the Impoſition of a Forty Days Faſt as a Matter of Divine Injunction.

SECT. 8. How far allowed to be a Tradition or Canon Apoſtolical.

BUT it muſt be owned, ſome of them call it a Tradition or Canon Apoſtolical. St. Jerom [m] ſays, We obſerve one Lent in the Year according to the Tradition of the Apoſtles. Pope Leo [n] calls it the Apoſtolical Inſtitution of a Forty Days Faſt, which the Apoſtles inſtituted by the Direction of the HOLY GHOST. But it is no ſmall Diminution to the Judgment of Pope Leo, that Mr. Pagi [o] and Queſnel obſerve of him, that he was uſed to call every Thing an Apoſtolical Law, which he found either in the Practice of his own Church, or or decreed in the Archives of his Predeceſſors Damaſus and Siricius. And for St. Jerom, he himſelf tells us, he ſometimes calls Particular Cuſtoms of Churches by the Name of Apoſtolical Traditions: For writing about the Sabbath, which ſome Churches kept a Faſt, and others a Feſtival, he ſays [p], Every Country may abound in their own Senſe, and take the Precepts of their Anceſtors for Apoſtolical Laws. And if St. Jerom did ſo here, we may eaſily apprehend his Meaning: If he did otherwiſe, he was certainly miſtaken: Since it appears from the Premiſes, that the Apoſtolical Lent was much ſhort of the Lent St. Jerom ſpeaks of, and increaſed to the Number of Forty Days by various Steps and Gradations. The Apoſtolical Lent was only a Faſt of a few Days before Eaſter: By the Time of Dionyſius of Alexandria it was come to be a whole Week, and perhaps ſomewhat more, An. 250. At Rome about the ſame Time (as a very Learned Perſon [q] thinks, who has written very accurately upon this Subject) it was Three Weeks, in the Time when Cornelius and Novatian were contending about the Biſhoprick of Rome: Which made the Followers of Novatian ſtick to that Term in the Time of Socrates, when Lent was improved to Six Weeks in Rome. From Three Weeks, that Learned Perſon thinks, it was firſt advanced to Six, either by the Council of Nice in its Fifth Canon, or not long before it. And then it began commonly to be called Quadrageſima, or the Forty-Days Faſt, becauſe, though in Strictneſs the Faſting-Days were but Thirty-ſix, or Thirty-one, yet the firſt of them was at leaſt Forty Days before Eaſter, and that gave Denomination to the whole. And thus it was in the Time of St. Jerom: But it is a wrong Concluſion in him, becauſe there was an Apoſtolical Faſt of ſome few Days before Eaſter, which afterwards improved by various Degrees into a Faſt of Forty Days, therefore the Faſt of Forty Days muſt needs be of Apoſtolical Inſtitution: And it is more inſufferable in thoſe, who, after Four other Days were added to Thirty-ſix to make them preciſely Forty Days of Faſting, ſtill pretend it is the very ſame Lent that was originally ſettled in the Church by the Apoſtles. The Matter in itſelf is not great, but the Prejudice and Confidence of Men in managing a Diſpute is wonderful, when they will maintain a Paradox, that may with ſuch glaring Evidence be ſo eaſily confuted. For as Biſhop Taylor [r] ſays very well upon the Point, If any Man ſhould ſay, That Kings were all created as Adam was, in full Stature and Manhood by GOD himſelf immediately, he could beſt be confuted by the Midwives and the Nurſes, the Schoolmaſters and the Servants of the Family, and by all the Neighbourhood, who ſaw them born Infants, who took them from their Mothers Knees, who gave them Suck, who carried them in their Arms, who made them Coats, and taught them their Letters, who obſerved their Growth, and changed their Miniſteries about their Perſons. The ſame is the Caſe of the preſent Article. He that ſays our Lent, or Forty Days Faſt before Eaſter, was eſtabliſhed by the Apoſtles in that full Growth and State we now ſee it, is perfectly confuted by the Teſtimony of thoſe Ages, that ſaw its Infancy and Childhood, and helped to nurſe it up to its preſent Bulk. And with this I ſhall end the preſent Enquiry about the Original and Progreſs of Lent in the firſt Ages of the Church.

SECT. 9. What were the Cauſes or Reaſons of inſtituting the Lent-Faſt. 1. The Apoſtles Sorrow for the Loſs of their MASTER.

THE next Enquiry may be into the Cauſes and Reaſons of its Inſtitution. And here firſt of all, if we Reſpect the Original Inſtitution, the Reaſon is given by Tertullian, who makes the Catholicks ſay, as we have heard before, that the Reaſon of the Apoſtles Faſting at this Time was, becauſe the Bridegroom was taken away from them. In Complyance with which Practice the Ancients generally obſerved thoſe Two Days, in which our SAVIOUR lay in the Grave, with the greateſt Strictneſs, as we ſhall ſee more hereafter. Though the Montaniſts, who pretended to the Spirit of Prophecy, underſtood the Taking away the Bridegroom in another Senſe, for our SAVIOUR's Aſcenſion or Aſſumption into Heaven: And therefore they kept one of their Lents or Faſts (for they had Three in the Year) after our LORD's Aſcenſion, in Oppoſition to the Church which celebrated the whole Time of Pentecoſt as a ſolemn Feſtival. This we learn from St. Jerom, who not only ſays [s] the Montaniſts kept Three Lents in the Year, but alſo that they kept one of them after Aſcenſion [t], pretending to know by their new Inſpiration, that that was the Time which our SAVIOUR meant when He ſaid, The Bridegroom ſhall be taken from them, and then ſhall they faſt. So both the Catholicks and the Montaniſts agreed uponthe Reaſon of a Faſt, though they applied it to a different Time according to their different Apprehenſions.

SECT. 10. 2dly, The Declenſion of Chriſtian Piety from its firſt and Primitive Fervor.

CASSIAN gives another Reaſon for the Inſtitution of Lent: He ſays [u] at firſt there was no Obſervation of Lent, as long as the Perfection of the Primitive Church remained inviolable

inviolable: For they who faſted as it were all the Year round, were not tyed up by the Neceſſity of this Precept, nor confined within the ſtrait Bounds of ſuch a Faſt, as by a Legal Sanction: But when the Multitude of Believers began to depart from that Apoſtolical Devotion, and brood continually upon their Riches; when inſtead of imparting them to the common Uſe of all, they laboured only to lay them up and augment them for their own Private Expences, not content to follow the Example of Ananias and Saphira; then it ſeemed good to all the Biſhops by a Canonical Indiction of Faſts to recal Men to Holy Works, who were bound with ſecular Cares, and had almoſt forgotten what Continency and Compunction meant, and to compel them by the Neceſſity of a Law to dedicate the Tenth of their Time to GOD. To the ſame Purpoſe Pope Leo [†] ſays, Whilſt Men are diſtracted about the various Cares of this Life, their Religious Hearts muſt needs be defiled with the Duſt of this World: And therefore it is provided by the great Benefit of this Divine Inſtitution, that the Purity of of our Minds might be repaired by the Exerciſe of theſe Forty Days, in which we may redeem the Failings of other Times, and do good Works, and exerciſe ourſelves in Religious Faſting.

SECT. 11. 3dly, That Men might prepare themſelves for a worthy Participation of the Communion at Eaſter.

A THIRD Reaſon was, That Men might prepare their Souls for a worthy Participation of the Communion at Eaſter. For though Men at firſt were uſed to communicate every Lord's-Day, and to keep themſelves continually in a conſtant, habitual Preparation for that Holy Myſtery; yet as the Primitive Spirit of Chriſtianity declined, Men came by Degrees to communicate chiefly at Eaſter, and ſome at no other Time but that only. For the Sake of theſe Men therefore the Obſervation of the preceding Faſt was much urged, that by proper and ſpiritual Exerciſes, they might be duly prepared to receive the Communion at Eaſter, who could not be prevailed upon to frequent it at other Seaſons. This is what we have heard St. Chryſoſtom [x] ſay before, That becauſe Men were uſed to come indevoutly and inconſiderately to the Communion, eſpecially at Eaſter, when CHRIST firſt inſtituted the Holy-Supper, therefore the Fathers conſidering the Miſchiefs ariſing from ſuch careleſs Approaches, met together, and appointed Forty Days of Faſting, that in theſe Days Men being carefully purified by Prayer, and Almsdeeds, and Faſting, and Watching, and Tears, and Confeſſion of Sins, and other the like Exerciſes, might come with a pure Conſcience to partake of the Holy Table. To the ſame Purpoſe in another Place [y], As they that take great Pains to run in a Race, reap no Advantage, if they fail of the Prize: So we have no Benefit from all the Labour and Pains we beſtow upon Faſting, unleſs we can come with a pure Conſcience to partake of the Holy Table. For this End we uſe Faſting and Lent, and Aſſemblies for ſo many Days together, and Hearing, and Praying, and Preaching, that by our Diligence in the Uſe of theſe Means, and Regard to the Divine Commands, we may wipe off the Sins of the whole Year that ſtick to us, and ſo with ſpiritual Boldneſs and Reverence partake of the Unbloody Sacrifice. The like is ſaid by St. Jerom [z], That our LORD faſting Forty Days, and leaving us the Inheritance of Faſting under this Number, prepares our Souls for the eating of his Body. And this I take to have been the principal Cauſe of the Church's enlarging her Lent to the Length of Forty Days, as Occaſion required, from ſuch ſmall Beginnings, as it ſeems to have had in its firſt Original.

BESIDES theſe general Reaſons for the Obſervation of Lent, there were Two particular Reaſons more peculiarly reſpecting Two Orders of Men in the Church, viz. the Catechumens who were preparing for Baptiſm, and the Penitents who were preparing for Abſolution. It has been noted elſewhere [*], that Eaſter was the fix'd and ſolemn Time both for admitting Catechumens to Baptiſm, and re-admitting Penitents after Lapſing, and performing a ſolemn Penance, into the Communion of the Church again. And ſolemn Faſting was preparatory to each of theſe. Juſtin Martyr [a] ſpeaks of a general Faſt of the whole Church together with the Catechumens, who preſented themſelves to Baptiſm; As many, ſays he, as are perſuaded, and do believe, that the Things taught and ſaid by us are true, and promiſe to live accordingly, they are inſtructed to pray, and with Faſting to beg of GOD Remiſſion of Sins, we Praying and Faſting together with them. Then they are brought to the Place where Water is, and are regenerated after the ſame Manner of Regeneration as we were regenerated before them. This is a plain Account of a Publick Faſt before Baptiſm. Afterward when the Time of Baptiſm was ſettled to Eaſter, it is certain, certain, the Lent-Faſt was obſerved by the Catechumens, as preparatory to their Baptiſm. For Cyril of Jeruſalem thus addreſſes himſelf to the Catechumens: The preſent Seaſon is a Seaſon of Confeſſion [b]: All worldly Cares are to be laid aſide; for you ſtrive for your Souls. You that have been buſy about the Things of the World, and troubled in vain ſo many Years, will ye not beſtow Forty Days in Prayer for the Salvation of your Souls? So again [c], There is a large Time given you: You have the Penance before you of Forty Days, ſufficient Space and Opportunity to put off the Old Garments, and put on the New. Upon this Account all Candidates of Baptiſm were obliged to give in their Names Forty Days before Baptiſm. which Cyril calls ὀνομαλογεσία, the entring of their Names, in the ſame Place. This is intimated by the Fourth Council of Carthage, which orders [d], That they who are to receive Baptiſm, ſhall give in their Names, and continue a long Time under Abſtinence from Wine and Fleſh, and uſe Impoſition of Hands, and frequent Examination. The Time of Forty Days is not particularly ſpecified here, but it is plainly expreſſed in one of the Canons of Siricius, which ſpeaks of giving Baptiſm at Eaſter [f] only to ſuch as gave in their Names Forty Days before, and continued under the Daily Diſcipline of Exorciſm, Prayer and Faſting. Which ſhews that this Faſt of Forty Days was then a Time more peculiarly obſerved by ſuch Catechumens as were preparing for Baptiſm at Eaſter following.

SECT. 13. And Penitents for Abſolution at Eaſter.

THE like Diſcipline was obſerved toward Penitents, who after their Canonical Penance was compleated, were generally abſolved about the Time of the Paſchal Feſtival; And therefore it is reaſonable to ſuppoſe, that the preceding Time of Lent was always more ſtrictly obſerved by them, as a decent Preparation for the Abſolution they then expected. Not that this was the only Time of Penance, eſpecially for great and ſcandalous Criminals: For many of theſe were kept under Penance for many Years ſucceſſively, as has been ſhewed in a former Book: But the ordinary Time of Abſolving them was Eaſter; as we learn not only from the Teſtimony of St. Ambroſe [g] and others, alledged heretofore in the Diſcourſe of Abſolution [*], but from Gregory Nyſſen [h], who ſays, The Anniverſary Solemnity of Eaſter, was not only the Time of regenerating Catechumens, but of begetting thoſe again to a lively Hope, who had forfeited it by their Sin, but were deſirous to regain it by Repentance and Converſion from dead Works, to walk again in the Paths of Life. The ſame is intimated in the Canons of Ancyra [i], and thoſe of Peter of Alexandria, and the Epiſtles of Cyprian, all which ſpeak of Eaſter as the great and ſolemn Time of admitting Penitents, as a Learned Prelate of our Church [k] has with great Judgment and Acuteneſs obſerved out of them. And thence we may infer, that Penitents, who were bound to ſtrict Rules of Penance all the Year under a long Courſe of Diſcipline, were more exactly careful in the Obſervation of this Seaſon, in hopes of obtaining their Abſolution in the Cloſe of it. Whence St. Jerom [l] obſerves, that Forty was a Number proper for Penitents, and Faſting, and Sackcloth, and Tears, and Perſeverance in deprecating GOD's Anger. For which Reaſon Moſes alſo faſted Forty-Days in Mount Sinai: And Elias flying from Jezabel, and the Wrath of GOD impending upon Iſrael, is deſcribed as faſting Forty-Days. Our LORD alſo himſelf, the true Jonas, who was ſent to preach to the World, faſted Forty-Days; and leaving us the Inheritance of his Faſting, he ſtill prepares our Souls for the Eating of his Body by the ſame Number.

SECT. 14. Lent generally obſerved by all Chriſtians, though with a great Liberty and juſt Allowance to Mens infirmities, being in a great meaſure left to their own Diſcretion.

THUS we ſee Catechumens and publick Penitents were ſtrictly obliged to the Obſervation of Lent, as Part of their Diſcipline and Preparation for Baptiſm and Abſolution. Nor was the great Body of the Church backward at this Seaſon to concur in Faſting and Prayer with them. For Chryſoſtom [m] ſays, though at other Times when we Preachers cry up and preach the Duty of Faſting never ſo much all the Year, ſcarce any one hearkens to what we ſay; yet when the Seaſon of Forty Days is come, though none exhort or adviſe them, the moſt Negligent ſet themſelves to it, taking Admonition and Advice from the very Seaſon. Lent, it ſeems, was then generally reputed a proper Time to faſt, and repent, and mourn for Sin, that ſuch as were negligent at other Times, might take the Opportunity to recollect and humble themſelves, ſelves, and come duly prepared to the Communion at the Eaſter-Feſtival. Therefore he adds immediately, If a Jew or a Heathen ask you, Why you faſt? Do not tell him, it is for our SAVIOUR's Paſſion, or the Croſs: For ſo you will give him a Handle to accuſe you: For we do not faſt for the Paſſion, or the Croſs, but for our Sins, becauſe we are to come to the Holy Myſteries. The Paſſion is not the Occaſion of Faſting or Mourning, but of Joy and Exultation: We mourn not for that, but for our Sins, and therefore we faſt. But then this Faſt was obſerved with a great deal of Liberty. For he ſays in the ſame Place, If a Man come with a pure Conſcience, he keeps the Paſch, whether he partakes of the Communion to Day or to Morrow, or at any other Time. And therefore he ſays in another Place [n], It was uſual in Lent for the People to ask one another, How many Weeks they had faſted? And one would anſwer, He had faſted Two Weeks, another Three, another all. And what Advantage is it, if we have kept the Faſt without mending our Morals? If another ſays, I have faſted the whole Lent, ſay thou, I had an Enemy, and I am reconciled to him: I had a Cuſtom of Reviling, and I have left it off; I was uſed to Swearing, and I have broken the evil Habit. It is of no Advantage to faſt, if our Faſting do not produce ſuch Fruits as theſe. In other Places he intimates, That a great Liberty was allowed Men in regard to their Infirmities, and that they were left in a great Meaſure to faſt at their own Diſcretion. Let no one, ſays he [o], place his Confidence in Faſting only, if he continues in his Sins without Reforming. For it may be one that faſts not at all, may obtain Pardon, if he has the Excuſe of bodily Infirmity: But he that does not correct his Sins, can have no Excuſe. Thou haſt not faſted by reaſon of the Weakneſs of thy Body: But why art thou not reconciled to thy Enemies? Canſt thou pretend Bodily Infirmity here? If thou retaineſt Hatred and Envy, what Apology canſt thou make? In ſuch Crimes as theſe thou canſt not fly to the Refuge of Bodily Weakneſs. So again, more copiouſly proſecuting this Matter in another Place [p], If thou canſt not paſs all the Day faſting by reaſon of Bodily Weakneſs, no wiſe Man can condemn thee for this. For we have a kind and merciful LORD, who requires nothing of us above our Strength. He neither requires Abſtinence from Meat, nor Faſting ſimply of us, nor that for this End we ſhould continue without Eating only; but that ſequeſtring ourſelves from worldly Affairs, we ſhould ſpend all our leiſure Time in Spiritual Things. For if we would order our Lives ſoberly, and lay out our ſpare Hours upon Spiritual Things, and eat only ſo much as we had need of, and Nature required, and ſpend our whole Lives on Good-works, we ſhould not need the Help of Faſting. But becauſe Human Nature is negligent, and gives itſelf rather to Eaſe and Pleaſure: Therefore our Kind LORD, as a Compaſſionate Father, has found out this Medicine of Faſting for us, that we ſhould abridge ourſelves in our Pleaſures, and transfer our Care of Secular Things to Works of a Spiritual Nature. If therefore there be any here preſent who are hindred by Bodily Infirmity, and cannot continue all the Day faſting, I exhort them to have Regard to the Weakneſs of their Bodies, and not upon that Account deprive themſelves of this Spiritual Inſtruction, but for that very Reaſon to pay more diligent Attendance on it. For there are many Ways beſides Abſtinence from Meat, which will open to us the Door of Confidence towards GOD. He therefore that eats, and cannot faſt, let him give the more plentiful Alms, let him be more fervent in his Prayers, let him ſhew the greater Alacrity and Readineſs in hearing the Divine Oracles: For the Weakneſs of the Body is no Impediment in ſuch Offices as theſe: Let him be reconciled to his Enemies, and forget Injuries, and caſt all Thoughts of Revenge out of his Mind. He that does theſe Things, will ſhew forth the true Faſting, which the LORD chiefly requires. Therefore I exhort you who are able to faſt, to go on with all poſſible Alacrity in this good and laudable Work. For by how much more our outward Man periſhes, ſo much more our inward Man is renewed. For Faſting reſtrains the Body, and checks and bridles its inordinate Sallies; but makes the Soul much brighter, and gives it Wings to mount up and ſoar on high. Do you alſo exhort your Brethren, that are not able to faſt for the Weakneſs of their Bodies, that they ſhould not upon that Account abſent themſelves from this Spiritual Food; but teach them and inform them what you have learned of us, That he that eats and drinks with Moderation, is not unworthy of this Auditory, but only he that is negligent and diſſolute. Tell them what the Apoſtle ſays, Both he that eateth, eateth to the Lord: And he that eateth not, to the Lord he eateth not, and giveth God Thanks: Therefore he that faſteth, giveth GOD Thanks, who has enabled him to bear the Labour of Faſting; and he that eateth, gives GOD Thanks likewiſe, that this is no Prejudice to the Salvation of his Soul, if he be otherwiſe willing and obedient. I have recited theſe Paſſages at large out of Chryſoſtom, to ſhew what Notion he had of the Obligation Men were under to obſerve the Lent-Faſt. If Men were in Health and able to bear it, the Rule and Cuſtom was for them to obſerve it; and they generally did ſo without any farther Admonition: But if they did not comply, their Non-compliance did not debar them from the Communion at Easter, or lay them under any Ecclesiastical Censure as great Delinquents. On the other Hand, if they pleaded Bodily Infirmity and Weakness, that was always accepted as a just Apology, provided they made it appear by their other good Works, that they were sincere and zealous, and not merely acting a Part in the Business of Religion.

AND some Footsteps of this Liberty, in leaving Men to a Discretionary Observation of Lent, are described by Learned Men in several other Writers. Bp. Hooper [q] observes out of Tertullian [r], That except Friday and Saturday before Easter, the Catholicks in his Time kept no other Days of Fasting in Lent, but only at Discretion; and that their Fast was for the most Part private, and not distinguished by any publick Action. And Bishop Taylor [s] asserts the same, not only out of Tertullian, but Socrates, Prudentius, Victor Antiochenus, Prosper, and St. Austin: For the Fasts of the Church were arbitrary and chosen, without Necessity and Imposition from any Authority. He means not only the Imposition of Apostolical or Divine Authority upon the Church in general, but the Imposition of them by any Authority of the Church upon her own Members as laying any necessary Obligation on them. And this is true of the Three or Four first Ages of the Church, but more questionable of those that followed after. For the Fourth Council of Orleance [t] orders, That all who refused to fast on Saturday in Lent, should be made liable to Ecclesiastical Censure. And among those called the Apostolical Canons [u], there is one that orders, That every Clergyman who not being infirm, refuses to fast in Lent, shall be deposed; and Laymen to be suspended from Communion for the same Transgression. But this is one of those Canons which are known to be of later Date, and therefore cannot be concluded to be according to the Ancient Rule of the Church.

SECT. 15. How the Montanists differed from the Church about the Imposition of Fasts.

FROM this it will be easy to account for the Difference, which happened between the Church and the Montanists about the Imposition of Fasts. Montanus is condemned by the Writers of that Age for making new Laws about Fasting. In the Fragment of Apollonius mentioned by Eusebius [x] it is laid to his Charge, that he was the first ὁ νησείας νομοθετήσας, who imposed Fasting by his Laws. Which some understand, as if he was the first that ever brought Fasting under any Rule or Law. Which cannot be true: For, as we have seen before, the Church also thought she had a Rule for Fasting Two Days before Easter: And Tertullian also in Vindication of Montanus tells the Catholicks (which they themselves did not deny) that their Bishops were used to appoint Fasts [y] upon necessary Occasions of the Church. Therefore this could not be the Dispute then, whether Fasting might be imposed by a Law: But the Montanists said, beside the Fasts of Lent observed by the Catholicks, there were other Fasts imposed by the SPIRIT under the Ministry and Revelation of GOD made to Montanus. For the Montanists kept three Lents [z] in the Year, each of these Two Weeks; and that upon dry Meats in perfect Abstinence from Flesh; and these also as necessary to be observed, as Injunctions of the Spirit by the new Revelation made to Montanus, which they preferred before the Writings of the Apostles, and said these Laws were to be observed for ever. Which is the Reason why the Montanists in the Time of Sozomen kept their Antepaschal Fast still confined to Two Weeks, when the Catholicks fasted a much longer Space. For, as a Learned Person [a] observes, those great Fasters would hardly have been left behind, had not those Two Weeks been the Space determined them by their Prophet, and they obliged to keep punctually to all his Institutions. This then was the great Dispute between the Catholicks and the Montanists, whether the SPIRIT had appointed these Fasts? Which the Montanists asserted; and the Catholicks denied. And therefore though the Church augmented her Fast from Two Days to Forty, yet still she did it with a great deal of Liberty reserved to every particular Church, and every particular Church in a great measure left all her Members to judge of their own Abilities by Christian Prudence and Discretion; exhorting Men to fast, imposing rigidly upon none more than they were able and willing to bear, nor enforcing it under Pain of Ecclesiastical Censure.

SECT. 16. The Lent-Fast kept with a perfect Abstinence from all Food every Day till Evening.

THE Manner of observing Lent among those that were piously disposed to observe it, was to abstain from all Food till Evening. For anciently a Change of Diet was not reckoned a Fast; but it consisted in perfect Abstinence from all Sustenance for for the whole Day till Evening. And in this the Lent-Faſt differed from the Semijejunia, or Half-faſts of the ordinary Stationary Days, as we ſhall ſee hereafter. St. Ambroſe, ſpeaking of the Lent-Faſt, ſays, It was a total [b] Abſtinence every Day throughout the whole Seaſon, except on the Sabbath and the Lord's-Day. And in another Place, exhorting Men [c] to obſerve the Lent-Faſt, he bids them defer eating a little, the End of the Day is not far off. So Chryſoſtom frequently in his Lent-Sermons ſpeaks of the ſame Circumſtance. Let us ſet a Guard [d] upon our Ears, our Tongues, and Minds, and not think that bare Faſting till the Evening is ſufficient for our Salvation. What Profit [e] is it to faſt, and eat nothing all the Day, if you give yourſelf to playing at Dice, and other vain Paſtimes, and ſpend the whole Day many times in Perjuries and Blaſphemies? The true Faſt is Abſtinence [f] from Vices. For Abſtinence from Meat was appointed upon this Occaſion, That we ſhould curb the Tone of our Fleſh, and make the Horſe obedient to his Rider. He that faſts, ought above all Things to bridle his Anger, to learn Meekneſs and Clemency, to have a contrite Heart, to baniſh the Thoughts of all inordinate Deſires, to ſet the watchful Eye of GOD before his Eyes, and his uncorrupted Judgment; to ſet himſelf above Riches, and exerciſe great Liberality in giving of Alms, and to expel every evil Thought againſt his Neighbour out of his Soul. This is the true Faſt. Therefore let this be our Care: And let us not imagine, as many do, that we have abſtained from eating until Evening. This is not the Thing required of us; but that together with our Abſtinence from Meat, we ſhould abſtain from thoſe Things that hurt the Soul, and diligently exerciſe ourſelves in Things of a ſpiritual Nature. Bellarmine [g] himſelf ſhews the ſame out of St. Baſil [h] and other ancient Writers, who ſpeak always of the Lent-Faſt as a perfect Abſtinence from all Food till Evening. And it is very remarkable by what he cites out of Micrologus, Gratian and St. Bernard, that this Cuſtom continued till the XIIth Century even in the Practice of the Romiſh Church.

SECT. 17. Change of Diet, not accounted a proper Faſt for Lent, without perfect Abſtinence till Evening.

WHENCE it were eaſy to conclude, That the Pretence of keeping Lent only by Change of Diet from Fleſh to Fiſh, or a more delicious Food, which allows Men the Uſe of Wine and other Delicacies, is but a Mock-Faſt, and a mere Innovation, utterly unknown to the Ancients, whoſe Lent-Faſt was a ſtrict and rigorous Abſtinence from all Food till the Evening. Their Refreſhment was only a Supper, and not a Dinner of any Kind: And then it was indifferent, whether it was Fleſh or any other Food, provided it was uſed, as became the Refreſhment of a Faſt, with Sobriety and Moderation. They generally indeed abſtained from Fleſh, and Wine, and Fiſh, and all other Delicacies at this Seaſon: But yet there was no ſuch univerſal Rule or Cuſtom in this Matter, but that when Men had faſted all the Day, they were allowed to refreſh themſelves with a moderate Supper upon Fleſh or any other Food without Diſtinction. This appears from the Obſervation which Socrates makes upon the different Manner of Faſting in Lent: Some, ſays he [i], abſtain from all Kind of Living Creatures; others abſtain from all but Fiſh; others eat Fowls as well as Fiſh, ſaying, that, according to Moſes, they come of the Water; others abſtain from Fruits and Eggs; others eat only dry Bread; and others even not ſo much as that. Yet the greateſt Aſceticks made no Scruple to eat Fleſh in Lent, when a juſt Occaſion required it. Sozomen tells a remarkable Story [k] of Spiridion, Biſhop of Trimithus in Cyprus, That a Stranger once happening to call upon him in his Travels in Lent, he having nothing in his Houſe but a Piece of Pork, ordered that to be dreſſed and ſet before him: But the Stranger refuſing to eat Fleſh, ſaying, He was a Chriſtian; Spiridion replied, for that very Reaſon thou oughteſt not to refuſe it; for the Word of GOD has pronounced all Things clean to them that are clean. Euſebius [l] tells a like Story of one Alcibiades, a Martyr, who being a great Aſcetick, had uſed to abſtain from Fleſh all his Life, and live only upon Bread and Water; Which Courſe of Life he continued even in Priſon: But it was revealed to Attalus, one of his Fellow-Priſoners, that Alcibiades did not well to refuſe uſing the Creatures of GOD, and thereby give Scandal to others. Upon which Admonition, Alcibiades changed his Manner of living, and began to uſe all Meats indifferently with Thankſgiving. By this it appears, that the eating or not eating of Fleſh, was a Thing indifferent to them at all Times, and that they made no Scruple to eat Fleſh even in Lent, upon a neceſſary Occaſion, without any Prejudice to their Rules of Faſting. But the Thing they chiefly guarded againſt, was Luxury, and Pampering the Body, under Pretence of Faſting. St. Auſtin [m] makes a ſmart Reflexion in one of his Sermons upon ſuch Pretenders as theſe: There are ſome Obſervers of Lent, ſays he, that ſtudy Deliciouſneſs more than Religion, and ſeek out new Pleaſures for the Belly, more than how to chaſtize the Concupiſcence of the Old Man; who by coſtly and plentiful Proviſions, ſtrive to out-do the Varieties and Taſtes of the ſeveral Fruits of the Earth. They are afraid of any Veſſels in which Fleſh has been boiled, as if they were unclean; and yet in their own Fleſh fear not the Luxury of the Throat and the Belly. Theſe Men faſt, not to diminiſh their wonted Voracity by Temperance, but by deferring a Meal to increaſe their immoderate Greedineſs. For when the Time of Refreſhment comes, they ruſh to their plentiful Tables, as Beaſts to their Mangers, and ſtuff their Bellies with great Variety of artificial and ſtrange Sawces, taking in more by devouring, than they are able to digeſt again by faſting. There are ſome likewiſe who drink no Wine, that they may provide themſelves other more agreeable Liquors, to gratify their Taſte, rather than ſet forward their Salvation: As if Lent were intended, not for the Obſervation of a pious Humiliation, but as an Occaſion of ſeeking out new Pleaſures. They did not think Commutation of Diet a proper Faſt, if the Abſtinence of the Day was ſpoiled by any immoderate Indulgence of an Evening-Banquet: Much leſs did they eſteem it a Faſt to dine upon Delicacies, and uſe a mere Abſtinence from Fleſh without deferring the Time of their ordinary Meal till Evening; but they abſtained all the Day from Food of any Kind, and then contented themſelves with a ſober and plain Refreſhment in the Cloſe of it, without any ſcrupulous Nicety about the Kind of their Food, ſo long as they uſed it only with Temperance and Moderation.

SECT. 18. What they ſpared in a Dinner, not ſpent in Evening Luxury, but beſtowed on the Poor.

AND what they thus ſpared from their own Bodies in abridging them of a Meal, they that were piouſly diſpoſed, beſtowed upon the Bellies of the Poor. This we learn from one of the Homilies of Cæſarius Arelatenſis, or whoever was the Author of it, under the Name of St. Auſtin [n]: Before all Things, ſays he, on our Faſting-Days, what we were uſed to ſpend upon a Dinner, let us beſtow upon the Poor, that no one concern himſelf about providing a ſumptuous Supper, or an exquiſite and delicious Feaſt, and ſeem rather to have changed the Diet of his Body, than diminiſhed any Thing in the Quantity of it. There is no Profit in keeping a long Faſt all the Day, if afterward a Man overwhelm his Soul either with the Delicacy of his Meat, or the Abundance of it. That which is gained by the Faſt at Dinner, ought not to be turned into a Feaſt at Supper, but be expended on the Bellies of the Poor. Proficiat Eleemoſynis, quod non expenditur menſis, ſays Leo [o], that which is not expended upon our Tables, ſhould be laid out in Alms, and then it will bring us in great Gain. Origen [p] ſays, He found it in ſome Book as a noted Saying of the Apoſtles, "Bleſſed is he who faſts "for this End, that he may feed the poor; "this Man's Faſt is acceptable unto GOD." Mercy and Piety, as Chryſologus [q] words it, are the Wings of Faſting, by which it mounts up to Heaven, without which it lies dead upon the Earth. Therefore when we faſt, let us lay up our Dinner in the Hands of the Poor, that the Hands of the Poor may preſerve for us what our Bellies would deſtroy. The Hands of the Poor is the Treaſury of CHRIST: Faſting without Mercy, is but an Image of Famine: Faſting without Works of Piety is only an Occaſion of Covetouſneſs; becauſe by ſuch Sparing, what is taken from the Body, only ſwells in the Purſe.

SECT. 19. All Corporeal Puniſhments forbidden by the Imperial Laws in Lent.

THEREFORE Lent was thought the proper Seaſon for exerciſing more abundantly all Sorts of Charity. Let us ſpend thoſe vacant Hours, ſays Cæſarius or St. Auſtin [r], which we were uſed to laviſh away without any Benefit to our Souls, now in Viſiting the Sick, in Searching the Priſons, in Entertaining Strangers, in Reconciling thoſe that are at Variance with one another. This was required of thoſe more eſpecially, who pretended bodily Infirmity that they could not faſt, as we have heard before out of St. Chryſoſtom. Thou canſt not faſt by reaſon of the Weakneſs of thy Body: But why art thou not reconciled [s] to thy Enemy? Canſt thou pretend bodily Infirmity here? If thou retaineſt Hatred and Envy, what Apology canſt thou make? In ſuch Crimes as theſe thou canſt not take Sanctuary in bodily Weakneſs. He that cannot faſt, let him give the more plentiful Alms, let him be reconciled to his Enemies, let him forget Injuries, and caſt all Thoughts of Revenge out of his Mind. This was a Time when Men expected Mercy and Pardon from GOD, and therefore it was the more reaſonable they ſhould be more eminent in the Exerciſe of Mercy toward their Brethren. Upon this Account the Imperial Laws forbad all Proſecution of Men in Criminal Actions, which might bring them to Corporal Puniſhment and Torture, during the whole Seaſon. Theodoſius the Great made Two Laws to this Purpoſe: In the Forty Days, which by the Laws of Religion [t] are ſolemnly ly obſerved before Eaſter, let the Examination and Hearing of all Criminal Queſtions be ſuperſeded: And in the Holy-Days of Lent, let there be [u] no Puniſhments of the Body, when we expect the Abſolution of our Souls. St. Ambroſe [x] mentions a like Anſwer given by the Younger Valentinian, in the Caſe of ſome rich Noblemen, who were proſecuted in a Criminal Cauſe before the Provoſt of the City, who inclined to give a ſpeedy Sentence againſt them: But the Emperor ſent him an Inhibition, forbidding any Sentence of Blood to be pronounced during the holy Seaſon. Nor was there any Exception made to this Rule, but only in the Caſe of the Iſaurian Robbers, whoſe Practices were ſo very dangerous to the common Safety, that Theodoſius Junior thought it proper to allow their Examination by Scourging and the Rack at any Time, not excepting any Day in Lent [y], or the Eaſter-Feſtival, becauſe it was greater Charity to diſcover their wicked Counſels and Conſpiracies, to preſerve the Life and Safety of other innocent Men, than to grant any Reprieve or Reſpite to ſuch Criminals upon the account of the holy Seaſon. So that Mercy and Charity was ſtill the Thing in View, as moſt proper to be ſhewed to the Bodies of Men at ſuch a Seaſon, when all expected by their Faſting and Repentance, to obtain Abſolution of their Souls from the Hands of GOD, as one of the forementioned Laws elegantly words it.

SECT. 20. Religious Aſſemblies and Sermons every Day in Lent.

LENT was a Time of more than ordinary Strictneſs and Devotion, and therefore in many of the great Churches they had Religious Aſſemblies for Prayer and Preaching every Day throughout the whole Seaſon. I cannot affirm that it was ſo in every Parochial Church and Country-Village: But that it was ſo in the greater or Cathedral Churches, is evident from undeniable Proofs and Matter of Fact. Chryſoſtom's Homilies on Geneſis, and thoſe famous ones of the Statues, called Ἀνδριάντες, to the People of Antioch, were Sermons preached after this manner Day after Day in the Lent Seaſon; as any one may be ſatisfied that looks but into them. I will only relate but one ſingle Paſſage in one of theſe Homilies [z], which will give any Reader Satisfaction. This is not, ſays he, the only Thing that is required, that we ſhould meet here every Day, and hear Sermons continually, and faſt the whole Lent. For if we gain nothing by theſe continual Meetings and Exhortations and Seaſons of Faſting to the Advantage of our Souls, they will not only do us no Good, but be the Occaſion of a greater Condemnation. If after ſo much Care and Pains beſtowed upon us, we continue the ſame; if the Angry Man does not become Meek, and the Paſſionate Mild and Gentle; if the Envious does not reduce himſelf to a friendly Temper; nor the Covetous Man depart from his Madneſs and Fury in the Purſuit of Riches, and give himſelf to Almſdeeds and Feeding the Poor; If the Intemperate Man does not become Chaſte and Sober, and the Vain-glorious learn to deſpiſe falſe Honour, and ſeek for that which is true; if he that is negligent of Charity to his Neighbour, does not ſtir up himſelf, and endeavour not only not to come behind the Publicans (who love thoſe that love them) but alſo to look Friendly upon his Enemies, and exerciſe all Acts of Charity toward them; if we do not conquer theſe Affections and all others that ſpring up from our Natural Corruption; though we aſſemble here every Day, and enjoy continual Preaching and Teaching, and have the Aſſiſtance of Faſting: What Pardon can we expect? What Apology ſhall we make for ourſelves? By this it is plain, no Day paſſed in Lent without a Sermon to put Men in mind of the great Duties of Chriſtianity, and Reformation and Repentance, which were more peculiar to the Deſign of that holy Seaſon.

SECT. 21. And frequent Communions, eſpecially on the Sabbath and the Lord's-Day.

THEY had alſo frequent Communions at this Time, at leaſt on every Sabbath and Lord's-Day. For though the Feſtivals of Martyrs were not ordinarily to be celebrated in this Time of Humiliation, yet the Sabbath and the Lord's-Day were kept as ſtanding Feſtivals even in Lent, as has been ſhewed before: And therefore on theſe Days they offered the Oblation of Bread and Wine in the Euchariſt, as at other Seaſons. But by a Canon of the Council of Laodicea [a] this Oblation ſeems confined to thoſe Two Days: For it is prohibited to offer it upon any other: And that may ſeem to imply, That there was no Communion on any other Days in Lent. But then it may be conſidered that in the Time of the Council of Trullo [b] there was a Cuſtom of Communicating on other Days in Lent upon the Preſanctified Elements, that is, ſuch as had been conſecrated the Lord's-Day before: And if we can ſuppoſe this Cuſtom to have been anciently in the Church, then nothing hinders but that they might have a Daily Communion in Lent, as well as a Daily Sermon; which ſeems moſt agreeable agreeable to the fervent Piety of those Primitive Ages; but in a doubtful Matter I will not be positive, seeing there is otherwise Evidence enough for frequent Communion in Lent, by supposing it only to be administred on every Sabbath and Lord's-Day.

SECT. 22. All publick Games and Stage-Plays prohibited at this Season.

FOR the further Advancement of Piety and Encouragement of Religious Assemblies at this Season, all Publick Games and Stage-Plays were utterly forbidden by the Laws of the Church. Gothofred [c] thinks the whole Time of Lent is included in that famous Law of Theodosius Junior, which prohibits all Publick Games and Shews on Days of Supplication, when the Minds of Christians ought wholly to be employed in the Worship of GOD. For though Lent be not expresly named in that Law, yet it is comprized in the general Name of the Days of Supplication. And it is certain the Church was very sollicitous to restrain Men from these Pleasures and Diversions at this Holy Season. Gregory Nazianzen [d] has a very sharp Epistle written to one of the Judges upon this Occasion, wherein he thus rebukes him: You that are a Judge transgress the Laws in not observing the Fast: And how will you observe the Laws of Man, who transgress and despise the Laws of GOD? Purge the Judgment-Seat, least one of these Two Things befal you, either to be really wicked, or to be thought so. To exhibit prophane Shews is to make yourself a Spectacle. In a Word, stand corrected, O Judge, and you will sin less for the future. St. Chrysostom in his Lent Sermons with equal Zeal sets himself to chastize and correct this grand Abuse of the Holy Season. He prefaces one of these Homilies with this sharp Invective against those that frequented the Horse-Racings of the Cirque at this Time: When I consider [e] says he, how at one Blast of the Devil ye have forgotten all my daily Admonitions and continued Discourses, and run to the Pomp of Satan, the Horse-Race in the Cirque: With what Heart can I think of Preaching to you again, who have so soon let slip what I said before? This is what chiefly raises my Grief, yea, my Anger and Indignation, that together with my Admonition ye have cast the Reverence of this Holy Season of Lent out of your Souls, and yourselves into the Nets of the Devil. What Profit is there in your Fasting? What Advantage in your Meeting together so often in this Place? He pursues the same Argument in the next Discourse [f], dissuading them in a very pathetical Way to wave this unseasonable Practice: Subdue, I beseech you, this wicked and pernicious Custom: And consider, that they who run to the Cirque, not only do much Harm to themselves, but are the Occasion of great Scandal to others. For when the Jews and Gentiles see you, who are every Day at Church to hear a Sermon, come notwithstanding to the Horse-Race, and joyn with them in the Cirque: Will they not reckon our Religion a Cheat, and entertain the same Suspicion of us all? They will sharpen their Tongues against us all, and for the Offence of a few condemn the whole Body of Christians. Neither will they stop here, but rail at our Head, and for the Servants Fault blaspheme our common LORD, and think that a sufficient Apology and Excuse for their own Errors, that they have something to object to the Life and Conversation of others. By this it appears, there was no Pardon for those who were so eager after the Publick Diversions, as to follow them in Lent, when Mens Publick Professions of Repentance, Humiliation and Sorrow made it utterly unseasonable and absurd to pursue the vain Recreations and Pleasures of the World, which at such a Juncture could become none but those who lived in Darkness and Heathenish Superstition.

SECT. 23. As also the Celebration of all Festivals, Birth-Days, and Marriages, as unsuitable to the present Occasion.

FOR the same Reason they forbad the Celebration of all Festivals of Martyrs at this Season, except it were upon the Sabbath or the Lord's-Day: Because all Festivals were Days of Rejoycing, which were not consistent with deep Humiliation and Mourning belonging to a strict and severe Fast: But the Sabbath and the Lord's-Day were excepted from Fasting even in Lent, as has been noted before; and therefore on these Days the Festivals of Martyrs might be celebrated, but on no other during the whole Time of Lent, as appears from an express Canon of the Council of Laodicea [g] made in this Behalf. And by another Canon of the same Council [h] all Celebrations of Marriages and Birthdays are absolutely forbidden in Lent: Where by Birthdays called Γενέθλια in the Canon, we are to understand private Mens Natural Birthdays, which being celebrated with great Tokens and Solemnities of Joy, with Feasting and other Ceremonies of Pleasure and Delight, were not proper to be kept in the Time of Fasting, as being Things inconsistent and incompatible with one another; and the rather to be forborn, because at this Time the Church did not allow the Solemnizing of the Nativities or Birthdays of her Martyrs, which otherwise were of great Esteem in the Church.

THESE were the common Rules observed in keeping the Lent-Fast, when it was come to the Length of Forty Days. But there was one Week, called the Hebdomas Magna, or the Great Week before Easter, which they observed with greater Strictness and Solemnity above all the Rest. No one can better describe it to us than St. Chrysostom [i], who tells us, It was called the Great Week, not because it consisted of longer Days, or more in Number than other Weeks, but because at this Time great Things were wrought for us by our LORD. For in this Week the ancient Tyranny of the Devil was dissolved, Death was extinct, the Strong Man was bound, his Goods were spoiled, Sin was abolished, the Curse was destroyed, Paradise was opened, Heaven became accessible, Men and Angels were joyned together, the Middle Wall of Partition was broken down, the Barriers were taken out of the Way, the GOD of Peace made Peace between Things in Heaven and Things on Earth; therefore it is called the Great Week: And as this is the Head of all other Weeks, so the Great Sabbath is the Head of this Week, being the same Thing in this Week, as the Head is in the Body. Thefore in this Week many increase their Labours: some adding to their Fastings; others to their Watchings; others give more liberal Alms, testifying the Greatness of the Divine Goodness by their Care of Good Works, and more intense Piety and Holy Living. As the Jews went forth to meet CHRIST, when he had raised Lazarus from the Dead, so now not only one City but all the World go forth to meet him, not with Palm-Branches in their Hands, but with Almsdeeds, Humanity, Virtue, Fastings, Tears, Prayers, Watchings, and all Kinds of Piety, which they offer to CHRIST their Lord. And not only we, but the Emperors of the World honour this Week, making it a Time of Vacation from all Civil Business, that the Magistrates being at Liberty from Business of the Law, may spend all these Days in Spiritual Service. Let the Doors of the Courts, say they, now be shut up: Let all Disputes and all Kinds of Contention and Punishment cease, let the Executioner's Hands rest a little: Common Blessings are wrought for us all by our Common LORD, let some Good be done by us his Servants. Nor is this the only Honour they shew to this Week, but they do one Thing more no less considerable. The Imperial Letters are sent abroad at this Time, commanding all Prisoners to be set at Liberty from their Chains. For as our LORD, when he descended into Hell, set free those that were detained by Death; so the Servants according to their Power imitating the Kindness of their LORD, loose Men from their Corporal Bonds, when they have no Power to relax the Spiritual. All this is repeated by Chrysostom in another of his Lent-Sermons [k] much in the same Words, which therefore it is needless to recite at length in this Place: But it will not be improper to review the Particulars, and confirm them by Parallel Passages of other Writers. It is evident the strict Observation of this Week was in Use in the Time of Dionysius Bishop of Alexandria, who was Scholar to Origen, though with some Difference according to Mens Ability or Zeal in observing it: For he thus speaks of it in his Canonical Epistle [l]: Some make a Superposition of the whole Six Days, continuing all the Time without Eating: some add Two Days together, some Three, some Four, and some not one. Now to those who have born such Superpositions, continuing without Sustenance, and grow unable to hold out, and are ready to faint, to them Leave is to be given for an earlier Refreshment. But if there be any, who have been so far from superponing the preceding Days, that they have not so much as kept a common Fast, but it may be have feasted on them, and then coming to the Two last Days, Friday and the Saturday, have kept a Fast of Superposition on them, and think they do a great Thing, if they hold out till Break of Day: I cannot think these have striven equally with those, who have been engaged in the Exercise more Days before.

SECT. 25. What meant by the Fasts, called ὑφαιρέσεις & Superpositiones Superpository or Additional Fasts in this Week.

IT is plain from hence, that in this Great Week many made an Addition to the Common Way of Fasting. For whereas in the foregoing Part of Lent they took some Refreshment every Evening, and never fasted on the Sabbath; now they not only fasted on the Sabbath in this Week, but added to it some one Day, some Two, some Three, some Four, some Five Days, which they passed in Perfect Abstinence, eating nothing all this Week till the Morning of the Resurrection. This Kind of Fasting the Greeks call ὑφαιρέσεις, and the Latins Superpositiones, Superpository or Additional Fasts. Dionysius in the Place last mentioned uses the Name ὑφαιρέμενοι, for those that passed the whole Six Days fasting. And Epiphanius speaking [m] of the Manner of observing the same Six Days, says, All the People kept them ἐν ξηροφαγίᾳ, living on Dry Meats, namely Bread and Salt and and Water, which they only uſed at Evening: And they that were more zealous, ſuperadded Two, Three, and Four Days, and ſome the whole Week till Cockcrowing on Sunday Morning. Where we may obſerve Two Sorts of Additions made to the Common Faſt in this Week above others; firſt, that they confined themſelves to the Uſe of Dry Meats only, which they did not generally in the former Part of Lent: and ſecondly that they continued their Faſt for ſeveral Days together without any Suſtenance, ſome paſſing over the whole Six Days in this rigorous Way without any Abatement. And ſo Epiphanius repreſents it in another Place [o] where he ſpeaks of the manner of obſerving the Holy Week of the Paſch: Some continued the whole Week ἀσιτοδιάμβοι, making one continued Faſt of the whole; others eat after two Days, and others every Evening. This was otherwiſe called ὁμουνάπλειν, & Jejunia conjungere & continuare, as we find in Sozomen and Tertullian. For Sozomen [p] ſpeaking of Spiridion's Way of obſerving the Great Paſchal Week, ſays, at that Time he was uſed with his whole Family ὁμουνάπλειν τὴν νηστείαν, to join one Day of Faſting to another, and only eat at a certain Day, continuing without any Food all the Days between. And this in Tertullian's Phraſe is Jejunia conjungere, to join one Day of Faſting to another [q]; & Sabbatum continuare cum Jejuniis Paraſceues [r], to make Friday and Saturday in the Paſſion-Week one continued Faſt. This was an Exerciſe which many of thoſe, who followed the Aſcetick Life, uſed at other Times: For Evagrius ſpeaking of the Monks of Paleſtine, ſays [s], they obſerved τὰς καλουμένας ὑπερθεσίμους, thoſe called Superpoſitory Faſts, continuing them for Two or Three Days, and ſome for Five Days together. This in the Latin Writers is called Superpoſitio Jejunij: As in the Fragment of Victorinus Petavionenſis, publiſhed by Dr. Cave [t], where he ſpeaks of ſeveral Sorts of Faſts obſerved among Chriſtians, ſome of which were only till the Ninth Hour, ſome till Evening, and ſome with a Superpoſition or Addition of one Faſting-Day to another. Though we muſt note, That the Superpoſition of a Faſt is not always taken in this Senſe, but ſometimes denotes a new appointed Faſt of any Kind, though it had nothing extraordinary but only the Newneſs of the Impoſition in it, as we find in the Council of Eliberis [u], of which more hereafter in its proper Place.

THE next Addition mentioned by Chryſoſtom, as made in the ſpiritual Exerciſe and Obſervation of this Week, is their more liberal Diſtribution of Alms to the Poor, and Exerciſe of all Kinds of Charity to thoſe that ſtood in need of it. For the nearer they approached to the Paſſion and Reſurrection of CHRIST, by which all the Bleſſings in the World were poured forth upon Men, the more they thought themſelves obliged to ſhew all Manner of Acts of Mercy and Kindneſs towards their Brethren.

PARTICULARLY this Week before Eaſter, and the following Week, was a Time of Reſt and Liberty to Servants. Many in great Charity had their Freedom granted them, in Imitation of the ſpiritual Liberty, which CHRIST at this Time had procured for all Mankind. This is clear from what has been ſhewed before [*] out of Gregory Nyſſen, and the Laws of Theodoſius, which allow all Juridical Acts done in Favour of Slaves in the Fifteen Days of the Paſchal Solemnity, in which both the Paſch of the Croſs, and the Paſch of the Reſurrection are equally included. Both theſe Weeks likewiſe were equally ſet apart for Divine-Service: And for that Reaſon all Servants had a Vacation from their ordinary bodily Labour, that they might have more Leiſure and Opportunity to attend the Worſhip of GOD and Concerns of their Souls. The Author of the Conſtitutions [x] in Conformity to this Cuſtom, which he found in the Practice of the Church, gives this Direction: In the whole Great Week (before Eaſter) and the Week following, let Servants reſt from their Labour; becauſe the one is the Time of our LORD's Paſſion; and the other of his Reſurrection; and Servants have need to be inſtructed in the Knowledge of thoſe Myſteries.

SECT. 27. This Week a Week of Reſt and Liberty for Servants.

THAT particular Sort of Charity which Chryſoſtom ſpeaks of, as ſhewed by the Emperors to all Priſoners, as well Criminals as Debtors, in granting them a general Releaſe out of Priſon at this Seaſon, is demonſtrated from the Imperial Laws ſtill in being: For they are ſaid to grant this Indulgence with a particular Reſpect to the Paſchal Solemnity, which includes as well the great Week before, as the Week following Eaſter-Day [y]. And ſo not only Chryſoſtom, but St. Ambroſe [a] underſtood it, when he ſaid, The Holy-Days of the laſt Week in Lent was the Time when the Bonds of Debtors uſed to be looſed. Wherefore whatever has been ſaid before of this Indulgence as belonging to the Eaſter-Feſtival, is ſo to be underſtood as belonging to this Holy and Great Week of our SAVIOUR's Paſſion, when theſe Indulgences firſt commenced, and continued in Force till the whole Feſtival was ended.

SECT. 29. All Proceſſes at Law, as well Civil as Criminal, ſuſpended this whole Week before Eaſter.

WHAT Chryſoſtom ſays farther of the Emperor's commanding all Suits and Proceſſes at Law to ceaſe in this Great Week, and the Tribunal-Doors to be ſhut up, is taken from the expreſs Words of the Law of Theodoſius, ſtill extant in both the Codes. For theſe appointing what Days ſhall be exempted from Juridical Actions, expreſsly mention [b] the Fifteen Days of the Paſchal Solemnity, the Week preceding and the Week following after Eaſter. St. Auſtin [c] ſpeaks of the ſame: And Scaliger [d] mentions a Law of Conſtantine, wherein he had made a like Decree, That the Two Paſchal Weeks, the one immediately before, and the other following Eaſter, ſhould be exempted from all Buſineſs of the Law. The Deſign of which was, That nothing of Animoſity, or Contention, or Cruelty, or Puniſhment, or Bloodſhed ſhould appear at this Holy Seaſon, when all Men were labouring to obtain Mercy and Pardon by the Blood of CHRIST; and that Men ſequeſtring themſelves from all Civil and Worldly Buſineſs, might with greater Aſſiduity attend the Exerciſes of Piety which were peculiar to the ſolemn Occaſion.

THE Thurſday in this Week, which was the Day on which CHRIST was betrayed, and inſtituted the Communion at his laſt Supper, was obſerved with ſome peculiar Cuſtoms. For on this Day, in ſome of the Latin Churches, the Communion was adminiſtred in the Evening after Supper, in Imitation of the Communion of the Apoſtles at our LORD's laſt Supper. As we find by a Proviſion made in one of the Canons of the Third Council of Carthage [e], That the Sacrament of the Altar ſhould always be received by Men faſting, except on one Anniverſary Day, when the LORD's laſt Supper was ſolemnly commemorated. St. Auſtin [f] takes notice of the ſame Cuſtom, and withal obſerves, That the Communion in ſome Places was adminiſtred twice on this Day; in the Morning for the Sake of ſuch as could not keep the Day a Faſt, and in the Evening for ſuch as faſted till Evening, when they ended their Faſt, and received the Communion after Supper. He likewiſe tells us, There was a particular Reaſon, why many could not faſt upon this Day, and therefore they received the Communion in the Morning: For it was cuſtomary with many, who had kept Lent, to bathe and waſh their Bodies on this Day, as the Catechumens did, in order to appear decently pure and clean from the Filth which their Bodies might have contracted by the Auſterities of Lent, when they came to be baptized on the Vigil, or Night between the Great Sabbath and Eaſter-Day: They could not bear both Bathing and Faſting, and therefore they faſted not on this Day, but received the Communion in the Morning, and eat their Dinner as at other Times; whilſt others faſted all the Day, and received the Communion after Supper.
